ZAFAR ALI, J.

v.

Khushi Muhammad—Accused — Respondent.

Criminal Case No. 840 of 1929, Decided on 18th October 1929, reported by Dist. Magistrate, Gujranwala, on 11th May 1929.

Criminal P. C., S. 123—Imprisonment in default of furnishing security, if of shorter period, is bad in law.

According to S. 123 a person who is ordered to furnish security for good behaviour but fails to do so shall be detained in prison for the period for which security was demanded. The order of imprisonment for a shorter period is, therefore, bad in law. [P 102]

Report.—The accused on conviction by Khan Sahib Raja Muhammad Ikram Ullah Khan, exercising the powers of an Honorary Magistrate of the First Class in the Gujranwala District, was sentenced by order dated 5th April 1929, under S. 109, Criminal P. C., and ordered to execute a bond with one surety in Rs. 200 for one year, and in default to suffer 4 months' rigorous imprisonment only.

The facts of this case are as follows:

The prosecution story is that the accused Khushi Muhammad was about midnight on 14th March 1929 seen going inside village Jamke along with one other man. Hazur Singh, Police Constable, P. W. 1, who was on patrol duty along with Fateh Din Chowkidar P. W. 2, on seeing the accused and his companion called to them asking who they were, whereupon both of them took to their heels. They were pursued with the result that the accused was caught, while his companion made good his escape. The accused, who belongs to Gujrat District, on being questioned as to his name, at first gave a wrong name Muhammad Din, and could not give any reasonable explanation of his presence there. On his person being searched, a sand-lawa (house-breaking implement) along with a dang and a knife were found with him. He was accordingly challaned under S. 109, Criminal P. C., and convicted with the result above mentioned.

The proceedings are forwarded for revision on the following ground:

The order of the Honorary Magistrate sentencing accused to 4 months' rigorous imprisonment only in case he does not put in the security bond is illegal under S. 123, Criminal P. C. The period of imprisonment in default of furnishing security should be coterminous with the period of the security order. Otherwise the order requiring him to give security for one year would be without any real force.

I would therefore recommend that the period of imprisonment in default should be extended to one year or till such time as the accused does not put in the necessary security bond.

Order.—The learned District Magistrate's interpretation of S. 123, Criminal P. C., appears to be correct. According to that S. 123-A the person who is ordered to furnish security for good behaviour but fails to do so "shall be detained in prison for the period for which security was demanded." The order of imprisonment for a shorter period was therefore bad in law. I therefore modify that order and direct that the accused should suffer imprisonment for one year, i. e. the period for which security was demanded, or until he gives the security.

V.S./R.K.

Order accordingly.

v.

Ram Saran Singh—Respondent.

Criminal Revn. No. 311 of 1929, Decided on 2nd July 1929, against the decision of the Addl. Sess. Judge, Patna, D/- 16th March 1929.

(a) Criminal P. C., S. 403—S. 403 contains with certain limitations common law rule that no one may be punished twice for same offence.

It is a fundamental common law rule that no one may be punished twice for the same offence and this has long been held to mean that he may not be punished twice for the same acts or omissions irrespective of the exact terms of the charge, and that the test of similarity is whether or not the evidence to obtain a legal conviction on the first charge was in substance the same as that necessary to sustain the second charge. The specific statement of this common law rule together with its limitations is contained in S. 403.

(b) Criminal P. C., S. 403 (1) — Where more than one offence has been committed by same transaction, S. 403 (1) has no application.

As S. 236 does not contemplate a case in which the series of acts complained of may constitute more than one offence, therefore, S. 403 (1) has no application to a case where more than one offence has been committed by the same transaction.

(c) Criminal P. C., S. 403 (2)—S. 403 (2) has no application to case in which entire series of acts constitute both offences.

Section 403 (2) limits or rather explains the common law rule as meaning that the acquittal or conviction for the offence constituted by acts A, B and C, will not bar a subsequent trial in respect of the offence constituted by the acts B, C and D. The offences are distinct and the evidence necessary in the first case is different from the evidence necessary in the second. This subsection has no application to a case in which entire series or acts constituted both offences.

(d) Criminal P. C., S. 403 (4)—Accused must show on second occasion that former Court was competent to try and acquit or convict him — Words "competent to try" mean Court is "in a legal position to have tried and acquitted or convicted."

The words "competent to try the offence" mean that in order to obtain the advantage of the common law rule the accused on the second occasion must show that the former Court was in a position, had it so chosen, to try and acquit or convict the accused of the offence subsequently charged. The words "competent to try" are also equivalent to "in a legal position to have tried and acquitted or convicted." They refer narrowly to the legal position of the Court at the time of the former trial in relation to the particular offence committed by the accused and not broadly to the jurisdiction of the Court with regard to the class of offence in general: 37 All. 107 and 17 Bom. L. R. 678, Rel. on; 36 Mad. 308, not foll. [P 4 C 1, 2]

(e) Criminal P. C., S. 403—Accused shouting in Court and assaulting another with shoe — Magistrate exercising power under Criminal P. C., S. 480, convicting him under S. 238, Penal Code—Assaulted person lodging complaint against accused under S. 355, Penal Code—Conviction under S. 355—Accused cannot plead bar of S. 403, Criminal P. C., as Magistrate had no cognizance of offence of Penal Code, S. 355.

While a Magistrate, with first class powers, was conducting a trial, the accused, suddenly stood up in Court, shouted "Jai Mahabir" and beat another person with a shoe. The accused thereby committed two offences under Penal Code, Ss. 228 and 355. The presiding Magistrate exercising his powers under S. 480, Criminal P. C., punished him for the offence under S. 228, Penal Code. Thereafter the assaulted person filed a complaint in Sub-Divisional Officer's Court who convicted the accused under S. 355. In appeal and revision the accused pleaded bar of S. 403, Criminal P. C.

Held: that the Magistrate had no cognizance of the offence under S. 355, Penal Code and therefore, in the absence of this condition precedent, was incompetent to try the accused for it. Consequently the accused was never in peril of punishment and cannot rely on the plea of autrefois convict. [P 5 C 1]

K. P. Jayaswal, S. P. Asthana and A. Barman—for Petitioner.

Indu Bhuran Biswas—for Respondent.

Courtney-Terrell, C. J.—The facts of this case are unusual but simple and they give rise to an interesting point of law.

On 6th December 1928 a Deputy Magistrate with first class powers was conducting a trial. The petitioner Babu Lal Mahton, suddenly stood up in Court, shouted "Jai Mahabir" and beat one Ram Saran with a shoe. This conduct could be considered from two points of view. Firstly it was an offence under S. 228, I. P. C., that is to say, it was an interruption to a public servant sitting in a judicial proceeding. It was also an offence under S. 355, I. P. C., that is to say, an assault with intent to dishonour Ram Saran. The presiding Magistrate exercising his powers under S. 480, Criminal P. C. punished him for the offence under S. 228, I. P. C. by imposing a fine of Rs. 200 which was duly paid by the petitioner who accordingly purged himself of that offence. Thereafter the assaulted person Ram Saran filed a complaint in the Court of the Sub-Divisional Officer who took cognizance of the offence under S. 355 and sentenced the petitioner to rigorous imprisonment for two years. This conviction and sentence were upheld on appeal by the Additional Sessions Judge and the petitioner now moves this Court in revision. His contention is and has been throughout, that he is entitled to rely upon the plea of autrefois convict by reason of his conviction by the Magistrate under S. 228, I. P. C.

It is a fundamental common law rule that no one may be punished twice for the same offence and this has long been held to mean that he may not be punished twice for the same acts or omission irrespective of the exact terms of the charge, and that the test of similarity is whether or not the evidence to obtain a legal conviction on the first charge was in substance the same as that necessary to sustain the second charge. This is a common law rule which subject to certain specific limitations operates in India as well as in England. The specific statement of this rule together with its limitations, is contained in S. 403, Criminal P. C. which contains four subsections. These subsections deal with four kinds of cases.

(1) deals with the case of one set of acts or omissions constituting one legal offence only.

(2) deals with the case of one series of acts involving more than one offence.

(3) deals with the case of one set of acts constituting more than one legal offence.

(4) deals with a special cases where a single act or set of acts has had a consequence unknown at or having occurred since the first trial.

Subsection (1) is as follows:

"A person who has once been tried by a Court of competent jurisdiction for an offence and convicted or acquitted of such offence shall, while such conviction or acquittal remains in force, not be liable to be tried again for the same offence, nor on the same facts for any other offence for which a different charge from the one made against him might have been made under S. 236, or for which he might have been convicted under S. 237."

This is a special statement of the rule as applicable to circumstances in which only one offence has been committed. The phrase beginning with the words "nor on the same facts for any other offence" and having special reference to Ss. 236 and 237 also contemplates a case where the facts only justified conviction for one offence although other offence may have been charged, ex abundante cautela under S. 236. The words "might have been charged" indicate that this subsection is no extension of the commonlaw rule and mean "might lawfully have been charged" under that section. But S. 236 does not (as does S. 235) contemplate a case in which the series of acts complained of may constitute more than one offence. In my opinion this subsection has no application to a case like the present where more than one offence has been committed.

"If in one series of acts so connected together as to form the same transaction, more offences than one are committed by the same person he may be charged with, and tried at one trial for, every such offence."

that is to say, if a person has performed a series of acts A, B, C, D, and if acts A, B, and C constitute one offence and acts B, C and D, constitute another offence he may be charged with, and tried at one trial, for both of such offences. Sub-S. (2), S. 403, limits, or rather explains the common law rule as meaning that the acquittal or conviction for the offence constituted by acts A, B and C, will not bar a subsequent trial in respect of the offence constituted by the acts B, C, and D. The offences are distinct and the evidence necessary in the first case is different from the evidence necessary in the second. So that the common law rule is still maintained and is not interfered with by this subsection. The subsection has no application to the present case in which the entire series of acts constituted both offences.

It is unnecessary for the purposes of this case to consider sub-S. (3). Sub-S. (4) is a further explanation and limitation of the general common law rule and is as follows:

"A person acquitted or convicted of any offence constituted by any acts may, notwithstanding such acquittal or conviction, be subsequently charged with, and tried for, any other offence constituted by the same acts which he may have committed if the Court by which he was first tried was not competent to try the offence with which he is subsequently charged."

It will be noted in the first place that the subsection involves in itself that part of the common law rule according to which an accused cannot rely upon the pleas of autrefois acquit or autrefois convict unless the previous acquittal or conviction was arrived at by a competent tribunal. But a series of acts may constitute more than one offence and the subsection says that a person acquitted or convicted of an offence may nevertheless be subsequently tried for any other offence constituted by the same acts if the Court by which he was first tried was not competent to try the offence with which he is subsequently charged. Therefore the common law rule has no application, if the first Court was not competent to try him for the offence subsequently charged, notwithstanding that the acts constituting the two offences are identical. In my opinion the words "competent to try the offence" mean that in order to obtain the advantage of the common law rule the accused on the second occasion must shew that the former Court was in a position, had it so chosen to try and acquit or convict the accused of the offence subsequently charged.

It has been contended before us that the words "competent to try" are merely indicative of the rank of the tribunal, that is to say, that if the former tribunal had legal power to try offences of that class the conditions of the subsection are fulfilled although the former tribunal might not have been able in the circumstances to have acquitted or convicted the accused of the offence subsequently charged. Some colour is given to this contention by certain decision of the Madras High Court and I refer particularly to the judgment in the case of "In re, Ganapathi Bhatta (1)." In this case the accused had been tried and acquitted of an offence under S. 211, I.P.C. He could have been charged on the same facts by the Magistrate at the same trial with an offence under S. 182, if the required sanction had been available. Later he was, after the necessary sanction had been obtained, charged under S. 182, and he pleaded autrefois acquit under S. 403, Criminal P. C.

It was contended for the prosecution that since at the time of the first trial no sanction had been given for a charge under S. 182, the Court was not "competent to try" him under that section.

The High Court held that sanction was only a condition precedent to the institution of proceedings under S. 182 and that it was the duty of the prosecution to have obtained it before the former trial in which event both sections could have been used. In these circumstances the Court held that the words "competent to try" in sub-S. (4) referred to the jurisdiction of the tribunal which was complete to deal with an offence under both sections, the absence of the sanction not affecting the competence of the tribunal. In my opinion the words "competent to try" are equivalent to "in a legal position to have tried and acquitted or convicted." That is to say, they refer narrowly to the legal position of the Court at the time of the former trial in relation to the particular offence committed by the accused and not broadly to the jurisdiction of the Court with regard to the class of offence in general. No other reading of these words is in harmony with the general common law doctrine of which a particular aspect only is set forth in the subsection and the broader reading would produce an unreasonable anomaly. For it would absolve the plea from the common law test of its validity, that is to say an enquiry whether the accused had been put in peril in respect of the offence.

The Madras decision merely states that in fact the accused had already been in peril of conviction under S. 182, I. P. C. But decisions in the Allahabad and Bombay High Courts, see for example, Emperor v. Jivan (2), lay down that the necessary sanction being a condition precedent to a trial under S. 182 therefore the accused in such circumstances had never been in peril in respect of the offence subsequently charged. In my opinion the latter view is correct and the Madras decision was wrongly decided. In Emperor v. Tikaram Sakharam Kasar (3), the accused had been tried and acquitted for offences under Ss. 366, 368 and 375, I.P.C. There had been no complaint by the husband of the woman. He was again convicted on the same facts, at the complaint of the husband, of an offence under S. 498.

1930 BENGALI PARIDA V. BANCHHANIDHI PANIGRAHI (Courtney-Terrell, C. J.)

It was held that a complaint by the husband being a condition precedent to the Court's jurisdiction to try under S. 498, the former Court not only did not in fact try the offence under S. 498, but was in law incompetent to try that offence and the subsequent conviction was good.

In this case the Magistrate had no cognizance of the offence under S. 355, and, therefore, in the absence of this condition precedent was incompetent to try the petitioner for it. Consequently the petitioner was never in peril of punishment and cannot rely on the plea of autrefois convict. I agree with the decisions of the Magistrate and the Sessions Judge and would dismiss this petition. But in the matter of the sentence I am of opinion that it is far too severe and I would reduce it from two years to six months rigorous imprisonment.

Rowland, J.—I have had the privilege of seeing the judgment of the learned Chief Justice and I concur in the proposed order. The ground for revision is thus stated in the application:

"For that the incident being one and the same and the accused having been sentenced to pay a fine of Rs. 200. the second trial under S. 355, I. P. C., is barred by S. 403, Criminal P. C."

Sub-section (1), S. 403, which alone imposes a statutory prohibition on a second trial has been set out in full in the judgment of the learned Chief Justice who has demonstrated that it does not apply to the facts of this case. There being no other statutory provision in bar of the second trial the applicant has not made out that the trial is barred by S. 403.

As regards S. 403 (4) I agree with the learned Chief Justice that the High Courts of Bombay and Allahabad in the decisions cited have correctly stated the law.

Criminal Ref. No. 38 of 1929, Decided on 22nd July 1929, made by Sess. Judge, Cuttack, D/- 16th May 1929.

Criminal P. C., S. 146—Parties not adducing evidence of possession even on adequate opportunities—Apprehension of breach of peace—No material to protect possession of either—Magistrate must attach property.

There is no obligation imposed by S. 146, on the Magistrate to make independent enquiry if the parties having been given adequate opportunities decline to adduce evidence as to possession. He is entitled to act on his apprehension of breach of peace founded on information he may have before him and in the absence of material which would enable him to protect the possession of one or the other of the parties he must attach the property: 14 C. W. N. 80 and A. I. R. 1922 Pat. 544, Ref.; 12 C. W. N. 896, Dist. and 40 Cal. 105, Diss. from. [P 6 C 1]

Courtney-Terrell, C. J.—This case has been referred to a Bench by Macpherson, J. It is a reference to the High Court by the Sessions Judge of Cuttack, who recommends that an order of attachment made by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate under S. 146, Criminal P. C., may be set aside and the case remanded for retrial.

The order sheet of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate shows that on 10th November 1928, he received a police report that a breach of the peace was likely to occur concerning an area of some 12 acres in mauza Panisiali upon which paddy was growing, there being two rival claimants. He called for a further report which when furnished on 22nd left it in doubt which party had grown the standing crop. The first party had got delivery of possession from the Court in 1926 but in 1927 the second party had cultivated it and had cut the crop. The Magistrate served notice under S. 144 on the first party not to interfere with the harvesting by the second party. On 26th November the first party showed cause. The Magistrate directed proceedings under S. 145, and attached the land and the crops directing the police to effect the harvesting and fixed 18th December for the written statements. On that date he granted further time until 16th January 1929, for the written statements which were duly filed on that day when the Magistrate fixed the hearing of evidence for 4th February and summoned the witnesses for that date. Neither party appeared on the 4th and the Magistrate stating that he was unable to find who was in possession made the order under S. 146 complained of.

The order was perfectly right. If the parties refused, after ample time had been given them to adduce evidence, the Magistrate was not bound to make an enquiry on his own account. He is entitled to act on his apprehension of a breach of the peace founded on the police report. If the proceedings had been initiated by one of the parties and if neither party had appeared at the hearing the matter would have been on a different footing. The Sessions Judge mentions the case of Parsuram Rai v. Shivajatan Upadhaya (1). This case is very badly reported and there is no adequate statement of the facts upon which the decision was based.

In Bijoy Madhub v. Chandra Nath (2), a similar order was made. The parties did not file written statements and prayed for a local investigation which was refused. Neither side produced evidence and after delay the Magistrate made the order which was approved by the High Court. The case of Sheikh Mansur Ali v. Mali Ullah (3), is clearly distinguishable from this one because in that case the Magistrate gave the parties no time to produce evidence, in other words, he did not conduct the enquiry under S. 145 in a proper manner.

I do not agree with the reasoning of the Court in Sheobalak Rai v. Bhagwat Pande (4). I can find no obligation imposed by S. 146 on the Magistrate to make independent enquiry if the parties having been given adequate opportunity decline to adduce evidence as to possession. The Magistrate is then entitled to fall back on such information as he may have before him which would make him apprehensive of a breach of the peace. In the absence of material which would enable him to protect the possession of one or other of the parties he must attach the property. I would reject the reference.

Rowland, J.—I agree.

MACPHERSON, J.

Parmanand Brahmachari—Petitioner—

Emperor—Opposite Party.

Criminal Revn. No. 704 of 1927, Decided on 29th November 1927, from order of Sess. Judge, Muzaffarpur, D/- 23rd September 1927.

(a) Criminal P. C., S. 190—Cognizance properly taken—Subsequent events or anything in S. 195 (1) (b), cannot deprive Magistrate of jurisdiction.

Where a Magistrate has properly taken cognizance of a complaint nothing that can happen subsequently will suffice nor can anything in S. 195 (1) (b), operate to deprive him of jurisdiction to proceed thereon in accordance with law: A.I.R. 1925 Pat. 717, Dist. [P 8 C 1]

(b) Criminal P. C., S. 190—"Taking cognizance"—Meaning.

Taking cognizance occurs as soon as the Magistrate as such applies his mind to the suspected commission of an offence: 37 Cal. 412, Foll. [P 7 C 2]

(c) Criminal P. C., S. 202—Object and scope enunciated.

An enquiry or an investigation under S. 202 is designed to afford the Magistrate an opportunity of either confirming or removing such hesitation as he may feel in respect of issuing process against the accused. The nature of the enquiry varies with the circumstances of each case and it is certainly not contemplated that it should always be exhaustive. Frequently all that is required is the elucidation of some minor point or the summary determination of the sufficiency of the available evidence, but least of all is the enquiry—a preliminary trial of the accused at which he is entitled to adduce his evidence before process can issue upon him. The degree of formality of the proceedings and the width and the depth of the enquiry is entirely in discretion of the Magistrate (so long at least as he confines himself to the simple question of issue of process or dismissal of the complaint). The provision is enabling and not obligatory. As soon as he has satisfied himself that process should issue its object is fulfilled and it is certainly not incumbent upon him or ordinarily expedient that he should practically enter upon a trial of the case. [P 8 C 1, 2]

(d) Criminal P. C., S. 202—High Court will not interfere with details of enquiry, particularly on ground of inadequacy.

The High Court will not ordinarily interfere with the details of an enquiry or investigation under S. 202 and particularly will not do so on the ground that it was inadequate. [P 8 C 2]

(e) Criminal P. C., S. 204—Competing complaints—Magistrate has discretion to issue summons on consideration of circumstances of case.

When there are competing complaints it is manifestly within the discretion of the Magistrate on a consideration of the circumstances of the particular case to determine in which he should issue process first and not less so when he has made an enquiry under S. 202 in one of them which necessarily involves also consideration of the other. . . [P 80 2]

(f) Criminal P. C. S. 202 — Complaint under S. 211 by public servant acting in discharge of his duties—It is open to Magistrate to issue summons without any notice to accused if complaint afforded sufficient ground for proceeding against him.

Where a public servant acting in discharge of his duties makes a complaint to the Magistrate under S. 211, Penal Code, it is open to the Magistrate to issue summons without any notice to accused if on reading the complaint he found sufficient ground for proceeding or to proceed under S. 202 for the purpose of ascertaining the truth or falsity of the complaint. [P 7 C 2]

M. K. Mukherjee—for Petitioner.

Judgment. — The petitioner Parmanand Brahmachari is under trial for an offence under S. 211, I. P. C., on the complaint of the Sub-Inspector in charge of the Motihari Police Station with whom he lodged a first information on 29th May last. On 7th June the Sub-Inspector reported that the whole case was maliciously false and preferred to the Sub-Divisional Magistrate a complaint against the petitioner of an offence under S. 211, I. P. C. The Magistrate gave the petitioner an opportunity to show cause why he should not be prosecuted and to prove his case. The petitioner on 27th June filed a petition showing cause and impugning the police report and on 21st July examined a medical witness. On that date the Magistrate who was apparently inclined to summon the accused since he remarked that the police had much evidence against him took time to peruse the police records and eventually passed orders on 18th August summoning the petitioner under S. 211. In the interval the latter had on 27th July presented a petition dealing with points of law but also asking that what he called his complaint be finally disposed of before process was ordered to issue on him on the complaint of the Sub-Inspector.

In support of the rule issued on the application of the petitioner to quash the proceedings and to order that he be given an opportunity to prove his case, reference is made on his behalf mainly to the case of Daroga Gope v. Emperor (1), and it is contended that the offence of laying a false information before the Sub-Inspector on 29th May has been committed "in relation to" the offence of instituting on 27th June a false case by a complaint in the form of a petition impugning the police report on his first information, within the meaning of the words "in relation to" in S. 195 (1) (b), Criminal P. C. But a consideration of the case cited shows, as will presently appear, that the facts are distinguishable. Some older decisions also have been cited, but it is clear that in the amending Act of 1923 the legislature completely altered the law in respect of the procedure for prosecution under S. 211, I. P. C., resolutely or at least incidentally making a clean sweep of the cloud of interpreting rulings which had collected round the provisions of the statute. Those decisions on the provisions of the unamended Code of Criminal Procedure relating to an order or sanction to prosecute under S. 182 or S. 211, I. P. C., are at best lumber and at worst actively misleading in the interpretation of the provisions of the amending Code which supersedes the previous law and prescribes an entirely new procedure by complaint. In the present case there is manifestly nothing in S. 195 (1) to prevent the Sub-Inspector of Police from preferring a complaint of an offence under S. 211 against the petitioner. Equally there was nothing to prevent the Court from taking cognizance of the complaint. Taking cognizance occurs as soon as the Magistrate as such applies his mind to the suspected commission of an offence: Sourindra Mohan v. Emperor (2).

In the present instance the Magistrate took cognizance either before or at least as soon as he issued notice upon the petitioner. When taking cognizance of an offence on complaint a Magistrate acts under Ss. 200 to 204. In the present instance he was not required under S. 200 to examine the complainant who was a public servant acting in discharge of his public duties. The Magistrate if he does not dismiss the complaint must either issue process on the accused or proceed under S. 202 to make an inquiry or to direct a magisterial or police inquiry or investigation. It is clear that on 13th June the Magistrate though recording his reasons in language reminiscent of a procedure which obtained under the unamended Code, thought fit to set out to hold an inquiry under S. 202. When, therefore, the petitioner filed his petition on 27th June impugning the police investigation, the Magistrate had already taken cognizance on complaint of the offence alleged against the petitioner, and, therefore, S. 195 (1) (b) could not possibly apply. On the other hand in the case of Daroga Gope v. Emperor (1) though the investigating Police Officer made his adverse report on 15th January he did not prefer a formal complaint to the Magistrate until 3rd February, whereas Daroga Gope filed a formal complaint before the Magistrate on 23rd January, that is to say, before the Magistrate had taken cognizance of the offence of Daroga Gope on the complaint of the Police Officer and indeed before the Magistrate had received the petition of complaint of the latter. The distinction is of importance: in the case cited magisterial cognizance was first taken on the complaint of accused whereas in the present instance, such cognizance had already been taken before the accused took any action which can, even by implication, be adjudged to be a complaint, and it is impossible to hold that when a Magistrate has taken cognizance of a complaint anything that can subsequently happen will suffice or anything in S. 195 (1) (b) can operate to deprive him of jurisdiction to proceed thereon in accordance with law. Clearly the Magistrate had jurisdiction to issue summons on the petitioner.

(2) [1910] 37 Cal. 412=6 I. C. 8=14 C. W. N. 512.

It is next urged that in any event the petitioner was not afforded adequate opportunity of showing cause against his prosecution. Assuming that under the superseded provisions of the Code he was entitled to such an opportunity, he is no more entitled to it under the procedure laid down in the amended Code than any other person against whom a complaint is made. It was open to the Magistrate to issue process without any notice to him if on reading the complaint he found sufficient ground for proceeding, or to proceed under S. 202 for the purpose of ascertaining the truth or falsity of the complaint. An inquiry or investigation under S. 202 is designed to afford the Magistrate an opportunity of either confirming or removing such hesitation as he may feel in respect of issuing process against the accused. The nature of the inquiry varies with the circumstances of each case, and it is certainly not contemplated that it should always be exhaustive. Frequently all that is required is the elucidation of some minor point or the summary determination of the sufficiency of the available evidence, but least of all is the inquiry, a preliminary trial of the accused, at which he is entitled to adduce his evidence before process can issue upon him. The degree of formality of the proceedings and the width and depth of the inquiry is entirely in the discretion of the Magistrate (so long at least as he confines himself to the simple question of issue of process or dismissal of the complaint). The provision is enabling and not obligatory as soon as he has satisfied himself that process should issue, its object is fulfilled and it is certainly not incumbent upon him or ordinarily expedient that he should practically enter upon a trial of the case.

In the present instance the Magistrate was satisfied upon the material placed before him by the prosecution of the truth of the complaint in spite of the submissions and evidence adduced by the accused and was, therefore, warranted in issuing process, even though accused may have had further evidence which he could adduce. This Court moreover will not ordinarily interfere with the details of an inquiry or investigation under S. 202 and particularly will not do so on the ground that it was inadequate.

As to the argument that when the Magistrate had before him two competing complaints of which he had taken cognizance, he should have disposed of the complaint of the petitioner before issuing process upon the petitioner on the other though earlier complaint, it is based upon recollection of the decisions under the superseded provisions of the unamended Code. When there are competing complaints it is manifestly within the discretion of the Magistrate on a consideration of the circumstances of the particular case, to determine in which he should issue process first and not less so when he has made an inquiry under S. 202 in one of them which necessarily involves also a consideration of the other.

The application is without merit and accordingly this rule is discharged.

Criminal Revn. No. 140 of 1929, and Criminal Revn. Petn. No. 120 of 1929, Decided on 21st August 1929, against order of Town Sub-Magistrate, Trichinopoly, D/- 1st February 1929.

Criminal P. C., S. 239 (6) — Joint trial—Complaint against five accused the first being abettor—Abettor discharged being unidentified — Charge framed against others and prosecution witnesses cross-examined—Further inquiry against accused 1 directed on revision—Joint trial of abettor with others was not ordered—Criminal Trial.

A complaint was filed against five persons under S. 325, Penal Code, the 1st being included as an abettor. Accused 1 was discharged on the ground of not being identified and charge was framed against the other four accused. On revision further inquiry was directed which was to give further opportunity to the prosecution witness to identify accused 1. Meanwhile proceedings against the other four accused had proceeded and prosecution witnesses had been cross-examined after the charge.

Held: that though ordinarily the correct course is to try an abettor with the primary offender yet in this particular instance the proceedings had reached such a stage that a joint trial could not be ordered: A. I. R. 1926 Mad. 638, Ref. [P 9 C 1,2]

Order.—The petitioner is the complainant. He filed a complaint against five persons which was taken on file against accused 2 to 5 as voluntarily causing grievous hurt under S. 325, I.P.C., and against accused 1, who is a pleader, as abetment of that offence, under Ss. 325 and 114, I. P. C. The Town Sub-Magistrate of Trichinopoly who tried the case discharged accused 1 on the ground that he had not been identified, and framed a charge against the remaining accused of the offence stated. The complainant then applied to the Sessions Judge of Trichinopoly to revise the order discharging accused 1 and the application was granted, the learned Sessions Judge directing further inquiry which was to include affording several of the prosecution witnesses an opportunity of identifying accused 1. In Criminal Revision Case No. 952 of 1928 Reilly, J., refused to interfere with this order.

Meanwhile, as I have said, a charge had been framed against the other accused and the first prosecution witness had been further cross-examined after charge. The question then arises as to the correct procedure to be adopted, whether, as the petitioner urges, the joint trial of all the accused could be resumed or whether the trial of accused 1 must be conducted separately. The parties appear to have been canvassing this question before the local courts, for I find an application by accused 1, disposed of by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate on 5th January 1929, in which it is said that there can be no question of a joint trial, and another application by the complainant to the Sub-Magistrate insisting that a joint trial is necessitated by the circumstances. The Sub-Magistrate is, however, of a contrary opinion. I think that the views taken by these Courts are correct.

No one disputes the general principle, to which Spencer, Offg. C.J., gave expression in Sogaimuthu Padayachi v. Emperor (1), that ordinarily the correct course is to try an abettor with the primary offender or offenders. Where no reason to the contrary appears, the enabling provisions of S. 239, Criminal P.C., should be availed of. In the present case, however, it is I think only necessary to consider what a joint trial would involve to be satisfied that it cannot now be had compatibly with observing the rules of procedure.

Suppose, then, that accused 1 is reinstated in the dock, along with the remaining accused. The proceedings against those accused, as I have said, have extended to the framing of a charge and to the further cross-examination of a witness after charge. One of two courses must then be pursued. Either that part of the proceedings against accused 2 to 5 which took place after the order discharging accused 1 was passed must be expunged, so as to restore them to that point in the inquiry which has been reached in the case of accused 1, or inquiry must be conducted solely into accused 1's case until it reaches the stage at which it stands against the other accused. For adopting the former alternative I can find no justification. It is not to be found in the order directing further inquiry against accused 1. Cancellation of the charge could only be justified on the ground that it had been improperly framed, and no such ground can be alleged. We are left then with the second alternative, and that presents even greater difficulties. Assuming that the inquiry is taken up against accused 1 at the point where it was dropped, the next step would be the examination of P. Ws. 6 to 9 touching their identification of accused 1, and their cross-examination upon this question. Their statements would be evidence against accused 1, but although what they said might bear upon the case against the others, it would not be evidence against them. The Court would have to distinguish in its mind between what was admissible against one of the accused and what was admissible against the others. It need scarcely be said that such a position would be at variance with the principles upon which a joint trial should be connected. It would in effect be no joint trial at all, because while the inquiry preceding charge was being conducted against accused 1, proceedings against the remainder would be at a standstill.

I conclude then that the Sub-Magistrate is taking the only practicable course in deciding to try accused 1 separately. Since the statements of the prosecution witnesses already recorded must be appropriated to one or other of the inquiries, and cannot, as to any part of them, be made to serve for both, this will involve a de novo inquiry into the case against accused 1. The Criminal Revision Petition is dismissed.

B. B. Ghose, J.—The objection that has been taken in this case on behalf of the respondents is that there is no substantial question of law involved in the appeal and that being so no appeal lies to the High Court from the order of the Commissioner under S. 30, Proviso. (2), sub-S. 1, Workmen's Compensation Act, (8 of 1923). The learned Commissioner has found that the accident, which was a very unfortunate one by which the appellant lost his right arm was due to the wilful disobedience of the order expressly given to him as well as to the other workmen by the night-Sirdar of the Colliery.

The case of the defendants-respondents was that the Sirdar actually made a cross over an old hole and he told the applicant and the other men not to drill there. The applicant gave his own evidence in support of his case. His evidence was that he saw no cross mark. The Commissioner has found that the version on behalf of the employers was true so that it must be taken as a fact that there was a cross mark and the workmen were forbidden to drill at the place. The next finding of the Commissioner was that there was wilful disobedience. It may be that upon the evidence in the case the Commissioner might reasonably have come to the conclusion that the facts do not show wilful disobedience. The evidence is that it does not matter how many holes are drilled by a workman in the course of the day. They are not paid by piece work but the applicant among others received a daily pay. There was no inducement on his part to wilfully disobey an order that had been made. The evidence of Jaganath Mondal on behalf of the opposite party is that a workman would get the same daily pay whether he drilled one hole or 20 holes even if the gallery had been cleared. Under such circumstances it might have been inferred quite reasonably that although the applicant drilled a hole at a place where there was a cross mark, it might have been due to forgetfulness or negligence or for any other reason but not as an act of wilful disobedience. A man does a thing wilfully when he does it intentionally because he expects some benefit to himself, either some convenience or an easy way of doing a piece of work and so forth. But it seems to me that the finding is one of fact which might be arrived at on the evidence. It is unfortunate that such a finding has been arrived at by the learned commissioner with which we cannot interfere in appeal having regard to the provisions of S. 30 of the Act. I hope, however, that the employers will find their way to make some compensation to the unfortunate workman, although he has failed in his appeal.

The appeal will stand dismissed but we make no order as to costs.

Criminal P. C., S. 145—Dispute regarding complete and existing bund and not right to erect one falls under S. 145.

Girija Prasanna Sanyal and Sourendra Nath Ghose—for Petitioners.

Protodh Chandra Chatterji and Bireswar Bhagchi—for Opposite Parties.

Suhrawardy, J.—This rule has been issued on the ground that S. 145, Criminal P. C., does not apply in this case. The dispute is with regard to a complete bund on the south west of the Rainagar Bil measuring about 40 feet in length with a top of about 4 cubits. Mr. Sanyal on behalf of the petitioners argues that the right claimed by his clients (the first party) is a right of easement or a right in the nature of an easement. The first party, he says, admits the land under the bund belongs to the second party but they claimed the right to put up a bund over the land of the second party to avoid overflow of water into their land. The case as it was tried before the Deputy Magistrate was not what it is now attempted to be. The subject matter of the dispute there was a complete bund then in existence.

The first party claimed that the bund was theirs and that they had the right to repair it from time immemorial. The second party's case was that the bund was recently erected on their land by the first party. The dispute between the parties therefore was in respect of the bund at the time of the proceedings as to whether the bund with the land underneath should be allowed to the first party or to the second party. The contention put forward before us on behalf of the first party loses sight of the difference between a bund and the right to erect a bund. Reference has been made in support of the contention of the first party to the case of Dowlat Koer v. Siva Pershad (1). There the dispute was with regard to the right of a party to flow water over the land of another and whether the other party had the right to put up a bund for obstructing the flow. There it was held that proceedings under S. 147, Criminal P. C., which were taken were properly started. That case is not relevant for our present purposes. Reference has also been made to the case of Empress v. Ganpat Kulwar (2). There the dispute was between landlord and tenant. The tenant claimed the right to put up a Gola on the land which he had leased from the landlord and the landlord claimed the right to prevent him from doing so. There the right claimed was an incorporeal and intangible right unconnected with the possession of land. In the present case the order passed by the trial Magistrate declaring the possession of the second party of the disputed place brings the case within S. 145, Criminal P. C. The subject matter of the dispute was the bund and not the right to erect a bund and we think that the proceedings are quite regular. The rule is accordingly discharged.

Graham, J.—I agree. In my opinion the case comes within the purview of S. 145, Criminal P. C. I may also observe that the point which has been raised before us that the proper section is S. 147 of the Code and not S. 145, was not raised before the Magistrate at the time when the enquiry was made. That being so, I do not think that we ought to entertain it in revision.

Sashi Sekhar Basu and Tarapada Banerjee—for Petitioners.

Judgment.—This rule was issued to show cause why the order of the learned District Magistrate of Howrah rejecting the application made by the petitioners for the quashing of an order issuing processes against them under S. 323 should not be set aside. The main ground urged is that the petitioners had already previously been tried for an offence under the Railways Act and had been convicted and fined, and that being so, they ought not to be again placed in peril in respect of another offence arising out of the same facts for which they might have been tried and convicted at the former trial. The trying Magistrate relying upon S. 403 (2), Criminal P. C., held that the trial was competent and the learned District Magistrate has endorsed that view. The point involved is not altogether free from doubt; but we do not think that we are called upon to decide it in this case inasmuch as it seems to be clear that while there was no charge of assault in the previous case, and which the accused were not on that occasion asked to plead in respect of that offence, the Court nevertheless took into account the fact that the accused had committed an assault upon the complainant, and in consideration thereof inflicted heavier fines upon them than upon the other two accused who had not committed any assault. That being so, we do not think that it would be just or proper that the petitioners having already been punished although indirectly on this account, should be again tried in respect of the same matter since that would involve punishment twice over for the same offence. In this view of the case we make the rule absolute and set aside the order complained of.

Criminal P. C., S. 274—S. 274 not strictly enforced in murder case—Jury is deemed to be illegally constituted — Criminal P. C. S. 326.

In a murder case only fourteen jurors were summoned of whom eleven attended and seven were empanelled.

Held: that not less than eighteen jurors ought to have been summoned and hence the trial was vitiated because the jury was illegally constituted, there being a breach of the statutory provisions: A. I. R. 1928 Cal. 645, Rel. on. [P 13 C 1]

Surujit Chandra Lahiri — for Appellant.

Ashrafali—for the Crown.

Order.—This is a reference by the Additional Sessions Judge of Dacca under S. 374, Criminal P. C., submitting for confirmation the proceedings in a case under S. 302, I. P. C., in which sentence of death has been passed upon the accused. The accused Dwarika Malo has also appealed against his conviction and sentence.

A preliminary point has been raised on behalf of the appellant that the jury, before which the case was tried was not properly or legally constituted, and that as a consequence the conviction and sentence are bad in law. We think that this contention is well founded and must prevail.

The sections of the Code which bear upon the point are Ss. 274 and 326 of the Code. S. 274 lays down that in trials before the Court of Sessions the Jury shall consist of such uneven number, not being less than five, or more than nine, as the Local Government, by order applicable to any particular district, or to any particular class of offences in that district, may direct; and the proviso to this section, which was added by Act 12 of 1923, states that where any accused person is charged with an offence punishable with death, the jury shall consist of not less than seven persons and, if practicable, of nine persons.

Section 326, which deals with the summoning of jurors and assessors, requires inter alia that the number to be summoned should be not less than double the number required for the trial.

Applying these provisions of the law to the present case it is clear that being a murder case not less than eighteen jurors should have been summoned. As a matter of fact only fourteen were summoned, and there was therefore to commence with a failure to comply with S. 326. It appears, however, that S. 274 could still have been complied with since eleven jurors are shown as having been in attendance. For some reason however, only seven of these were empanelled and the trial proceeded. In the circumstances stated it cannot be said that it was not practicable to empanel a jury of nine as required by S. 274 and, as there was a breach of this statutory provision, the jury must be held to have been illegally constituted. This view of the matter is supported by recent authority in this Court reported in Serajul Islam v. Emperor (1). In that case twelve persons were summoned and seven persons were selected as jurors out of eight who attended. It was held that the tribunal was illegally constituted, the proceedings were set aside, and the case remitted for retrial. We regret that we have no alternative but to follow the same course in the present case. We accordingly allow the appeal, set aside the conviction and sentence and direct that the case be retried according to law.

We draw the attention of the Additional Sessions Judge to the importance of seeing that the sections of the Code to which reference has been made above are in future carefully complied with.

Criminal Revn. No. 1090 of 1928, Decided on 27th March 1929, from an order of Sess. Judge, Burdwan, D/- 29th September 1928.

Probodh Chandra Chatterjee and Bireswar Chatterjee—for Petitioners.

Graham, J.—This rule was issued calling upon the District Magistrate of Burdwan to show cause why an order of the Sessions Judge of Burdwan directing that the petitioners should be committed for trial to the Court of Sessions on a charge of murder should not be set aside. The main ground upon which the order has been assailed is that inasmuch as the learned Sessions Judge had already at a previous stage rejected an application for setting aside an order discharging the petitioners under S. 409, Criminal P. C., he had exhausted his revisional power, and could not make the order now complained of under S. 437, Criminal P. C., the contention being that that order is, practically speaking, a review of his previous order, and therefore not sustainable in law. In my opinion there is no substance in this contention. The facts are shortly these:

The two petitioners and a woman named Tarubala were sent up for inquiry before Mr. A. Hossain, Deputy Magistrate of Burdwan under Ss. 307 and 326, I. P. C. The petitioners were discharged under S. 209, Criminal P. C., the Magistrate being of opinion that the evidence against them was so meagre and wretched that no jury could possibly convict upon it. Before the commencement of the trial an application was made before the Sessions Judge by the father of the woman Tarubala praying that the order of discharge should be set aside and that the present petitioners should be ordered to be committed for trial also. That application was summarily rejected on 10th July 1925 apparently upon a perusal of the commitment order. At a later stage with all the evidence before him the learned Sessions Judge came to the conclusion that the present petitioners had been improperly discharged and recorded the order which forms the subject matter of this rule.

The question is whether he had jurisdiction to make the order. In my judgment the contention that he had no such jurisdiction, because he had made the previous order rejecting a similar application, is without substance. Jurisdiction to make an order of this description, is a continuing jurisdiction, and is not barred merely because an application may have been previously refused upon different materials. An order of this nature is not a final order but is open to reconsideration upon proper materials. The case is analogous to the case of an order of dismissal or discharge. Such orders do not take away the jurisdiction of the Magistrate. A Court is competent to take cognizance of a complaint which it has already dismissed under S. 203, Criminal P. C., without any order for further inquiry by a superior tribunal: Emperor v. Chinna (1) following Dwarkanath v. Benimadhab (2). The position is the same as regards an order of discharge, though there may be some doubt where such an order has been passed upon a consideration of the full materials. S. 369, Criminal P. C., which was apparently relied upon by the petitioners before the Sessions Judge certainly has no application, since an order of this nature is not a judgment. It is also in my opinion, a material fact in the present case that the subsequent order directing commitment was made upon fresh materials when the entire evidence was before the Judge, whereas his first order was a summary one based merely on a perusal of the commitment order, which was all that was before him at that stage. If the Judge with these fresh materials before him was of opinion that there had been an improper discharge, it seems to me that it was his duty to make the order, and that if he failed to do so, a miscarriage of justice might result.

It was next argued that, whatever view may be taken as to the legality of the order, the learned Sessions Judge ought not to have made the order, since the case now made against the petitioners is not the case which was made out at the trial, and because there is not the remotest chance of a conviction being had. As to this the most material fact seems to be that the learned Judge with all the evidence before him was of opinion that there was a sufficient case to go to a jury. There is moreover another circumstance of importance, and it is this that at the trial, which has already taken place, the jury unanimously found the woman Tarubala guilty under Ss. 326 and 109, I. P. C. This in itself gives rise to the inference that the jury believed the story that the woman merely abetted the crime, and that the injuries were inflicted by some other person or persons, presumably the present petitioners. In short it furnishes a good reason for holding that the Judge was right in ordering the commitment of the petitioners. There was further the evidence of two witnesses who deposed to having seen the petitioners running away about the time of the occurrence with weapons in their hands. There may be reasons why that evidence should not be accepted. But it is evidence which ought to go before a jury.

For the reasons stated I am of opinion that the order was in accordance with law, and that it was in the circumstances a right and proper order. I would therefore discharge the Rule.

Suhrawardy, J.—I agree. The real controversy in this case turns upon the meaning of the words "on examining the record of any case under S. 435 or otherwise." It is argued that the learned Sessions Judge having refused to interfere with the order of commitment on an application made by the father of the woman is precluded from considering the matter under S. 437, Criminal P. C. I do not think that this contention should prevail upon the facts of this case. The first application was made by the father of the woman invoking the Court's jurisdiction under S. 435 and inviting it to call the record of the case and to pass orders thereon. This the Court refused to do. This was not in my opinion an order under S. 435 which says that the Sessions Judge may call for and examine the record of any proceeding before any inferior criminal Court, etc., etc. It cannot therefore be said that on the previous occasion the Court exercised any power given to it under S. 437 which says that when on examining the record called up under S. 435 the Sessions Judge considers that such case is triable exclusively by the Court of Sessions, etc., etc. Then again with regard to meaning of the words "or otherwise," I am inclined to give them a wider meaning than confining them to the provisions of S. 435. In Nabin Krishna Mookerji v. Rasik Lal Laha (3) the words 'or otherwise' were considered and interpreted. The learned Judges held they must mean not "in another way whatsoever" but in any other way provided by the Code. In the present case the Sessions Judge on reading the judgment of the enquiring Magistrate refused to call up the record. Then subsequently in the course of the trial against the other accused he thought that it was a proper case for him to interfere under S. 437, Criminal P. C. This is exactly the procedure which was considered to be within the meaning of the words 'or otherwise' in Nabin Krishna Mookerji's case (3) where it was held that the Court may exercise the power under this section if it acts in an appellate Court under S. 423. If the Sessions Judge had called up the record and on perusing the same had refused to interfere, there might have been room for controversy that he had no power to revive or vary his order under S. 369.

The next ground upon which this rule was obtained is that the petitions were deprived of the right of having their cases examined again before commitment. There does not seem to be any substance in this contention as the petitioners were tried by the Magistrate who thought that it was not a case for commitment, but the learned Sessions Judge is of a different opinion. S. 437 does not provide that there should be a fresh enquiry before commitment is ordered by the superior Court, under that section. I agree that the rule should be discharged.

Criminal Revn. No. 1322 of 1928, Decided on 26th April 1929, from order of Sub-Deputy Magistrate, Noakhali, D/- 17th August 1928.

(a) Criminal P. C., S. 145—Order under S. 145 is not confined to actual parties but may extend to others.

The binding character of an order passed under S. 145 is not under all circumstances to be confined to persons who were actually made parties to the proceedings but may under certain circumstances extend to persons other than the parties themselves: 11 Bom. L.R. 377, Rel. on. [P 16 C 2]

Where a person was not only aware of proceedings under S. 145 but has acted in collusion with one party in order to deprive the other party of the fruits of their success in S. 145 case.

Suresh Chunder Taluqdar and Raj Coomar Chakravarty—for Petitioners.

Debendra Narain Bhattacharjee for Khondkar—for the Crown.

Mallik, J.—The facts which have given rise to the present rule are briefly these: There was a proceeding under S. 145, Criminal P. C., between one Mon Mohun Chakravarty and others, first party, and Naba Chandra Chakravarty and others, second party. This proceeding under S. 145, Criminal P. C. was on 16th January 1928, decided in favour of the first party and the first party were declared entitled to maintain possession of the property in dispute and it was also ordered that there must not be any interference with their possession. When the Daroga went to the spot on 1st April 1928, he found the present petitioners in occupation of the property and, when he asked them to vacate it, the petitioners declined to do so. On these facts, the two petitioners were put on their trial under S. 188, I. P. C., and both of them were ultimately convicted and sentenced under that section. Against this order of conviction and sentence, the petitioners went up to the Sessions Judge but without any success. Thereafter, they came up to this Court and obtained the present rule on the District Magistrate to show cause why their conviction and sentence should not be set aside. The rule was issued on two grounds: (1) that the trial Court had acted illegally in rejecting the petition of the accused persons praying for time for issue of process upon their witnesses and (2) that the conviction and sentence of the petitioners under S. 188, I. P. C., was bad in law, inasmuch as neither of them had been a party to the proceedings under S. 145, Criminal P. C.

As regards the first ground, I do not think that there is much substance in it. It appears that, when the case for the prosecution was closed, the petitioners applied to the trying Magistrate for an adjournment of the case for 15 days in order to call defence witnesses. The learned Magistrate without adjourning the case for 15 days granted only a day's time and, when the case was taken upon the next day, namely, the 14th August 1928, seven witnesses for the accused were produced and all of them were examined. There is nothing to show that the petitioners wanted to examine any witnesses other than the seven who were produced in Court on 14th August and were, as a matter of fact, examined by the Magistrate. That being so, it cannot be contended that the petitioners were in any way prejudiced by the Magistrate's refusal to adjourn the case for 15 days.

The second ground on which this rule was issued was that the conviction of the petitioners was wrong in law, inasmuch as the petitioners had not been any party to the proceedings under S. 145, Criminal P. C., and it was contended that, as they were no parties to the proceedings under S. 145, Criminal P. C., the order passed by the Magistrate under that section was not binding on them. The question that arises for consideration in connexion with this point is whether the binding character of an order under S. 145, Criminal P. C. is under all circumstances to be confined to the persons who were actually parties to the proceeding. I am inclined to think that this question should be answered in the negative. Sub-S. (3), S. 145 lays down that at least one copy of the order passed under sub-S. (1) must be published by affixing it in some conspicuous place at or near the subject of dispute. This, to my mind, is an indication that the binding character of an order passed under S. 145 is not, under all circumstances, to be confined to the persons who were actually made parties to the proceeding but may, under certain circumstances, extend to persons other than the parties themselves. This view has been adopted by the Bombay High Court In re, Nathubhai Brijlal (1) where it has been held that an order under S. 145, Criminal P. C. is binding not only on the actual parties to the proceedings but also on persons who may have notice of the proceedings.

In the present case, the two petitioners were not only aware of the proceedings under S. 145 but they have been found to have acted in collusion with the second party in order to deprive the first party of the fruits of their success in the S. 145 case. Having regard, therefore, to the provisions of S. 145 (3), Criminal P. C., and the findings of fact arrived at by the Courts below, I am of opinion that the order under S. 145, Criminal P. C. was binding on the present petitioners as well. That being so, their conviction under S. 188, I. P. C. cannot be successfully challenged on the ground that they were not bound thereby.

The result, therefore, is that the Rule is discharged.

Criminal Revn. Cases Nos. 214 and 513 of 1929 and Criminal Revn. Petns. Nos. 186 and 465 of 1929, Decided on 30th July 1929, against order of Sess. Judge, Tinnevely, in Cr. R. C. 44 of 1928.

Criminal P. C., S. 437—Accused charged under Penal Code Ss. 457 and 380—Trying Magistrate discharging them under Criminal P. C., S. 209—Sessions Judge cannot pass order under S. 437 but can order inquiry under S. 436.

Section 437 relates only to cases triable exclusively by the Court of Session. Where, therefore, the accused, charged under Penal Code, Ss. 457 and 380, have been discharged by the trying Magistrate under Criminal P. C., S. 209, the Sessions Judge, acting under S. 437, cannot pass an order against the accused directing that the order of discharge be set aside and that the trying Magistrate do commit the accused to take their trial at the Sessions. The correct procedure is to order further inquiry under Criminal P. C., S. 436: 15 M. L. J. 373, Rel. on. [P 17 C 1, 2]

Order.—The petitioners in this case were discharged under S. 209, Criminal P. C., by the Sub-Magistrate of Koilpatti, the complaint against them being one of house breaking by night and theft in a building under Ss. 457 and 380, I. P. C. The learned Sessions Judge of Tinnevely, taking the matter up suo motu, issued notice to the accused and passed an order on 14th January 1929, against which this petition is presented, directing that the order of discharge be set aside and that the Sub-Magistrate do commit the accused to take their trial at the Sessions. No section of the Criminal Procedure Code is quoted as authority for this order but I must take it that it purported to be passed under S. 437, Criminal P. C., because that is the only section under which a revising Court has power to order commitment. If that be so, the learned Sessions Judge appears to have overlooked the circumstance that the section relates only to cases triable exclusively by the Court of Sessions, and the offences of house breaking by night and theft in a building do not fall within that category. The same error was dealt with in a case Tham- manna v. Emperor (1), referred for orders. The correct procedure was to order further inquiry under S. 436.

It has been pressed upon me that the Sub-Magistrate had valid grounds for his order of discharge, and that further proceedings should not be taken against the accused. After reading and considering the judgments, I think the best course is that I should make an order setting aside the order of the Sessions Judge directing commitment and restoring the case to his file for disposal according to law. Since there has been a change of officers, it will be open to the present Sessions Judge freshly to consider whether further enquiry into the complaint is justified. I order accordingly.

Madras Towns Nuisance Act (3 of 1889), S. 7—“Common gaming house” explained.

“Common gaming house” means a place of public resort where a number of persons are invited to congregate for the purpose of gaming: A. I. R. 1924 Mad. 729, Rel. on.; 15 Hals. 584, Foll. [P 17 C 2]

Order.—Petitioner 1 has been convicted under Ss. 6 and 7, Towns Nuisance Act, Madras Act 3 of 1889, of keeping a common gaming house and the remaining petitioners under S. 7 of gaming therein. The expression “common gaming house” has not been defined in the Act; and although a definition of the term occurs in S. 3, City Police Act, I think that following two decisions of this Court one unreported and the other reported as Chinniah, In re (1) the meaning to be attached is substantially that contained in 15 Hals. 584, namely a place of public resort where a number of persons are invited to congregate for the purpose of gaming. dence of the prosecution witness P. W. 3, upon whose information the Sub-Inspector took action, states with reference to the plate in question that he had seen the accused and others also always gaming with cards, betting money and gambling, that accused 1 was collecting Rangu Kusu (which is some kind of levy) for all such plays, that gaming went on there day and night and that whenever he passed by when going to work he saw the accused 1 and others gambling. Evidence to the same effect was given by P. W. 6, and the Sub-Inspector himself (P. W. 1) stated that he had information that accused 1 was keeping a common gaming house and that gambling was going on there. He made a raid with the result that all the accused were found inside the compound gambling with cards and money. As soon as they saw him they attempted to run away. I do not think that any other inference is possible on this evidence than that which has been drawn by the lower Courts, namely that accused 1 was keeping the gaming house and the remaining accused were actually caught when gambling there. In these circumstances I can find no reason to interfere with the conviction. I dismiss the petition.

FFORDE AND TEK CHAND, JJ.

Gehna Sardara—Convict—Appellant.
v.

Emperor—Opposite Party.

Decided on 21st October 1929, against order of Sess. Judge, Lyallpur, D/- 25th June 1929.

Penal Code, S. 302—Mere youth of murderer is insufficient for not imposing capital sentence—Want of apparent motive does not justify inference of provoking cause.

A particularly cruel and cowardly murder was committed by a lad of about 19 or 20 without any apparent motive and the capital sentence was sought to be reduced.

Held: that the mere youth of the murderer was insufficient for not imposing the capital punishment and that the absence of an apparent motive could not be construed as indicating the existence of a provoking cause, which would amount to a mitigating circumstance. [P 19 C 2]

M. Sleem—for Appellant.I. M. Mackay—for the Crown.

Fforde, J.—The appellant has been convicted of having murdered his wife by cutting her throat with a knife and has been sentenced to death by the learned trial Judge.

The prosecution case has been presented in its essentials by three witnesses, namely, Sarishta (P. W. 2), Burhan (P. W. 3) and Rajada (P. W. 4). Sarishta has stated that on the morning of the occurrence, namely, the morning of 16th March 1929, he was coming out of the mosque after saying his morning prayers when he heard an outcry coming from the ihata of one Khan which is two or three ihatas distant from the mosque. As he was going in the direction of the outcry he saw the appellant running out of Khan's ihata followed by Rajada, P. W. 4. Rajada was shouting that the appellant had murdered his wife and was escaping. The appellant at that time was holding a knife in his hand which was covered with blood. The witness Sarishta seized hold of him and Burhan and Rajada immediately came on the scene and assisted the witness in securing the appellant, Rajada snatching the knife from his hand. When asked why he had committed the murder the appellant replied that his wife was unchaste and that is why he had killed her. The witness Sarishta left the appellant in the custody of Rajada and went into the house of the deceased and found her lying on a charpoy with her throat cut and breathing her last. He then proceeded to the police station and made his report of the affair.

Burhan, the next important witness, is the brother of Khan in whose ihata the appellant was living at the time of this crime. Burhan's ihata adjoins Khan's, only a low partition wall separating it. The witness was sleeping in his house on the morning of the occurrence and awoke on hearing an outcry from Rajada. He ran in the direction of the cry and met the accused running towards him followed by Rajada. This witness then corroborated the evidence of Sarishta as to the securing of the appellant and wresting of the knife from his hands, with only this discrepancy, that this witness says that the knife was wrested from the appellant by Sarishta while Sarishta said that it was Rajada who took the knife away.

The third important witness is Rajada who actually witnessed the murder. He has stated that on the morning in question he left his house for the purpose of going to his well and had to pass the front of Khan's house, while doing so he heard a scream coming from within. He immediately turned back into the ihata and saw the appellant kneeling on his wife's chest and cutting her throat with a knife. Directly the appellant noticed the witness he got up and took to his heels. The witness raised an outcry and pursued him. The witness was joined in the pursuit by Burhan and he noticed Sarishta coming from the opposite direction to their assistance. When they came up to the appellant they seized hold of him and this witness, Rajada, wrested a blood-stained knife from his hands. On the witness's asking the appellant why he had committed the crime the reply was that he had killed his wife because she was unchaste.

Upon this evidence given by witnesses in Court, against whom no possible motive for making a false case can be suggested, it is perfectly clear that the appellant did murder his wife by cutting her throat. When asked before the Committing Magistrate about the crime the appellant refused to say anything beyond a denial to every question asked him. He put in a written statement in which he declares that he did not commit this crime and that he was on the night in question sleeping by his cattle in order to keep a watch over them and it was only on the following morning that he learnt that his wife had been murdered. Four witnesses have been called for the defence whose testimony is mainly directed to showing that the evidence of Sarishta cannot be relied upon. This defence evidence is, in my judgment, of no value whatsoever and has been quite rightly rejected by the learned Sessions Judge with whose reasons for so rejecting it I am in complete accord.

Mr. Sleem has strongly urged that in the event of his client being found guilty of murder the lesser penalty which the law permits should be imposed and not the capital sentence. I can see no reason for acceding to this request. Although no adequate motive has been proved for this crime it is a murder of a particularly cruel and cowardly nature.

The mere youth of the appellant who is either 18 or 19 years of age is not a sufficient ground for not imposing the capital sentence. He has not put forward any extenuating circumstance himself, and we are asked to assume that because a brutal murder has been committed without any apparent motive we ought to assume that there has been some provoking cause which would amount to a mitigating circumstance. I am not able to accept this contention of counsel for the appellant, and in my judgment, the only appropriate sentence for a crime of this kind is the capital sentence. I would accordingly dismiss this appeal and confirm the sentence of death.

Emperor—Opposite Party.

Criminal Appeal No. 686 of 1929, Decided on 18th October 1929, against order of First Class Magistrate, Dera Ghazi Khan, D/- 21st June 1929.

Penal Code, S. 235 — Man possessing instruments for counterfeiting coin, should not be separately punished for possessing various parts of such instrument.

The offence of counterfeiting coin is very serious and an exemplary sentence should be given. But when a man is being convicted for being in possession of instruments or materials for counterfeiting coin, it is hardly right to convict him separately for being in possession of various parts of such instruments, or materials. [P 20 C 1]

Niaz Muhammad—for Appellant.

Muhammad Monier—for the Crown.

Judgment.—These three connected appeals can be disposed of in one judgment. In my opinion the evidence in the first case clearly establishes that Laddha alias Allah Wadhaya appellant was found in possession of a wooden clip with which he was holding a mould for the purpose of counterfeiting coin. It is not very clear whether he was mending the said mould or boring holes in it by way of preparation, but in any case his offence would come within the purview of S. 235, I. P. C., under which he has been convicted.

In the connected case I see no reason to doubt the evidence of the prosecution witnesses which proves that the appellant Ladha produced various instruments and material for the purpose of counterfeiting from his own house. The appellant has been sentenced in both cases to seven years' rigorous imprisonment and Rs. 1,000, fine, in default one year's further rigorous imprisonment. As a matter of fact it is clear that he was in possession of certain instruments in one case which were a part of his stock-in-trade, the rest of which were discovered by him from his own house. The offence of counterfeiting coin is no doubt very serious and an exemplary sentence should be given. At the same time, I consider that when a man is being convicted for being in possession of instruments or materials for counterfeiting coin, it is hardly right to convict him separately for being in possession of various parts of such instruments or materials. I, therefore, accept the appeals to the extent of ordering that the sentence in each case shall be reduced to five years rigorous imprisonment and Rs. 500 fine, in default, six months' further rigorous imprisonment in each case. The result will be that the appellant will be sentenced to a total of ten years' rigorous imprisonment and Rs. 1,000 fine, in default one year' further rigorous imprisonment. As regards Rasul Bakhsh, the evidence against him clearly establishes the offence and the sentence is by no means too severe. I, therefore, dismiss the appeal.

Haidar Shah—Convict—Appellant.

v.

Emperor—Opposite Party.

Criminal Appeal No. 674 of 1929, Decided on 18th October 1929, against order of First Class Magistrate, Gujrat, D/- 29th May 1929.

Penal Code, S. 366—Intention can be inferred from conduct of accused and circumstances of case.

In a case under S. 366, it is the duty of the prosecution to prove that the abduction took place with the intention mentioned in the section, but then the intention can also be inferred from the conduct of the accused and the circumstances of the case. Ordinarily it is not possible for the prosecution to establish the intention except by proving the conduct. A girl of about 14 years' was forcibly abducted by the accused.

Held : that no inference except of the intention such as is mentioned in S. 366 is possible. [P 21 C 2 ; P 22 C 1]

B. S. Puri—for Appellant.

Mulk Raj—for the Crown.

Judgment.—Haidar Shah has been convicted in two different cases ; in the first he has been convicted under S. 366, I. P. C., and sentenced to five years' rigorous imprisonment ; in the second he has been convicted under S. 304-2 and sentenced to five years' rigorous imprisonment. He has further been convicted under S. 323 and sentenced to one year's rigorous imprisonment. The sentences in this last case have been ordered to run concurrently.

The facts alleged by the prosecution are these :—

Rang Shah, a collateral of Haidar Shah, had a daughter named Mt. Hayat Bibi. Rang Shah was a sonless proprietor and naturally his collaterals were anxious that the girl should be married in the family, so that the estate may not go out to a stranger. Haidar Shah was consequently a candidate for the hand of Mt. Hayat Bibi, but owing to his antecedents Rang Shah was not willing to give the girl to him. Instead he offered her to another cousin of Haidar Shah, but this proposal was not acceptable to Haidar Shah's family, because that cousin had already been betrothed to another girl. Mt. Hayat Bibi was ; therefore married to one Mohammad Shah. It is alleged that it was the intention of Rang Shah to make Mohammad Shah his khandamad. This caused offence to his reversioners and consequently, it is alleged, that on 17th September, 1928 when Mt. Hayat Bibi was sitting in her house with her stepmother, Mt. Jannat Bibi, in the absence of Rang Shah, Haidar Shah with several others came and abducted the girl. In doing so an injury was caused to Mt. Jannat Bibi and in spite of the outcries raised by her and the girl the culprits took the latter out of the village.

This abduction was witnessed by Mt. Jannat Bibi, P. W. Sardara, and P. W. Taja. After the girl had been abducted she was placed on horseback and was being carried away when P. W. Salehon, a friend of Rang Shah, having obtained information of the incident, pursued the culprits and was able to rescue the girl.

When he was bringing her back to the village he was accompanied by Shahna deceased and P. W. Khawaja. This party was again set upon by Haidar Shah and his companions, who were all armed with lathis, and subjected to a brutal assault. Salehon received 14 injuries, Shahna received four injuries and Khawaja received nine injuries. A large number of these injuries were on the head of each of the injured persons. The girl was again forcibly carried away and was not traced for a long time. This assault on Salehon, Shahna and Khawaja was witnessed by Maulu and Shera, who have both given evidence on behalf of the prosecution.

Rang Shah having received information of the incident reported the matter at the thana and the Sub-Inspector of Police arrived in the village and testified to having seen traces of the fight at the scene of the assault on Salehon, Shahna and Khawaja in the field pointed out by them. At that place also were found the dopatta and the loin cloth of Mt. Hayat Bibi, which, it is alleged were left behind during the struggle which attended her abduction.

Haidar Shah denies his guilt and states that he was absent from the scene of the occurrence altogether, and he has produced certain witnesses in support of this defence, but they have been rightly disbelieved by the learned Magistrate.

Mt. Hayat Bibi also was produced as a witness for the defence and she alleged that she was not abducted at all. On the other hand she says that she went voluntarily with Azam Shah whom she had married. It is to be noted that during the whole of the period which elapsed between the alleged abduction and her appearance in Court this girl had been in possession of the accused and it is easy to understand that after the death of her father Rang Shah she was won over by the accused. On 4th March 1929, i. e., about five months and a half after the alleged abduction, she presented an application to the Deputy Commissioner of Mianwalli in which she stated that she had gone with him voluntarily. The date of this application is significant in showing that it took the accused more than five months to bring the girl round to their view. I have, therefore, no hesitation in holding that Mt. Hayat Bibi did not give a true version of the affair, but that she made her statement in Court under the influence of the accused.

The prosecution version with regard to the actual facts of abduction is supported by the testimony of Mt. Jannat Bibi, Sardara, Taja (who is the brother of Khawaja, one of the injured persons) Salehon, Khawaja, Maulu and Shera. The assault on Salehon, Shahna and Khawaja has been established by the evidence of Salehon, Khawaja, Maulu and Shera. No reasonable explanation has been offered by the defence about the presence of such a large number of injuries on the persons of the three men, who were injured on the day. The incident of the assault lends a very strong corroboration to the story of the prosecution with regard to abduction.

Having regard to the evidence produced in the case, I have no hesitation in agreeing with the conclusions of the learned Magistrate that the prosecution have given a true version of the affair and that Haidar Shah has been rightly convicted both under S. 366 and Ss. 304 and 323, I. P. C.

Counsel for the appellant alluded to certain discrepancies in the statements of the prosecution witnesses. They are not, however, of a serious nature and such discrepancies are generally to be found when a number of witnesses describe an incident that they had witnessed under the circumstances already mentioned.

A number of cases were cited before me in support of the proposition that in a case under S. 366, it is the duty of the prosecution to prove that the abduction took place with the intention mentioned in that section. I feel no difficulty in assenting to this abstract proposition of law, but then the intention can also be inferred from the conduct of the accused and the circumstances of the case, and ordinarily it is not possible for the prosecution to establish the intention except by proving the conduct of the accused.

In the present case a girl who according to the witnesses for the prosecution, is alleged to be between 13 and 14 years of age, but according to her own statement is 18 years (the Magistrate had believed the prosecution version on this point) is forcibly carried away by the accused. Under the circumstances mentioned above there can be no other inference except of the intention such as mentioned in S. 366, I. P. C.

Similarly with regard to S. 304. It was contended that the prosecution witnesses do not definitely state that Haidar Shah appellant caused any particular injury to any particular injured person or to Shahna deceased, but the testimony of the witnesses is that he and a number of culprits came armed with lathis and all set upon the three injured persons. In these circumstances Haidar Shah must by virtue of S. 34, I. P. C., or of S. 149 be held guilty of the offence that was caused during the assault, and there can be no manner of doubt that Shahna, who received four injuries, three of which were on his head and which caused his death the same day, was subjected to a brutal assault and therefore the conduct of the assailants is punishable under S. 304-2, I. P. C.

I do not consider the sentences to be excessive having regard to the high-handed manner in which the whole affair was conducted by the accused. I dismiss the appeals.

Criminal Revn. Petn. No. 85 of 1929, Decided on 18th February 1929, against order of Sess. Judge, Lahore, D/- 5th December 1928.

Penal Code, S. 182—To constitute the offence the accused should know that there was no just or lawful ground for proceeding.

To constitute the offence punishable under S. 182, I. P. C., it is necessary that the information given should be which the accused person knows or believes to be false. It is not sufficient that he had reason to believe it to be false, or that he did not believe it to be true, there must have been positive knowledge or belief that it was false: 32 P. R. 1884 Cr. and 29 P. R. 1994 Cr., Foll. [P 22 C 2]

Hakumat Rai—for Petitioner.

Jamna Das—for the Crown.

Judgment.—As the learned Sessions Judge had not in his judgment discussed the evidence I have gone through the whole of the record and am of opinion that the evidence produced by the prosecution falls short of establishing all the necessary ingredients of an offence under S. 182, I. P. C., against the petitioner.

There is no doubt that the petitioner was inimical towards Chaudhri Mohammad Aziz and it is quite likely that he made the complaint in bad faith but as pointed out by Plowden, J., in Hinghan Khan v. Empress (1) to constitute the offence punishable under S. 182, I. P. C., it is necessary that the information given should be information which the accused person knows or believes to be false. It is not sufficient that he had reason to believe it to be false, or that he did not believe it to be true; there must have been positive knowledge or belief that it was false: see also the remarks of the same learned Judge in Murad v. Empress (2) to the following effect:

"It is not enough to find that he has acted in bad faith, that is, without due care or enquiry, or that he has acted maliciously, or that he had no sufficient reason to believe or did not believe the charge to be true. The actual falsity of the charge, recklessness in acting upon information without testing it, or scrutinising its sources; actual malice towards the persons charged they are relevant evidence more or less cogent; but the ultimate conclusion must be, in order to satisfy the definition of the offence, that the accused knew that there was no just or lawful ground for proceeding. It may be difficult to prove this knowledge, but, however difficult it may be, it must be proved and unless it is proved the informer must be acquitted."

The lower Courts have not examined this aspect of the case. In my opinion the evidence produced and the circumstances disclosed on the record do not satisfy the above test.

I, therefore, accept the petition for revision, set aside the conviction of the petitioner and the sentence passed against him and direct that he be set at liberty forthwith.

Criminal Revn. Petn. No. 830 of 1929, Decided on 16th September 1929, against order of Magistrate, First Class, Lyallpur, D/- 18th April 1929.

Punjab Northern India Canal and Drainage Act (8 of 1873), S. 70 (12)—General accusation of breach of rules made under S. 70 is inadequate.

Where the petitioner was never told what rule he had violated and where though violation about rules of taking turns of water was alleged yet no authorized warabundi was produced:

Held: that merely a general accusation of breach of rules made under S. 70 was wholly inadequate. [P 23 C 1]

Mohammad Iqbal—for Petitioner.

Judgment.—The petition was admitted on the question what rule made under the Act was violated. No appearance has been made against the petition. It was never explained to the petitioner what rule he had infringed, and a general accusation of breach of some rule made under S. 70 (12), Act 8 of 1873, was obviously inadequate. It is alleged, indeed that the petitioner infringed some rule about taking turns of water, but no authorized warabundi has been produced, and the conviction and sentence must be set aside on these grounds. I accept the petition accordingly and set aside the conviction and sentence. The fine, if paid, will be returned.

Jagat Singh—Accused—Appellant.
v.

Emperor—Opposite Party.

Criminal Appeal No. 761 of 1929, Decided on 25th October 1929 from order of Sess. Judge, Hoshiarpur, D/- 16th April 1929.

(a) Criminal P.C., S. 476—To issue notice and hold preliminary enquiry is discretionary.

Under S. 476, it is entirely discretionary and not obligatory with a Court to issue a notice and hold a preliminary enquiry.

(b) Criminal P.C., S. 195 (1) (b)—Before sanctioning prosecution of witness, Court should consider reasonable prospect of success and expediency of prosecution in interest of public justice.

A Court should, before sanctioning prosecution under S. 195 (1) (b), consider two essential factors namely, a reasonable prospect of success in the prosecution of a witness under Penal Code, S. 193 and the expediency of such prosecution in the interest of public justice.

Ram Lal Anand—for Appellant.

B. O'Conner—for the Crown.

Judgment.—Mt. Bhago, the wife of Umar Din, a Jat of Jamalpur, lodged a complaint under S. 376, I. P. C., against Harnam Singh, zaildar of Badala Mahi in the Hoshiarpur district. The Magistrate enquiring into the case for certain reasons committed the accused for trial. The learned Sessions Judge in agreement with the four assessors acquitted the accused Harnam Singh holding that the complaint of Mt. Bhago "was utterly false."

Harnam Singh thereupon moved the Sessions Judge for the prosecution of Mt. Bhago and certain witnesses including Jagat Singh the appellant before me under Ss. 211 and 193, I. P. C. The learned Sessions Judge without issuing any notice to the appellant directed his prosecution under S. 193, I. P. C.

Jagat Singh appellant was not a witness for the prosecution, but it appears that the defence alleged that he in concert with some other enemies of Harnam Singh, the accused, had instigated Mt. Bhago to bring the complaint and that Jagat Singh had identified himself with the matter by accompanying Mt. Bhago when she went to Dr. Sukh Dial, Assistant Surgeon, Hoshiarpur, for medical examination, paid the fee for this purpose and also a fee of Rs. 32 for the examination of stained garment by the Chemical Examiner.

Jagat Singh was, therefore, called as a Court witness by the Committing Magistrate and when examined on the above matters he denied having taken Mt. Bhago to Dr. Sukh Dial or having paid any fees. Jagat Singh was not examined as a witness at the trial being given up by the Public Prosecutor as his evidence was not considered necessary.

Mr. Ram Lal's contention that the learned Sessions Judge had no power to order the prosecution of Jagat Singh because he had not given evidence at the trial has no force in view of the clear provisions of Cl. (b), S. 195 (1), Criminal P. C., which permit such action to be taken by the Court before which the offence was committed or the Court to which such Court is subordinate.

His second contention that no notice was issued to Jagat Singh and no preliminary inquiry was held is also devoid of any force as S. 476, Criminal P. C., does not render this obligatory. It was entirely discretionary with the learned Sessions Judge to issue a notice and hold a preliminary enquiry but I am inclined to agree with the learned counsel that the present case was one in which such discretion should have been exercised.

It will be seen from the order of the learned Sessions Judge that he relies on the evidence of Dr. Sukh Dial to prove the falsity of Jagat Singh's testimony that he did not accompany Mt. Bhago and pay the necessary fees. Jagat Singh's statement in this respect is clear and definite while that of the Assistant Surgeon is halting and vague. He only thinks and as far as he can recollect that Jagat Singh accompanied Mt. Bhago. He cannot say whether Jagat Singh paid the fee to him. One of his three compounders gave him the fee and only thinks this was Dev Raj.

Dr. Sukh Dial was also examined as a witness for the defence (D. W. 1) when he deposed that he had already stated that Mt. Bhago was accompanying Jagat Singh, but a reference to his evidence as a prosecution witness does not clearly show this.

Now it will be seen that the matter resolves itself into a question of one man's word against another. Mr. O'Connor states that there is other evidence to show the falsity of Jagat Singh's statement, but such evidence was not before the Court and hence the holding of a preliminary enquiry in which such evidence could have been considered would have been desirable and appropriate. The learned Sessions Judge with such evidence before him would have been in a better position to find that there was reason to believe that Jagat Singh had given false evidence.

In my judgment there are not sufficient grounds for such a belief and in the circumstances the prosecution of Jagat Singh is inadmissible. Another principle which finds a prominent place in the English Law relating to prosecution for perjury and calling for observation here is the material nature of the statement said to be false, that is, it must be of such a nature that it may directly or indirectly affect the decision. It will be obvious I think that the evidence of Jagat Singh could not have influenced the decision of the learned Sessions Judge one iota in view of the fact that his evidence was considered unnecessary by the prosecution.

To sum up, two essential factors have, I consider, been lost sight of by the learned Sessions Judges:

(1) a reasonable prospect of success in the prosecution of Jagat Singh and (2) the expediency of such prosecution in the interests of public justice.

Neither of these is present and I, therefore, accept the appeal and setting aside the order of the Sessions Judge direct that any complaint, if filed, should be withdrawn.

Karim Bakhsh—Petitioner.

v.

Emperor—Opposite Party.

Criminal Revn. No. 1450 of 1928, Decided on 12th October 1928, reported by Dist. Magistrate, Dera Ghazi Khan, on 25th July 1928.

Criminal P. C., S. 562—Order under—Fine cannot be imposed.

The order of the Magistrate in awarding a sentence of fine when an order under S. 562, Criminal P. C., had been passed is illegal.

Report.—Karim Bakhsh, accused, aged 17 years, was servant of the complainant Mt. Rasti for 10 or 11 years and thus knew well where she used to keep her ornaments. One month before the occurrence he left her service. On 2nd May 1928, when she was away from her house, he opened the lock and stole certain ornaments. When the woman returned home she found that the ornaments in her house had been stolen. She informed one Asa Ram, goldsmith, of Dajul in the presence of Dula Ram who is also a goldsmith of the same place. Four or five days after the occurrence the accused took the stolen ornaments to the said Dula Ram who suspected them to be stolen ones. He sent for the complainant and the latter identified the ornaments. Dula Ram reported the matter to Mukhi Narain Das, Zaildar, who sent for the accused. The latter admitted his guilt and produced one of the ornaments which he had still with him. The Zaildar took the parties together with the stolen property to the officer in charge of Police Station, Dajul. First information report No. 33/1-5 was re-recorded and the accused was after necessary investigation challaned under S. 454, I. P. C., to the Court of Lala Parma Nand, Tahsildar and Magistrate, Second Class, Jampur. The witnesses produced on behalf of the prosecution corroborated the prosecution story and the accused too confessed before the Court and begged for pardon. He did not recall any of the prosecution witnesses for cross-examination and produced no defence.

The accused, on conviction by Lala Parma Nand, Tahsildar, Jampur, exercising the powers of a Magistrate of the second Class in the Dera Ghazi Khan District was sentenced by order, dated 29th May 1928 under S. 454, I. P. C. to pay a fine of Rs. 25 and also directed to furnish security under S. 562, Criminal P. C. The records have been examined under S. 435, Criminal P. C. and it is clear that the order of the Magistrate imposing fine on the accused when an order has been passed under S. 562, Criminal P. C., is illegal.

The proceedings are forwarded for revision on the following grounds :

The order of the Magistrate in awarding a sentence by fine when an order under S. 562, Criminal P. C. had been passed is illegal. It is liable to be set aside. It is recommended that the order imposing fine be reversed.

Order.—The accused Karim Bakhsh has been convicted under S. 454, I. P. C. but on account of his youth he has been released on probation under S. 562, Criminal P. C. The trial Magistrate has, at the same time, imposed upon the convict a fine of Rs. 25; but in view of the wording of S. 562, Criminal P. C., this sentence of fine is illegal. Accordingly I set aside the order inflicting the fine. The fine if realised, shall be refunded to the accused.

JOHNSTONE, J.

Mangal Sen—Convict—Appellant

v. .

Emperor—Opposite Party.

Criminal Appeal No. 112 of 1929, Decided on 6th May 1929, against order of Magistrate, First Class, Lahore, D/- 1st December 1928.

(a) Criminal P., S. 403 (2)—Directors of a company convicted under S. 91-B, Companies Act—Subsequent prosecution under S. 409, Penal Code—Alternate charge in proceedings under S. 91-B was not possible and S. 403 (2), Criminal P. C., held applicable.

Two persons, who were the directors of a Bank, were prosecuted, tried for and convicted under S. 91-B, Companies Act. They were further prosecuted for criminal breach of trust. It was contended that under S. 403 a person could not be charged on the same facts for any other offence for which a different charge from the one made against him might have been made under S. 286, or for which he might have been convicted under S. 287.

Held : that the offence under S. 91-B, Companies Act had nothing to do with the alleged offence of criminal breach of trust of the Bank's funds. No alternative charge was possible in the proceedings under S. 91-B, Companies Act and that the case was governed by S. 403 (2), Criminal P. C. : 5 S. L. R. 16, Foll and 23 Cal. 174, Appr.; A. I. [P 26 C 2; P 27 C 1]

(b) Penal Code, S. 409—Entries in cash book though mere paper entries—Conversion effected as no cash passed—Entries constitute offence of criminal breach of trust.

A loan of Rs. three lacs was made to one of the accused who was a director of a Bank. The professed object of the accused was to bolster up the affairs of the closely allied concern known as the Hindustan Assurance and Mutual Benefit Society, which would otherwise have been obliged, under Cl. 179 of its Articles of Association to go into liquidation. What he did in effect was that with one of the three lacs of rupees he converted a debt owed by the Society into a credit balance; with another lac he created a fixed deposit for the Society with the Bank with the third lac he converted his own debt into a credit balance and also created a fixed deposit of Rs. 30,000 in his wife's favour. He sent intimation to the Society regarding their credits. At the time when he made these changes in the Bank's financial position, he had no authority except his own and his subsequent transactions do not show that he had an honest intention.

Held : that although the changes made were mere paper entries, the conversions were no less conversions because no cash passed and that an offence under S. 409 had been committed : A. I. R. 1926 Lah. 385, Ref.

Bhagat Ram Puri and Mul Chand—for Appellant.

Raj Krishna and Hem Raj—for the Crown.

Judgment.—This judgment disposes of Criminal Appeals Nos. 1478 of 1921 and Nos. 112 and 114 of 1929.

The facts necessary for a comprehension of these appeals are set out in my judgment in Mangal Sen v. Emperor (1).

(1) A. I. R. 1929 Lah. 840 (2)=1929 Cr. C. 568 (2).

Diwan Mangal Sen had been sentenced, under S. 409, I. P. C., to seven years' rigorous imprisonment and a fine of Rs. 5,000 while Dr. Jagan Nath Luthera and Goutam Dev have been sentenced each to one day's imprisonment and fines of Rs. 2,000 under S. 409 I. P. C., read with S. 109, I. P. C.

The three appellants were, amongst others directors of the Punjab Industrial Bank, which is now in liquidation. One 16th September 1922, as the books of the Bank show, a loan of Rs. three lakhs was made to Mangal Sen. His professed object was to bolster up the affairs of the closely allied concern known as the Hindustan Assurance and Mutual Benefit Society, which would otherwise have been obliged, under Cl. 179 of its Articles of Association, to go into liquidation. For the purposes of the Society according to the scheme alleged to have been agreed on, only Rs. two lacs were needed, in order that five out of the six directors of that Society might each take up shares worth Rs. 40,000. The loan was adjusted thus. Rs. one lac were placed in fixed deposit to the credit of the Society; Rs. one lac were credited to the Society's floating account, thus altering its debit balance to a credit balance; of the remaining Rs. one lakh (a) Rs. 70,000 were credited to Mangal Sen's floating account, thus converting his debit balance to a credit balance and (b) Rs. 30,000 were placed in fixed deposit in the name of Srimati Lajwanti, wife of Mangal Sen. Subsequently a loan of Rs. 50,000 was taken on the security of this fixed deposit of Rs. 30,000.

On 17th September 1922, a resolution was passed (No. 335) sanctioning to Mangal Sen a loan of Rs. three lacs under certain conditions. It is curious that the resolution should have followed and not preceded, the making of the entries in the books. It appears that the original voucher showed the loan to "Diwan Mangal Sen and others," while the later voucher, prepared on 21st September and dated both 16th and 21st September, contained the words "Diwan Mangal Sen and other directors of the Hindustan and Mutual Benefit Society, Limited. Similar alterations were made in the Day Book and Floating Ledger, and Diwan Mangal Sen informed him- self, as managing director of the Society that Rs. 2 lacs had been credited to the Society. These facts are all proved.

The learned counsel for Mangal Sen opened his arguments by attacking the charge on two grounds. He contended in the first place, that the word "unlawfully" was wrongly used because the directors had authority to sanction a loan. Secondly he urged that when the resolution was passed, the loan had already been entered in the books of the Bank. It is quite clear, however, that the charge is composed of two parts, which explain the contents of the alleged offence and no fault can reasonably be found with it. The suggestion that the Magistrate was bound to insert the word "dishonestly" was not seriously pressed. Counsel's main argument was a legal one, namely, that there could not have been criminal breach of trust of property in this case, because, at the time when the loan was entered up in the books and afterwards sanctioned, the cash balance in the Bank varied between Rs. 1,700 and Rs. 992. I shall deal with this point later. Meanwhile it will be convenient here to dispose of another legal argument raised by the learned counsel for Dr. Jagan Nath. It appears that Dr. Jagan Nath and Goutam Dev were prosecuted under S. 91-B, Companies Act, for voting on an arrangement in which they, as directors, were directly or indirectly concerned. Reliance was placed on the principle of autrefois convict as laid down in S. 403, Criminal P. C., the words stressed being :

"nor on the same facts for any other offence for which a different charge from the one made against him might have been convicted under S. 237."

Counsel also cited authorities, e. g., Fateh Mahomed v. Emperor (2), Manhari Chowdhurani v. Emperor (3), Waryam Singh v. Emperor (4) and Kallasami v. Emperor (5), Sobhumal v. Emperor (6). I have examined these rulings and find nothing in them to help the appellants. A more apposite authority is to be found in Queen Empress v. Croft (7). The principle to be followed in such cases is laid down in Ganesh Krishna v. Emperor (8), and as a matter of fact the wording in Ss. 236 and 237 of the Code is sufficiently clear. In the former section there must be a doubt as to what offence has been committed, and the illustration to that section is explanatory. On the other hand S. 235 is an enabling section whereby sanction is given to the charging of, and trying, an accused person at one trial for more offences than one. In the case under examination, the two appellants concerned were merely tried for, and convicted of, the offence of voting in certain circumstances. That matter had nothing to do with the alleged criminal breach of trust of the Bank's funds. No alternative charge was possible in the proceedings under S. 91-B, Companies Act. The case is, in fact, governed by sub-S. (2), S. 403, Criminal P. C., and the preliminary contention raised by the learned counsel cannot succeed.

The appeal of Dr. Jagan Nath was argued at length by Mr. Ram Chand Manchanda and his arguments were adopted by Gautam Dev, the other appellant, who addressed the Court in person. It was pointed out in the first place that Mangal Sen, early in the life of the Bank, started on his scheme of acquiring and controlling position. As a first step the original managing agents were ignominiously removed and Mangal Sen was appointed the sole managing director. Thereafter he did practically everything, wrote all the minutes, made countless entries in the different books of the Bank, had the meetings of the Board held at his own house, refused to let even his co-directors have access to the books, and so forth. There is documentary evidence on all these matters, and although counsel's eulogy of Mangal Sen as a veritable Napoleon of finance is throughout on a note of exaggeration, there can be no doubt that Mangal Sen was to all intents and purposes the Bank and the Bank was Mangal Sen. His appointments as managing director of both concerns placed him in a commanding position.

Stress has been laid on these facts, because it is sought to show that Dr. Jagan Nath and Gautam Dev were pawns in the game. These two and the other directors left everything to Mangal Sen. After considering the evidence regarding the meeting of the Board on 17th December, I am of opinion that there is reasonable doubt as to whether Dr. Jagan Nath was present at all at that meeting. It is certain that there was no quorum at the meeting and the resolution was ultra vires. The expunged names of Gopal Lal and Bheri Ram, when considered in the light of the evidence on the record, establish that proposition beyond doubt.

It is unnecessary for my purpose to set forth all the transactions which flowed from the original loan of Rs. three lacs or to explain the significance of the different entries in the account books. It seems to me that the short question in the case the facts being proved is whether or not criminal breach of trust was committed. Now, what Mangal Sen did was, in effect, as follows: With one of the three lacs of rupees he converted a debt owed by the Society into a credit balance; with another lac he credited a fixed deposit for the Society with the Bank; with the third lac he converted his own debt into a credit balance and also created a fixed deposit of Rs. 30,000 in his wife's favour. He sent intimation to the Society regarding their credits. At the time when he made these changes in the Bank's financial position, he had no authority except his own, and his subsequent transactions do not show that he had an honest intention. It is, in my opinion, an untenable argument that the changes were mere "paper" changes. The conversions were no less conversions because no cash passed. In this connexion the final paragraph in Ram Chand Gurwala v. Emperor, A. I. R. 1926 Lah. 385, at p. 392, is a clear authority, and reference was also made to Ferrero's case in Chancery Appeals, Vol. 9 for 1873-1874 at p. 355.

I am satisfied, therefore, that Mangal Sen is guilty of an offence under S. 409, I. P. C. As to the abetment of that offence by the other two appellants I am doubtful. As I have said, the offence was committed on 16th September 1922, and on that day no resolution was passed. It is, indeed, indicated by the evidence that the other two appellants had discussed the affair with Mangal Sen before 17th September, but the resolution was passed on the 17th and their action in passing the resolution (if we suppose that they were both present), would not constitute an abetment of criminal breach of trust: vide M. L. Pritchard v. Emperor (A. I. R. 1928 Lah. p. 382, at p. 390). I am satisfied, too, that the other two appellants did not know what was really being done, and that they had no dishonest intention in anything that they did. The only point against them is, I think, that they got shares but these they disposed of afterwards to Mangal Sen and they never got any advantage out of the transaction. For these reasons I accept their appeal, set aside their convictions and sentences and direct that the fines, if paid by them, be refunded.

As to Mangal Sen, there is no question as to his guilt and his conviction is maintained.

These concluding paragraphs of this judgment are common to all the judgments in all five appeals of Mangal Sen. The statement of convictions and sentences is summarised thus "rigorous imprisonment" being read after the term of years in each sentence:

(1) Appeal No. 111 of 1929:—S. 477-A, I.P.C. Sentence 7 years and a fine of Rs. 5000, in default, one year. (Not concurrent with any other sentence).

(2) Appeal No. 112 of 1929:—S. 409, I. P. C. Sentence 7 years and a fine of Rs. 5,000 in default, one year. (Not concurrent with any other sentence).

(3) Appeal No. 113 of 1929:—(a) S. 409, I. P. C., Sentence one year. (b) S. 477-A, I. P. C. Sentence five years and a fine of Rs. 5,000 in default one year. (a) and (b) both concurrent with No. 2 above.

(4) Appeal No. 232 of 1929:—(a) S. 409, I. P. C. Sentence two years and a fine of Rs. 2,000 in default six months. (b) S. 477-A, I. P. C. Sentence two years. (a) and (b) concurrent.

(5) Appeal No. 233 of 1929:—(a) S. 409, I. P. C. Sentence two years and a fine of Rs. 2,000, in default, six months. (b) S. 477-A, I. P. C. Sentence two years. (a) and (b) concurrent."

Now, it appears from the summary above that Mangal Sen has been sentenced to rigorous imprisonment for terms amounting to 18 years and fines amounting to Rs. 19,000, and that defaults in payments will render him liable to four more years of imprisonment. Serious though the offences are, it cannot be reasonably contended that the sentences are not too severe. The appellant is over 50 years of age and he is at present doomed to spend the remainder of his ordinary span of life in prison. That is not desirable from any point of view. On the other hand it is desirable that he should be made to pay. I accordingly, while maintaining all these sentences, direct that those mentioned in the four appeals from (2) to (5), both inclusive, shall run concurrently with the sentence mentioned in appeal (1). Thus the substantive term of imprisonment will be seven years. The fines are confirmed, and thus, if the appellant pays the Rs. 19,000, he will serve seven years only. The total "default" terms amount to four years and he can reduce those terms in proportion to the amount which he pays.

Before closing the judgment, I wish to add a word of commendation for the Magistrate (Mr. Isar) who took great trouble with the trials, kept neat record and wrote clear and well arranged judgments. I was also much impressed by the care with the learned counsel for the Crown, Mr. Raj Krishna, had worked up the cases and stored innumerable details accurately in his memory. The appeals were well argued by Mr. Mool Chand.

Finally, a prayer was made that Mangal Sen should be treated as a special class prisoner. I merely note the fact here, since there is another and more proper course open to the prisoner.

v.

Emperor—Opposite Party.

Criminal Appeal No. 708 of 1929, Decided on 14th October 1929, from order of Sess. Judge, Karnal, D/- 22nd June 1929.

(a) Evidence Act, S. 32 (1)—Statement by deceased before Third Class Magistrate not competent to record statement under Criminal P. C., S. 164—Statement is yet relevant under S. 32 (1).

The deceased made a full statement, about an assault which resulted in his death, before a Third Class Magistrate. This statement was not taken into consideration by the Sessions Judge on the ground that the Third Class Magistrate was not competent to record the statement of a witness under Criminal P. C. S. 164.

Held: that the statement was relevant under the provisions S. 32 (1). [P 29 C 2]

(b) Penal Code, S. 302—Panchayat convened to consider act of stealing by accused—

One of the panchas insisting the matter to be reported to police—Accused striking heavy blow at him and thereby causing death—Accused held guilty of murder,

K seized the accused in the act of stealing; but the accused escaped from him. K convened a panchayat consisting of several members of whom J was one. The accused admitted his offence and asked for pardon as it was a trivial offence. J, however, insisted that the matter must be reported to the police. On hearing this the accused suddenly struck J a heavy blow with a chopper which he had carried with him. J died of the heavy blow.

Held: that the accused either intended to cause J's death, or that he intended causing bodily injury to J and the bodily injury which he intended to be inflicted was sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause death.

[P 30 C 1]

J. R. Agnihotri—for Appellant.

D. R. Sawhney—for the Crown.

Addison, J.—Chadgi, a Jat of Badli village in the Rohtak District has been sentenced to death, subject to confirmation by this Court, under the provisions of S. 302, I. P. C., for murdering Jot Ram, Sufedposh of his village, by striking him on the forehead with a heavy chopper. He has appealed and the record has been forwarded to this Court for confirmation of the death sentence.

The deceased Jot Ram had reported verbally on 18th February 1929, to the police that the appellant was a bad character. On 21st February Khushia a distant collateral of the appellant, seized the appellant while he was plucking his barley crops. He had noticed that this had been going on for some time and lay in wait for the culprit. Chadgi appellant escaped from him but left a leather charsa he had with him. Khushia took this charsa home and convened a panchayat outside his house the same evening. Jot Ram Sufedposh who was killed, Khushi Ram Lambardar, Risal Singh Zaildar and others attended. After some time Chadgi was induced to present himself before the Panchayat. He came to it wrapped in a chadar. The evidence establishes that he admitted his offence and asked for pardon as it was a trivial one. He also admitted the charsa to be his own. Khushia did not wish to proceed further and tried to take away the charsa as it might implicate the appellant. Jot Ram prevented his and had it handed over to Mazir Beg, the jamadar of chaukidars, for safe custody. Jot Ram also said that the matter must be reported to the police.

At this stage the appellant suddenly took out a chopper from underneath his chadar and struck Jot Ram a heavy blow with it on the forehead. This chopper is called a gandasa by the witnesses, but the sketch shows that it is a chopper and not an axe. The wound bled profusely. Sudhan, one of the prosecution witnesses, tried to stop Chadgi when he ran away and received slight injuries in doing so. He was helped by lambardar Khushi Ram, another witness, who snatched chopper from the appellant's hand. The appellant, however, succeeded in escaping, though in doing so he left his shoes behind. The matter was reported at the police station by Khushia. These facts are amply established by the evidence of numerous reliable witnesses.

The learned Sessions Judge has also relied upon the dying declaration made by Jot Ram on 6th March 1929, to a First Class Magistrate Pandit Lakshmi Datta. At that time, however, Jot Ram was in a semi-conscious state and was only able to say that the one-eyed Chadgi had struck him. We do not attach much importance to this statement. But the deceased made a full statement before a Third Class Magistrate on 25th February 1929. This has not been taken into consideration by the learned Sessions Judge on the ground that the Third Class Magistrate was not competent to record the statement of a witness under S. 164, Criminal P. C. The statement, however, was obviously relevant under the provisions of S. 32 (1) Evidence Act. That statement supports the prosecution story and is evidence against the appellant.

Chadgi denied committing the offence and stated that he had no enmity with Jot Ram. He added that the prosecution witnesses were inimical to him and had induced Jot Ram to name him. He produced no evidence in defence.

There is no question that the appellant struck Jot Ram in the manner described above. Jot Ram was immediately attended to by the Sub-Assistant Surgeon of Badli who removed six pieces of bone from inside the injury without extending the wound. Jot Ram's condition, however, continued to get worse and he was removed to the Civil Hospital on the 3rd March 1929. An operation was performed without avail. On 6th March he became semi-conscious. After that unconsciousness developed and he died on 9th March 1921.

Three of the assessors were of opinion that the appellant was guilty of murder. The fourth also held it proved that the culprit was Chadgi, and that the prosecution evidence was true and reliable. He thought, however, that Chadgi struck under provocation without any intention of killing, though he must have known that his act was so imminently dangerous that it would result in death.

It is clear that Chadgi resented Jot Ram's action in insisting that the matter should be reported at a police station. He came unwilling to the panchayat and when he came he was wearing a chadar under which he had concealed the heavy chopper. Immediately after the dispute about the charsa he drew out this heavy chopper and struck Jot Ram a severe blow on the forehead. In the natural course of events a severe blow with such a weapon on the forehead must result in death as it did in the present case. It is clear that the appellant either intended to cause Jot Ram's death, or that he intended causing bodily injury to Jot Ram and the bodily injury which he intended to be inflicted, was sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause death. The facts that Jot Ram lingered for some time does not affect this question. He was given every possible attention but his life could not be saved. The weapon used and the place where the blow was struck both indicate the intention of the appellant. In these circumstances we hold that Chadgi was properly found guilty of the murder of Jot Ram under S. 302, I. P. C., and we see no reason to reduce the sentence. We therefore, dismiss the appeal and confirm the sentence of death.

ZAFAR ALI, J.

Mt. Allah Rakhi -- Accused -- Petitioner.

Emperor--Opposite Party.

Criminal Revn. Petn. No. 2100 of 1928, Decided, on 1st March 1929, from an order of Sess. Judge, Multan, D/- 12th September 1928.

Punjab Municipal Act (3 of 1911), S. 152 (c)—Notice ought to be served upon the prostitute personally—There should be no summary trial.

The notice required by S. 152 (c) prohibiting the residence of the prostitute in a certain quarter ought to be served upon her personally. Where therefore the Municipal Committee promulgated a general notice, it is ineffective to bind a particular person and in such cases regular trial is preferable to summary trial.

Mohamad Alam --for Petitioner.

Judgment.--The petitioner has been fined for disobeying a notice issued to her under S. 152, Municipal Act (3 of 1911). The trial was summary and there is no record of the evidence against her. The relevant portion of S. 152, runs thus:

"The Committee may, by notice in writing prohibit in any specified part of the Municipality.

(b) the residence of a public prostitute "

It is contended in this Court that no notice in writing was served on the petitioner. It appears from the order of the Magistrate that the Municipal Committee concerned promulgated a general notice but, in order to bind the petitioner it was necessary to serve a notice upon her personally. As this was not done, she could not have been found guilty of having disobeyed the notice.

I, therefore, set aside the order of the Magistrate and direct that the fine, if already realized, should be refunded. It may further be observed that it is desirable to try cases of this kind in a regular manner and not summarily.

Emperor--Opposite Party.

Criminal Revn. No. 1480 of 1929, Decided on 16th October 1929, reported by the Sess. Judge, Karnal, D/- 30th September 1929.

Practice -- Jurisdiction--Matter agitated and decided in civil Court -- Same matter cannot be agitated in criminal Court again.

A criminal Court should not, except for very exceptional and cogent reasons, go behind the finding of a civil Court which has been arrived at on merits. [P 31 C 2]

Where the civil Court grants a decree on the basis of a bond which is alleged to have been executed under duress, and the plea of wrongful confinement, extortion and duress raised by the complainant in the civil suit is decided against him, the complainant shall not be permitted to agitate the same plea in a criminal Court: 33 P. R. 1910 (Cr.), Foll.; 4 P. W. R. 1916 and 9 P. W. R. 1916, Ref. [P 31 C 2]

Facts.—Towards the end of October 1928, Khannu, Gujar of Allahabad, came to Pundari village where he purchased 8 she-buffaloes. Vasdeo Lal Mahajan of Pundari, was interested in the realization of the price of these buffaloes. Khannu got the buffaloes booked for Delhi on 27th October. Vasdeo Lal thought that he would not be able to realize the price if the buffaloes and Khannu got out of his reach. Vasdeo Lal lodged a report against Khannu under S. 420, I. P. C. at Police Station, Karnal. The investigations were made by Head Constable Abdul Aziz. Khannu and the buffaloes were brought back to Karnal by the Police and Khannu was put in the lock-up. While there, he arranged to make up with Vasdeo Lal by raising money on a bond from Suraj Bhan, Mahajan of Karnal. The bond for Rs. 474 in favour of Suraj Bhan was executed on 31st October 1928 and the money raised on this bond was passed to Vasdeo Lal. On 2nd November, Suraj Bhan instituted a civil suit for recovery of the bond debt in the Court of the Subordinate Judge at Karnal. On 3rd November 1928, Khannu instituted a complaint against Head Constable Abdul Aziz, Vasdeo Lal and Suraj Bhan, alleging that these people had put him under wrongful confinement and had extorted a bond from him. In the civil suit brought by Suraj Bhan against him, Khannu raised the plea that he was not liable for the bond debt because the bond had been obtained from him under duress. This plea was duly put in issue and was disallowed by the civil Court which granted a decree on 26th February 1929 for a sum of Rs. 474 in favour of Suraj Bhan against Khannu. Khannu's complaint, which is a reiteration of the plea taken by him in the civil Court, has not yet been disposed of. It was made over for enquiry and decision to Khan Sabib Chaudhri Miran Bakhsh, Magistrate, with direction for speedy disposal. But this officer took five months in recording prosecution evidence and framed charges on 5th July 1929 under Ss. 342 and 384, I. P. C., against Abdul Aziz, Vasdeo Lal and Suraj Bhan. All these three men have put in petition of revision praying that the case may be referred to the High Court for quashing of the charges which should not have been framed.

The proceedings are forwarded for revision on the following grounds:

It is argued by the learned counsel for the petitioners that the trial Magistrate was not justified in ignoring the finding of the civil Court on the only points which were in dispute between the parties both in the civil Court as well as in the criminal Court. In support of this argument reliance is placed on the case, Emperor v. Bishan Das (1). It was held in that case that save for very exceptional reasons, a criminal Court should not go behind the finding of a civil Court and should not convict of cheating and fraud a person who upon the very same facts has succeeded in satisfying the civil Court upon the merits of the case of the justice of his claim. It was also pointed out in that case by the learned Judges of the Chief Court that it is a very sound general principle and one to be observed by all Magistrates that parties should not be encouraged to resort to the criminal Courts in cases in which the point at issue between them is one which can appropriately be decided by a civil Court. The same view was expressed in the rulings cited as Pars Ram v. Jalal Din (2) and Nur Din v. Emperor (3). No exception can be taken to the sound principle of law enunciated in these rulings that a criminal Court should not, except for very exceptional and cogent reasons, go behind the finding of a civil Court which has been arrived at on merits. In the present case the civil Court has granted a decree on the basis of the bond which was alleged to have been executed under duress. The plea of wrongful confinement, extortion and duress raised by the defendant in the civil suit, was decided against the defendant who should not now be permitted to agitate the same plea in a criminal Court.

(3) [1916] 8 P. W. R. Cr. 1916=34 I. C. 317 =17 Cr. L. J. 205.

In my opinion, the contention raised by the learned counsel for the appellants is sound and correct. Both the complainant and the Crown were given an opportunity to attend the Court to oppose the petitions if they so cared. Complainant put in an appearance through his counsel but Crown representation was not deemed necessary. Mr. Gurdial Singh, counsel for complainant, cannot show how the criminal proceedings are justified in face of the finding of the civil Court on the same point.

The petitions of revision should, in my opinion, be accepted. I accordingly refer the case under S. 438, Criminal P. C. to the High Court with a recommendation that the charges framed against the petitioners by the Magistrate may be quashed.

Order.—I agree with the recommendation of the learned Sessions Judge of Karnal, and for the reasons given by him I quash the charges framed against the three accused persons.

v.

Gunga—Accused—Respondent.

Criminal Case No. 538 of 1929, Decided on 3rd May 1929, reported by Dist. Magistrate, Multan, on 12th March 1929.

Criminal P. C. S. 341—Finding that accused had sufficient intelligence to understand criminal character of act done by him and nature of judicial proceedings against him must be recorded.

In a case under S. 341 it is essential for the Magistrate before convicting the accused to record a finding to the effect that he had sufficient intelligence to understand the criminal character of his act and nature of the judicial proceeding taken against him. Where no such finding is recorded by the Magistrate the accused cannot be convicted: 40 Bom. 598, Rel. on: Rat. Un. Cr. C. 696, Rej. [P 32-C 2]

Judgment.—This a reference under S. 341, Criminal P. C. The accused is a deaf and dumb lad of 14 or 15 years of age and he has been convicted of theft under S. 381, I. P. C.

The facts found by the Magistrate are that the accused was engaged as a servant by one Gobind Ram on 14th December 1928, but the same day during the temporary absence of Gobind Ram from his shop the lad stole Rs. 26-1-0 and disappeared. Later on the boy was arrested and the money was found on his person.

The Magistrate has recorded no finding as to whether the accused was capable of realizing the criminal character of the act done by him, or could understand the purpose or nature of the judicial proceedings that were taken against him.

In Queen-Empress v. Renbin Samuel (1) it was pointed out that in submitting a case to the High Court under S. 341, Criminal P. C., the Presidency Magistrate must state his view of the conduct of the accused and must take some evidence regarding the previous history and habits of the accused. In the present case no information could be obtained about the previous history of the accused. The general proposition of law as stated in Emperor v. A. Deaf and Dumb (2) is that if it be shown that such person had sufficient intelligence to understand the character of his criminal act he is liable to punishment. It is, therefore, essential for the Magistrate to record a finding before convicting such person to the effect that he had sufficient intelligence to understand the criminal character of his act. The Magistrate in the present case having not recorded any finding on this point could not have convicted him. Further there is nothing to indicate that the accused understood that he had been engaged by the complainant as his servant or that he could form a conception of the relation between master and servant.

In view of what has been stated above it is not possible to maintain the conviction and I accordingly set it aside.

1930 Cr. Cases 33*(Aizahabad)BOYS AND YOUNG, JJ.Goli—Applicant.*

v.

Emperor—Opposite Party.

Criminal Appeal No. 373 of 1929, Decided on 24th June 1929, from an order of Sess. Judge, Gorakhpur., D/- 20th February 1929.

(a) Criminal Trial—Court's duty—Opportunity should be afforded to accused to explain evidence against him.

Neither a Magistrate nor a Judge is entitled to cross-examine an accused person but it is their bounden duty to question him generally on the case and give him an opportunity of explaining any point in the evidence against him.

(b) Criminal Trial—Court's duty—Greater care should be given to cases under S. 75 of Penal Code—Previous convictions should not prejudice Court—Penal Code S. 75.

In cases where S. 75, Penal Code is to be applied a great deal more care should be given to the inquiry and trial than is usually given to them. An accused person though he has several convictions behind him is entitled to have his case treated as if it was not a foregone conclusion that he is guilty. [P 35 C 1]

M. Waliullah—for the Crown.

Judgment.—Goli appeals from his conviction under S. 477 read with S. 75, I. P. C. and a sentence of transportation for life. The charge under S. 75, I. P. C. referred to no less than 5 previous convictions of theft and house-breaking with sentences beginning with three months and ending with three years. The accused pleaded guilty to all these convictions, with the exception of one, which he said had been set aside in appeal. But the learned Judge says that he has seen the record of that case and finds that the appeal was dismissed. It is a regrettable feature of these cases, where a man has already had a number of convictions, that everything seems to be assumed against him and that care is not devoted to the enquiry as to whether the present charge is well founded or not. The record of the evidence is very small, but we have had to give the case considerable time, because it was obviously neither desirable that a man who was of a bad character should escape punishment, if he were really guilty, nor that he should suffer further punishment unjustly merely because he had already committed several offences. The accused was arrested in Nautanwa Bazar of Bhundi, which is evidently close to Nautanwa Bazar, the place of his arrest being variously described. These places are close upon the Nepal border. The home or birth place of the accused is in Nepal, but the place where he lives is a village in Purandarpur in the district of Gorakhpur. Purandarpur is about 20 miles south-west from Nautanwa Bazar. Nautanwa Bazar is in the police circle of Naikot and at Nautanwa Bazar or Bhundi there is only a police outpost. The story for the prosecution is that the complainant, Kahabir Thapa, was half asleep in the middle of the night when he noticed somebody moving about in his house. According to the first information report, he jumped up and seized the person and had a struggle with him. The thief escaped from him and he chased him a distance of 30 or 40 yards and seized him with a stolen brass vessel in his hand. Upon the outcry of the complainant three persons came up and helped him to secure the thief. Two of these three alleged witnesses have been produced to give evidence. They are Gorey Thapa, and Jas Bahadur Thapa. The accused was taken to the police outpost, and in the morning to the police station at Naikot, where the first information report was recorded, and he was later sent up for trial.

The accused's story is that he had only been released from jail in Gorakhpur a few days previously and having gone part of the way by train, he went to his own home. Finding his wife not there he made enquiries and eventually set off for Nepal to fetch his wife. He does not say whether he found his wife there or whether he did not, and neither the Magistrate nor the learned Judge thought it worth while questioning him on this point. It is hardly necessary to repeat that neither a Magistrate nor a Judge is entitled to cross-examine an accused person, but it is their bounden duty to question him generally on the case and give him an opportunity of explaining any point in the evidence against him. In cases of the description of the one before us we fear that a conviction is generally regarded as more or less a foregone conclusion and very little trouble is taken to enquire into the facts. This man had made a statement about having gone in search of his wife and being, on his way back to his village, found at Nautanwa

Bazar where he was arrested. There is nothing improbable prima facie in that story. That is one mention of the wife. Again the Judge's attention was specifically drawn to the fact that the accused really had a wife, because the defence witness mentioned her as being the person at whose instance she (the witness) was giving evidence. This fact the Judge has used to discredit the defence witness, but it did not suggest the desirability, as it should have, of making any enquiry as to where the wife was at the time of the offence.

The accused talking continues that he was asked by the police where he was, going to spend the night and told them that he was sleeping in a hut in Nautanwa Bazar, when the police on their rounds paid him no less than three visits, on the first occasion asking him who he was and on the second occasion assuring themselves that he was still sleeping in the hut. He says that on the third occasion at 5 O'clock in the morning he was aroused and arrested and this false charge brought against him. Taking the prosecution evidence first, we find that in the first information report a mention, very brief it is true, but still a clear mention of a struggle between the complainant and the accused finds place. On the other hand, there is also mention of the fact that in the complainant's own house were sleeping at the time three visitors, Pahari pensioners. It is manifest that if a struggle did take place and if three Pahari pensioners were, as admittedly they were, sleeping in the house at the time, they must have known a great deal more about it than anybody who merely saw from outside what happened at a later stage. None of these three men have been produced and no explanation is offered as to why. It may be that they left the place, as they were apparently only birds of passage. On the other hand, they were pensioners and they must have been known to the complainant, for he gave them shelter in his house and prima facie there could have been no difficulty in tracing them. It is noteworthy that all mention of the struggle in the house is dropped in the complainant's deposition. We were disposed ourselves to feel doubts about the correctness of this conviction in view of the points that we have already mentioned. There is a third point, that the accused is alleged to have been actually arrested with a brass vessel worth only Rs. 2 in his hand. It is a small point, but it does strike us as improbable that a thief, being pursued and seeing himself about to be caught, would be actually so foolish as to keep a brass vessel that he had just stolen in his possession. No doubt he could not have concealed the fact that he had it, but his first instinct would be to throw it away.

We did feel, however, that there was one point which might strongly be urged in favour of the truth of the story told by the police. The accused was arrested at Nautanwa Bazar and the learned Judge has made a great point against him as to what could he be doing in this village 20 miles away from his own home so soon after he had been released. We have already referred to the accused's story as giving a not unreasonable explanation of his presence in Nautanwa Bazar, but the very fact of the distance of Nautanwa Bazar suggests another consideration in favour of the prosecution and that is, how did the police know anything about this man? If it were suggested that the case was a false one brought by them merely in order to get into jail again the well known offender, how did they know that he was a previous convict? The accused alleged that they had paid him no less than three visits on the night in question. This fact alone should have raised the Magistrate's and the Judge's suspicion and, at any rate, led to some enquiry on the point. We felt that as the case stood we were unable to feel satisfied as to the correctness of the conviction. Having arrived at that view, we decided to look into the police diary to see whether there was anything further that ought to have been brought on the record of the case. If the learned Judge had done that, as he should have done, not with a view to using it as evidence, but with a view to seeing whether further evidence was available, he would have found that the accused was perfectly well known to the police of Naikot and the police of Nautanwa Bazar. It appears that of the previous sentences which the accused had served, at least two or three of them were in respect of offences which had been committed at Nautanwa and the police at Naikot not only knew the man well as a previous convict, but even knew that his home was at Gol Sugra. This being so, it is very natural indeed that when they found him again at Nautanwa Bazar they would recognise him and pay him several visits in order to see whether he was still sleeping in the hut. In this we find much corroboration of the story told by the accused and it further removes the main difficulty that we had, which was to answer the question, why should the local police 20 miles away from Gol Sugra and perhaps three times that distance from Gorakhpur, have had what is commonly described as a down upon this particular man? This only increases the doubts, which had already formed in our minds. We feel that the conviction cannot stand. In conclusion, we would suggest to the Magistrate and to the Judge that in these cases, where S. 75, I. P. C. is to be applied, a great deal more care should be given to the enquiry and trial than is usually given to them, and was given in this particular case. An accused person, though he has several convictions behind him, is entitled to have his case treated as if it was not a foregone conclusion that he is guilty. We set aside the conviction and sentence and direct that the accused be forthwith released. Let copies of the judgment be sent to the Judge and the Committing Magistrate.

Criminal Revn. No. 387 of 1929, Decided on 9th September 1929, from order of First Class Magistrate, Meerut, D/- 27th February 1929.

Criminal P. C., S. 562 — Scope—Section should not be applied to case of people in possession of dangerous drugs in defiance of law.

Section 562, dealing with first offenders, should not be applied to the case of people discovered with cocaine and other dangerous drugs upon them in defiance of the Excise Act, it being almost certain in all these cases the occasion on which they have been discovered in possession of the drug is not really the first time they have been in such possession. [P 35 C 2]

U. S. Bajpai—for the Crown.

S. Majid Ali—for Opposite Parties.

Judgment.—In this case Timman, Azmat and Summan were charged before Mr. Thomas, Magistrate of the First Class, Meerut, under S. 60 (v), Excise Act, for being in possession of cocaine. It appears that the police, having obtained a warrant for the search of a gaming house, carried out the search and these three accused were there discovered, and on being searched packets of cocaine were found upon them. It has not been disputed by the accused that the cocaine was found upon them, and indeed it would have been impossible for them to dispute this fact. The learned Magistrate sentenced each of them to a fine of Rs. 75. The Local Government filed an application in revision asking for the enhancement of the sentence.

It is pressed on behalf of the opposite party that this is a case of first offence with regard to all three. We are of opinion that the section of the Criminal Procedure Code dealing with first offenders should not be applied to the case of people discovered with cocaine and other dangerous drugs upon them in defiance of the Excise Act, it being almost certain that in all these cases the occasion on which they have been discovered in possession of cocaine is not really the first time they have been in such possession.

We are satisfied that the sentence is totally inadequate, and we enhance it to one of six months' rigorous imprisonment each. The fine already imposed is to stand.

Penal Code, S. 366—Scope — Underlying policy is to throw protection over minor girls — Consent of girl does not exonerate seducer.

Section 366 is an aggravated form of S. 363. The consent of the girl does not exonerate the seducer. The underlying policy of the section is to uphold the lawful authority of parents or guardians over their minor wards, to throw a ring of protection over the girls themselves.

and to penalise sexual commerce on the part of persons who corrupt or attempt to corrupt the morals of minor girls by taking improper advantage of their youth and inexperience.

[P 37 C 1]

K. O. Carleton—for Appellants.

U. S. Bajpai—for the Crown.

Judgment.—Sultan, Mohammad Baksh, Allah Baksh, Ismail, and Kala were committed to take their trial before the learned Sessions Judge of Muzaffarnagar under S. 366, I. P. C. Bundu was committed under S. 368 of the said Code. The learned Sessions Judge has convicted all of them and sentenced them to four years' rigorous imprisonment each.

The first five accused persons were charged with the offence of kidnapping, Mt. Jamila, a girl, alleged to be under 16 years of age from the lawful guardianship of her father Mohammad Qazim with intent that she might be seduced to illicit intercourse. The offence is said to have been committed in mauza Khudda in the district of Muzaffarnagar on or about 5th May 1928.

Bundu was charged with the offence of wrongfully concealing Mt. Jamila in his house at village Dadheru for nearly two months from 5th May 1928 with the knowledge that Mt. Jamila was a kidnapped girl.

There was considerable social disparity between Mohammad Qazim and the accused, the former being a Sheikhzada and the latter being Garhas by caste.

The case for the prosecution was that Mt. Jamila was an unmarried girl below 16 years of age, that she had twice eloped with Sultan during the temporary absence of her father from home; that the final elopement took place on 5th May 1928 with Sultan and that the four other accused excepting Bundu were associated with Sultan in kidnapping the girl.

Sultan is the nephew of Mohammad Baksh, Allah Baksh and Mohammad Baksh's sisters are married in the same family. Bundu's uncle's daughter is married to Siddiq, the own brother of Sultan. Ismail alias Billi and Allah Baksh are close friends.

Qazim's household consisted of himself, his daughter Jamila and a step-daughter Mt. Mahfuzan, aged 10 or 11 years, who was given in marriage to Qazim's son Nawab. Qazim appears to have been a man with a religious turn of mind whose time was mostly spent in prayers and meditations and who did not take much interest in mundane affairs. The result was that there was no discipline in his household and Mt. Jamila was practically left free to sport as she pleased.

Sultan is a young man aged about 21 years. He lived in a house with an enclosure, next door to Qazim's. He had access to Qazim's house without any let or hindrance. No parda was observed with him. Mt. Jamila and Sultan came to know each other about a year or six months before the alleged occurrence. They fell in love and their love grew into an infatuation.

One of the neighbours told Qazim about Sultan's visits. Qazim said: "It does not matter." The voice of scandal was not silent but:

"Qazim did not care for the talk in the village."

While Qazim was away at Saharanpur, Sultan took away Mt. Jamila with him to Meerut and returned after three days. Mt. Jamila was dressed in male attire. The next day, Ghasita, brother-in-law of Qazim attempted to take Mt. Jamila to his house in Chhappar. He put her into a bullock cart but Sultan and Kala arrived on the scene. Kala caught hold of Ghasita and Sultan dragged Mt. Jamila away. She returned, however, at about 8 p. m. When this matter was brought to the notice of Qazim, he abused Mt. Jamila and took her to task. He also threatened to get her seducer and his confederates condignly punished.

It is remarkable, however, that Qazim lodged no report to the police nor instituted any complaint about either of these two incidents.

The last elopement took place the same day, namely 5th May 1928, after Qazim had left his house to say his Isha prayers. This infuriated Qazim. It is true that he did not make any report at the police station but a formal complaint was instituted in the Court of a Magistrate against the first five accused persons under S. 366, I. P. C., on 12th May 1928. Qazim backed his complaint by his deposition, which was recorded on 14th May 1928.

Qazim died under very tragic circumstances on 7th July 1928 and the question as to how he met his death is the subject of enquiry in the connected appeal.

The defence was that Mt. Jamila had been given in marriage to Sultan by Qazim himself, that she was over 16 years of age on 5th May 1928 and that the offence of kidnapping under S. 366, I. P. C., had not been committed. Bundu denied having concealed Mt. Jamila in his house.

Mt. Jamila was examined in the case as a witness for the defence on 4th April 1929. She says she is the lawful wife of Sultan and that her age is between 17 and 18 years.

The judgment of the Court below is a document of portentous length, teeming with repetitions, irrelevant matters and with many deductions, which are either illogical or are non sequitor. Now and again, ingenious attempts have been made either to explain away or to water down points which tell against the prosecution. This was absolutely unjustified and this minimises the value of a judgment which is otherwise a monument of industry. What appears to have happened is that upon a consideration of certain features of the case, the learned Judge was morally convinced of the guilt of the accused; and this moral conviction warped his judicial vision to such an extent that he failed to view the evidence in its true perspective.

The learned Sessions Judge found that Mt. Jamila was not the wedded wife of Sultan, that she was below 16 years of age on 5th May 1928, and that all the accused persons were guilty of the offence of which they stood charged.

It may be observed here that S. 366, I. P. C., is an aggravated form of S. 363, I. P. C. The consent of the girl does not exonerate the seducer. The underlying policy of the section is (1) to uphold the lawful authority of parents or guardians over their minor wards; (2) to throw a ring of protection round the girls themselves and (3) to penalise sexual commerce on the part of persons, who corrupt, or attempt to corrupt, the morals of the minor girls by taking improper advantage of their youth and inexperience.

The learned Sessions Judge has given excellent reasons for holding that Mt. Jamila was not married to Sultan. This finding is supported by the evidence of witnesses, who were in a position to know; and also by the probabilities of the case.

Mohammad Qazim, belonging as he did to the old school of thought, could never have dreamt to give his daughter in marriage to a Garha. It is difficult to conceive the idea of his officiating as Qazi on the occasion of his daughter's marriage.

Certain Qazi's registers have been produced, but they contain no entry in support of this marriage. Defendants' witnesses have told a farrago of lies and have been rightly disbelieved by the Court below. We endorse the finding of the trial Court on this point and hold that there was no marriage.

There is no direct evidence on the record that Sultan or any of his four associates kidnapped Mt. Jamila. At the time of the alleged kidnapping, Qazim was away from home. Mt. Mahfuzan, the only other inmate of the house was in another part of the house easing herself. Mt. Mahfuzan heard certain whispers. We do not know what these whispers were about. We do not know whose whispers they were. When she came inside the house, she discovered that Mt. Jamila was gone.

That Mt. Jamila eloped with Sultan is a settled fact. It is not unlikely that Mt. Jamila, in response to her own passion for Sultan singed her wings. It is equally probable that Sultan allured her with his seducer's voice. What part the other accused persons played cannot be predicated with certainty, the evidence on the point being vague and cloudy. It has been suggested that all these persons had conspired with Sultan. It is said that on a particular date as Qazim and his party were returning from the Court of the Magistrate in Muzaffarnagar, Qazim demanded the restitution of his daughter to him. He held out the threat that if the daughter was not restored, the case against the accused persons "will be prosecuted to the bitter end." Ismail is said to have retorted that he did not care, as he would wipe Qazim out and install Mt. Jamila and Sultan in Qazim's house. Sometimes before Mt. Jamila's elopement, Nawab son of Qazim had run away with one Mt. Khatoon, daughter of Lala Garha. Ismail and Allah Bakhsh are said to have remarked at the village panchayat, which was held over Mt. Jamila's elopement that Mt. Jamila had been kidnapped by the Garhas by way of retributive justice.

The story seems plausible but it is unsafe to accept the statement of Ghulam Muhammad Mukhia who has told a string of lies and is not a disinterested witness. (After considering the evidence and holding that the other four accused were not proved to have joined Sultan in kidnapping Mt. Jamila and that Mt. Jamila was not proved to have been below 16 years on 5th May 1928, their Lordships proceeded.) The charge, therefore, fails against all the accused persons including Bundu. The evidence discloses that Mt. Jamila lived in the house of Bundu without the least attempt to conceal the fact. Mt. Jamila being over 16 years of age, there could be no offence of kidnapping with reference to her. The lease under S. 368, I.P.C., against Bundu therefore fails.

In the result we allow the appeal, set aside the convictions and sentences and direct that Kala be immediately released and the other five accused persons be released unless they are wanted in some other case.

Criminal Revn. No. 277 of 1929, Decided on 10th June 1929, from order of Asst. Magistrate, Gaya, D/- 16th March 1929.

Criminal P. C., S. 423 (1) (b)—Setting aside conviction on one charge while affirmation on others—Non-reduction of sentence does not amount to enhancement.

It does not follow that if the conviction on one of the several charges in a trial is set aside while one or more others are affirmed there must necessarily be a reduction of sentence. It depends upon the particular circumstances of the case whether the retention of the sentence awarded by the trial Court constitutes an enhancement of the sentence. [P 39 C 1]

S. M. Gupta—for Petitioners.

N. K. Prasad II—for the Crown.

Judgment.—This application is directed against the order of the District Magistrate of Gaya who in appeal upheld the conviction of the petitioner under S. 323, Penal Code, and maintained the sentence of imprisonment for three weeks and fine of Rs. 25 upon each of them which the trial Court had passed under S. 147, I. P. C. The trial Court had convicted them under Ss. 147 and 323 but passed sentence under S. 147 only and expressly did not pass any separate sentence under S. 323.

In support of the rule it is contended, first, that the sentence passed in appeal is illegal as it is an enhancement of sentence; and, secondly, that the conviction ought not to be maintained because practically all the evidence went to show that not only the three petitioners but also five other persons who were also convicted along with them under S. 147 and fined Rs. 25 by the trial Court were participants in the offence of rioting of which the appellate Court acquitted all the accused.

As to the second plea, it cannot prevail. It is clear that the appellate Court laying special stress on certain facts, such as the sancha recorded at the thana from the chaukidar after the latter had talked with Sheobalak, the injured man, and the unreliability of the civil Court pcon, entertained doubts as to whether the minor accused assisted or accompanied the present petitioners when, as the Court found, the latter assaulted Sheobalak, that is to say, the learned District Magistrate held that the charge of rioting could not be sustained because as many as five persons were not found to be concerned. He did not distrust the prosecution story fundamentally but only in a detail. The conviction under S. 323 is sound.

As to the first point, an appellate Court is under S. 423 (1) (b), Criminal P. C. empowered to alter the finding maintaining the sentence. For the Crown it is contended that that is what has been done in the present case. On behalf of the petitioners Mr. Gupta urges that in reality the District Magistrate has effected an enhancement of sentence such as only the High Court can make. He relies upon the decisions in Ramzan Kuwra v. Ramkhelawan Chowbe (1) and Queen Empress v. Hanma (2). The question really is whether an apparent maintenance of the sentence is a real enhancement of it. Manifestly it does not follow that if the conviction on one of several charges in a trial is set aside while one or more others are affirmed, there must necessarily be a reduction of sentence. It depends on the circumstances of the particular case whether the retention of the sentence awarded by the trial Court constitutes an enhancement of sentence. The present case presents no difficulty. Here eight persons including the petitioners were found guilty of rioting with the common object of rescuing attached cattle and the petitioners with the further offence of voluntarily causing hurt to the decree-holder's servant. The fact that for the same offence under S. 147, the petitioners were sentenced to imprisonment and fine whereas their co-accused were sentenced to fine only though there was no differentiation in degree of guilt, shows that the Magistrate whilst stating that he did not pass a separate sentence under S. 323 actually passed under S. 147 a combined sentence for the two offences. It is also clear that in this combination the sentence of fine represents the guilt under S. 147. Accordingly the apparent maintenance of the sentence upon the alteration of the finding was in reality an enhancement and was ultra vires.

This Court will now pass the sentence which the lower Court ought to have passed, that is to say, the sentence of fine is set aside. The rule is thus made absolute in part. The petitioners must surrender to undergo the unexpired portion of their sentences.

The attention of the District Judge is drawn to the misconduct of the civil Court peon Nur Muhammad in respect of the evidence he gave.

S. 110 is intended to put a curb upon the activities of persons who set the ball of discord in motion and try to create or foment dissensions between man and man or between one community and another in matters which result in or have a tendency to result in breach of peace. [P 40 C 1,2]

Zahur Ahmad—for Applicant.

M. Waliullah—for the Crown.

Judgment.—On 18th March 1929, Mr. Browne, the learned District Magistrate of Jalaun, directed that Alayar Khan, the applicant, should under S. 110, Criminal P. C. execute a bond for Rs. 2,000 with two sureties in Rs. 2,000 each to be of good behaviour for a term of one year. He appealed to the learned Sessions Judge who set aside the finding of the trial Court so far as it related to the charge under S. 110 (d) but maintained the findings in other respects. The learned Sessions Judge observed that in view of the dangerous activities of the appellant in communal matters, he was not prepared to reduce the security. Alayar Khan has applied for revision to this Court.

Alayar Khan is a man of considerable influence at Konch and is a member of the Municipal Board. The township of Konch is torn by factions. The necessary consequence is political differences and communal dissensions.

Notice was issued to him to show cause as to why he should not be bound over inasmuch as :

(1) he habitually cheats, commits extortion and counterfeits coins and currency notes;

(2) he habitually commits and abets the commission of offences involving a breach of the peace;

(3) he is so desperate and dangerous as to render his being at large without security hazardous to the community.

Forty-eight witnesses were examined before the trial Court to prove these allegations. The applicant appears to have been convicted under Ss. 147, 149 and 325, I. P. C. on 26th August 1915 and sentenced to term of imprisonment which was reduced in appeal by the High Court. He was also bound over under S. 107, Criminal P. C. On 9th March 1928, he was bound over for one year under S. 107, Criminal P. C. The trial Court in an elaborate judgment, consisting of 70 type-written pages arrived at the conclusion that Alayar Khan habitually commits cheating and extortion; habitually commits and attempts to commit, and abets the commission of offences involving a breach of the peace specially in connexion with religious riots and is so desperate and dangerous that his being at large without security is hazardous to the community. The learned Sessions Judge on appeal held that the evidence of general reputation was not sufficient to establish the charge relating to cheating and extortion as no specific acts had been proved. He maintained the finding and the order of the Court below on the other counts.

The learned Sessions Judge observes as follows :

"My opinion, after carefully examining the evidence on the record, is that the evidence of general reputation given by the witnesses for the prosecution, taken in combination with the specific instances proved, establishes that Alayar Khan is a fomentor of communal discord and that he likes to excite trouble and create bad blood. The fomenting of communal trouble amounts to an abetment of offences calculated to involve a breach of the peace. My impression from the evidence is that Alayar Khan is a firebrand of a dangerous type. A man who stirs up communal enmity and who does and says things which must inevitably create such enmity is clearly an instigator and thus an abettor of offences involving a breach of the peace. A man of this character is a danger to society and should undoubtedly be made to give security."

This Court has considerable hesitation in going into the merits of a case under S. 110, Criminal P. C., unless the Court below in dealing with the evidence has made a material departure from legal principles. I have been referred to the evidence on the record and have considered the criticisms of the learned counsel for the applicant. I do not think that the Court below has erred in admitting evidence which ought to have been excluded or in ignoring evidence which might have told in favour of the accused. Where both the parties have tendered evidence, the question of weight is not a question of law.

The applicant has been carrying on his game amongst people whose passions and prejudices are easily roused and who are driven to lawlessness by his sinister influence. He is a menace to the community to which he belongs and to the social order generally.

Section 110, Criminal P. C., is intended to put a curb upon the activities of persons who set the ball of discord in motion and try to create or foment dissensions between man and man or between one community and another in matters which result in or have a tendency to result in breach of the peace. Alayar Khan deserved to be dealt with a strong hand. Accepting the finding of the Court below, I hold that the order passed against the applicant was fully justified. I reject the application.

v.

Mohammad Israil—Accused.

Criminal Appeal No. 416 of 1929, decided on 22nd August 1929, from order of Sess. and Sub-Judge, Allahabad, D/- 15th February 1929.

(a) Criminal P. C., S. 297—Charge to jury—Judge is bound to explain law with clearness and distinctness.

A Judge is bound to explain the law to the jury with clearness and distinctness and failure to do so prejudices the trial. Where the Judge withholds from the jury the legal assistance, the assistance in points of law, which the case demands, he fails in his duty. So also the Judge ought not to omit to state in his charge that if the jury entertains a reasonable doubt as to the guilt of the accused they are bound to return the verdict that the accused is not guilty. [P 41 C 2]

(b) Criminal P. C., S. 418—Misdirection or nondirection is matter of law.

Where there has been a trial by jury the appeal has to be confined within the restricted limits prescribed by the legislature. Misdirection or non-direction is a matter of law. If the verdict of the jury has been influenced by evidence which was inadmissible or proceeds upon no evidence at all, this is a matter of law. If this defect has affected the Crown or the accused prejudicially the order passed by the Court below ought to be set aside. [P 42 C 1]

U. S. Bajpai—for the Crown.

Mohammad Hussain—for Accused.

Judgment.—Mohammad Israil was committed to the Court of Sessions to take his trial under Ss. 380 and 467, I. P. C. The trial was held with the aid of a jury. The verdict of the jury was that Mohammad Israil was not guilty of theft under S. 380, I. P. C., but that he was guilty of forgery under S. 467, I. P. C. The Sessions Judge accepted the verdict of the jury in its entirety. In the result, he acquitted Mohammad Israil of the offence of theft but convicted him under S. 467, I. P. C., and sentenced him to one year's rigorous imprisonment and a fine of Rs. 1,000 or in default to undergo six months' rigorous imprisonment.

The order of the Sessions Judge has been challenged by the Local Government, which has preferred an appeal to this Court against the acquittal of Mohammad Israil on the charge of theft and by Mohammad Israil against his conviction under S. 467, I.P.C.

There is a firm of the name of Mohammad Sami Abdul Hakim at Allahabad, which held two hundis in due course one of which was for Rs. 500 and the other for Rs. 365. These hundies were endorsed in favour of Jawaharmal Lachmi Narain, their Bombay agents for collection; but the hundis never reached the latter firm.

The case set up by the Crown was that the hundis were put inside an envelope with a view to being posted to Bombay, that the envelope mysteriously disappeared, either from the office of Mohammad Sami Abdul Hakim or somewhere in the course of transit and that it never reached the firm of Jawaharmal Lachmi Narain. It was a later discovery that the hundies had come into the possession of Mohammad Israil, who negotiated them and collected the money.

The case for the prosecution was that the accused had obtained possession of the hundis by dishonest means and that he was guilty of theft.

The charge of forgery was founded upon the fact that the accused had obliterated or effaced the original endorsement in favour of Jawaharmal Lachmi Narain and had entered the name of Abdul Hamid Mohammad Sami there being no firm of that name.

The charge framed by Mr. A. B. Hardie, the committing Magistrate was not happily worded. It embraced two distinct offences under the second count:

(1) Forging the signature of Abdul Hamid on the hundi Ex. 2, and (2) selling the said hundi to one Lala Parsotam Das.

The accused admits that he was in possession of the hundis and that he negotiated them but he contended that Abdul Hakim son of Mohammad Sami was indebted to him for Rs. 900 and that in satisfaction of this debt, he had transferred the two hundis to him.

The charge to the jury by the Sessions and Subordinate Judge, Mr. Rup Kishun Agha has been adversely criticized by the counsel, appearing for the Crown and also by the counsel for Mohammad Israil. The common ground is that the charge is vitiated by misdirections and non-directions, which misled the jury and resulted in a miscarriage of justice.

The heads of the criticism need not be noticed in detail. The learned Judge has not only travelled outside the record but has confounded the identity of one of the witnesses Shamsuddin examined in Court with another of the same name, who was not before the Court and was never examined. But this is not all. The learned Judge has not explained to the jury the necessary ingredients of the offences under Ss. 380 and 467, I. P. C. The constituent elements of the two offences were essentially different. The learned Judge was bound to explain the law with clearness and distinctness and his failure to do so has seriously prejudiced the trial. The result of the omission has produced a hopeless confusion in the minds of the jury. The charges of theft and of forgery, in view of the peculiar features of the case, were interdependent in certain respects and inextricably mixed up in other respects. The learned Judge failed in his duties by withholding from the jury the legal assistance, the assistance in points of law, which the case demanded. The consequence of this omission was almost inevitable. We are faced with an astonishing verdict that Mohammad Israil is not guilty of theft, as Abdul Hakim had delivered the hundis to him and with the further verdict that he is guilty of the offence under S. 467, I. P. C. It is another astonishing feature that the learned Judge did not apply his mind to the nature and effect of the findings by the jury and accepted them without any discrimination or hesitation.

The Sessions Judge ought not to have omitted to state in his charge that if the jury entertained a reasonable doubt as to the guilt of the accused, they were bound to return a verdict that the accused was not guilty. This principle ought to have been clearly placed before the jury and, in fact, emphasised.

This appears to be the second case, in the course of the week in which, to our extreme regret, this omission has been conspicuously noticed in Mr. Rup Kishun Agha's charge to the jury. We hope that our observation will be kept in view and this defect from the charge avoided in future.

We do not think that this is a proper case in which the guilt or innocence of the accused should be determined by this Court on the merits. Under S. 418, Criminal P. C.

"An appeal may lie on a matter of fact as well as a matter of law except where the trial was by jury in which case the appeal shall lie on a matter of law only."

Where there has been a trial by jury; the appeal has to be confined within the restricted limits, prescribed by the legislature. Misdirection or non-direction is a matter of law. If the verdict of the jury has been influenced by evidence, which was inadmissible or proceeds upon no evidence at all, this is a matter of law. If this defect has affected the Crown or the accused prejudicially, the order passed by the Court below ought to be set aside.

We are convinced that in the present case, there has been no proper trial and we are of opinion that this case should go back for a fresh trial before a Judge other than Mr. Rup Kishun Agha and that the case should be tried with the aid of a fresh jury. We direct accordingly.

The learned Sessions Judge of Allahabad may either try the case himself or send the case to a competent tribunal for trial.

(e) U. P. Municipalities Act—Fact of Municipal Board demolishing Chabutra does not amount to assertion of title.

The fact that a Municipal Board has on several occasions demolished a chabutra constructed by a party on the disputed land and realised the cost does not amount even to an assertion of title on the part of the Municipal Board and is absolutely inconclusive.

Judgment.—This is a reference by Mr. Rup Kishan Agha, Officiating Sessions Judge of Allahabad, recommending that the conviction of one Gauri Shankar Singh under S. 265, Municipalities Act, be set aside.

This case is a typical example of aggressiveness on the part of a Municipal Board with a view to establish a claim to property, the title to which is in dispute. S. 265, Municipalities Act, has its use; but not unoften the powers conferred by the section are abused. This is to be strongly deprecated. Where there is a clash between a Municipal Board on the one side and a private individual on the other with reference to some property, the matter has got to be adjudicated by the civil Court which is the only forum for determining the title. The straightforward course in such a case is the institution of a suit in the civil Court. The remedy provided by S. 265, Municipalities Act, may be cheap, swift and within a certain range effective. The section, however, was never intended to arm a Municipal Board with powers to disturb the possession of any person who asserts a lawful title to the property in controversy.

Gauri Shankar Singh was convicted by a Bench of Honorary Magistrates on 12th December 1928, under S. 265, Municipalities Act, and sentenced to a fine of Rs. 2. The head and front of his offence is that he tied his cow on a piece of land which is in the immediate vicinity of his house but which the Municipal Board claims as part of a public lane. The title to this piece of land is disputed. Gauri Shankar Singh denied that it was part of a public lane, asserted his own title to the same and alleged that the land belonged to him and was his sahan darvaza. The trial Court describes the property as a blind lane through which other persons pass. The appellate Court agrees with the trial Court that it is a blind lane which is used by the occupants of two other houses bearing the Municipal Nos. 272 and 273. The learned Sessions Judge has very clearly described the position and boundary of the disputed site.

"It abuts on a public street on the west and there is a short narrow lane at the south east corner giving access to another open land bounded by houses Nos. 272 on the south, 273 on the east and 274, applicant's house, on the north."

The onus of proving that the site in question was a public street or part of a public street lay upon the Crown. The trial Court held in substance that the site formed part of a public lane. Reliance was placed upon the record plan filed on behalf of the municipality. It has not been shown that this document was prepared by a public servant in the discharge of his official duty or by any other person in pursuance of his duty pecially enjoined by the law of the country, nor has it been established by evidence that the said document formed the act or record of the act of public officers within the meaning of S. 74, Evidence Act. In the absence of proper evidence and of necessary particulars, the record plan could not be admitted in evidence either under S. 35 or under S. 74, Evidence Act.

The site plan prepared for the purposes of the case can have a very little probative value on the question of title. The entries in the aforesaid documents, in support of the title of the Municipal Board, are no more than admissions in favour of the Board and are not relevant.

The fact that the Municipal Board has on certain occasion in the past demolished a chabutra constructed by Gauri Shankar Singh upon this land and realised the cost, does not amount even to an assertion of title on the part of the Municipal Board and is absolutely inconclusive.

There was no justification for the finding by the trial Court upon the evidence indicated above that the property was a public lane. The finding is further vitiated by the fact that an important title deed filed by Gauri Shankar Singh was completely ignored by the trial Court. This was a document more than 30 years old and produced from proper custody. The genuineness of this document does not appear to have been challenged either before the trial Court or before the Court of appeal. The latter Court refers to the document; but lays it aside with the observation that:

"measurements are not given therein and it is difficult to say how far it covers the land in dispute, supposing it was a genuine transaction."

The judgment of the appellate Court is open to a further criticism that it fails to see the distinction between ownership and a mere right of easement. The appellate Court treats the owners or the occupants of the two houses Nos. 272 and 273 as "a portion of the public." From the fact that these occupants had a right to pass along the land in dispute it concludes that the land is a public street. The learned Magistrate fails to see that a right of easement may have been acquired by the occupants of these two houses but the said right is reconcilable with the right of ownership claimed by Gauri Shankar Singh.

I accept the reference and set aside the order dated 7th March 1929, affirming the order passed by a Bench of Honorary Magistrate on 12th December 1928. The fine, if paid, should be refunded.

Criminal Appeal No. 622 of 1929, Decided on 20th August 1929, from order of Sess. Judge, Allahabad, D/- 13th June 1929.

(a) Criminal P. C., S. 297—Where evidence is equally balanced Judge ought to give usual direction that benefit of doubt should be given to accused.

Where prima facie the evidence is more or less equally balanced to the ordinary jury the Judge ought to give the usual direction to the jury that if they have any reasonable doubt in their minds as to the guilt of the accused they should give the accused the benefit of it. In such a case it is almost impossible to say that the omission of this very important portion of the charge to the jury might not affect the minds of the jury. [P 45 C 1]

(b) Criminal P. C., S. 297 — For miscarriage of justice by misdirection there should be reasonable ground that misdirection affected jury's verdict.

Miscarriage of justice through misconsideration means that there must be a reasonable ground for apprehending that the misdirection may have affected the jury's verdict. Where it is possible that the omission of a charge under the particular circumstances might have affected the minds of the jury, it is a proper case for retrial by another jury : A. I. R. 1926 All. 429, Rel. on. [P 45 C 1]

(c) Criminal P. C., S. 297—Judge should reduce charge to writing as soon as possible after charging jury.

If a Judge does not write his charge before delivery which whenever practical is the better course, he should reduce the charge to writing as soon as possible after charging the jury so that what he said is fresh in his mind. A delay makes it impossible for an appellate Court to know whether the written charge was really the charge which was given to the jury. [P 45 C 2]

Sankar Saran—for the Crown.

Judgment.—This is an appeal by four persons against a conviction by the learned Officiating Sessions Judge of Allahabad and a jury under Ss. 330/34 and 384/34, I. P. C.

The appellants were found guilty for voluntarily causing hurt to extort a confession and money, and for house trespass. As this was a jury case, the appellants can only succeed if they can show that there has been any misdirection by the learned Judge to the jury which has in fact occasioned a miscarriage of justice. The prosecution story was that four Koals were seized by the accused, who were officials of the Manda estate, and that they were put to torture and beaten in order to make them confess that they had cut the barley produce of one Ram Partab. The defence evidence was that the whole story of the prosecution was mythical, and the defence called several witnesses to say that they had been present all the day in question with the accused and that no such thing took place.

The points made by Mr. Iqbal Ahmad, the counsel for the appellants in this case, are that there was misdirection in that, firstly, the learned Judge summed up in too summary a manner the evidence for the prosecution. I do not like to criticise the summing up of an experienced Judge such as the learned Officiating Sessions Judge of Allahabad; but I must say I think the evidence for the prosecution might have been dealt with at greater length.

If the criticism of the charge to the jury had been confined to this point alone, I would not have interfered. The next portion of the charge which has been criticized is that part where the learned Officiating Sessions Judge deals with the evidence which he himself called under S. 540. He says in his charge to the jury:

"Abdul Sattar was questioned upon the same point and had made a statement to the effect that no enquiry had been made by the Manda estate."

I have been referred to the evidence on this point, and it is not quite correct to say that this witness said this. What he did say was that it was not within his knowledge that an enquiry had been made, which is quite a different matter. The Judge himself deals rather severely with the defence evidence upon this point, and it is quite possible that this misdirection might have had some effect upon the minds of the jury.

The third and last point is that the learned Officiating Sessions Judge failed altogether to give the usual direction to the jury, that if they had any reasonable doubt in their minds as to the guilt of the accused, they should give the accused the benefit of it. It is conceivable that in some cases such an omission might not necessarily be vital. If, for instance, the evidence for the prosecution was overwhelming, so that no reasonable jury could possibly have any doubt, or where it would be unlikely that a jury would have any doubt on the matter, in such cases I think it is clear that the mere omission of this ordinary direction would not amount to such a misdirection that it might be said that there had been a miscarriage of justice. In this case, however, I am influenced by a statement of the learned Judge himself where he says:

"Turning next to the evidence for the defence, it is apparently as strong as the evidence on the other side."

This means that prima facie to the ordinary jury the evidence was more or less equally balanced. In such a case, it is almost impossible to say that the omission of this very important portion of the charge to the jury might not have affected the minds of the jury. I have to consider in this case whether the misdirection was such as actually did occasion a miscarriage of justice. As to the definition of what a miscarriage of justice would be, I am in agreement with the judgment of Daniels, J. in the case of Chiraji v. Akasi (1), at p. 510 he says:

"It means that there must be a reasonable ground for apprehending that the misdirection may have affected the jury's verdict."

I think it is possible to say in this case that the omission of this charge may, under the circumstances of this particular case, have affected the minds of the jury. Each case must be considered on this point on its own facts. It is impossible to lay down any direction of law which will be binding in every case. Coming as I do to the conclusion that the jury may possibly have been affected by the omission to which I have just alluded, and also by the other points to which criticism has been directed by the appellants, I hold that the verdict of the jury cannot stand.

It has been urged by the Government Pleader, that, as I have found that the verdict of the jury is vitiated, it is within the power of the appellate Court to go through the evidence and decide the case as if it were an ordinary appeal and not an appeal from the verdict of the jury. I am very doubtful if there is any warrant for this contention in Ss. 418 and 423, Criminal P. C. In any case I do not need to decide this point as I am satisfied that this is a proper case for retrial by another jury. I think, under all the circumstances of the case, and without making the smallest reflection upon the learned Officiating Sessions Judge who tried the case, that the retrial should be conducted by some other Judge. This case will, therefore, be sent back to the Sessions Judge of Allahabad to be tried by him or by any Judge to whom the Sessions Judge of Allahabad may send the case for trial. In the meantime the appellants will be admitted to bail to the satisfaction of the District Magistrate.

In this case I have not examined the evidence, and express no opinion, as to the weight of evidence either for the prosecution or the defence. Nothing that I have said must weigh with the Court trying the case.

In this case there was a delay of nine days after the learned Judge charged the jury until he reduced the charge to writing. If a Judge does not write his charge before delivery which, whenever practical, is the better course, he should reduce the charge to writing as soon as possible after charging the jury so that what he said is fresh in his mind. A delay of this character makes it impossible for an appellate Court to know whether the written charge was really the charge which was given to the jury.

v.

Emperor—Opposite Party.

Criminal Appeal No. 550 of 1929, Decided on 5th September 1929, from an order of the Sess. Judge, Etah, D/- 28th May 1929.

(a) Evidence Act, S. 24—Confession—Definition—Confession is admission made by accused.

A confession is an admission made at any time by a person charged with a crime stating or suggesting the inference that he committed the crime. [P 48 C 2]

(b) Evidence Act, S. 30—Self-implication is guarantee for truth of accusation against co-accused.

When the statement is self-incriminatory and also implicates a co-accused, the self-implication is the guarantee for the truth of the accusation against the co-accused and may be taken to be a substitute for the sanction of oath. [P 48 C 2]

(c) Evidence Act, S. 114, Illus. (b)—Evidence of accomplice should be accepted when corroborated in material particulars by cogent evidence.

The statement made by an accomplice should be accepted when it is strongly corroborated in material particulars by clear and cogent evidence for authenticity of which is not open to doubt. [P 48 C 2]

(d) Evidence Act, S. 24—Retracted confession—Person making confession may be convicted when Court thinks that it is voluntary and true.

There is nothing in law to prevent a Court from convicting a person upon a confession which has been subsequently retracted, provided that the Court is convinced that the statement is voluntary and true. If there be anything from the barest suspicion to positive evidence that the confession has been obtained by threat, persuasion, etc., such confession has of course to be discarded. But where a confession is made by a person who is sui juris before a Magistrate in an atmosphere untainted by the influence of the police or by any other influence and there are no suspicious features about it there is no reason why the statement should not be accepted. [P 48 C 2, P 49 C 1]

Judgment. -- Mt. Khuban, Chand, Buddha and Bhanta alias Bhagwanta were committed to the Court of Sessions at Etah to take their trial under S. 302, I. P. C.

Mr. Iftikhar Hussain, Additional Sessions Judge who heard the case, acquitted Buddha, Chand and Bhanta. He convicted Mt. Khuban and sentenced her to death.

Mt. Khuban has appealed to this Court and the record has been submitted by the Sessions for confirmation of sentence.

The Local Government has appealed from the judgment acquitting Bhagwanta alias Bhanta. No appeal has been preferred against the order of acquittal regarding Chand and Buddha.

On the night between 14th and 15th January 1929, one Mt. Jawwa and her two infant daughters aged seven years and five months respectively were murdered. It is clear that the murder was effected by more than one person. It was a cold-blooded murder, a murder premeditated, organized and executed with fiendish malignity.

Syed Mohammad Mohsin Jaffery, Sub-Inspector posted at the Etah Kotwali received information through Ishtiaq Ali, constable, on 15th January, 1929 that the corpses of a woman and two girls had been recovered from a well. The well was beyond the houses of Mt. Khuban and Mt. Jawwa deceased and beyond the octroi post.

There is nothing on the record to indicate the distance between the well and the house of Mt. Khuban.

The bodies were sent in usual course to the Civil Surgeon of Etah for a post-mortem examination. The post-mortem examination was held on 16th January 1929. The Civil Surgeon was of opinion that the death of the two small girls was caused "possibly" by strangulation. In the case of Mt. Jawwa, he was of opinion that cause of death was "probably" a deep wound on the neck of Mt. Jawwa.

Mt. Jawwa had no less than seven incised wounds. One of these was a large gaping incised wound 8" long from ear to ear cutting the neck above the larynx, cutting the upper part of oesophagus and deep vessels of the neck on either side notching the spine behind. It is not impossible that this wound was caused by a butcher's knife used with tremendous force. The four incised wounds on the fingers indicate that there may have been a struggle.

The age of Mt. Jawwa was about 35 years. Her first husband was Azim Ullah. Upon the latter's death, she married one Chand, who was a different person from Chand the accused. Upon the death of the second husband, she had some connexion with Chand the accused. She left Chand and then she either had nikah with or passed into the keeping of Akbar, butcher, husband of Mt. Khuban.

Akbar with his wife Mt. Khuban lived in one house. Mt. Jawwa with her children, one of whom was a grown up lad called Mahboob, lived in a different house.

When Mt. Jawwa left Chand the accused, the latter could not be expected to treat the matter with philosophical equanimity. He might well have conceived a grievance against Mr. Jawwa on that account.

Mt. Khuban appears to have conceived an intense hatred towards Mt. Jawwa, who was her rival in the affection of her husband.

This case is illustrative of the limits of brutal savagery to which a woman may be driven whose passions have been roused by jealousy.

On the night between 14th and 15th January 1929, there was a wedding, a butchers' wedding in Barla in the district of Aligarh. Most of the butchers of Etah had gone to this wedding and Akbar, the husband of Mt. Khuban had also joined the throng. The time was opportune. The coast was clear. Mt. Khuban went to Mt. Jawwa's house and entreated her to come to her house and sleep for the night, as she was alone. The instinct of Mt. Jawwa warned her and she at first refused; but she was prevailed upon by the entreaties of Mt. Khuban and went to Mt. Khuban's house with her two daughters; on this fateful night Mt. Jawwa and her two daughters did not emerge from that house alive.

The evidence of Mahboob is of some importance. He times the first visit of Mt. Khuban to Mt. Jawwa's house at about 10 p. m. He gives the details of the conversation between Mt. Khuban and Mt. Jawwa and how the latter was prevailed upon to go to Mt. Khuban's house. He is positive that his mother and two sisters accompanied Mt. Khuban to her house and did not come back in the morning. He saw Mt. Khuban standing on the chabutra of one Fakirey. Mt. Khuban asked him where his mother was. He replied that she might have gone somewhere. Mt. Khuban said that Mt. Jawwa might have been taken by some orderly peon to cook food at the house of some officer.

Mr. Jaffery, the investigating officer had examined the house of Mt. Jawwa and he found nothing in the house to indicate that any murder with violence had been committed there. He next visited the house of Mt. Khuban. He found that the ground of a kotah and the thatch in front of it had been recently plastered. He found blood stains on the wall of the kotah and blood marks on a corner of a doorleaf of the room on the inside. He also noticed blood marks on the patti and band of a cot in the kotah. He also recovered a knife having faint marks of blood. He took the earth of the wall and cut a specimen out of the doorleaf. These were sent to the Chemical Examiner and the Imperial Serologist in due course. Upon analysis, it was discovered that the stains were those of human blood.

The above evidence is sufficient to bring home the guilt to Mt. Khuban. She had motive for the offence. Her house was searched shortly after the recovery of the corpses. The recent plastering of certain portions of the room and the finding of stains of human blood on the wall and the doorleaf of the said room and also on the cot are unexplained. It is proved that the stains were of human blood and not of goat's blood which one might expect to find in the house of a butcher. It is further proved that Mt. Khuban had decoyed Mt. Jawwa to her house and that Mt. Jawwa and her two infant children were not seen returning from the house alive.

On 19th January 1929, the statement of Mt. Khuban was recorded by a Magistrate of the First Class under S. 164, Criminal P. C. This statement is full of circumstantial details. The Magistrate, who took down the statement, certifies that the statement is voluntary. There is nothing on the record to suggest that this statement was extorted by the police by threat or ill treatment or procured by persuasion.

On the same day, the aforesaid Magistrate recorded the statement of Bhagwanta alias Bhanta. There is nothing on the record to indicate that this statement was not voluntary.

The statements of Mt. Khuban and Bhanta agree on all material points. There are certain variations in the two statements which are indicative of the fact that the statements were not the result either of preconcert or tutoring.

Mt. Khuban states that about two or three years before the murder, there was liaison between Chand accused and Mt. Jawwa. Mt. Jawwa gave up Chand and contracted an intimacy with her husband Akbar. She became pregnant by him and Akbar married her. For this reason, Chand began to cherish ill-will. When her husband was away from home, Chand sent Bhanta Ahir to her. Bhanta instigated Mt. Khuban to go and to bring Mt. Jawwa to her place to sleep for the night. Bhanta and Mt. Khuban went to take Mt. Jawwa. During her absence from home Chand was sitting on the roof of her house in the company of another Ahir. When Mt. Jawwa was coming to the house of Mt. Khuban, Bhanta was at the head of the party. On reaching Mt. Khuban's house Mt. Khuban took one charpai and Mt. Jaw-was with her two daughters went to sleep on the other charpai in the same room. Bhanta, Chand and another Ahir, unnamed, killed Mt. Jawwa. Mt. Akbari woke up and wept. Mt. Khubān called the girl to her but Chand caught hold of the girl, sent for a rope through Bhanta Ahir and throttled Akbari. Chand also killed Anwari by throttling her. Chand tied the dead body of Mt. Jawwa into a bundle and made Mt. Khubān to hold the knots of the bundle. The three dead bodies were carried out of the house in two bundles. When they were carrying the bundles, Chand told her that she should whitewash the house so that there be no trace of blood in the house. Chand also told her that she should bury the knife with which the murder had been committed. She whitewashed the house but did not bury the knife. She washed the knife and kept it. She admits having shown marks of blood to the Sub-Inspector. She admits having pointed out the charpai on which the murder was committed. She also admits that she made over the knife to the Sub-Inspector.

The aforesaid confession is corroborated in material particulars. The corpses were found in two bundles. The house was found by the Sub-Inspector newly whitewashed and plastered. A blood stained knife was found in the house and this was given by Mt. Khubān to the Sub-Inspector. The statement of Mt. Khubān is self-incriminating. She admits having decoyed Mt. Jawwa to her house; she knew that Mt. Jawwa was going to be murdered. She helped in the tying up of the bundles. She was present when Chand knifed Mt. Jawwa and throttled the two daughters. The chain of evidence against her is complete.

If ever there was a case which deserved capital punishment this was one. We dismiss Mt. Khubān's appeal, affirm the conviction and sentence and direct that the same be carried out according to law.

We are clearly of opinion that Bhagwanta alias Bhanta has been improperly acquitted by the Court below. The learned Sessions Judge was wrong in holding that the statement of Mt. Khubān under S. 164, Criminal P. C., was not a confession. We accept the definition of confession as given by Stephen and which has been quoted in the judgment of the trial Court :

"A confession is an admission made at any time by a person charged with a crime, stating or suggesting the inference that he committed the crime."

We have quoted the major portion of the statement of Mt. Khubān and it would appear from the same that the statement fits in with the definition of "confession" as given by Stephen. The statement is self-incriminatory and it also implicates Bhanta. The self-implication is the guarantee for the truth of the accusation against the co-accused and may be taken to be a substitute for the sanction of oath. Under S. 30, Evidence Act :

"When more persons than one are being jointly tried for the same offence, and a confession made by one of such persons affecting himself and some other of such persons is proved, the Court may take into consideration such confession as against such a person as well as against the person who makes such confession."

The confession of Mt. Khubān was affecting herself and also affecting Bhanta. This confession is, therefore, admissible in evidence against Bhanta.

Illustration (b), S. 114, Evidence Act, is an authority for the proposition that an accomplice is unworthy of credit unless he is corroborated in material particulars.

We have already shown above that the statement of Mt. Khubān is strongly corroborated in material particulars by clear and cogent evidence, the authenticity of which is not open to doubt.

The statement of Mt. Khubān chimes in with all the important particulars narrated by Bhanta in his confession before the Magistrate. It is true that both these confessions were subsequently retracted. It was observed by a Full Bench of this Court in re, Raggha v. Emperor (1) at (p. 833 of 23 A. L. J.) that a confession in its normal state is an entirely suspicious article and that a retracted confession is worse.

There is nothing in law to prevent a Court from convicting a person upon a confession which has been subsequently retracted provided that the Court is convinced that the statement is voluntary and true. If there be anything from the barest suspicion to positive evidence that the confession had been obtained by threat, persuasion, etc., such confession has, of course, to be discarded. But where the confession is made by a person who is sui juris before a Magistrate, in an atmosphere, untainted by the influence of the police or by any other influence and there are no suspicious features about it, there does not seem to be any reason why the statement should not be accepted. Where two such confessions are made by two different persons and both of them are self-incriminatory and each of them affects the other co-accused, this is an important circumstance, which may be and ought to be taken into consideration at the trial.

Bhagwanta states that in the month of Asarh, Akbar butcher's wife told him that she had a co-wife and asked him to do such a thing that is, to kill the co-wife and promised to pay him some money. Bhagwanta said that it was beyond his power to commit such a deed. She said that she had a man in hand and asked Bhagwanta to take one man in addition. Bhagwanta refused. On the day when the murder was committed, Akbar Ali, the husband, had gone out. His wife met Bhagwanta at noon and told him:

"Now is the chance to do such a thing my husband is not at home. Kill my co-wife now."

At 10 or 11 O'clock at night, he found there Chand and Buddha. She concealed the three men in the house and went to call her co-wife. The co-wife with her two daughters came. Akbar's wife lay down on one charpai. The co-wife with her two daughters lay down on the other charpai and fell asleep. Chand had kept a knife under the charpai of Akbar's wife. Akbar's wife came and informed these people that her co-wife had gone to sleep. "Kill her now." Chand took up the knife, pressed the throat of the co-wife and plunged the knife into her person. Akbar's wife throttled the two daughters. The corpses were tied into two bundles:

"Akbar's wife, Chand and I tied the dead body into two bundles one of which was made of a printed sheet and the other of a red sheet of quilt."

Buddha, Chand and Bhagwanta went away taking the bundles with them.

The statements of Bhagwanta and Mt. Khuban agree in important particulars but there are variations. Although each of the accused persons assigns to himself or herself a less prominent part, the statements are clear acknowledgments of participation in the murder of Mt. Jawwa and her two daughters.

The confession of Bhagwanta is corroborated by certain particulars:

(1) There is the medical evidence that Mt. Jawwa was killed with a knife and her two daughters died of strangulation.

(2) Corpses in two bundles were recovered from a well.

(3) A knife was recovered from the house of Mt. Khuban, which bore stains of human blood.

(4) The murder had taken place inside Mt. Khuban's house as was proved to a demonstration by the condition of the room, the recent plastering and whitewashing and from the things recovered in the room.

Mt. Khuban was actuated by jealousy, a frailty common to women. Bhanta was a hired assassin. He got Rs. 10 from Mt. Khuban as blood money—Rs. 10 for three human lives.

It may be incidentally mentioned that Mt. Khuban had made a clean breast of the whole affair to Gulzari and had admitted that Rs. 10 had been agreed to be given to Bhanta as the price of murder.

We have no reasonable doubt that Bhanta alias Bhagwanta took part in the murder and is guilty of an offence under S. 302, I. P. C.

We allow the Government Appeal No. 724 of 1929, set aside the order of the Additional Sessions Judge, dated 28th May 1929, acquitting Bhagwanta. We convict Bhagwanta alias Bhanta under S. 302, I. P. C., and sentence him to death and direct that the said sentence be carried out according to law.

Order accordingly.

Criminal Ref. No. 503 of 1929, Decided on 12th Sep. 1929, made by Addl. Sess. Judge, Moradabad, D/- 18th July 1929.

Penal Code, S. 212—Accused not knowing that person staying with him is offender—Conviction under S. 212 cannot be sustained—Offender means person contravening provision of and punishable under criminal law.

A person can be supposed to "know" where there is a direct appeal to his senses. Person "has reason to believe" under S. 26 if he has sufficient cause to believe the thing but not otherwise. The word "offender" used under S. 212 means a person who has contravened the provisions of any criminal law, which is punishable either with death, transportation, imprisonment or fine. Where there is neither affirmative nor any circumstantial evidence to bring home to the door of the accused that he knew or had reason to believe that the person he was harbouring was an offender within the meaning of S. 212, his conviction under S. 212 cannot be sustained. [P 50-C 1 2]

M. Waliullah—for the Crown.

L. M. Roy—for Opposite Party.

Judgment.—This is a reference by the learned Sessions Judge of Bijnor recommending the enhancement of sentence in the case of one Latoor who was convicted by a Magistrate of the First Class under S. 212, I. P. C. and, sentenced to a fine of Rs. 25.

If the conviction was justified, there can be no doubt that the sentence passed by the learned Magistrate was grossly inadequate and the reference made by the learned Sessions Judge was thoroughly justified and proper.

The reference is opposed by Latoor, who is represented by counsel. Mr. Roy challenges the propriety and legality of the conviction of Latoor under S. 212, I. P. C.

The charge preferred against Latoor was that on or about 30th January 1929, he was found concealing and harbouring one Baldewa an absconded "offender" under Ss. 396 and 366, I. P. C. knowing or having reason to believe that the said person was an offender and absconder. We have been taken through the evidence on the record and we do not find that there are any sufficient materials on the record to show that Baldewa had committed an offence under S. 396 or S. 366, I. P. C. We have been referred to the statement of Mt. Bharto who says that she was kidnapped by Baldewa. Baldewa has not yet been tried and the solitary statement of Mt. Bharto as to her being kidnapped by Baldewa does not commend itself to us.

The prosecution is confronted with another difficulty. There is neither affirmative nor any circumstantial evidence to bring home to the door of Latoor that he knew or had reason to believe that Baldewa was an offender within the meaning of S. 212, I. P. C. A person can be supposed to "know" where there is a direct appeal to his senses. A person "has reason to believe" under S. 26, I. P. C. if he has sufficient cause to believe the thing but not otherwise.

It may be that proclamations were issued broadcast against Baldewa. It is possible that his property may have been attached but it does not follow therefrom that Baldewa was an offender. The word "offender" used under S. 212, I. P. C. means a person who has contravened the provision of any criminal law, which is punishable either with death transportation, imprisonment or fine. Upon the evidence on the record, it is impossible for us to come to the conclusion that Baldewa was an "offender" under S. 212, I. P. C.

The result is that we reject the reference. We set aside the order of the Magistrate, convicting Latoor under S. 212, I. P. C. and direct that the fine if paid should be refunded to him.

P. C. Chaudhri—Accused.

v.

Emperor—Opposite Party.

Criminal Ref. No. 592 of 1929, Decided on 2nd September 1929, made by Sess. Judge, Allahabad, D/- 10th August 1929.

Motor Vehicles Act, S. 16—U. P. Motor Vehicles Rules, R. 11—R. 11 is not applicable to cars registered outside United Provinces.

There is nothing in the wordings of these rules to show that R. 11 applies to cars registered outside the United Provinces. It is clear from the definition of "Registering Authority" in R. 3 that this expression, as used in R. 11, means the authority who had registered the car under the rules in force in the United Provinces. Where therefore the applicant's car is not registered in the United Provinces, but brought there for a short period, R. 11 has no application to his case. [P 51 C 1]

Judgment.—This is a reference by Mr. Kisch, the learned Sessions Judge of Allahabad with the recommendation that the order passed by a Magistrate, First Class of Allahabad convicting one Mr. P. C. Chaudhri under S. 16, Motor Vehicles Act, 1914, be set aside.

The learned Sessions Judge has given excellent reasons in support of his reference. The conviction is clearly illegal and must be set aside.

Mr. P. C. Chaudhri, resident of No. 4 Bankshall Street, Calcutta, came to Allahabad on a short visit. He brought with him his motor car bearing No. 23,047. On 14th April 1929, a constable on traffic duty demanded the production of the registration certificate. The Line Inspector who acts under the orders of the Superintendent of Police also made a similar demand. The certificate of registration was not produced. The result was that he was prosecuted for having contravened the provisions of R. 11 of the United Provinces Motor Vehicles rules and fined Rs. 5.

Rule 11 of the United Provinces Motor Vehicles rules provides as follows:

"Form of certificates and card; their production on demand. Certificates of registration and registration cards shall be in the forms provided in Schs. B and C, and shall be signed by the registering authority or by a person duly authorized by him in this behalf, and the owner of the vehicle in respect of which a certificate of registration has been issued shall be bound to produce the certificate when required so to do by the registering authority."

The "registering authority" referred to has been defined in the rules as meaning the Superintendent of Police, or an Assistant or Deputy Superintendent or Inspector of Police authorized by the Superintendent of Police to perform the duties of the "registering authority" under these rules. It is to be observed that there is nothing in the rules in force in the Presidency of Bengal corresponding to R. 11 of the United Provinces rules. The case lies within a very narrow compass. Do the United Provinces rules apply to a car registered in Calcutta and which has been brought to the United Provinces for a short duration? The learned Sessions Judge observes as follows:

"There is nothing in the wording of these rules to show that R. 11 applies to cars registered outside the United Provinces. It is clear from the definition of "registering authority" in R. 3 that this expression, as used in S. 11, means the authority who had registered the car under the rules in force in the United Provinces and as the applicant's car was not registered in the United Provinces, in my view, R. 11 has no application to his case."

I am in complete agreement with this view. I therefore accept the reference upon the ground set out in the referring order of the learned Sessions Judge dated 10th August 1929, set aside the conviction and sentence under S. 16, Motor Vehicles Act coupled with R. 11, of the United Provinces Motor Vehicles rules and direct that the fine, if paid be refunded.

R.M./R.K. Conviction set aside.

Lala Bansi Dhar—Applicant.

v.

Brij Basi Lal—Opposite Party.

Criminal Ref. No. 482 of 1929, Decided on 14th August 1929, made by Sess. Judge, Mainpuri, D/- 13th June 1929.

Criminal P. C., S. 517 — Where house is not property in respect of which offence is committed no order under S. 517 can be made.

A house was in the occupation of A. It was alleged that one B was the owner of the house and C was in possession of the house on B's behalf. Later on B applied to the police to be put in possession of the house as C had disappeared. The police put B in possession. B sold the house to D. Thereupon A's son E instituted a complaint against D and others charging them with offences under Ss. 143, 380 and 448, Penal Code. Before filing complaint the police took possession of the house. The accused were acquitted. But during pendency of the case the key of the house was by order of a Magistrate delivered to E. D presented an application for an order directing E to hand over the key to him.

Held: that E's complaint being dismissed and the accused being acquitted it could not be said simply by reason of the fact that one of the charges was under S. 448, Penal Code, the house was a property in respect of which an offence was committed. The house therefore was not a property regarding which an offence was committed within the meaning of S. 517. The order as to the key was passed by a competent Court and E's possession of the key was not unlawful. Moreover when the Court was moved for an order directing E to hand over the key to D neither the house nor the key was in the custody of the Court. The Court therefore had no power to make an order under S. 517 in favour of D. [P 52 C 2]

Judgment.—This is a reference by the learned Sessions Judge of Mainpuri recommending that an order passed by Babu Ganga Prasad, Magistrate, First Class, on 15th January 1929, be vacated and that the said Magistrate be directed under S. 517, Criminal P. C., to recover a key from the possession of Brij Basi Lal and make over the same to Lala Bansi Dhar.

There is a house at Shikohabad which was in the occupation of Mr. Radha Kishun, pleader. Radha Kishun died in 1908.

It is alleged that one Govind Prasad was the owner of this house and that he had let out the same to one Mulua. It is further alleged that Mulua had continued in possession of this house on behalf of Govind Prasad between the years 1908 and 1920.

Trouble began in 1924 when Govind Prasad applied to the Mainpuri police to be put into possession of this house, inasmuch as the tenant Mulua had disappeared from the scene and had locked up the house. The police appeared to have put Govind Prasad into possession of this house.

On 20th September 1927, Govind Prasad sold the house to Bansidhar. On 26th September 1927, Brij Basi Lal, son of Radha Kishun, instituted a complaint in the Court of Mr. Jwala Prasad, Magistrate First Class, against Bansidhar and 17 others charging them with offences punishable under Ss. 143, 380 and 448, I. P. C. Before the filing of the complaint the police appear to have taken possession of the house and to have locked the house.

The Magistrate, upon the receipt of the police report, dismissed the complaint under S. 203, Criminal P. C., on 28th March 1928. The key of the house, however, continued to remain in the possession of the police. Upon an application for revision filed by Brij Basi Lal, the learned Sessions Judge of Mainpuri set aside the order dismissing the complaint and directed further enquiry. Bansidhar's application to the High Court against the order of the Sessions Judge was rejected. Under the orders of the District Magistrate of Mainpuri, the case was transferred for trial from the file of Babu Jwala Prasad to that of Mr. Kali Charan, a Tahsildar Magistrate. During the pendency of the case before Mr. Kali Charan, the key of the house was by the orders of Mr. Kali Charan delivered to Brij Basi Lal. The case was eventually transferred to Mr. Ganga Prasad, a Magistrate of the First Class, who on 29th December 1928 acquitted the accused.

An application was presented by Lala Bansidhar in the Court of Mr. Ganga Prasad for an order directing Brij Basi Lal to hand over the key to him, which had remained in his possession since the order of Mr. Kali Charan, the Tahsildar Magistrate. This application was refused by Mr. Ganga Prasad, mainly upon the ground that the key having been put into the possession of Brij Basi Lal by a competent authority, he had no jurisdiction either to revise or to over-set the said order. On an application for revision filed by Lala Bansidhar the learned Sessions Judge of Mainpuri has referred the case to this Court under S. 438, Criminal P. C.

The title to the property is by no means clear. The complaint of Lala Brij Basi Lal dated 26th September 1927, having been dismissed and the accused acquitted, it cannot be said that simply by reason of the fact that one of the charges preferred was under S. 448, I. P. C., the house was a property in respect of which an offence had been committed. The allegation of the complainant that the accused persons had by use or by show of criminal force taken possession of the house did not find favour with the trial Court and was discredited.

The house was not a property regarding which an offence was committed within the meaning of S. 517, Criminal P. C. The house was at one stage, in custodia legis, the police being the agents of the Court. The possession of the key may under certain circumstances be evidence of symbolical possession of the house itself.

Mr. Kali Charan, the Tahsildar Magistrate, at one time had the seisin of the entire case by reason of the order passed by the District Magistrate of Mainpuri. It was within his competence to transfer the possession of the house to such person as he considered to be desirable and fit. He having directed that the key of the house should be transferred to Brij Basi Lal, it could not be said that Brij Basi Lal's possession of the key was unlawful and was open to challenge either on the ground of illegality or for want of any jurisdiction in Mr. Kali Charan, the Tahsildar Magistrate. The fact, however, remains that on 15th January 1929 or thereabout, when Mr. Ganga Prasad was moved for an order directing Brij Basi Lal to hand over the key to Bansidhar neither the house nor the key was in the custody of the Court. The Court therefore had no power to make an order under S. 517, Criminal P. C., in favour of Bansidhar.

Mr. Nehal Chand in support of the reference has called my attention to S. 516 (a), Criminal P. C. That section has no application to the facts of the present case because neither the house nor the key is:

"property regarding which any offence appears to have been committed or which appears to have been used for the commission of an offence."

The key moreover was not produced before the criminal Court at any stage of the enquiry or trial.

My attention has also been drawn to S. 561 (a), Criminal P. C. and it has been argued that to allow Brij Basi Lal to retain possession of the key amounts to an abuse of the process of the Court and the ends of justice are likely to be met by restoring the status quo ante.

It is difficult, in view of the facts of this case, to say as to whether justice lies on the side of Lala Bansidhar. The title to the property cannot be effectively determined by the criminal Court. Any party aggrieved by the order of Mr. Ganga Prasad, dated 15th January 1929, is entitled to seek his proper remedy before the right forum. I refuse to entertain the reference. Let the papers be returned.

Kudua Bari — Accused — Opposite Party.

Criminal Revn. No. 369 of 1929, Decided on 6th September 1929, from order of Sess. Judge, Mainpuri, D/- 21st February 1929.

Criminal P. C., S. 110 — Object of S. 110 is to offer protection to public — Evidence on question of repute should be tested in light of tangible facts.

The object of S. 110 is to offer protection to the members of the public and is not intended to be an engine of oppression. The Courts below have got, in all cases coming up either under Ss. 108, 109 or 110, to pay strict regard to the question whether the evidence produced is legal evidence in the case on the question of repute. Nothing is more easy than to put forward a general charge against a certain person that he is a burglar and thief. The said statement has got to be tested in the light of tangible facts and particulars if there are any such facts to support the story. If there are no such facts, the evidence loses its value.

Judgment.—Proceedings have been instituted against Kudua Bari under S. 110, Criminal P. C., on the allegation that he was a habitual burglar and thief and that his character was so desperate and dangerous that it was a menace to the community at large to allow him to remain without being bound over. Mr. Budh Sen, Magistrate, First Class of Mainpuri, under his order dated 22nd January 1929, held that the accused was a habitual thief and burglar but there was no evidence that he was so desperate and dangerous as to justify his being bound over on the second ground. The learned Magistrate ordered the accused to execute a personal bond for Rs. 200 with two sureties each in the same amount to be of good behaviour for a term of three years. The accused was not in a position to furnish security and the matter was placed before the learned Sessions Judge under S. 123 (2), Criminal P. C.

The judgment of the trial Court is an excellent model of what a judgment should not be. It is summary sketch and most unconvincing. Without caring to weigh the value of the evidence and without trying to consider whether the evidence produced before him was legal evidence of repute or otherwise, he has pronounced judgment in this case.

The learned Sessions Judge has taken considerable pains in analysing and dissecting the evidence and in testing their value. The whole evidence in this case may be placed under two groups: (1) evidence which cannot be treated as evidence of repute and is no evidence at all, and (2) evidence which is legally admissible but is not sufficient or reliable. The learned Sessions Judge has sifted this evidence very carefully and we have not the slightest doubt as to the correctness of his conclusion.

The object of S. 110, Criminal P. C., is to offer protection to the members of the public and is not intended to be an engine of oppression. The Courts below have got, in all cases coming up either under Ss. 108, 109 or 110, Criminal P. C., to pay strict regard to the question whether the evidence produced is legal evidence in the case on the question of reputes. Nothing is more easy than to put forward a general charge against a certain person, that he is a burglar and thief. The said statement has got to be tested in the light of tangible facts and particulars if there are any such facts to support the story. If there are no such facts, the evidence loses its value.

The maintenance of a history-sheet may have its uses and a history-sheet may in some cases form good evidence against the accused. The difficulty which we experience in case after case is that it turns out that the history-sheet is no more than an ex parte proceeding and that the accused does not know upon what ground the history-sheet has been opened against him, nor does he know what facts it contains.

We are in entire agreement with the view of the learned Sessions Judge and are clearly of opinion that the present application for revision ought not to have been made. The learned Government Advocate as usual with him has placed the case for the Crown in its true and correct perspective. We dismiss this application.

Narbada Prasad and another — Respondents.

Criminal Appeal No. 304 of 1929, Decided on 10th September 1929, against order of Magistrate, First Class, Allahabad, D/- 28th January 1929.

(a) District Boards Act, S. 34 — "Interest in contract" means financial interest with profit.

The expression "interest in a contract" means a financial interest with profit or hope of profit from the contract as the object of the person interested. This must be inferred from the facts in evidence in each case. [P 54 C 2]

(b) Criminal Trial—Evidence—Crown can rely on incriminatory evidence found in house search of accused.

The Crown is entitled to rely upon any material evidence of an incriminatory character found in the house of an accused person as the result of house search. [P 57 C 2]

(c) Evidence Act (1872), S. 34 — Necessity of formal proof that books are kept in course of business has been dispensed with.

Under the old Evidence Act of 1855 books to be admissible had to be "proved to have been regularly kept in course of business. In the later Act I of 1872 the words "proved to have been" have dropped. This amounts to material alteration in the law. The legislature has dispensed with the necessity of any formal proof that the books were kept up in the regular course of business. It is a matter of intrinsic evidence as to whether the books in question were books of account and regularly kept in the regular course of business. The only limitation imposed by the statute is that the statement contained in the account books "shall not alone be sufficient to charge any one with liability." The value of the entries is corroborative and cannot be used as independent evidence to charge any person with liability: 18 All. 92, Rel. on; 27 Cal. 118, Ref; 4 Bom. 576, Dist. [P 57 C 2, P 58 C 1]

(d) Evidence Act, S. 68—Account book is not document required by law to be attested.

An account book is not a document which is required by law to be attested and S. 68 can have no application to a case in which such account book is produced in evidence. [P 58 C 1]

(e) Criminal Trial—False allegation in defence against respectable person of conspiracy to bring false charges, aggravates original offence.

False allegation against innocent and respectable persons of criminal conspiracy to bring false charges, when used as defence aggravate greatly the original offence. This type of defence is much too common in India and it ought to be recognized that where a defence of this character is obviously false, that fact ought to be taken into consideration in awarding punishment. [P 61 C 1, 2]

U. S. Bajpai—for the Crown.

K. N. Katju and A. P. Pandey and Gaya Prasad—for Respondents.

Judgment.—Pandit Narbada Prasad and Jagannath Prasad alias Kunnoo were charged before Mr. S. W. Bobb, First Class Magistrate of, Allahabad, under S. 168, I. P. C., and Ss. 168, I. P. C., and 168/109, I. P. C., for contravention of S. 34, District Boards Act of 1922. The Magistrate acquitted both the accused.

"(1) A member of the Board who otherwise than with the permission in writing of the Commissioner, knowingly acquires or continues to have directly, or indirectly by himself or his partner, any share or interest in any contract or employment with, by or on behalf of the Board, shall be deemed to have committed an offence under S. 168, I. P. C."

An "interest in a contract" we hold to mean a financial interest with profit or hope of profit from the contract as the object of the person interested. This must be inferred from the facts in evidence in each case.

In the month of January 1928, the District Board of Banda was suspended by order of the Government. It ap-appears to us, after reading of the activities of this Board in this case, that the Banda District Board might have been suspended earlier with great advantage to the citizens of Banda. The administration of the District Board was placed in the hands of the District Magistrate, who appointed Mr. Chakarvarti as Official Chairman of the Board. Mr. Chakarvarti, on investigation into the affairs of the District Board, thought it proper to request Rai Bahadur Thakur Jaswant Singh, a Special Magistrate of Banda, to investigate the connexion of Narbada Prasad, who had been Chairman of the Mau Sub-Committee of the District Board, with a contract for metalling one mile of a road in the Mau Sub-Division which had been given to the second accused, Jagannath Prasad. It is to be noted that the investigation was started officially and not at the instigation of Thakur Jaswant Singh. On 24th March 1928, Thakur Jaswant Singh had finished his investigation and made his report in this matter to Mr. Chakarvarti. The police then took the matter in hand and as a result the Government sanctioned the prosecution of Narbada Prasad on 7th July 1928. In view of the nature of the defence in this case to which we will allude hereafter these dates are important. Mr. Vishnu Sahai, a First Class Magistrate of Allahabad, originally commenced the hearing, but, on an application for transfer being made to the High Court, the case was ordered to be transferred to Mr. S. W. Bobb.

The evidence produced by the prosecution consisted of :

(a) The circumstances surrounding the grant of the contract to Jagannath and the treatment accorded to Messrs. Mohammad Sharif and Gulab Chand, who had in January 1927 originally tendered for the contract and had their tender accepted by the Engineer, subject to the sanction of the Board which was never granted.

(b) The evidence of 13 labourers, who were engaged in the construction of the road or in collecting kankar who gave evidence to the effect that they had been engaged by Narbada Prasad and paid by him either on the road or at his house.

(c) The evidence of 5 cart-men, who said that Narbada Prasad had hired their carts and paid them the agreed sums.

(d) The evidence of 3 boatmen, who carried the kankar used on the road, that their boats were engaged by Narbada Prasad and that they were paid by Narbada Prasad at his house.

(e) The evidence of Ram Kumar, the ferry contractor of Rajpur Ghat, who said that Narbada Prasad's kankar was conveyed by the boatmen, and who gave evidence that Narbada Prasad's servant used to look after the work, and that Narbada Prasad himself used to come as well, and that he used to see the workmen at the house of Narbada Prasad. He also said that Narbada Prasad himself had told him that he had taken the contract.

(f) The evidence of Munni Lal, whose house was on the actual portion of road being remetalled, who said that Narbada had told him that he was going to take the contract for the road, and that Jagannath had told him he had been given a four anna share in it. He also saw the labourers at Narbada Prasad's house. He deposed that Jagannath was a man who could not possibly undertake the contract, as his financial means were very limited, and that previously to this contract Jagannath had been engaged by his brother-in-law at Rs. 15 a month.

(g) The evidence of the karpardaz of Mohammad Sharif and Gulab Chand, who had originally tendered for the said contract. He says that, after the obstacles which had been put in the way of Mohammad Sharif and Gulab Chand, and at the time when it appeared fairly obvious that the delay which they were subjected to was deliberate, Narbada Prasad one day told him on the road that :

"he wanted to take this theka in the name of Jagannath. How have you butted in? You give up this or I will cause trouble and you will lose."

(h) The formal evidence as to the proof of the documents of the District Board.

(i) Police and search witnesses.

(j) And, lastly, the very important documentary evidence which was discovered in the search of the houses of Narbada Prasad and Jagannath. These documents consisted of muster rolls, in which names of the labourers on the contract appear with the amounts which were paid to them, a cash book consisting of entries from 18th February 1927 down to 17th July 1927, setting out the payments made by Narbada Prasad for the purposes of the contract, and also debiting to the account in favour of Narbada Prasad a sum of Rs. 1,800, to which we will allude later. This cash book is of most vital importance and, in our view, it is impossible for any one having this evidence before him to come to any other conclusion but that Narbada Prasad was interested in the contract within the meaning of S. 34, District Boards Act. There was also a ledger account, which extracted from the cash book all the payments made by Narbada Prasad from February to July, amounting in all to Rs. 2,960-12-6, on account of this contract. (The contract price to be paid to Jagannath was Rs. 4,995). The cash book, ledger and muster roll were discovered at Jagannath's house. Jagannath admits that the writings in Muris and the cash book and ledger are his. At the house of Narbada Prasad was discovered a diary in the handwriting of Narbada Prasad himself, in which there were entries which showed conclusively that Mahadeo Pandit and Sain who were employed on the contract, were his servants and that he was in the habit of paying small amounts to Jagannath himself. It was admitted that Mahadeo and Sain were the servants of Narbada Prasad, and it was proved that Mahadeo wrote a large part of the accounts. A receipt for the sum of Rs. 100, which was the deposit made on Jagannath Prasad's tender for this contract, was discovered in the pocket of Narbada Prasad.

With regard to the proceedings of the District Board previous to the giving of the contract in question to Jagannath in May 1928, it is unnecessary for us to set the evidence out in detail, as this is all given in the record; but there can be no doubt that every difficulty was put in the way of Mohammad Sharif and Gulab Chand, whose tender in January was lower than that of Jagannath. Orders were given to them by the Engineer to start work in expectation of the sanction of the Board in that month. An agreement for the contract was executed by these contractors in which they agreed to finish the road by the end of March 1927. They could not, however, get definite orders from the Board sanctioning the contract. Application after application was made by them to the Board for clear orders: see letter from Wazir Beg, dated 14th April 1927; but no definite reply could be obtained by them. Eventually, through disgust, and because the date by which they had agreed to finish the road had long since expired, these contractors wrote to the Board giving up the contract. With regard to this, an important letter was written by their agent Shahid Husain on 27th June 1927, one year before this prosecution was commenced to the Engineer of the District Board, in which he sets out their complaint and made the definite allegation that:

"Pandit Narbada Prasad, Chairman, Sub-Committee, Mau having taken the contract in the name of his man, took possession of the entire material belonging to us."

The Engineer sent on this letter to the Chairman of the District Board with a note which dealt only with the amount of kankar in Mohammad Sharif's and Gulab Chand's bill and made no observation upon the very important allegation against Narbada Prasad and Jagannath. It is further to be noted that, although this letter was placed before the Chairman of the Board, no reply was received by these contractors, and no denial was made of the serious allegations contained in the letter. It appears to us that the only explanation of this can be that both the District Engineer and the Chairman knew the position very well and did not trouble to make a reply. On 10th May, Mohammad Sharif retired from the contract, and it is not unimportant to note that, although from January to May the sanction of the Board could not be obtained for Mohammad Sharif and Gulab Chand, in 24 hours the contract for Jagannath was sanctioned. It is also to be noted that, although security for completion of the contract had been taken from Mohammad Sharif, none was taken from Jagannath. We are satisfied that influences behind the scene were being used to prevent Mohammad Sharif and Gulab Chand doing the work, and to obtain the contract for Jagannath.

As to the evidence of the labourers on the road, their evidence was clear and was not shaken in cross-examination. It is to be noted that in one of two cases, where these witnesses gave particularly strong evidence the Magistrate put a note at the bottom of the evidence of "unsatisfactory demeanour." The only suggestion in cross examination against these witnesses was that they were either the tenants of Thakur Jaswant Singh, or of Sheo Kunwar, against whom it was alleged by the defence that the prosecution was entirely due to their enmity. It is important to note as regards this allegation that Thakur Jaswant Singh and Sheo Kunwar are the big zamindars in the neighbourhood and it would be only natural that the majority of the labourers employed should be their tenants. The Magistrate dismisses this class of evidence on the ground that "they are men of absolutely no status," a wholly unsatisfactory and unjudicial reason.

As regards the cartmen, their evidence too was unshaken. The learned Magistrate dismisses this evidence on the ground that on the muster roll found in the house of Jagannath their names do not appear, and that they were "evidently tutored witnesses." As the muster roll apparently deals solely with the labourers engaged in the contract, one would hardly expect that independent carters would appear on this roll.

There is no reason to disbelieve the evidence of the boatmen.

As regards the evidence of Ram Kumar, the learned Magistrate rejects it on the ground that in some case, in which this man had given evidence, the Magistrate who heard the case, and whose judgment is exhibited in the record, commented adversely upon him as a man:

"who haunts the Court of the Special Magistrate (Thakur Jaswant Singh) and lives by either standing security to or by giving evidence for the parties in that Court."

It is to be noted that the Magistrate who made this comment does not give any clue in his judgment to the evidence on which he so found. Mr. Bobb dismissed this witness with the remark:

"He is evidently another hanger on in the Court of the Special Magistrate (Thakur Jaswant Singh)."

We will deal with the allegations against Thakur Jaswant Singh hereafter.

The evidence of Munni Lal appears to us to be important and reliable, and yet his evidence is discarded on the ground that "he is Thakur Jaswant Singh's man."

We are satisfied that the oral evidence alone is sufficient to bring home the charge to the accused.

With regard to the documentary evidence a preliminary objection has been taken by Dr. Katju that the account books Exs. G-18 and G-20 are not admissible in evidence for want of formal proof. It cannot be questioned that the Crown is entitled to rely upon any material evidence of an incriminatory character found in the house of an accused person as the result of house search. If Exs. G-18 and G-20 directly or indirectly connect Jagannath Prasad with the offence charged, the fact that those documents were found in the house of Jagannath is itself a circumstance which, if unexplained, may seriously tell against Jagannath Prasad. It has not been suggested in the case that any entries in these documents have been interpolated or fabricated.

Section 43, Act 2 of 1855, provided that:

"Books proved to have been regularly kept in the course of business shall be admissible as corroborative but not as independent proof of the facts stated therein."

Act. 2 of 1855 was repealed and was replaced by the Evidence Act (Act. 1 of 1872). S. 34 of this Act runs as follows:

"Entries in books of account, regularly kept in the course of business, are relevant whenever they refer to a matter into which the Court has to enquire, but such statements shall not alone be sufficient to charge any person with liability."

From a comparison of the two sections referred to above, it is manifest that there is a material difference between the two and the change of expression in the later Act, is not a mere variant but amounts to a substantial alteration in the law. Under the former Act, books to be admissible had to be "proved to have been regularly kept in the course of business." In the later Act, the words "proved to have been" have dropped out. The legislature dispensed with the necessity of any formal proof that the books were kept up in the regular course of business. It was a matter of intrinsic evidence as to whether the books in question were books of account and regularly kept in the course of business. It was held by West, J., In re, Munchershe Begonji v. New Dhurmsey Spinning & Weaving Co. (1), that only such books as are entered up as transactions take place that can be considered as books regularly kept in the course of business within the meaning of S. 34, Evidence Act. Their Lordships of the Privy Council did not approve of this ruling and held that it gave a much too limited meaning to the section: Deputy Commissioner of Bara Banki v. Ram Prasad (2).

"The only limitation imposed by the statute is that the statement contained in the account books "shall not alone be sufficient to charge any one with liability." If the entries stood by alone, without any independent evidence such as has been produced in this case, the entries could not be treated as sufficient evidence to convict either Jagannath Prasad or Narbada Prasad.

Whether or not the books have been regularly kept in the course of business is a question of fact and this question may be solved by a reference to the entries in the books. We have examined these books of accounts. There are two columns on each page relating to the debits and credits. The entries are duly dated. The cash book begins on each date with the closing balance of the previous date. The entries on each side are totalled at the close of the day and the debits and the credits tally. There is a reference in the cash book to the corresponding entry in the ledger. The entries in the ledger on the debit and credit side agree with the entries in the cash book.

It is clear therefore that these documents are account books regularly kept in the course of business.

The value of the entries is corroborative and cannot be used as independent evidence to charge any person with liability. It was so held in Dwarka Das v. Sant Bakhsh (3).

An account book is not a document which is required by law to be attested and S. 68, Evidence Act, has no application. The prosecution do not allege that the documents have been wholly written or have been written in part by any particular person except as to the entry which has been marked as Ex. G. The prosecution have established that the said entry is in the handwriting of Nar-bada Prasad. As to the rest of the entries in the account books, S. 67, Evidence Act, does not apply.

We hold that the documents in question are admissible in evidence against Jagannath Prasad and Narbada Prasad without any formal proof.

It is to be noted that the documentary evidence completely upsets the evidence that the interest of Narbada Prasad in the contract was merely that of a financier in that he had merely lent money to Jagannath and had no interest in the contract itself. Mr. Bobb says that in this matter Narbada Prasad acted as a banker. No one looking at these accounts could honestly come to this conclusion. The cash book shows that not only did Narbada Prasad pay substantial amounts to Jagannath himself for payment of bills, but that he paid small amounts from one rupee upwards to various individuals on account of this contract, and, when he made these small payments, they were credited to him in the cash book. This cannot possibly be taken to be the action of a man who is simply lending money to the real contractor. It is important to note that Narbada Prasad does not produce any promissory note or other document which he would in all probability have if the transaction was one of an ordinary loan. It is alleged that the loans were merely oral, and that no document was required. This might be so if the sums advanced were one or two sums of, say, Rs. 1,000 or Rs. 2,000. It is an impossible suggestion where money was advanced daily in sums of one rupee upwards. Narbada Prasad must at least have kept some account himself to record the amount if he was only lending the money, and the account found was Jagannath's only. Narbada produces no such record. These accounts corroborate the statement of the workers that they were paid by Narbada Prasad. There is one other curious item in the cash book. On 30th July 1927, the District Council passed a resolution agreeing to pay Rs. 1,800 to Jagannath on account of the contract. This appears, according to the record, to have been paid by cheque on 1st August. There is an exact similarity between the amount paid by the District Board and the amount appearing in the cash book on 17th July. It has been contended by the prosecution, and denied by the defence, that this sum of Rs. 1,800 is the amount which was paid by the Board. It certainly was brought into the contract account, and although the dates, as we have set out above, do not coincide, it is probable, in view of the way in which the District Board carried on business, that this amount was indeed the sum received from the District Board. It may be that this amount was paid earlier than the documents show, and that subsequently the matter was put right. It is curious, as regards this sum, that it appears in two amounts Rs. 1,788 debited to Narbada Prasad as against the amounts that he had paid, and Rs. 12, which appears under the heading "Jagannath went to Banda for bringing money." If this really was merely a repayment to Narbada Prasad of a sum lent by him (he having no other connexion with the contract), it is a peculiar thing that a sum of Rs. 12 should be deducted by Jagannath for his expenses in getting the money.

(2) [1900] 27 Cal. 118=26 I. A. 254=7 Sar. 586 (P.C.).

(3) [1896] 18 All. 92=(1896) A. W. N. 283.

As regards the ledger account, it was contended by Dr. Katju on behalf of Narbada Prasad that as a large proportion of the amount was paid or expended by Narbada Prasad from February to May, and that Jagannath did not obtain the contract until 13th May, therefore, the payments previous to May could not possibly have been on account of Jagannath's contract. It is to be noted that Jagannath had previously held one or two contracts from the Board. There are two observations which we have to make upon this contention of Dr. Katju. Firstly, that if, as we think, appears to be clear from the account, the payments from February to May were made on behalf of this contract, it conclusively proves that Narbada Prasad knew months before Jagannath obtained the contract that he was going to get it. Alternatively, if the earlier payments were not made on behalf of this contract, they were made on behalf of other contracts which Jagannath had from the Board, and therefore would show that Jagannath's previous contracts were also really the contracts of Narbada Prasad. There must have been later accounts kept by Jagannath relating to this contract showing how the final payments by the Board were dealt with. Such accounts would have been of great assistance to the defence if there was only a loan by Narbada. No later accounts were produced. The inference is obvious.

The receipt for the deposit on the tender of Jagannath was, as already stated, found upon Narbada Prasad, and it is important to note that when Jagannath made his statement before the Magistrate on 15th September 1928, he was asked this question:

"Had you deposited Rs. 100, the earnest money, along with tender, Ex. A-5?"

The reply was:

"As regards this, at this time I do not want to say anything."

Narbada Prasad admitted, in answer to a question before the Magistrate, that this receipt was found on his person; and, when asked if he wanted to state anything more, said, "No. I shall file a written statement." The answer of Jagannath to this question makes us think that he did not, in fact, pay the money and that it was paid by Narbada Prasad and that, therefore, he kept the receipt himself. We have no confidence in the defence evidence as regards this receipt. As regards the financial position of Jagannath, we are satisfied that he was not a man who could undertake a contract of this character. He himself, in a letter to the District Board, calls himself a poor man. There is the evidence of Muni Lal which describes his financial position and to which there was no cross-examination. Neither was Jagannath's brother-in-law called by the defence to deny Muni Lal's statement as to the pay given by him to Jagannath. There is not only the evidence of Narbada's diary of very small payments of one rupee and two rupees being made to Jagannath, but also that of a defence witness who says that he lent Jagannath money in small amounts.

The defence in this case consisted of the evidence of several servants of the District Board and one or two others, the gist of which was that, as far as they knew, there was no connexion between Narbada Prasad and Jagannath in the matter of this contract. It is clear that negative evidence of this sort cannot displace the positive evidence of the mass of witnesses who gave affirmative evidence conclusively proving the connexion between the two accused with regard to this contract.

Singh, a Special and Honorary Magistrate in Banda and a large zamindar, the ground of enmity being that some 13 years ago Narbada Prasad joined in a memorial to the Local Government praying that Thakur Jaswant Singh should not be appointed an Honorary Magistrate. As to this, we have the evidence of a defence witness, Mr. Pearey Lal, in which he says that shortly before the contract in this case Thakur Jaswant Singh told him that Narbada Prasad was a "good man." There is no evidence that Thakur Jaswant Singh took the slightest notice of this memorial, so long ago, to the Local Government, or had the slightest enmity against Narbada. The reason of the memorial is clear from the evidence of another defence witness, who says that Thakur Jaswant Singh was a strict Magistrate. In a district like Banda, which produced such a District Board, it is not to be wondered that a Magistrate who did his duty would be unpopular with certain persons. It is admitted by Dr. Katju on behalf of Narbada Prasad that there is no evidence on the record of enmity or conspiracy on the part of Thakur Jaswant Singh on which he can rely. We agree entirely with Dr. Katju.

The other branch of the defence was that Thakur Jaswant Singh, together with one Sheo Kunwar, conspired to bring the charge in this case out of enmity. The reason of the enmity as regards Sheo Kunwar was alleged to be that Narbada Prasad was the reversioner of Sheo Kunwar, that Sheo Kunwar adopted the son of one Sheo Balak in order to defeat the claim of Narbada Prasad, and that from that date these conspirators were determined to do something to put Narbada Prasad out of the way. That this is an unfounded accusation is clear from the record itself. The defence evidence shows clearly that the adoption took place in June or July 1928, and that the investigation by Thakur Jaswant Singh ended in March 1928, and the Government sanctioned the prosecution of Narbada Prasad in July 1928. It is clear that the prosecution of Narbada Prasad was well on the way before the alleged cause of enmity ever arose. Further the reason of enmity alleged might cause Narbada to dislike Sheo Kunwar, but could hardly cause Sheo Kunwar to have enmity against Narbada.

It is clear from the above that the evidence for the prosecution in this case was overwhelming and that there was really no defence to the charge.

We have already made some comments upon the judgment of the learned Magistrate, but in addition he accepted as proved the enmity of Thakur Jaswant Singh and the conspiracy of Thakur Jaswant Singh with Sheo Kunwar on no real evidence. He, therefore, held that no evidence by any tenant of these two persons could be taken into consideration, although he omits to note that at least five of the prosecution witnesses were not tenants of either of them. He says that Munni Lal and Ram Kumar, ferry contractor, were hangers on in the Court of Thakur Jaswant Singh and therefore could not be believed, and further that the evidence of the mass of the prosecution witnesses was that of men of "absolutely no status". He mentions the evidence of Shahid Husain who gave evidence that Narbada told him that he wanted to take the theka in the name of Jagannath etc. This important evidence (which is not alleged to be tainted with enmity) is dismissed with the observation that Shahid did not mention this to any one. The Magistrate omits to mention the important letter of 27th June 1927, when the allegation that Narbada Prasad was the real contractor was made by this witness to the Engineer and forwarded by him to the Chairman himself long before this case was even contemplated.

On the other hand, the defence evidence, negative as it is, he takes to prove absolutely that there was no connexion between Narbada Prasad and Jagannath in respect of this contract. He hardly mentions the very important accounts exhibited in this case. He certainly never deals with the obvious inference to be drawn from them. He comes to the conclusion that the account found in Jagannath's house show:

"that Jagannath was really the thekadar and Narbada Prasad was only helping him with money."

a perverse finding. He further says:

"This fact (that Narbada Prasad was lending money) evidently gave rise to the rumours that he was the thekadar and gave a chance to his enemies to trump up a case against him."

From what we have said, and from the record, it is obvious that there was no evidence to establish the defence of enmity or conspiracy, and therefore the whole basis of the Magistrate's judgment is swept away. The Magistrate says that there was no reason why the sanction of the Commissioner could not have been obtained if Narbada wanted the contract. We feel sure the Board knew well there was no likelihood that the Commissioner at that time would sanction the grant of a contract to a member of this Board. The Magistrate further says that Narbada knowing the law would never tell any one he was interested in the contract. He certainly did so, however, and the reason may well be that both he and others in Banda did not consider the breaking of this law as a serious matter. In some circles a man in the position of Narbada is considered foolish if he does not take advantage of his opportunities. We hope the result of this case will show that such conduct involves serious risk.

We find it impossible to believe that any Judge dealing honestly with the evidence before him, and being uninfluenced by considerations other than the evidence, could have come to the conclusion at which Mr. Robb arrived. We consider that this aspect of the case is extremely serious, and we consider it to be our duty in the interest of the purity of the judicial service to direct that a copy of this judgment be sent to the District Magistrate of Allahabad for enquiry into the conduct of the Magistrate.

We allow the appeal of the Local Government, set aside the order of acquittal of the learned Magistrate, direct that Narbada Prasad and Jagannath Prasad be arrested and that, as regards Narbada Prasad, he serve three months' simple imprisonment and further pay a fine of Rs. 1,000. As regards Jagannath, we consider that he was merely a servant of Narbada Prasad in this matter and under his influence. We, therefore, sentence him to one month's simple imprisonment. With regard to the sentence on Narbada Prasad, we have given him a longer sentence and a larger fine than otherwise we would have done, had it not been for the nature of the defence. False allegations against innocent and respectable persons of criminal conspiracy to bring false charges, when used as a defence, aggravate greatly the original offence. This type of defence is much too common in India and it ought to be recognized that where a defence of this character is obviously false, that fact ought to be taken into consideration in awarding punishment.

YOUNG AND SEN, JJ.

Mt. Bakhtawari—Applicant.

v.

Emperor—Opposite Party.

Criminal Appeal No. 577 of 1929, Decided on 9th September 1929, from order of Sess. Judge, Meerut, D/- 23rd May 1929.

(a) Penal Code S. 302—Mere pressing of mouth of deceased does not amount to murder when death is due to blows dealt beforehand by another person.

P attacked H with a lathi and hit him on his head. P then asked B to press H's mouth with a cloth. B did as she was asked. In the post mortem H's skull was found to be shattered into 14 pieces.

Upon medical examination it was found that death was due to injuries on the head caused by P. The blows were not struck in furtherance of common intention on the part of P and B. There was no evidence that death had been caused by strangulation.

Held: that B was not guilty of murder.

(b) Penal Code, S. 201—Accused must cause evidence to disappear in order to screen offender.

The essence of S. 201 is that the accused caused the evidence of the commission of the offence to disappear with the intention of screening the offender from legal punishment.

P murdered H and ordered B to help him carrying the corpse to a ditch and burying the wearing appeared.

Held: that the offence under S. 201 was not proved against B. B in helping to carry the corpse to the ditch was acting under orders of P and she appeared to have been bullied into doing the act. B's acts were not voluntary nor done with the intention of screening the offence from punishment.

(c) Criminal Trial—Evidence—Appreciation of—Cases ought to be decided on tangible evidence whether positive or circumstantial.

Cases ought to be decided upon tangible evidence, be it positive or be it circumstantial. The Court is not justified in convicting an accused upon facts which are not borne out by the record, which militate against the medical evidence and which are the result of nothing but speculation.

M. Waliullah—for the Crown.

Judgment. — Mt. Bakhtawari was committed to the Court of Sessions at Meerut to take her trial under Ss. 302 and 201 I. P. C.

The charge was that on 27th November 1928, she murdered one Harbans, chaukidar by throttling him; and that having reason to believe that Harbans had been murdered, she caused the evidence of the crime to disappear by burying the corpse of Harbans and his clothes etc. in a field adjoining the Guldhar railway station.

The accused pleaded not guilty to both the charges.

The case was tried by Mr. Raghunath Prasad who held Mt. Bakhtawari guilty of both the charges and sentenced her to transportation for life under S. 302, I. P. C., and to one year's rigorous imprisonment under S. 201, I. P. C.

The central figure in the case is one Phool Singh, an Indian Christian, who with his wife Mt. Bhagwati and two children, one of whom is named Bendick alias Balwant lived in a house in mouza Dohai within the police circle of Ghaziabad. Bendick alias Balwant was his son by a deceased wife. Phool Singh was an abandoned profligate. He was indifferent to his wife and used to beat her. About six months before the occurrence, he brought Mt. Bakhtawari to his house. Mt. Bakhtawari is a chamar woman. Her husband is a resident of mouza Dhandhar and appears to have forsaken Mt. Bakhtawari. The latter was proceeding to her father's house in mouza Nandpur when she met Phool Singh at the canal distributary of Asalatpur. Phool Singh saw her, conceived a guilty passion for her and asked her to accompany him. She refused, but Phool Singh forcibly took her to his house and kept her there as his mistress. Upon her arrival, the wife, Petro Nila Bhagwati asked her how and why she came and she said that she had been forcibly brought by her husband. Phool Singh did not allow this woman to go away. The husband, who had never cared for his wife, became more indifferent to her after the arrival of the accused. The wife naturally did not like the continuance of Mt. Bakhtawari in the house. It is not difficult to visualise the bickerings and quarrels, which this unfortunate incident gave rise to.

The matter appears to have forced itself to the notice of the village people and became a subject of village gossip. One Sukhdeo informed Ganga Sahai, the village Mukhia that a "stolen woman" had come to the house of Phool Singh. The Mukhia asked Harbans chaukidar to take Phool Singh to the thana at Ghaziabad. Upon the chaukidar's enquiring, Phool Singh said that the accused was his sali. The chaukidar said that they must go to the thana. They started for the thana. The chaukidar had his uniform on. They proceeded on foot along the railway line and the cartage consisted of the chaukidar, Phool Singh, his wife Mt. Bhagwati, her two children, Balwant and the accused. When they had passed the Guldhar railway station, the chaukidar was asked by a man to release them as he had got no warrant. The chaukidar did not agree. A few paces ahead, they met the station master who had two men with him. The station master intervened and asked the chaukidar to release them but the latter was obdurate. Ralla Ram station master admits having met these people along the railway line towards the Ghaziabad side, two posts beyond the outer single. He says that the Isa asked him to get him released from the chaukidar, who was forcibly taking him off, but he refused to interfere. He is contradicted in this respect by Petro Nila Bhagwati. We prefer to accept her statement.

That the chaukidar under the direction of the Mukhia arrested Phool Singh and Mt. Bhagwati with his family proceeded towards the thana is a matter which is proved without any reasonable doubt and is admitted by the accused. All the witnesses for the prosecution namely Sunda, brother of Harbans, Bhagwati, Bendick alias Balwant and Bhagwan Sahai who is a thoroughly independent witness are agreed on this point.

By the time that the party had crossed the wirefencing, Phool Singh appears to have warmed himself up into a rage. The time and place were opportune. It was a lonely spot. The night had set in. Not a single man was visible in the field. Phool Singh started a quarrel with the chaukidar and said that night had come and he was not going any further. Phool Singh struck danda on the temple of chaukidar. The chaukidar fell down. Phool Singh gave him two or three more blows. Mt. Bhagwati states that Phool Singh sent for the accused and both he and the accused dragged the chaukidar three or four fields away into another field. There he called his wife and asked her to make a ditch in which the chaukidar was to be buried. Mt. Bhagwati refused and said that he must do that work for himself. Phool Singh and Balwant made a ditch. After the hole had been dug he asked Mt. Bhagwati and the accused to help him "in lifting the body of the chaukidar in such a manner so as not to leave any mark as would be otherwise caused if the body were to be dragged.

Mt. Bhagwati said that the chaukidar was still living and that he should not be buried alive. Phool Singh sat over the chest of the chaukidar and asked the accused to press his mouth which the latter did with a banian. Phool Singh, Mt. Bakhtawari and Balwant carried the corpse to the hole, stripped the chaukidar of his uniform and buried him in the hole. The clothes of the chaukidar were buried at different places. His chapras was buried in a field. Phool Singh took his dhoti and shoes and gave the shoes to Mt. Bakhtawari to wear. Mt. Bhagwati continues :

"During the time the accused was pressing the mouth of the chaukidar, my husband and my elder son had gone and further dug the place, which had been previously dug."

It is clear, therefore, that no witness other than Mt. Bhagwati was present at the time when the mouth of the deceased was pressed by the accused. Mt. Bhagwati moreover does not say that the accused tried to throttle Harbans by pressing his neck, nor does she describe how and in what way Mt. Bakhtawari pressed the mouth of the chaukidar.

Balwant substantially supports Mt. Bhagwati. He says that after the blows had been given, the chaukidar began to breathe hard. Phool Singh asked Bakhtawari to drag him into a field. This was done accordingly. This statement does not agree with the version given by Mt. Bhagwati. The witness adds :

"At that place, my father got the accused to press the mouth of the chaukidar, while my father sat upon his chest. At the same time, my father pressed down the neck of the chaukidar. While the throat was being pressed, the woman was pressing the mouth of the chaukidar. The chaukidar then died My father, myself and the accused took over the chaukidar and buried him in that hole.

The corpse of the chaukidar was discovered on 27th November 1928. Information was given to his brother Sunda who identified the corpse from certain peculiarity in the foot. The corpse had one leg and trunk. Two hands and one leg were missing. The corpse was found between the railway lines at a distance of one telegraph post from the railway guard-post, known as Sahani post, in the direction of Gharziabad. The usual post-mortem was held. The body had reached an advance stage of decomposition. The skull was found shattered into fourteen pieces and blood clots were found on a piece of the occipital bone at the base of the skull and on a piece of the right frontal bone and parietal bone. Brain and membranes were missing. There was a fracture of the breast bone at the junction of upper and middle third with fracture of the ribs."

The ribs second to sixth on the right side were fractured; the ribs second to the fifth on the left side were decomposed. The left collar bone was also fractured. The liver was decomposed. A portion of the liver and the whole of the right kidney were missing and were probably eaten by animals. According to the Civil Surgeon, death was due to shock and haemorrhage and apparently to the injury to the skull.

The post-mortem was held by Col. O'niel, Civil Surgeon of Meerut. He gave his statement before the trying Magistrate.

Mt. Bakhtawari made a statement under S. 164, Criminal P. C., on 3rd December 1928. Her story appears to be consistent with the statements of the principal witnesses for the prosecution. She makes no attempt to minimise her share in the transaction. Three persons are said to have intervened and to have asked the chaukidar to leave Phool Singh but the chaukidar refused. After this Phool Singh offered the chaukidar a bribe of Rs. 10. The latter did not agree and used abusive language :

"Then Phool Singh hit the chaukidar with a lathi. The chaukidar uttered only one cry saying 'O Balwant Singh' and then he fell down and became unconscious. He hit the lathi blow on the chaukidar's temple. He hit two or three more lathi blows after his falling down and then the chaukidar died. Phool Singh and his wife and I dragged him to a distance of over two or three fields. Phool Singh sat on him there and told both of us to dig a place for burying him. We said that we would not be able to do so. Thereupon, he, after making us sit there, went to dig the earth and told us to keep the chaukidar's mouth pressed. Thereupon the Munshia (Mt. Bhagwati) and I both pressed the chaukidar's mouth. When he came after digging the earth, Munshia, Phool Singh and I carried the chaukidar and threw him into the pit. Then Phool Singh removed the clothes of the chaukidar and all three of us buried them in the sand."

Upon the aforesaid evidence, it is not possible to uphold the conviction of Mt. Bakhtawari under S. 302, I. P. C. Th murder was committed by Phool Singh, who smashed the skull to pieces by his lathi blows. The assault was made with a design and executed with fury and tremendous violence. The blows were not struck in furtherance of a common intention on the part of Phool Singh and Mt. Bakhtawari. Judging from the medical evidence and considering the nature of the injuries on the mutilated corpse of Harbans, it is clear that death was the result of the blow upon the skull which smashed the skull to fourteen pieces. There is no evidence that the death was caused by throttling or strangulation. There is no evidence that Mt. Bakhtawari pressed the throat of Harbans chaukidar. She admits that she pressed the mouth of the chaukidar and Mt. Bhagwati says that she pressed his mouth with a banian. Phool Singh is proved in this case to be a thoroughbred ruffian. He had a hasty and violent temper. In the presence of Mt. Bakhtawari and of his wife, he had just committed a most brutal and violent murder. Mt. Bakhtawari must have been considerably afraid of him. He asked her to drag the corpse. She had no interest in doing so. It is Phool Singh who dug the trench and not Mt. Bakhtawari. It was Phool Singh, who buried the dead body and not Mt. Bakhtawari. When Phool Singh asked her to press the mouth she evidently acted under the influence of fear and compulsion and may well have made a pretence of pressing the mouth, without exerting such force as may cause suffocation. There is no evidence that the banian was inserted into the mouth of Harbans deceased.

The learned Sessions Judge appears to have realized that the evidence on the record was not sufficient to justify the conviction of Mt. Bakhtawari on a charge of murder. He examined Dr. A. N. Mukerji, Assistant Surgeon attached to the Meerut Hospital, who deposed that if the mouth and the nostrils of an injured person were effectually closed, it would take about ten minutes to bring about his death. And if the said person was gasping at the time and if somebody sat over his chest and another person closed his mouth, the death of that person would certainly be hastened. From this evidence the learned Judge concluded that the accused by closing the mouth of the deceased accelerated his death.

Cases ought to be decided upon tangible evidence, be it positive or be it circumstantial. But there was no warrant for the learned Sessions Judge in convicting the appellant of murder upon facts which are not borne out by the record, which militate against the medical evidence and which are the result of speculation and nothing but speculation on the part of the learned Sessions Judge. The conviction of Mt. Bakhtawari under S. 302, I. P. C., was therefore improper and unjust and must be set aside.

The essence of S. 201, I. P. C., is that the accused caused the evidence of the commission of the offence to disappear with the intention of screening the offender from legal punishment. Mt. Bakhtawari in helping to carry the corpse to the ditch or in burying the wearing apparel of the chaukidar was acting under the orders of Phool Singh. She appears to have been bullied into doing the act. Her acts were not voluntary nor done with the intention of screening the offender from punishment. The murder was committed by Phool Singh. He was interested in wiping off all evidence against himself. He was taking steps to prevent his wife and mistress from coming forward as witnesses against himself. With this object in view, he appears to have asked Mt. Bakhtawari and Mt. Bhagwati in lending a helping hand in either carrying or dragging the corpse and in burying the clothes. With the object of tightening the fetters, he appears to have given the shoes of the deceased to Mt. Bakhtawari to wear. He was anxious to secure a complete severance of connexion between himself and Mt. Bakhtawari and actually sold Mt. Bakhtawari to Bhagwana sweeper for thirty rupees and a coat. But this was not all. He stripped his wife Mt. Bhagwati of all her clothes, made her put on a light sheet and threw her into a canal to be drowned. Fortunately, the woman was not drowned; she was rescued.

The offence under S. 201, I. P. C., is not proved against the accused.

We allow the appeal, set aside the convictions and sentence under Ss. 302 and 201, I. P. C., and direct that Mt. Bakhtawari be released at once.

PERCIVAL, J. C., AND ASTON, A. J. C.
Cowasji & Sons—Appellants.

Aloo Jootha—Respondent.

Misc. Appeal No. 59 of 1928, Decided on 19th September 1929, against order of Commissioner under Workmen's Compensation Act, 1923.

(a) Workmen's Compensation Act, S. 12—Tindal supervising coolies working for Dubashes—Death of workman from injuries received while employed—Tindal is not contractor.

A tindal was receiving Rs. 10 a month from the Dubashes and also received pay at the rate of Rs. 2-8-0 per day, when he was employed in supervising the coolies working for the Dubashes; that is to say, he kept Rs. 2 for himself out of Rs. 25 paid to him daily for the payment of his gang, one of whom was the deceased workman. The workman received injuries during the course of, and arising out of the employment which resulted in his death:

Held: that the tindal was not a contractor.

(b) Workmen's Compensation Act, S. 5, Explanation—Suit against firm for compensation—Allegation of casual employment—Onus lies on firm to show that there was no break exceeding 14 days.

An applicant, a relative of the deceased workman, in a suit for compensation against a Dubashe firm, contended that there was no continuous service of the deceased workman. He alleged in the plaint that the deceased was a casual labourer employed by the Dubashes' firm for the purposes of their trade. But the firm asserted that the case fell under S. 5 (a) instead of meeting the allegations:

Held: that it was for the firm to show that the service was continuous and that there was no break therein of more than 14 days, so as to bring the case under S. 5 (a): Jones v. Ocean Coal Co., (1899) 2 Q. B. 124 and Gardener v. Vickers Ltd., (1928) 44 T. L. R. 568, Dist.

[P 67 C 1]

(c) Workmen's Compensation Act S. 30—Finding that workman worked for certain days is not question of law.

There is no question of law in the finding by the Commissioner that the deceased workman worked for a certain number of days only.

[P 67 C 2]

T. G. Elphinston—for Appellants.

Balkishendas H. Lulla—for Respondent.

Percival, J. C.—This is a miscellaneous appeal against the order of the Commissioner under Workmen's Compensation Act 1923, by which he directed that the opponents should pay the applicant, Aloo Jootha, Rs. 1387-8-0 and costs.

The applicant was the dependent of one Jessasingh Jootha, a workman, who was employed in unloading coal brought by S. S. "Umlazi." The evidence shows that he received injuries during the course of, and arising out of, this employment, which resulted in his death on 11th February 1928.

There is no contention in this appeal that Jessasingh did not die of injuries arising out of his employment, or that the applicant is not the person entitled to compensation.

The only points which have been argued in this appeal are questions connected with the amount of compensation which has been awarded by the Commissioner. The learned Commissioner was of opinion that the case fell under S. 5 (b), Workmen's Compensation Act, and he held that the deceased was in receipt of Rs. 1-8-0 a day during his last continuous period of service, and that he was entitled to monthly wages at 30 times this sum; and that, according to the method of calculation laid down by the Act, he was entitled in all to Rs. 1,387-8-0.

The first point raised by the learned counsel for the opponents who are Dubashes under whom the deceased worked, was that the case fell under S. 12 of the Act on the ground that the tindal, under whose immediate supervision the deceased was working, is to be regarded as a "contractor."

This point was not referred to by the learned Commissioner in his judgment, but an application was made by the learned counsel for the opponents, after the delivery of the judgment, in which he asked the Court to place on record the fact that the opponents had contended under issue 1 that the deceased was employed by Alla Kerson, the tindal "who was a contractor working for the opponents within the meaning of S. 12 of the Act."

The order of the Court was as follows:

"Mr. Elphinston did touch this point only in his arguments at the end of the case. This point was not referred to in written statements nor was it referred to, at the time of the issue. Mr. Lulla objected to the arguments on this point being advanced by Mr. Elphinston. I, however, did not stop him."

It will be seen from this order that the point was argued; but that as pointed out by the learned Commissioner it was not raised in the written statement nor was it referred to in the issues. Objection is taken by the learned pleader for the applicant against this contention that, if this objection had been raised at the time when evidence was being taken, he would have produced evidence to show that the tindal was in fact not a contractor.

It seems to me that this objection is entitled to weight, and that the opponents, if they wished to show that the tindal was a contractor, should have made a statement to that effect in their written statement, so that the applicant would have been in a position to give evidence on the point if so disposed. Certainly it does not appear to me that prima facie the tindal was a contractor. He was a man who was receiving, according to the evidence, Rs. 10 a month from the Dubashes, and also received pay at the rate of Rs. 2-8-0 per day, when he was employed in supervising the coolies working for the Dubashes. That is to say, he kept Rs. 2 for himself, out of the Rs. 25 paid to him daily for the payment of his gang, one of whom was the applicant. At any rate, if he was to be held to be a contractor, the opponents should have given clear evidence to that effect; and in the absence of such evidence it cannot be held that he was a contractor, and that consequently S. 12 applies.

The second point raised on behalf of the opponents was that S. 5 (a) of the Act, and not S. 5 (b) applied.

This point was dealt with by the learned Commissioner in his judgment, and he has observed as follows :

"It was finally argued by Mr. Elphinstone that it was for the applicant to prove that a case was not covered by S. 5, Cl. (a) but was one that fell within the scope of Cl. (b) of the same section. The applicant has given the best evidence available under the circumstances. If Cl. (a) applied to this case in my view the opponents would be the best persons to place facts contemplated by it. Such facts would be within their knowledge. The opponents have not adduced in this matter a tittle of evidence. Evidence such as has been recorded for the applicant proves beyond doubt that Cl. (a) could not possibly apply."

It may be observed that the only evidence recorded in this case was that of Maisoo Kala, the cousin of the deceased, and of Alla Kerson, the above mentioned tindal, the opponents not having produced any evidence in the case. It is argued, however, that on the evidence produced on behalf of the applicant the case falls under S. 5 (a), on the ground that the deceased during a continuous period of not less than 12 months immediately preceding the accident was in the service of the opponents, who were liable to pay the compensation. The argument advanced is that it is admitted on behalf of the applicant that the deceased worked habitually for the tindal and that the tindal again worked habitually for the opponents; and that, therefore, the deceased was in the continuous service of the opponents.

The evidence, however, is to the effect that, while the deceased worked habitually for this tindal, he did work on occasions for other tindals also. The cousin of the deceased said :

"We go with the same tindal if he wants us or with any other tindal."

Again to the Court he stated :

"Jassasing always worked for opponents if they had work available otherwise he worked for others."

In cross-examination also he said :

"We had been working on coal steamers for three or four years with Tindal Alla Kerson. We worked with Alla Kerson if he had work, otherwise we went with others."

Now it is argued from this evidence and from the evidence given by the Tindal himself that, on the authority of the decision in the case of Jones v. Ocean Coal Co. (1), the present case is one of continuous employment. Another case that has been cited in this connexion was that of Gardener v. Vickers Ltd. (2). Now there is a distinction between the present case and those cases because, as indicated above, in the present case it is not shown that the deceased worked solely for the opponents. The cases cited refer to instances where an employee worked for one particular employer, although the work was for certain days only during the period in question. Therefore, on that ground alone, there is a distinction between this case and those cited. However, apart from this, if we consider those cases, particularly the latter case Gardener v. Vickers Ltd. (2), we find that they do not support the view that this is a case of continuous employment. As observed by Lord Justice Russell in Gardener v. Vickers Ltd. (2):

"He could understand that it might be said that a man's work continued if the contractual obligation continued, or he could understand that there might be continuous employment without a continuous contractual obligation, if there was continuous work. But he was unable to see how there could be continuous employment without either continuous work or continuous contractual obligation."

In the present case there was no continuous contractual obligation; so it is necessary to see whether there was continuous work in this case. Now from the evidence given above it is clear that the work was not continuous, because it only took place only when there were any ships to be unloaded.

There is further point, which is important in this case in connexion with S. 5 of the Act, namely that that section contains an explanation, which runs as follows :

"A period of service shall for the purposes of this section be deemed to be continuous which has not been interrupted by a period of absence from work exceeding 14 days."

Now the applicant in this case contended that there was no continuous service. In his plaint he said that the deceased was a casual labourer employed by the opponent's firm for the purposes of their trade; and in the written statement of the opponents no reply was made on this point. So that it was for the opponents to show that the service was continuous and that there was no break therein of more than 14 days, if they wished to argue that the case fell under S. 5, Cl. (a). However, as indicated above, there is no evidence to this effect on behalf of the opponents; and it appears to me that they have not shown that the work was continuous in the sense that it was not interrupted for a period of absence from work exceeding 14 days. It is in fact highly probable that there were such interruptions of over 15 days in the opponents' employment of the deceased, as the employment depended on the dates on which steamers happened to require to be unloaded.

Having regard to the facts of the case even if we follow the cases that have been cited above, more particularly the latter of the two cases, we find that the present case does not fall under S. 5 (a). I agree, therefore, with the learned Commissioner on this point.

Two other points remain for consideration in regard to the calculation of the amount due to the applicant. It is contended on behalf of the opponents that the wages of the deceased were Rs. 1-4-0 and not Rs. 1-8-0. But the evidence produced is to the effect that the rate of pay was Rs. 1-8-0, and this has been accepted by the learned Commissioner.

The second point is somewhat similar, namely it is contended on behalf of the opponents that the deceased worked for the opponents for only five out of last seven days previous to his death. The learned Commissioner has, however, held that he last worked continuously for four days, including the day of accident, namely from Monday to Thursday. The suggestion that he worked also on the previous Friday is based only on inferences from the evidence; and it appears to me that it is not desirable to interfere with the learned Commissioner in his finding of fact on this point. It is to be noted that it is laid down in S. 30 that no appeal lies against any order unless some substantial question of law is involved in the appeal; and, as I hold that the view of the above mentioned legal questions taken by the learned Commissioner was correct, it cannot be held that there is any question of law in the finding by the Commissioner that Jessasing worked for four days only. It was a matter for him to decide on the evidence whether deceased worked for four days continuously, or whether he worked there for only five days out of seven before his death.

I see no reason, therefore, to interfere with the finding of fact on this point.

For these reasons, I would dismiss this appeal with costs. We fix Rs. 30 in all as pleader's fee for two days; there is no special reason in this case to warrant an increase of pleader's fee.

Aston, A. J. C.—I concur.

I would like to add a few remarks with regard to one point. Under S. 114, Evidence Act :

"the Court may presume the existence of any fact which it thinks likely to have happened, regard being had to the common course of natural events, human conduct, and public and private business, in their relation to the facts of the particular case."

The learned Commissioner in spite of the want of recollection on the part of the tindal and of deceased's cousin, might, in my opinion, have applied S. 114 and might have inferred that the deceased worked on Friday and Saturday also. The evidence showed that the deceased always used to go to work when the opponent had a steamer and that it was his duty to remain at work while the steamer was unloading, that on this particular occasion the steamer began unloading on Friday. Had I been dealing with the case myself as a Court of first instance I would have exercised the discretion conferred by S. 114, Evidence Act, but I do not think, as a Court of appeal, it is desirable to interfere with the finding of the learned Commissioner who on the evidence held that it was proved that the deceased worked from Monday to Thursday inclusive.

v.

Emperor—Opposite Party.

Criminal Revn. No. 187 of 1929. Decided on 20th September 1929, from an order of First Class Magistrate, Tatta.

(a) Criminal P. C., S. 145 (b)—Time at which Magistrate is to determine who was in possession.

A Magistrate cannot take into consideration the effect of an alleged dispossession more than two months prior to the date of his order; he is required to decide which of the parties between whom a dispute exists is in possession of the subject of the dispute at the time when the Magistrate decides the question of possession: 15 Bom. 152, Foll.; 4 Cal. 417, Doubted. [P 69 C 1]

(b) Criminal Trial—Evidence—Procedure—Wrong date of hearing given to party—Party appearing on subsequent date after proceedings ex parte were taken against him—Refusal of Magistrate to allow to cross-examine witness on date of their appearance is indiscretion.

Proceedings were instituted against a person under Criminal P. C., S. 145. A copy of an order containing a wrong date of hearing was delivered to him. He attended on the date mentioned in the copy but the correct date was not even then given to him. When he subsequently appeared, after certain proceedings had taken place ex parte, he was not permitted to cross-examine the complainant and the witnesses examined the same day.

Held: that the trying Magistrate exercised a wrong discretion in not allowing the party to cross-examine the complainant and the witnesses. [P 69 C 1]

Hassaram Jashanmal—for Applicant.

C. M. Lobo—for the Crown.

ceedings against Haji son of Jumo in the Court of the First Class Magistrate, Tatta, under S. 145, Criminal P. C., complaining that Haji was threatening to trespass on some agricultural land in the possession of the complainant and remove the crops then standing by force and praying that he might be ordered not to interfere with the possession of the complainant. Pending the proceedings the Magistrate ordered on 28th September 1928 that as he apprehended breach of the peace no one should touch the crops. On 18th October 1928 the crops were secured through the Mukhtarkar of the Taluka and on 16th April 1929 orders were passed in favour of the complainant ordering Haji not to interfere in any manner with the possession of the complainant. Haji applied for revision to the High Court complaining that the Magistrate had erred in exercising jurisdiction not given by S. 145, Criminal P. C., and that the Magistrate had acted in contravention of provision 1, S. 145, Criminal P. C., and had failed to record the grounds on which he apprehended breach of the peace on 28th September 1928 and had wrongly relied on 4 Cal. 417 the old section having been considerably amended and that he had given a wrong date and examined certain witnesses ex parte whose cross-examination he refused at a subsequent hearing when the applicant Haji and his pleader attended.

Aston, A. J. C.—This is an application for revision of the order of the learned First Class Magistrate, Tatta, who directed that one Nenoomal was in possession of Survey No. 90, that there was a likelihood of a breach of the peace and who directed that Nenoomal should remain in possession.

Mr. Hassaram who has appeared for the applicant complains that a copy of an order containing a wrong date of hearing was delivered to his client, that he attended on 1st October the date mentioned in the copy, that the correct date was not even then given to him and that when he subsequently appeared, after certain proceedings had taken place ex parte, on 8th October, he was not permitted to cross-examine the complainant and the witnesses, who had been examined on that date.

Objection has also been taken by Mr. Hassaram to a ruling in the order of the learned Magistrate applying Mohesh Chandra Khan, In re (1). As was pointed out by the Bombay High Court in Huchappa, In the matter of (2), Mohesh Chandra Khan, In re (1) was a ruling on S. 530, Criminal P. C., 1872. That was modified by S. 145 of the Code of 1882 which is similar to S. 145 of the present code.

It appears that the view taken by the learned Magistrate as to the effect of an alleged dispossession more than two months prior to the date of his order was incorrect. I am also of opinion that notwithstanding the fact, that the correct date was entered in a receipt taken from applicant the learned Magistrate exercised a wrong discretion in not allowing Mr. Hassaram to cross-examine the complainant and the witnesses who were examined in his absence. I would set aside the order passed under S. 145, Cl. 6. As the learned Magistrate has expressed an opinion that a breach of the peace is likely, it is desirable that the enquiry should continue. I would therefore remit the record and proceedings to the learned First Class Magistrate, Tatta, in the light of the remarks made about 4 Cal. 417 with a direction to complete the enquiry allowing the parties to appear in person or by pleader if they so desire.

So far as the witnesses who have been examined and cross-examined are concerned it does not appear necessary that they should be examined afresh, but this is left to the discretion of the Magistrate.

v.

Emperor—Opposite Party.

Criminal Revn. Appln. No. 192 of 1929, Decided on 8th October 1929, from order of City Magistrate, Shikarpur.

Criminal P. C., S. 537—Magistrate following procedure of summons case instead of warrant case—No prejudice to accused—Trial is not vitiated.

Where in a summary trial a Magistrate instead of following the procedure prescribed for a warrant case follows that prescribed for a summons case and there is nothing to show that the procedure adopted by the Magistrate caused the accused any prejudice, the trial is not vitiated: A. I. R. 1927 P.C. 44, Ref. ; 29 Mad. 372, Dist. [P 70 C 1]

B. P. Samtani—for Applicant.

C. M. Lobo—for the Crown.

Judgment.—This is a revision application made by one Maluk, son of Hassan, in which he complains against his conviction by the City Magistrate, Shikarpur, and asks us to interfere in revision on his behalf.

The applicant was tried summarily by the City Magistrate of Shikarpur and the record shows that he was accused of having voluntarily caused hurt without sudden and grave provocation under S. 323, with insult and with criminal intimidation under Ss. 504 and 506. Column 7 of the Register of Summary Trials shows that he pleaded "not guilty" and denied that he had beaten the complainant, abused or threatened him, and said that the case has been got up against him because one Nano wanted to deprive him of a garden. Columns 8 and 9 contain the finding that the applicant had beaten the complainant but that the accused was not guilty of any other offence. The order was that he should pay a fine of Rs. 30.

The applicant then went in revision to the Sessions Judge of Sukkur and the order of that officer is at p. 4 of the paper book. He writes that:

"The only ground on which this application can lie is the assertion that the Magistrate refused to summon defence witnesses."

He found that allegation was not made out and he dismissed the application.

In this Court, the principal point made by Mr. Samtani for the applicant is that the City Magistrate instead of following the procedure prescribed for a warrant case followed that prescribed for a summons case and so caused him serious prejudice. He has also complained that his client was not given an adequate opportunity of calling his witnesses after the charge as he was entitled to do and was prejudiced thereby.

A report was called for from the City Magistrate as to the allegation that he had not followed the proper procedure, and he has replied that he tried the case summarily but that its nature was not lost sight of; but that the procedure of the trial was unfortunately obscured by the form of the register which is the same for both summons and warrant cases.

It seems to me that this being a summary trial, the distinction between a warrant and a summons case may not have been emphasized, for apparently Mr. Samtani is correct in saying that some of the features of summons procedure were followed. It does appear probable that the applicant was asked for his plea at the beginning of the case. But whether that be so or not, it does not appear to me that there was any such illegality as would be incumbent on us to set aside the order of the Magistrate. Mr. Samtani has quoted the case of Emperor v. Chinnapayan (1), as an authority for the view that the use of the procedure of a summons trial instead of that laid down for a warrant case is an illegality. But that case hardly goes so far as he wishes us to understand; for there the accused was convicted on his own admission and sentenced, before any evidence was recorded for the prosecution, though the offence was one which should have been tried as a warrant case; and it is obvious that the irregularity was one which may have prejudiced him. It is not necessary to assume that their Lordships intended to lay down that in every case in which wrong procedure is adopted, there is an illegality. In the recent case of Abdul Rahman v. Emperor (2) their Lordships of the Privy Council have considered S. 537, Criminal P. C., and have made it clear that a mere irregularity in procedure can only vitiate a trial if it has actually caused a failure of justice.

In this case, then, the applicant must fail because there is nothing to show that the procedure adopted by the Magistrate caused him any prejudice. It is not clear how the complainant could have obtained any useful information, as suggested by Mr. Samtani, from his very meagre plea; and there is nothing to show us that he was deprived of the opportunity of calling witnesses. We find in the order of the Magistrate that he offered no defence. The learned Sessions Judge who considered the question has accepted this as correct and the Magistrate in the report made by him in answer to the affidavit filed by the applicant has stated definitely that the applicant had every opportunity of bringing his witnesses if he had wished to do so.

In these circumstances we cannot find that there was any injustice such as would justify us in interfering in revision and we dismiss the application.

Criminal Revn. Appln. No. 223 of 1929, Decided on 9th October 1929, from judgment of Addl. Sess. Judge, Hyderabad.

(a) Criminal P. C., S. 208 — Evidence — Removal from record evidence without objection by accused filed as exhibit is mistake.

It is mistake to remove from record the evidence recorded under S. 208 after it had been filed as an exhibit in the case without objection on behalf of the accused. [P 71 C 2]

* (b) Evidence Act, S. 33—Reservation by Committing Magistrate of cross-examination of witness suo motu—Evidence cannot be admitted in Session Court.

If the cross-examination of a witness is reserved by a Magistrate during committal proceedings of his own accord, that deposition is not complete and should not be admitted if evidence at the trial in the Court of Session.

(c) Evidence Act, S. 114, Illus. (e)—All official acts must be presumed to have been done properly.

Where a Committing Magistrate writes at the foot of the deposition that the cross-examination is being reserved, he does not mean that it is being reserved by him and that the accused has not been given an opportunity for cross-examination. All official acts must be presumed to have been done properly and it is difficult to suppose that Magistrate who must be presumed to have known the law did not give the accused an opportunity of cross-examination to which he was entitled by S. 208, Criminal P. Barlee, A. J. C.—An application has been made by the Public Prosecutor for Sind for the retrial of a case against Mahrab, son of Gulsher, who was tried by the Additional Sessions Judge, Hyderabad on a charge under S. 302, I.P. C., but was convicted of an offence under S. 324, and sentenced to rigorous imprisonment for two years to be served in the Dharwar jail for juveniles.

The main ground on which the application is based is that the learned Additional Sessions Judge wrongly excluded the medical evidence from the record and a subsidiary ground is that he has sentenced the accused to undergo imprisonment in the Dharwar jail without recording a finding as to his age.

The judgment of the Sessions Judge shows that the accused was charged with the murder of one Usman in the following circumstances:

It was alleged that the accused a lad of age 20 became intimate with Usman's wife. Usman chastized his wife and complained of the matter in the village but the accused would not reform. On 15th November Usman went to the village water trough to fill two pitchers with water and he was there met by the accused who was armed with a hatchet. The accused abused him, Usman retorted and the accused struck him with the hatchet. Usman replied with a blow from wooden bar on which he was carrying the water and then the accused struck him another blow with the hatchet. This assault was witnessed by two men Ghazi and Ismail. And after the police inquiry the accused was sent up for trial on the charge of murder as Usman had died.

The learned Additional Sessions Judge after considering all the facts came to the conclusion that it was amply proved that the accused had struck two blows with the hatchet and thereby caused Usman's death. But he sentenced him for causing grievous hurt. His reasons for not sentencing him for murder or culpable homicide are given at the end of his judgment. He writes as follows:

"But as regards the nature of the injuries and whether the same culminated in death, it will be difficult to say in the absence of the medical evidence. Sub-Medical Officer who examined the corpse of the deceased was examined in the City Magistrate's Court but his cross-examination was reserved for Sessions Court. This was surely a mistake on the part of the committing Magistrate. The cross-examination of the Doctor should not have been reserved. Magistrate's attention is invited to S. 509, Criminal P. C. There is not even the usual certificate attached to the deposition as required. It is a pity the S. P. P did not seek to remedy this defect. Evidently he had not read this deposition. Evidence of a witness means his examination in chief, cross-examination and re-examination; where cross-examination is reserved and not declined the evidence is not complete. It is not clear whether the cross-examination was reserved by the Magistrate of his own motion or at the request of the accused. This deposition has, therefore, to be eliminated from consideration, for examination-in-chief of a witness without an opportunity being given to opposite party to cross-examine is not legally acceptable."

We are of opinion that the learned Additional Sessions Judge made a mistake in removing from the record the medical evidence after it had been filed as an exhibit in the case without objection on behalf of the accused. He is no doubt correct when he says that if the cross-examination of a witness is reserved by a Magistrate during committal proceedings of his own accord that deposition is not complete and should not be admitted in evidence at the trial in the Court of Sessions. But we can find no reason for supposing that because the committing Magistrate wrote at the foot of the deposition that the cross-examination was being reserved he meant that it was being reserved by him and that the accused had not been given an opportunity for cross-examination. All official acts must be presumed to have been done properly and we find it difficult to suppose that the Magistrate who must be presumed to have known the law did not give the accused an opportunity of cross-examination to which he was entitled by S. 208, Criminal P. C. Had the Magistrate merely written "cross-examination reserved" it might possibly be supposed that he meant reserved for a later stage of the proceedings before him and that it was subsequently overlooked. But he wrote "reserved for the Sessions Court" and that makes it clear that the accused's pleader did not want to cross-examine in his Court.

We consider then the learned Additional Sessions Judge was not justified in discarding from the record the evidence which had been filed without protest. At the same time we would point out that the endorsement should have been "cross-examination declined" for there was no reservation in the true sense."

The learned Judge's second objection that the certificate of the Magistrate had not been filed has turned out to have been mistaken for it was found afterwards in the Committing Magistrate's record.

The question then is whether we should in these circumstances order retrial. The learned counsel who has appeared for the accused has raised several objections. Firstly he has contended that even if the medical evidence be admitted it does not show that the offence was one of culpable homicide since the doctor stated that he could not say definitely that the wounds were likely in the ordinary course of nature to have caused death. But though the opinion of the doctor was equivocal it is not the opinion of the doctor which is wanting in this case but the finding of the Sessions Judge on the medical evidence and we cannot say that the learned Additional Sessions Judge could not have held on this evidence coupled with the other evidence in the case that the offence of culpable homicide had been committed.

The learned counsel further has criticized the evidence for the Crown but it is not open to us at this stage to go into it. All we can say is that the Magistrate found that a prima facie case was established and the learned Additional Sessions Judge agreed with him on the main issue in the case. This is sufficient for our present purpose and we must not prejudice the case by expressing an opinion on the merits.

Lastly, the learned counsel has urged that the punishment of two years rigorous imprisonment was sufficient. But with this we are unable to agree. If the offence was one of culpable homicide or murder the sentence appears to have been inadequate.

For these reasons we agree with the learned Public Prosecutor that the case should go for retrial so that the effect of the medical evidence be considered. We think this course preferable to considering the record with the medical evidence and deciding the matter for ourselves since there is a possibility the accused may have been prejudiced by the absence of the doctor from the Sessions Court if he expected to be able to cross-examine him there.

We think the best order is that which is asked for on behalf of the Crown that we, therefore, set aside the conviction and sentence and direct that the accused should be retried.

We recommend that the Sessions Judge should record a definite age of the accused if there is any question of sending him to Dharwar jail.

Percival, J. C.—I would like to add a few words regarding the action taken by the learned Magistrate, First Class, Diplo. He stated at the end of the evidence of the Medical Officer:

"Cross-examination of the accused reserved for the Sessions Court."

It was really this endorsement which has caused the difficulty in the case. I am of opinion that the Magistrate should rather have noted:

"Accused offered for examination, cross-examination declined."

If he had made a note to the effect then there would have been no question about the correctness of the admission of the evidence in the Sessions Court.

I was at first inclined to take the view that we should dispose of the case ourselves, accepting the view that the deposition of the Medical Officer was rightly on the record. But there is one point in favour of a retrial namely that if we were to dispose of the case now we would be disposing of it without having the opinion of the learned Additional Sessions Judge on the medical evidence. It is more satisfactory in view of the remark made by the Magistrate that the cross-examination was reserved for the Sessions Court and in view of all the facts of the case that in this particular instance the Medical Officer should be examined by the Judge who will hear the case. The Judge will then be able to give his opinion regarding the medical evidence and if by chance the case comes before this Court again, this Court will have the advantage of the opinion of the Judge on the said medical evidence. It may be noted also that the application of the Public Prosecutor was for a retrial and not for enhancement of the sentence.

Criminal Revn. No. 635 of 1929, Decided on 30th July 1929.

Penal Code, S. 216—Proclaimed offender harboured—No satisfactory evidence that accused knew till so informed by police officer—False information given to police to assist evading apprehension—Offence under S. 216 was committed.

A person was charged for harbouring a proclaimed offender. There was no satisfactory evidence on record to show that the accused knew that the person harboured was a proclaimed offender till police officer informed him to that effect. But after the police officer had so informed him, the accused gave false information in order to assist evading apprehension and eventually the offender was found in his house.

Held: that the false information given after having been informed that person was a proclaimed offender is sufficient to bring the accused within the purview of S. 216: A. I. R. 1926 Lah. 205, Rel. on. [P 73 C 1]

Nand Lal—for Petitioner.S. L. Puri for Govt. Advocate—for the Crown.

Judgment.—The petitioner Vir Singh has been convicted in this case under S. 216, I. P. C., and sentenced to rigorous imprisonment for two years. The charge against Vir Singh was that he had harboured a dacoit named Sham Singh who was a proclaimed offender. Both the Courts below have found that there is no satisfactory evidence on the record to show that Vir Singh knew that Sham Singh was a proclaimed offender before the arrival of the police to search his house. It appears, however, that after the Sub-Inspector had informed Vir Singh that Sham Singh was a proclaimed offender and asked him whether Sham Singh was in his house he denied the fact and gave prevaricating answers, evidently with the object of enabling Sham Singh to evade apprehension, eventually Sham Singh was found in his house. The learned Sessions Judge has held that the false replies given by Vir Singh to the Sub-Inspector after he had been informed that Sham Singh was a proclaimed offender are sufficient to bring him within the purview of S. 216. This view appears to me supported by the ruling Tara Singh v. Emperor (1).

The offence was, however, of a technical character and, considering the fact that the son and the nephew of the petitioner had themselves given information which led to the discovery of Sham Singh in Vir Singh's house, I do not think that the punishment need be severe. I uphold the conviction, but accept the petition for revision to the extent of reducing the sentence to the period of imprisonment already undergone.

Penal Code, S. 75 — Greatly enhanced punishment should not be inflicted for trivial offence.

For an offence trivial in nature in itself, greatly enhanced punishment should not be inflicted, merely because there have been previous convictions against the offender.

[P 73 C 2]

Judgment.—The appellant has been convicted of stealing a khes, the original cost price of which was Rs. 4.

He has been sentenced to five years' rigorous imprisonment on the strength of two previous convictions.

The first of these convictions, which was under S. 411, I. P. C., was had on 19th May 1925, when a sentence of ten days imprisonment was imposed. The second conviction was on 25th April 1928, under S. 379, when 3 months' imprisonment was inflicted.

I have repeatedly pointed out that for an offence trivial in itself as is the present one, greatly enhanced punishment should not be inflicted merely because there have been previous convictions against the offender.

In my judgment a sentence of six months' imprisonment would meet the ends of justice, and I, accordingly, accept this appeal to the extent of reducing the punishment from five years' rigorous imprisonment to six months' rigorous imprisonment.

on complaint of investigating police officer —Charge failing—Accused cannot be convicted under Penal Code, S. 182.

There is no bar to cognizance being taken of an offence under Penal Code, S. 211 on the complaint of the investigating police officer though he is not also an officer referred to under S. 195 (1) (a), Criminal P. C.; but if the charge under Penal Code, S. 211 fails, there cannot by reason of Criminal P. C., S. 195 (1)
(a) be a conviction under Penal Code, S. 182.

[P 78 C 1]

(c) Criminal P. C., S. 195 (1) (b)—Offence under Penal Code, S. 211 not committed in Court—S. 195 (1) (b) is no bar to take cognizance—Once cognizance of complaint is taken, nothing in S. 195 (1) (b) deprives Magistrate of his jurisdiction.

Where the offence under Penal Code S. 211 has not been committed in, or in relation to a proceeding in any Court S. 195 (1) (b) is no bar to cognizance of a complaint of that offence.
But it is impossible to hold that when a Magistrate has taken cognizance of a complaint, anything that can subsequently happen will suffice or anything in S. 195 (1) (b) can operate to deprive him of jurisdiction to proceed thereon in accordance with law: A. I. R. 1925 Pat.

Judgment.—This matter has a lengthy and tangled history and with a view to avert in future cases some at least of the difficulties which have arisen
I deal with it at some length.

The petitioner, who is clerk of an advocate of this Court, lodged information before Sub-Inspector D. Mukerji in charge of the Kotwali police-station,

Patna, on 18th June against the chauffeur of his master who he alleged had taken an advance of Rs. 36 and then decamped without permission taking away also motor accessories of the value of
Rs. 55-8-0 a list of which he supplied.
The case was made over to and investigated by the junior Sub-Inspector Ram Singh who on 23rd June reported it to be maliciously false and prayed that orders be passed for the prosecution of the complainant for an offence under S. 211,
I. P. C. Having perused the report the Sub-Divisional Magistrate on 3rd July on an ordersheet marked G. R. (General Register) No. 253 of 1928 recorded that the investigating officer reported the case to be maliciously false and directed notice to issue to the petitioner to show cause why he should not be prosecuted under S. 182 or S. 211, I. P. C.

On 19th July a complaint by Sub-Inspector Ram Singh dated 13th July under
S. 211 was put up to the Sub-Divisional Magistrate who directed it to be placed with the record. On that date also the petitioner showed cause verbally through a pleader but filed no petition. On 25th July the Magistrate recorded that having carefully gone through the case diary of the investigating officer, he had come to the conclusion that the petitioner should be prosecuted under S. 182 and added:

“The Sub-Inspector of Police before whom the information was lodged has already filed a complaint. Summon Kantir Missir under
S. 182, I. P. C.”

Thus summons was issued upon the complainant already mentioned and the ordersheet thenceforward showed the case as No. 253-G.R./643-C, the latter number being that of Sub-Inspector Ram Singh's complaint in the Complaint Register.

On 14th August the case was transferred to Thakurai B. D. Singh for disposal.

On 23rd August an application was made to the High Court but was returned with a suggestion to apply to the District Magistrate. An appeal to the Sessions Judge was rejected on 27th August and a motion to the District Magistrate on 4th September. In the latter the only legal flaw suggested was that the Sub-Divisional Magistrate took cognizance before a complaint had been lodged, and the fact alleged was negatived. On 17th September this Court made absolute a rule obtained on behalf of the petitioner substantially on the ground that the Sub Divisional Magistrate having called upon the petitioner to show cause against his intended prosecution should not have reduced the opportunity so afforded to a mere formality but should in the circumstances of the case, where three legal practitioners were alleged to support the prosecution story, have discussed the cause shown. Thereafter the judgment proceeded :

"If the learned Sub-Divisional Officer is inclined to proceed against the petitioner he should examine the witnesses mentioned in the first information report and then make up his mind as to whether it is expedient in the interests of justice to put the accused on his trial or not."

When this order was communicated to the Sub Divisional Magistrate he stayed proceedings on 17th October noting on the order-sheet of Case No. 643-C that he understood that the police officer concerned was about to file a complaint. The point was that so far as an offence under S. 182 was concerned, the complaint of Sub-Inspector Ram Singh was not tenable by reason of S. 195 (1) (a) since it was not made by the :

"public servant concerned or some other public servant to whom he is subordinate," the information to the police having been given not to him but to the Sub-Inspector in charge of the police station. Accordingly the record of the original case was deemed to be closed and when Sub-Inspector D. Mukerji lodged before the Sub-Divisional Magistrate a complaint against the petitioner under S. 182, a new case record was started and numbered 1016-C of 1928 and on 4th December summons under S. 182 was issued on petitioner. On the same date the case was transferred for disposal to Thakurai B. D. Singh who fixed the hearing for 17th. On 10th December, however, Case 1016-C was withdrawn by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate to his own file and he directed that it should await the disposal of Case No. 643-C. In the order-sheet of the latter under the same date the Sub Divisional Magistrate set out that as another case had been started on the complaint of Sub-Inspector D. Mukerji before whom the first information was lodged and who was the proper person to file the complaint, further steps had not been deemed necessary in case No. 643-C as the Magistrate's orders summoning the accused had already been set aside by the High Court, but as the accused had filed a petition to the effect that the orders of the High Court had not been complied with and the new complaint should be dismissed and as the accused seemed to insist that the new case should not proceed, he gave him an opportunity to prove his case by examining witnesses named in the first information report. He explained that as the new complaint was filed by a different complainant he had not thought it incumbent upon him, to take therein the action indicated by the High Court in the earlier case.

"On 17th December the District Magistrate disposed of an 'appeal' or application under S. 195 (5) made by the petitioner against the order of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate taking cognizance of the complaint of Sub-Inspector D. Mukhorji and summoning the accused on the ground that in view of the order of the High Court the Magistrate had no jurisdiction to entertain the complaint. The learned District Magistrate held that the Sub-Divisional Magistrate had acted strictly in accordance with the order of the High Court and proceeded :

"In view of this I do not think it is necessary for the case under S. 182 I. P. C. (Case No. 1016 C of 1928) to proceed and I accordingly direct that this case shall be withdrawn. If the learned Sub-Divisional Officer after examining the witnesses produced by the present petitioner and considering the other papers in the case comes to the conclusion that the case is false, he can himself file a complaint for his prosecution under Ss. 211 or 182, I. P. C."

The Public Prosecutor appeared in case No. 1016-C of 1928 and withdrew the case whereupon the Sub-Divisional Magistrate recorded an order of discharge under S. 494, Criminal P. C.

The petitioner was then called upon to produce his witnesses in case No. 643. He appeared eventually and pleaded that the High Court had directed the Magistrate to summon the witnesses and not to ask the petitioner to produce them. The Magistrate stated that he had no objection to summon them but would examine the petitioner straightaway, not as an accused but as the person who gave information to the police, whereupon the petitioner's pleader expressed his intention of moving an application for transfer if the Magistrate insisted upon the examination of the petitioner that day, and the case was accordingly adjourned.

The petitioner then moved this Court for a rule for the transfer or the quashing of the proceedings and as Mr. K. B. Dutt contended on his behalf that the order of the District Magistrate was without jurisdiction it was assumed that if the earlier proceedings were dropped on the ground that the complaint of Sub-Inspector Ram Singh was not valid so far as S. 182 is concerned, all that would be necessary would be to deal with the complaint of Sub-Inspector D. Mukherji in case 1016-C by setting aside the order of summons passed thereon and directing in the very special circumstances that the Magistrate proceed on the lines of the direction or suggestion of this Court in case No. 643-C.

But with the assent of the Crown the case has been argued as if an open rule had issued. The contention of the learned vakil now is that the proceedings should be set aside because the complaint of Sub-Inspector D. Mukherji having been lawfully withdrawn under S. 195 (5) by an authority having jurisdiction to do so, nothing remains against the petitioner except an invalid complaint of Sub-Inspector Ram Singh, the Sub Divisional Officer having no power to make a complaint either executively or judicially, and that in any event the proceedings should be transferred to another Court owing to general prejudice as the petitioner does not want to prove his case and is not even entitled to give evidence and yet the Sub-Divisional Magistrate insists on examining him.

To appreciate these submissions and the reply of the Crown it is essential to ascertain the legal position at each stage.

When issuing notice on the petitioner on 3rd July, the Sub Divisional Magistrate manifestly was not acting upon the investigating Sub-Inspector's report for prosecution, and apparently the Sub-Inspector himself contemplated a mere formal complaint, which in fact he sent in on 13th July. The Magistrate on 3rd July seems either to have been acting administratively or under S. 476 read with S. 195 (1) (b) through inadvertence in Daroga Gop v. Emperor (1).

It is indeed held that S. 195 (1) (b) applies if the judicial proceeding is in existence at the time when it is sought to prosecute the offender for the offence in question. But as there was at the time no proceeding in existence in this Court, these provisions were of course inapplicable. And he did not take cognizance of the complaint of Sub-Inspector Ram Singh, under which the bar in S. 190 (1) (a) might be supposed to be removed, until the 25th, or at the earliest 19th.

Next when petitioner appeared on 19th July he cautiously refrained from filing any written petition, as is usually done, being apprehensive that under the decision cited it might be treated as a complaint and that the Magistrate could then act under S. 476, as the offence under S. 211 would then be committed in, or in relation to a proceeding in this Court.

Again the complaint of Sub-Inspector Ram Singh of an offence under S. 211 does not, on the ruling of this Court in Barhamdeo Singh v. Emperor (2) comply with S. 195 (1) (a) so far as an offence under S. 182 is concerned, as he was "not the public servant concerned," being only the investigating officer and not the public servant to whom information was given.

The order of this Court as well as the direction or suggestion with which the judgment concluded assumed that the Sub-Divisional Magistrate had taken cognizance of the complaint and it operated to replace matters at the stage of cognizance and of starting on an inquiry under S. 202.

The action of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate on receipt of the High Court's order showed that he was not "inclined to proceed against the petitioner," the reason being that he then considered only S. 182 and doubted whether the proceedings under that section were legally well-founded on the complaint of Sub-Inspector Ram Singh.

The complaint of Sub-Inspector D. Mukherji, however, did not suffer from any legal defect and the procedure adopted in respect of it was correct so far as legality alone is concerned. As was said in Jokhi Mian v. Mahmud, Dafadar (3):

(2) A. I. R. 1928 Pat. 102.

(3) A. I. R. 1929 Pat. 92.

"When a complaint is made by a public servant for an offence punishable under S. 182 the Magistrate is governed only by the rules in Chap. 16, Criminal P. C. As in a complaint made by a private person he will normally issue summons but in exceptional cases, 'for reasons to be recorded in writing' he may under S. 202 postpone issue of process and make an inquiry or direct a magisterial or police inquiry or investigation. The position would be the same if a police officer complained, for instance, under S. 211, I. P. C. Apart possibly from a complaint made by a Court under S. 476 (1), Criminal P. C., no complaint is in any sense invalid merely because the person accused has not had an opportunity of showing cause against the complaint being made."

In this instance, however, the circumstances were specially exceptional—the High Court had already expressed an opinion in another case on the same subject matter and the preferable procedure therefore was that the Magistrate, on taking cognizance of the complaint of Sub-Inspector D. Mukherji should hold an inquiry under S. 202 before issuing process.

What a pity it is that the learned Sub-Divisional Magistrate should have allowed himself to be flustered and stampeded as indicated in his order of 10th December. It was not open to him; once he had issued summons, to go back. He had acted in case No. 643-C strictly in compliance with the order of this Court and if there was some appearance that he had not, he ought to have trusted this Court to distinguish the real from the apparent. It was alike legal and proper that action against the petitioner under S. 182, I. P. C. should proceed on the complaint in case No. 1016-C, but the Magistrate, because of the suggestion of this Court in case No. 643, should, in the exercise of a sound discretion, have proceeded under S. 202.

The next question is whether the District Magistrate had jurisdiction under S. 195 (5) to order the withdrawal of the complaint in case No. 1016-C. Is the District Magistrate an authority to which an officer in charge of a police station is subordinate within the purview of that provision? The subsection is new and it is to be observed that the language differs from S. 195 (1) (a) where the person whose complaint is required to remove the bar to prosecution is the public servant concerned, or some other servant to whom he is subordinate. The decisions of the Allahabad and of the Calcutta High Courts differ as to whether an officer of police in his district is subordinate to the District Magistrate, the former basing their affirmative answer on the terms of S. 4, Police Act 1861 which place the police under the general direction and control of the District Magistrate. But whether the police are public servants subordinate to the District Magistrate under sub-S. 1 (a) or not, I see no reason to doubt that the very wide expression in sub-S. 5 "any authority to which such public servant is subordinate" connoting apparently a more distant and general entity than departmental superior, covers the District Magistrate in relation to the police of the district. It would not seem at all unreasonable that the legislature should restrict the making of the complaint to the department and yet permit the withdrawal thereof (at times perhaps on grounds of policy transcending departmental considerations) by superior authorities also. It follows that the withdrawal of the complaint in case 1016-C was valid, and as the District Magistrate exercised jurisdiction administratively, his order is not open to interference by a judicial tribunal, which moreover would be most reluctant to interfere in such circumstances even if it was entitled to do so. It does not matter therefore that his reason for the withdrawal rested on what in the obscure circumstances may well have been a misconception of law, such as that the Sub-Divisional officer could himself file a valid complaint.

When the authority referred to under S. 195 (5) forwards a copy of its order of withdrawal of a complaint to the Court the enactment provides that on receipt thereof by the Court, no further proceeding shall be taken on the complaint. Not only was such a copy sent but the District Magistrate himself noted on the order sheet of case 1016-C his order of withdrawal. Action under S. 494 Criminal P. C. was at least superfluous and only complicated matters, as the only order possible under S. 494 was one of discharge. Whether it could have the effect of introducing the Local Government into the category of 'authority' under S. 195 (5) need not here be decided as it has been held that the District Magistrate acting administratively had authority to withdraw the complaint in Case No. 1016-C. In my opinion that case is finally closed, unless possibly the District Magistrate's order could be revised by the Commissioner or by the Local Government as to which it is not necessary to express any opinion.

In support of the contention that the complaint of Sub-Inspector Ram Singh could not remove the bar under S. 195 (1) (a), reference is made to the decision of a Bench of this Court in Brahmdeo Singh v. Emperor (2). That decision is binding on me. According to it, the Sub-Divisional Magistrate could not take cognizance of a complaint of Sub-Inspector Ram Singh of an offence under S. 182. But Sub-Inspector Ram Singh did not complain of such an offence. He complained of an offence under S. 211 and the question whether the investigating police officer could prefer a complaint under S. 211, even if he was not the public servant to whom information had been given was expressly not considered by the learned Judges. The decision is therefore not applicable.

I am unable to discern any reason why even if a Magistrate is disentitled by a statutory bar to take cognizance of any offence under S. 182 cognizance by him of an offence under S. 211 should also be barred without any statutory provision to that effect. No doubt S. 182 is a minor offence to S. 211, and in a trial on a charge under S. 211 there may under S. 238 (2) be a conviction of an offence under S. 182, if the intention to injure, which is an essential ingredient in S. 211, is not established against the person who is proved to have lodged false information charging a person with having committed an offence. But the inwardness of the matter here is that if the intention to injure is not established there cannot on the section itself be a conviction under S. 211, and also, since S. 238 (2) must yield to S. 195 (1) (a), there cannot be conviction of the minor offence under S. 182. Thus there is no bar to cognizance being taken of an offence under S. 211 on the complaint of the investigating police officer though he is not also an officer referred to under S. 195 (1) (a); but if the charge under S. 211 fails, there cannot by reason of S. 190 (1) (a), Criminal P. C. be a conviction under S. 182; I. P. C.

Next since the offence under S. 211, has not been committed in or in relation to a proceeding in any Court, S. 195 (1) (b) is no bar to cognizance of a complaint of that offence. Again it cannot, after cognizance has been taken, be brought under S. 195 (1) (b) by any complaint which may thereafter be filed by the present petitioner. The decision in Daroga Gop v. Emperor (1) is not applicable because, as has been pointed out in Parmanand Brahmachari v. Emperor (4) the formal complaint of the offence had in Daroga Gop v. Emperor (1) been filed in Court by the informant under S. 211 before the formal complaint of the police officer against him was submitted to the Court whereas here the Court has already taken cognizance of the Sub-Inspector's complaint and

"It is impossible to hold that when a Magistrate has taken cognizance of a complaint, anything that can subsequently happen will suffice or anything in S. 195 (1) (b) can operate to deprive him of jurisdiction to proceed thereon in accordance with law."

The main contention of the petitioner therefore fails and case No. 643-C must proceed as a complaint under S. 211. I. P. C. Both on his own initiative and by reason of the direction of this Court the Sub-Divisional Magistrate is committed to an inquiry under S. 202. As he appears to be somewhat uncertain as to procedure under that provision, he may obtain some assistance from the following quotation from the decision cited above:

"It is next urged that in any event the petitioner was not afforded adequate opportunity of showing cause against his prosecution. Assuming that under the superseded provisions of the Code he was entitled to such an opportunity, he is no more entitled to it under the procedure laid down in the amended Code than any other person against whom a complaint is made. It was open to the Magistrate to issue process without any notice to him if on reading the complaint he found sufficient ground for proceeding, or to proceed under S. 202 for the purpose of ascertaining the truth or falsity of the complaint. An inquiry or investigation under S. 202 is designed to afford the Magistrate an opportunity of either confirming or removing such hesitation as he may feel in respect of issuing process against the accused; The nature of the inquiry varies with the circumstances of each case, and it is certainly not contemplated that it should always be exhaustive. Frequently all that is required is the elucidation of some minor point or the summary determination of the sufficiency of the available evidence, but least of all is the inquiry a preliminary trial of the accused at which he is entitled to adduce his evidence before process can issue upon him. The degree of formality of the proceedings and the width and depth of the inquiry is entirely in the discretion of the Magistrate (so long at least as he confines himself to the simple question of issue of process or dismissal of the complaint). The provision is enabling and not obligatory as soon as he has satisfied himself that process should issue, its object is fulfilled and it is certainly not incumbent upon him or ordinarily expedient that he should practically enter upon a trial of the case."

Ordinarily therefore the Magistrate would have called upon the complainant Sub-Inspector Ram Singh to prove his case, but under the very exceptional circumstances this Court has already indicated the procedure appropriate to the particular case, namely, that the Magistrate having failed to issue process at once on the complaint should before making up his mind to do so examine the witnesses whom the petitioner named in his first information and who are of good position, and deal with the points raised by him in showing cause. This must now be done but while the complainant's side must naturally also be considered, it is inexpedient, as indicated above, that this inquiry under S. 202 should develop into something comparable to a preliminary trial.

There is no foundation whatsoever for the prayer that the proceedings should be quashed on the ground that the petitioner has been harassed, the fact is that he has expended his energy on artifices to delay or avert inquiry, and nothing could be more prejudicial to the administration of justice than to place a premium on such tactics.

As to the application for transfer, I see no reason to entertain it. In the course of his extensive wriggling, the petitioner manoeuvred the Magistrate into passing an order which though incorrect was intelligible in the tangled state of the proceedings, namely that the petitioner should give his own deposition. Whether the position of the petitioner was that of a complainant or that of an accused was obscure by reason of the confusion occasioned by the use of terminology based on rulings under the unamended Code. As he had guarded himself against filing a 'complaint,' the petitioner had no locus standi 'to prove his case.' It has now been ascertained that he is at present in the position of an accused on whom process has not yet been issued so that the Magistrate acting under S. 202, Criminal

P. C., may, if so advised, accept any explanation from him but cannot force him to depose. But the order of the Magistrate was due merely to a misconception of the position. There is no adequate reason to transfer the complaint from his file now that misconceptions which indeed were general, have been removed and it would be highly inexpedient to do so at this stage. But if after this inquiry under S. 202 which should be conducted by him with all reasonable expedition he decides that the accused should be placed on trial under S. 211 he will after issuing process on the complaint transfer the case for disposal to some other Magistrate of the First Class who is subordinate to him.

Apart from the direction as to the manner of inquiry and as to transfer, the rule is discharged. Let the record be sent down at once.

MACPHERSON, J.

Ramnandan Singh—Accused — Petitioner.

v.

Emperor—Opposite Party.

Criminal Revn. No. 464 of 1929, Decided on 7th November 1929, from an order of First Class Magistrate, Monghyr, D/- 22nd February 1929.

(a) Penal Code, S. 225-A—"Negligence"—Omission to secure door of room where prisoner was confined is indication of negligence.

Where a person properly arrested, is confined in a room, omission to secure the door of the room, the main cause of escape of the prisoner from custody, is an indication of negligence.

(b) Penal Code, S. 225-A—Arrest without warrant or order of Magistrate under S. 55—Consequent confinement—Confinement is legal custody.

Section 55, Criminal P. C., is independent of Chap. 8 of the Code, which includes S. 110, although proceedings under that chapter might follow an arrest under S. 55 as a natural sequence and a police officer can therefore arrest or cause to be arrested without warrant or an order of a Magistrate any person who comes within provisions of S. 55. And where such person is arrested without warrant or order of Magistrate, confinement of such person is legal custody within the meaning of S. 225-A : A. I. R. 1925 Lah. 628, 629 ; 35 All. 407, Ref.

H. L. Nandkeolyar and H. N. Singh—
for Petitioner.

Asst. Government Advocate — for the Crown.

Order.—This is an application in revision against the conviction of the petitioner under S. 225-A, I. P. C., and the fine of Rs. 30 imposed upon him.

The facts found are that the petitioner who is a Sub-Inspector of Police, under the direction of the Inspector of Police who was his superior officer, arrested under S. 55, Criminal P. C., Etwari Kahar and three others who were about to be prosecuted under S. 110, Criminal P. C., placed them in a room in the inspection bungalow at Dharaha and negligently permitted Etwari Kahar to escape from confinement in which he was legally bound as a public servant to keep him.

The bungalow which faces and has a verandah to the north consists of two rooms with an intervening door and dressing-rooms to the south. The door mentioned and the doors leading from each room on to the verandah were the only doors open. The prisoners after arrest were placed in the eastern room and the Sub-Inspector and his constables were at the door north of it. At the order of the Sub-Inspector a constable went in to handcuff the prisoners whereupon Etwari Kahar slipped out by the open door in the western room where the Inspector and the Head constable were or at least the latter was, and then into the verandah by the northern door of that room and escaped. At a later date he was recaptured through the efforts of the petitioner and on a complaint of the petitioner was convicted of an offence under S. 225-A for escaping from the petitioner's custody. The present prosecution has been undertaken under the orders of the Superintendent of Police.

Mr. Nandkeolyar raises two points only : (1) the facts found do not constitute negligence, and (2) Etwari Kahar was not in legal custody of the petitioner.

The first point is clearly untenable. It was certainly negligence to leave open the connecting door between the two rooms and the omission to secure it was the main cause of the escape of the prisoner from custody. Other indications of negligence are also set out by the Courts below.

In support of the second point reliance is placed upon a decision of a single Judge of the Lahore High Court in Kala v. Emperor, A. I. R. 1925 Lah. 623, for the proposition that the police have no authority to arrest in anticipation of proceedings under S. 110, Criminal P. C. In the first place, I am not prepared to accept the correctness of the decision. Further in any event the facts are distinguishable from the present case because in the case cited a report had already been submitted to the Magistrate for proceedings under S. 110 on which the Magistrate had failed to issue either summons or warrant of arrest. To my mind the correct decision on the point is to be found in Nepal v. Emperor (1), where Tudball, J. pointed out that S. 55, Criminal P. C., is independent of Chap. 8 of the Code which includes S. 110, although proceedings under that chapter might follow an arrest under S. 55, Criminal P. C., as a natural sequence, and that a police officer can, therefore, arrest or cause to be arrested, without a warrant or an order of a Magistrate, any person who comes within the provisions of S. 55 (1) (c). It is not denied that Etwari Kahar came within the category described in that enactment. Accordingly under the provisions of S. 551 read with S. 55 (1) (c) the petitioner was entitled to arrest, as he did arrest, Etwari Kahar, without an order from the Magistrate and without a warrant, and the confinement from which the petitioner suffered the said prisoner to escape was a lawful confinement in which the petitioner was legally bound to keep him. Thus the second point also fails.

On the understanding that this is the only punishment to which the petitioner will be subject, I do not interfere with the sentence.

The rule is discharged.

Allahabad

SEN, J.

Hukum Singh—Applicant.

Emperor—Opposite Party.

Criminal Revn. No. 447 of 1929, Decided on 13th August 1929, from order of Sess. Judge, Etah, D/- 12th June 1929.

(a) Criminal P. C., S. 403—Where two indictments are essentially different and relate to independent transactions acquittal under one does not bar complaint with reference to other.

To set up the plea of autre fois acquit it is essential that there must have been a previous trial of the offence terminating in the order of acquittal. It must be established that the offences were substantially the same and grew out of same facts. Where the two indictments are essentially different and relate to separate and independent transactions affecting distinct individuals it cannot be held that acquittal with reference to complaint of the one is a bar to entertainment of the second complaint. It is not necessary that both complaints should be before the same person but before the presiding officer of the same Court. [P 84 C 1, 2]

Band C instituted a joint complaint against H. Transactions out of which the complaints arose were different and independent, and separate complaints ought to have been presented. B and H compounded the case with the result that C's case was no longer subject of judicial inquiry. C filed a fresh complaint. H contended that he had been acquitted of all charges in the original complaint, and no fresh complaint could be entertained under S. 403.

Held: that the effect of acquittal with reference to B's complaint was no bar to the entertainment of the complaint by C. No order for acquittal had been passed with reference to C's complaint and H was not ordered to be discharged on the same: 9 All. 52; (1895) 4, W. N. 86; 5 A. L. J. 197; 29 All. 7 and 36 All. 129. Judgment.—The facts of the case which have given rise to this application for revision are that, on 7th August 1928, Mt. Champavati and one Bahori Lal instituted a complaint under Ss. 417 and 406, I. P. C., in the Court of a Special Magistrate with second class powers. The District Magistrate of Etah transferred the case to the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Kasganj. The latter, in his turn, transferred the case to Mr. Sayed Ghayoor Ahmad, Magistrate, First Class.

Mt. Champavati is the widow of a predeceased brother of Bahori Lal. Both her husband and Bahori Lal were in the railway service. After the death of her husband, Mt. Champavati received a considerable sum of money from the railway authorities on account of the provident fund of her deceased husband. Bahori Lal also received a large sum of money from the railway on his own account as his share of the provident fund. It is common ground that Mt. Champavati and Bahori Lal occupied the same house and Bahori Lal may well be taken to be the natural protector of Mt. Champavati and her minor son. It was alleged that by trickery and by a pretence of friendship, Hukum Singh, the applicant, insinuated himself into the confidence of Mt. Champavati and Bahori Lal in various ways. Hukum Singh persuaded Mt. Champavati to believe that there was a danger of her cash and jewellery being appropriated by Bahori Lal and that it would be safer and more prudent if she allowed Hukum Singh to take charge of her cash and jewellery and keep them in deposit for her. The unsuspecting widow believed Hukum Singh and put him into possession of ornaments, worth Rs. 350 and cash Rs. 1,100. The complaint of Mt. Champavati against Hukum Singh was limited to these two items which concerned her and which had nothing to do with Bahori Lal. She charged Hukum Singh with cheating and criminal breach of trust with reference to the two items indicated above.

In the same petition of complaint, dated 7th August 1928, Bahori Lal charged Hukum Singh with cheating and criminal breach of trust with reference to large sums of money aggregating to Rs. 2,500. The money belonged to Bahori Lal. Mt. Champavati had no share in this money. The person who had been imposed upon with reference to this was Bahori Lal and not Mt. Champavati. The transactions which formed the basis of the complaint of Mt. Champavati were essentially different from those which afforded a cause of action to Bahori Lal.

It was unfortunate and inexpedient to address a joint complaint to the Magistrate with reference to two independent transactions affecting two individuals separately and which did not present any common feature excepting in so far that two persons were alleged to have been victimized by the wily machination of the same individual. The Magistrate ought to have insisted upon two complaints being presented before him, one by Mt. Champavati and the other by Bahori Lal. It would have been reasonable and more businesslike to do so, to avoid any future complications or embarrassment in the trial of the cases and would have limited the scope of the issue which emerged for decision in each case separately.

On 16th November 1928, it had dawned upon the two complainants that it was not right that the offences committed against them should be heard and disposed of in the course of a joint trial; and that on that date, they addressed a petition to the Magistrate that the trial of the case should be limited to such items only as affected Bahori Lal. The only order passed by the Magistrate on this application was "file." He, however, confined his enquiry to such items only as had been alleged to have been obtained from Bahori Lal either by cheating or by criminal breach of trust. He committed Hukam Singh to the Court of sessions, alternatively under Ss. 406 and 420, I. P. C.

The charges on the aforesaid sections constitute a warrant case under the Criminal Procedure Code, but they are compoundable under S. 345, Criminal P. C., with the permission of the Court before which any prosecution for such offence is pending. Hukam Singh appears to have persuaded Bahori Lal to agree to have the dispute referred to the arbitration of one Babu Gulzari Lal. The parties applied to the Court of Sessions for leave to compound the case. The Court granted the permission and the case was compounded on 23rd February 1929.

The effect of the petition dated 16th November 1928, was that the original complaint of Mt. Champavati was no longer the subject of a judicial enquiry. There was no non-appearance of Mt. Champavati within the meaning of S. 247, Criminal P. C., and the Magistrate passed no order acquitting the accused on the complaint of Mt. Champavati. It is abundantly clear that Mt. Champavati's complaint has never so far been the subject of a judicial investigation. No evidence had been recorded and the truth or falsity of the complaint had not been tested on the merits. Hukam Singh has not been ordered to be discharged on the complaint of Mt. Champavati.

The effect of the composition with Bahori Lal was that Hukam Singh was acquitted of the charges brought by Bahori Lal against him. S. 345 (6), Criminal P. C., is clear on the point:

"The composition of an offence under this section shall have the effect of an acquittal of the accused with whom the offence has been compounded."

The offence which has been compounded was an offence against Bahori Lal and not against Mt. Champavati. The composition of that offence by Bahori Lal could not operate as an acquittal with reference to the offence committed against Mt. Champavati.

After the disposal of the Sessions case, a change had taken place in the personnel of the officer presiding in the Court of the Deputy Magistrate who had committed the case to the Court of Sessions. Mr. Sayed Ghayoor Ahmad was transferred and his place was taken by B. Jwala Prasad, Magistrate First Class.

On 5th April 1929, Mt. Champavati filed a fresh complaint in the Court of Babu Jwala Prasad against Hukam Singh charging him with the commission of offences punishable under Ss. 417 and 420, I. P. C. In this petition, Mt. Champavati rehearsed the same facts, on which the complaint, dated 7th August 1928, was founded.

Upon notice being issued to Hukam Singh, he contended that the effect of the order passed on the petition of Mt. Champavati, dated 16th November 1928, was that he was discharged by the Court and that the said discharge could not be set aside by another Magistrate of co-ordinate jurisdiction. It was further argued that the effect of the acquittal by the Court of Sessions upon the composition of the offence by Bahori Lal was that Hukam Singh was acquitted of all charges which were set out in the original complaint dated 7th August 1928, preferred jointly by Mt. Champavati and Bahori Lal, and that having regard to the provision of S. 403, Criminal P. C., it was beyond the competence of the Magistrate to entertain a fresh complaint on the same facts against Hukam Singh.

These contentions were repelled by the Magistrate, who by his order dated 1st June 1929, directed that the case of Mt. Champavati must proceed against the accused. Hukam Singh applied to the learned Additional Sessions Judge, who, held that the order of the lower Court was correct in law and dismissed the application.

The learned Additional Sessions Judge was of opinion that the complaint of Mt. Champavati had not been disposed of by the Magistrate in any shape or form; that, at the outset, the order of the Magistrate on the application of Mt. Champavati dated 16th November 1928, and his subsequent order of commitment amounted to a discharge of Hukam Singh; and that under the law the Magistrate was not precluded from rehearing the complaint or from entertaining a fresh complaint based upon the same facts.

The learned counsel for the applicant has cited certain authorities in traverse of the view taken by the learned Additional Sessions Judge. In Moul Singh v. Mahabir Singh (1) all that was held was that it was not proper for a District Magistrate to direct proceedings to be taken on a police report with reference to a matter which had come up before a Sub-Divisional Magistrate and in which the said Magistrate had made an order that it was not necessary to proceed against certain accused persons, unless the District Magistrate had withdrawn the whole matter from the Court of such Subordinate Magistrate. In the matter of Guggilapu Paddayya of Palakot (2) it was held that the effect of S. 247, Criminal P. C., was that the order amounted to an acquittal and that the non-mention of S. 247 in the explanation to S. 403, Criminal P. C., was indicative of the fact that the latter section was not intended in any way to limit the effect of an order of acquittal under S. 247. In the present case, no order was passed on the complaint of Mt. Champavati either under S. 247 or under S. 403, Criminal P. C. This ruling, therefore, is not helpful to the applicant. It has been held in Kumar- swami Chetty v. Kuppuswami Chetty (3) that :

"an offence is complete when the acts, constituting it, have been committed apart from whether any complaint or charge has been laid before the Court or not and that the compounding of offences mentioned in para. 1, S. 345, Criminal P. C., is lawful even if it takes place before any complaint is filed in respect thereof."

In the present case, no composition had been arrived at between Mt. Champavati and Hukam Singh either before the Court or outside the Court and therefore there was no composition in existence which could operate as an acquittal.

The case of Queen Empress v. Adam Khan (4) was strongly relied on. It was ruled in this case by Blair and Burkitt, JJ., that when a competent tribunal had dismissed a complaint, another tribunal of exactly the same powers cannot reopen the same matter on a complaint made to it :

"We think it utterly contrary to sound principles that one Magistrate of co-ordinate jurisdiction should, in effect and substance, deal with, as if it were an appeal or a matter for revision, a complaint which had already been dismissed by a competent tribunal of co-ordinate authority."

This ruling has no application to the facts of the present case because the complaint of Mt. Champavati had not been dismissed by a competent tribunal. Moreover, the aforesaid view does not appear to have been adopted or agreed to by some of the learned Judges of this Court. In an earlier decision in re-Queen Empress v. Chotu (5) a divergent view appears to have been taken. In Queen Empress v. Umedam (6) it was held by Knox and Aikman, JJ., that :

"a Magistrate, who had passed an order dismissing a complaint, may at the instance of the complainant, and without direction from any superior authority take cognizance of the same offence or of any other offence constituted by the same facts upon a second proper complaint being laid before him."

In Bhagwan Din v. Dibia (7) it was held :

"that the same Court was not precluded from entertaining a second complaint in pari materia."

(3) [1918] 41 Mad. 685=34 M. L. J. 217=44 I. C. 588=(1918) M. W. N. 498.

(4) [1899] 22 All. 106=(1899) A. W. N. 211.

(5) [1881] 9 All. 52=(1886) A. W. N. 281 (F.B.).

(6) [1895] A. W. N. 86.

(7) [1908] 5 A. L. J. 187=(1908) A. W. N. 67 =7 Cr. L. J. 297.

(1) [1900] 4 C. W. N. 242.

(2) [1911] 84 Mad. 253=9 I. C. 258=12 Cr. L. J. 41.

The case law on the subject was considered by Richards, J., in re, Emperor v. Meharban Husain (8), and the learned Judge is reported to have observed as follows :

"I can find nothing in the Criminal Procedure Code which prevents the Magistrate from entertaining a second complaint made against the same person, even though the second complaint may be connected with a previous complaint which has already been dismissed under the provisions of S. 203."

In Ram Bharos v. Bahan (9) the 'second complaint was instituted before the same tribunal although the incumbent was a different individual, and it was ruled that :

"where the question is as to the competence of a Magistrate to entertain a second complaint in pari materia with a former complaint which has been dismissed under S. 203, Criminal P. C., it was not necessary that both complaints should be before the same person but before the presiding officer of the same Court."

Both, in principle and in view of the weight of authority, there was nothing to preclude Babu Jwala Prasad from taking cognizance of the second complaint instituted by Mt. Champavati.

In construing S. 403, Criminal P. C. the explanation appended to the section ought not to be lost sight of.

"The dismissal of a complaint, the stopping of proceedings under S. 249, the discharge of the accused or any entry made upon a charge under S. 273, is not an acquittal for the purposes of this section."

A verdict of acquittal is immune from challenge and the applicant is entitled to its full benefit; but the applicant has not produced a certified copy of the record or proceedings of an acquittal to show that he has been acquitted of the offence of which he has been arraigned or that he might have on his former trial in the Court of sessions been convicted of the offence of which he is now sought to be arraigned. To set up the plea of autrefois acquit, it is essential that there must have been a previous trial of the offence charged, terminating in an order of acquittal. The explanation appended to the section places this matter with the greatest clearness and in fact beyond the realm of controversy. There is an order of acquittal in favour of Hukam Singh but to sustain the plea now advanced Hukam Singh had to establish that the offences were substantially the same and grew out of the same facts. One of the tests for determining the identity of the offences is whether the evidence necessary to support the second indictment would have been sufficient to procure a legal conviction upon the first. In view of the circumstances of this case; it is impossible to hold that the evidence, which had a direct relation to Bahori Lal's case, could have any bearing upon the case propounded by Mt. Champavati. Any immaterial details may be eliminated, and the substance, rather than the form of charges in the two indictments have to be considered. But the two indictments are essentially different. They relate to separate and independent transactions, affecting distinct individuals. It is impossible to hold that the effect of acquittal with reference to the complaint of the one is a bar to the entertainment of the second complaint. This application is without force and is dismissed.

Durjan—Appellant.

v.

Emperor—Opposite Party.

Criminal Appeal No. 728 of 1929, Decided on 4th September 1929, against order of Sess. Judge, Cawnpore, D/- 17th July 1929.

Evidence Act, S. 30—Retracted confession—It must be relied in whole and not in part where it is sole evidence against accused.

In cases where the sole evidence against the accused is that of a retracted confession, such confession if it is relied on must be relied on as a whole and not only in part. [P 85 C 2]

Narain Sahai—for Appellant.

U. S. Bajpai—for the Crown.

Judgment.—Durjan the appellant in this case, along with two others, all sweepers, were charged under S. 302, I. P. C., with murdering one Khilla before the Sessions Judge of Cawnpore. Manian and Lallu were acquitted, but Durjan was convicted and sentenced to death.

We are not satisfied with the evidence in this case against the appellant. On 28th January of this year a dead body was discovered near village Baragaon

(8) [1906] 29 All. 7=3 A. L. J. 562=(1906) A. W. N. 245.

(9) [1914] 36 All. 129=22 I. C. 734=12 A. L. J. 106.

The dead body had wounds upon it and clearly there had been a murder committed. Part of the face of the corpse had been burnt. It is alleged that the dead body was that of Khilla who was missing from the village.

We are not satisfied in the first place that this corpse was that of Khilla. No proceedings were taken for nearly two months after the discovery of the corpse. A photograph had been taken, however, of the corpse. The wife of Khilla was quite unable to identify the photograph as that of her husband. We have carefully examined this photograph and we are certainly of the opinion that if the corpse had been that of Khilla, the wife ought to have been able to identify the photograph of her husband's body.

The Judge, however, relies upon the identification of a dhoti and a shirt which were found upon the corpse. These articles are common articles and we do not think it satisfactory that the identification should solely be upon these particular articles of clothing.

We are not satisfied that there was any motive for the murder. The Judge himself says that he is in a difficulty about this point. There is no direct evidence that Durjan murdered Khilla. There was nothing found in Durjan's house to incriminate him. The only evidence that exists upon the record against Durjan is his own retracted confession. As to this we are not satisfied that the proper procedure was adopted in taking this confession. The learned Magistrate who recorded it is clearly confused in his evidence, and does not even remember whether he recorded this statement in his Court or at his bungalow. He says on cross-examination that:

"If he records a confession at his bungalow he generally sends away the constables to the Mall Road."

This is extremely unsatisfactory, and the learned Magistrate in question ought to be very much more careful in recording these important statements.

As regards the confession, the learned Sessions Judge finds that, as regards an important part of it, it is not reliable. The confession records that Khilla was killed with a spear. The medical evidence, given after a careful examination of the body, is to the effect that the murder was committed with a heavy weapon like a gandasa or kulhari. In cases where the sole evidence against the accused is that of a retracted confession, we think it clear that if such a confession is relied on, it must be relied on as a whole and not only in part.

We are satisfied that the evidence therefore in this case is insufficient to support the conviction. We, therefore, set aside the conviction and sentence and direct that the appellant be set at liberty provided he is not required for any other offence.

KEMP, AG. C. J. AND MURPHY, J.
Parsu Dhondi—Applicant.

v.

Trustees of the Port, Bombay—Opponent.

Civil Ref. No. 18 of 1928, Decided on 31st July 1929.

Workmen's Compensation Act (1923), S. 2 (1) (n) and Sch. 2 (5)—Workmen actually engaged in loading from wharf to hold of ship are protected—But workman injured while working in shed alongside wharf is not, being not engaged for purpose of loading ship.

Protection under the Act is meant for the workmen who are actually engaged in the process of handling the bales, so as to transfer them from the wharf to the hold of a ship which is actually being loaded. But where, a workman is injured while stacking certain bales in a shed alongside the wharf, the workman at the time when he met with the accident is not engaged for the purpose of loading a ship.

[P 86 C 2]

A. A. Adarkar—for Applicant.

O'Gorman and Little & Co.—for Opponent.

Kemp, Ag. C. J.—This is a reference under the Workmen's Compensation Act 8 of 1923. The applicant one Parsu Dhondi was employed by the Port Trust on 23rd June 1928, to unload bales of cotton from a railway waggon standing in the Victoria Docks and to take them to a shed adjoining the wharf. From his evidence it appears that he was arranging the bales in the godown and that whilst he was stacking them one of the bales fell down and he sustained a fracture which is described in the medical evidence as a simple fracture of the middle third left leg (both bones). Under these circumstances he sought compensation under S. 2, Cl. (1) (n) read with Sch. 2, item 5 of the Act. The joint effect of that section and subsection and item 5 in the Schedule is that the workman must be employed for the purpose of loading, unloading or coaling any ship. His injury occurred not whilst he was engaged in any such duty but whilst stacking the bales in the shed. It is not suggested he was injured whilst the bales were in process of being loaded on to the ship. The intention expressed in item 5 in Sch. 2 is to restrict the compensation to persons who are occupied in the actual present operation of loading, unloading or coaling. That this is so is further borne out by the Government Notification which, since the Act, extended the right to compensation to cases where the person injured is engaged in loading, unloading or fuelling a ship in any harbour, roadstead or navigable water: see Government Notification dated 15th July 1927 published in the Bombay Government Gazette, Part 1, p. 1978. S. 7, Act 5 of 1929, amended Cl. 5, Sch. 2 and extended the protection to a person who is employed for the purpose of loading, unloading, fuelling, constructing, repairing, demolishing, cleaning or painting any ship of which he is not the master or a member of the crew. These tend to show that the intention of the legislature was that the person injured should be directly concerned in the act of loading, &c., the ship. Under these circumstances, I am of opinion, in this case the applicant has no right to compensation under item 5, Sch. 2 of the Act. Nor do I think the words "for the purpose of" in that subclause extend the benefits of the Act to him. It is unnecessary to consider how far, if at all, the Act applies to any one who is not actually concerned in handling cargo, &c.

The construction of item 5, Sch. 2, is a question of law although no question of law appears to have been specifically framed in the Commissioner's reference unless it is intended to be included in the issue which he has framed stating the facts of the case. I would answer the issue:

"Was the applicant at the time when he met with the accident engaged for the purpose of loading a ship?"

No order as to costs. Mr. O'Gorman for the Port Trust says that the Court may rest assured that the Trustees will consider the applicant's case sympathetically.

Murphy, J.—The workman in this case was injured while stacking certain bales in a shed alongside the wharf in the Victoria Docks, Bombay. It is contended before us that the words "for the purpose of" unloading, loading, &c., which are to be found in Sch. 2 (5), Workmen's Compensation Act 8 of 1923, should be interpreted very liberally, and as implying a wider meaning than had the word "in" been used in their place. But it seems to me that such a meaning cannot be read into them and that the expression "for the purpose of" used in this connexion means the same thing as "in" and that other words would have been used had it been intended to include a man, injured while engaged in preparations for the purpose of ultimately loading bales on to a ship. In fact the same argument might be used to apply to the case of every person engaged in working on such bales at any one of the many steps which intervene from where the bales are pressed in the mill to where they are stacked ready for loading into a ship, and it is clear that a line must be drawn somewhere. I think that the meaning of the term used is clear, and that protection under the Act is meant for the workmen who are actually engaged in the process of handling the bales, so as to transfer them from the wharf to the hold of a ship which is actually being loaded. But the workman, in question was only stacking the bales in a shed and it does not appear that the ship which was to carry them was then being loaded. I agree with the answer proposed by the learned Chief Justice to the question in the reference and think that the claimant cannot be awarded compensation in this case.

Criminal Revn. Case No. 212 of 1929 and Criminal Revn. Petn. No. 184 of 1929, Decided on 9th August 1929, against order of Joint Magistrate, Tirupattur, in Criminal Appeal No. 13 of 1929.

Criminal P. C., S. 423 (b)—Sentence by appellate Court—Alteration of sentence of three months' rigorous imprisonment to one month and fine of Rs. 60 and in default two months does not amount to enhancement.

The accused was convicted and sentenced to undergo three months' rigorous imprisonment. He appealed and his conviction was affirmed but the sentence was altered into one of one months' rigorous imprisonment and a fine of Rs. 60 with a further two months' rigorous imprisonment in default of payment.

Held: that the appellate Court in effect reduced the sentence. The proper list being whether the accused really considers the fine as heavier sentence than imprisonment: 23 Bom. 439, Rel. on; A.I.R. 1924 Pat. 563; 23 All. 497; and 36 All. 485, Dist. [P 87 C 2]

A. C. Sampth Ayyangar—for Petitioner.

K. N. Ganpathi—for the Crown.

Waller, J.—The petitioner was convicted and sentenced to undergo three months' rigorous imprisonment. He appealed and his conviction was affirmed, but the sentence was altered into one of one month's rigorous imprisonment and a fine of Rs. 60, with a further two months' rigorous imprisonment in default of payment. He asks us in revision to say that the sentence passed on him by the appellate court is illegal as amounting to an enhancement. He has the support of several decisions, for example, Bhola Singh v. Emperor (1) which followed King Emperor v. Sagara (2). The ratio decidendi in these cases was this—that, in the event of the fine not being paid, the prisoner would serve a sentence equivalent to that passed by the trial Court, and still he liable to have the fine collected from him. The same view was taken in Emperor v. Mehar Chand (3). With great respect, it seems to us that the proviso to S. 386 (1) (b), Criminal P. C. takes much of the force out of this line of reasoning. The legislature recognized that no sane man, who had money or credit at his disposal, would go to jail, if he could avoid it by paying a fine. It, therefore, provided that, if the whole of a sentence of imprisonment imposed in default of payment of a fine had been served, no warrant should issue against the defaulter's property "unless for special reasons to be recorded in writing the Court considers it necessary to do so." In practice, no Court would, we imagine, try of levy execution, unless there was property to attach and, as we have pointed out above, it is almost inconceivable that a man would go to jail, if he had means to pay the fine. It is, consequently, in the highest degree improbable that the contingency which influenced the High Courts of Allahabad and Patna would ever arise. A contrary view was taken in Queen Empress v. Chagan Jagannath (4), which followed an unreported decision of this Court.

It cannot be denied, indeed, Mr. Sampath Ayyangar, admits that, in this case, the appellate Court, in effect, reduced the sentence. The petitioner had only to pay his fine in order to escape from two months' in jail. We find it very difficult to say that a sentence which, if submitted to, had not been enhanced, but reduced, must be held to have been enhanced merely because the prisoner has refused to submit to it. He has an option in the matter. If he does not choose to exercise that option in his own favour, is he to be heard to say:

"you must still further reduce my already reduced sentence, because, if I am contumacious, I shall not only have to serve a sentence equal to my unreduced sentence, but will also be liable to have my property attached to pay the fine I have refused to pay."

It is, of course, impossible to decide the question academically or to lay down a principle applicable to all cases. In this particular instance, the petitioner does not appear to say that he is unable to pay the fine or would prefer to suffer the sentence passed on him by the trial Court. Judging by the energy with and the expense at which he has conducted the proceedings, we feel no doubt but that he could pay the fine without any difficulty. We are satisfied that, if he were before us and we offered him the option of paying Rs. 60 or going to jail for two months, he would choose the former alternative without hesitation. There is therefore no reality in his argument that, academically speaking, his sentence has been enhanced. The same test was applied by Piggot, J., in Emperor v. Mehr Chand (3) above cited. We think that the proper test is whether the petitioner really considers a fine of Rs. 60 a heavier sentence than two months' rigorous imprisonment. That he does consider it to be so, he has not attempted to allege. His contention is that his sen-

(a) Evidence Act, S. 112 — Divorce not legally taking place—Child is born during continuance of valid marriage.

Where divorce in the sense of a legal dissolution of the marriage, has not taken place, a child born must be taken to be born during the continuance of a valid marriage between a woman and her husband. [P 88 C 2]

B. R. Krishnaswami Iyengar—for Respondent.

Order.—This is a Revision Petition against an order of the Third Presidency Magistrate granting the petitioner maintenance allowance at the rate of Rs. 5 per mensem in respect of her younger child. The question in issue is whether the counter petitioner has been shown to be the father of that child.

The first point taken is that the learned Presidency Magistrate has overlooked the provisions of S. 112, Evidence Act. He appears to find that petitioner's husband divorced her, but he does not explain what meaning he attaches to that term, and using it in the sense of a legal dissolution of the marriage it is clear that no divorce has taken place. I must take it therefore that, in the language of S. 112, the child was born "during the continuance of a valid marriage" between the petitioner and her husband. It has then to be shown, for the petitioner to succeed, that the parties to that marriage "had no access to each other at any time when he (the child) could have been begotten." On the date when petitioner gave evidence (5th October 1928) she gave the age of the child as four years, and stated that the counter petitioner had been keeping her for fourteen years. Her husband was employed in Bangalore, but some years before the child was born she came to Madras and lived with her father. Evidence which the lower Court has accepted shows that when the elder son three years senior to the younger was born petitioner's husband severed relations with her, on the ground that he was not the father even of that child; and certainly for some long while before the younger was born he had been living in Bangalore and his wife had been living in Madras. I think it may fairly be inferred, from this circumstance and from the relations shown to have been existing between petitioner and her husband, that he had no access to her at the time the younger child was begotten.

On the specific issue of the counter petitioner's paternity, the learned Presidency Magistrate has admitted certain evidence which is in my view inadmissible. The entry Ex. A in the vaccination register, which includes a statement by petitioner that a person bearing counter petitioner's name was the father of the child, was made three years after its birth and does not therefore satisfy the terms of S. 157, Evidence Act. I doubt whether such a statement is rendered admissible by S. 35. So too, the activities of P. W. 6, the caste headman, in trying to prevent counter petitioner's marriage do not constitute admissible evidence, though the objection does not apply to the evidence of P. W. 3, that the counter petitioner sought his help to pay money to the petitioner to dissuade her from creating trouble over the marriage.

Excluding what is inadmissible, it appears to me that there is quite enough evidence on the record to show beyond reasonable doubt that counter petitioner is father of the child. What that evidence is will be found detailed in the lower Court's order. That Court is the proper and, in general, the final Judge of its credibility, but I may add that I see no reason to differ from the view which it takes. The Criminal Revision Petition is dismissed.

Order.—The applicant Nanhe has applied for revision against the order of the Sessions Judge, Jubbulpore, dismissing the applicant's application for revision against an order of the Honorary Magistrate, Jubbulpore. A complaint was filed against the applicant in the Court of the Honorary Magistrate, Jubbulpore, under section 178 (5) of the Municipal Act. The complaint was on a printed form and was signed by a police officer, City Superintendent Sant Singh. Upon the complaint being received the Magistrates ordered process to issue against the applicant. The case was adjourned on several hearings, but at the hearing of the 22nd December 1928, the pleader for the applicant asked that Sant Singh, the City Superintendent, must attend in person. The Court, however, held that his appearance was not necessary as Ss. 200 (aa) and 247, proviso, Criminal P. C., gave ample authority that his presence might be dispensed with. The case was then fixed for evidence on 22nd January. In the meantime the applicant made an application for revision to the Sessions Judge, contending that the provisions of S. 200, Criminal P. C., were imperative and that Sant Singh ought to have been examined and that, if he did not appear, the case should have been dismissed under S. 247 of the Code. It was further contended that Sant Singh was not a public servant for the purposes of the Municipal Act and that when he filed a complaint under the Municipal Act he did not act in the discharge of his official duties.

The Sessions Judge held that, as the City Superintendent had been authorized under S. 218, Municipal Act, by the Municipal Committee to make complaints with regard to offences under sections of the Municipal Act, the Municipal Committee was really the complainant. He further held that a Municipal Committee was a corporate body composed of Municipal Commissioners and that under S. 21, I. P. C., a Municipal Commissioner is a public servant. From this the Sessions Judge reasoned that it could be held that the Municipal Committee which was composed of public servants is itself as a corporate body, a public servant. The Sessions Judge therefore gave his opinion that the Municipal Committee was a public servant and that therefore the agent who was appointed to represent them in filing a complaint in Court need not be examined as provided under S. 200 (aa), Criminal P. C.

Before me it was admitted by the Standing Counsel, who appeared for the Crown, that the view taken by Mr. Woodward, that the complainant was the Municipal Committee, was wrong and that the complaint was really by Santsingh the City Superintendent. It, is, however, contended that Santsingh was a public servant and therefore his examination was not necessary. The learned counsel for the applicant contended that Santsingh was only a public servant as a police officer and in discharge of his duties under the Police Act, but that he was not a public servant when making a complaint under the Municipal Act, nor could the making of such a complaint be said to be in the discharge of his official duties. I am clearly of opinion that this view is wrong and that as a Municipal Committee is empowered to delegate its authority of making complaints under S. 218 (2), Municipal Act, when such authority is delegated to a public servant by virtue of his office and not by name, he acts in his capacity as a public servant when making a complaint within the meaning of S. 200, proviso (aa), Criminal P. C. It is further clear that a police officer is a public servant under clause 8, S. 21, I. P. C., and one of the duties mentioned in that clause is to give information of offences. I would further point out that under S. 23, Police Act, it is the duty of every police officer to obey and execute all orders lawfully issued to him by any competent authority and therefore a police officer is bound by that section to make complaints when authorized to do so by a Municipal Committee under S. 218, Municipal Act, as the Municipal Committee must be held to be a competent authority within the meaning of S. 23, Police Act.

I am of opinion, then, that the view taken by the Bench of Honorary Magistrates is correct that the complaint was by Santsingh, but that Santsingh was a public servant and was acting in the discharge of his official duties in making the complaint and that therefore his personal attendance of examination was not necessary under S. 200 (aa), Criminal P. C., nor was the complaint liable to be dismissed according to the proviso of S. 247, of the Code. I would only add that, in my opinion, the view taken by the Sessions Judge, that the complaint was by the Municipal Committee and not by Santsingh, is incorrect and that also the view propounded by him that a Municipal Committee is a public servant, is incorrect. A corporation such as a Municipal Committee, is not a public servant though the members forming the corporation are public servants. I therefore dismiss the application for revision and send the case back to the Honorary Magistrate for decision according to law.

v.

Emperor—Opposite Party.

Criminal Revn. No. 21 of 1929, Decided on 4th April 1929, from decision of Sess. Judge, Darbhanga.

Criminal P. C., Ss. 347 and 369—Sentence pronounced before completing judgment is illegal and vitiates conviction.

Pronouncing sentence before completing the judgment, that is to say before preparing the essential parts of it, such as the statement of points for determination and the reasons for decision, makes the sentence illegal and vitiates conviction; 14 All. 242 and 27 Mad. 237, Foll.; 21 Cal. 121, Dist. [1911 C 1]

H. L. Nandkeolyar and Gopal Prasad—for Petitioner.

James, J.—In this case the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Samastipur delivered sentences on 10th September 1928. The persons convicted appealed to the Court of Sessions, but they were unable to obtain a copy of any part of the judgment, except the final portion consisting of the findings and the sentences until 1st October when the judgment was completed.

Mr. H. L. Nandkeolyar argues that the failure to sign and date the complete judgment at the time of pronouncing it, vitiates the conviction and sentences. In Damu Senapati v. Sridhar (1) two Judges of the Calcutta High Court held that the failure to complete judgment before delivering the sentence was curable by the provisions of S. 537, Criminal P. C., but it is not clear that the judgment in that case was not actually completed on the day when the sentence was delivered. In Queen Empress v. Hargobind Singh (2) Sir John Edge held that it was illegal to pass sentence before judgment was written, and in Madras, in Bandanu Athayya v. Emperor (3) Sir Arnold White held that when the judgment was written some days after the passing of sentence, the defect vitiates the conviction and sentence. The provisions of S. 367, Criminal P. C., are mandatory; the judgment must contain the decision and the reasons for the decision and it must be dated and signed by the presiding officer in open Court at the time of pronouncing it. Under S. 369, no Court, after signing its judgment, can alter or review it; and as the judgment must be signed at the time of pronouncing it, this implies that no substantial alteration or addition can be made after delivery. In the present case, essential parts of the judgment, that is to say, the statement of the points for determination, and the reasons for the decision, were not prepared until three weeks after the pronouncement of the judgment in open Court. This is clearly in contravention of Ss. 367 and 369, Criminal P. C., and the convictions and sentences must be set aside. We do not consider it necessary that the accused should be subjected to the harassment of a retrial, particularly in view of the fact that the sentences imposed upon most of them were to run concurrently with the sentences passed in the case which has been disposed of in Criminal Revision No. 20 of 1929 in which the convictions were upheld. We, therefore, set aside the order of the lower Court and direct that the petitioners in this case be acquitted.

Guddai Mutayalu, In the matter of.

Civil Ref. No. 7 of 1929, Decided on 19th August 1929, made by Commissioner for Workmen's Compensation.

(a) Workmen's Compensation Act (1923), S. 30 (d)—Except as provided by S. 30 no authority is conferred on any Government Officer to direct commissioner to reverse his decision.

Section 30 allows appeals to the High Court from certain orders, in particular, from an order disallowing a claim of a person alleging himself to be a dependant. Except, however, as provided by this section no appeal lies from his orders and there is no authority conferred, by the Act, or by rules framed thereunder on the Financial Commissioner or any other officer of Government to direct the Commissioner to reverse any decision at which he may have arrived and if a Financial Commissioner purports to direct the Commissioner to reopen the proceedings, his action is ultra viros. [P 93 C 1]

(b) Workmen's Compensation Act (1923), S. 8 (4)—Commissioner has power to order redeposit of compensation.

Subject to the observance of the provisions of S. 8, the Commissioner has power to order the redeposit of the compensation. [P 94 C 1]

(c) Workmen's Compensation Act (1923), S. 8—Act does not forbid compensation being paid otherwise than through Commissioner.

The Act does not forbid compensation being paid otherwise than through the Commissioner. The whole scheme of S. 8 under sub-S. (1), whereof compensation "shall" be paid to the Commissioner, seems to be designed for the protection of the employer against claims in respect of accidents where his liability is admitted or established. [P 94 C 1, 2]

Saw Po Chit—for Employer.

Ormiston, J.—This is a reference under S. 27, Workmen's Compensation Act 1923 (Act 8 of 1923), by a Commissioner for Workmen's Compensation appointed under that Act. On 1st February 1927, an accident occurred in a mill belonging to Ah Nyan at Zinmathwe, Thaton District, which resulted in the death on the same day of a workman employed therein named Guddai Ramannah or Yammaya. The accident was reported to the Commissioner on 25th March 1927, whereupon notice was issued to the mill owner to deposit the amount of the compensation specified in S. 4 (1)-A of the Act. The mill owner, on 9th May 1927, pursuant to S. 8 (1), deposited the sum of Rs. 807-8-6, furnishing at the same time, as provided in R. 6 of the Workmen's Compensation Rules 1924, a statement in Form-A annexed to those rules therein describing the workman as Yamaya of Zinmathwe village, which must have been at the time his correct address. R. 7 requires the Commissioner to cause to be displayed in a prominent position outside his office an accurate list of the deposits received by him under S. 8 (1), together with the names and addresses of depositors and of the workmen in respect of whose deaths the deposits have been made.

The Commissioner ordered this to be done, and on 11th May 1927, it was done, the list displayed containing the name of Yammaya of Zinmathwe village. S. 8 (4) directs the Commissioner, on the deposit of any money under sub-S. (1), if he thinks it necessary, to cause notice to be published or to be served on each dependant in such manner as he thinks fit, calling upon the dependants to appear before him on such date as he may fix for determining the amount of compensation. If he is satisfied, after any enquiry which he may deem necessary, that no dependant exists, he shall repay the balance of the money to the employer by whom it was paid. On 6th June 1927, no one having appeared to claim compensation, the Commissioner directed a notice to be published calling upon the dependants to appear before him on 2nd July 1927, for determining the distribution of the compensation. The notice was to be published at the mill, at the headman's house, and also at a conspicuous place in the village where the mill was situate, by beat of gong after reading out the contents of the notice. Copies were ordered to be posted also at the District Court and at the Deputy Commissioner's Court-house. The notices were so published, and no one having appeared on the day fixed, they were so published a second time. The notices described the workman as Yammaya of Zinmathwe. No one appeared on 24th August 1927, which was the adjourned date.

The Commissioner was satisfied that no dependant existed, basing his decision in part on S. 10 (1) of the Act, to which I will presently refer. Apart from that subsection, he had ample materials on which he could have arrived at his conclusion. He was not obliged to serve the notice on any particular dependant, and he could have had no means of knowing who the dependants were, neither the Act nor the rules providing that he should be supplied with a list of them, or with any address of the workman other than the village where he was working at the time of the accident. The Commissioner having recorded his satisfaction that no dependant existed directed the return of the deposit to the mill owner, which was done on 16th September 1927.

On 28th September 1927, the Commissioner received a claim from Guddai Mutayalu, the widow of the workman residing in the Ganjam District of the Madras Presidency, which was supplemented by a further claim received on 1st October 1927. The claims were filed, a copy of the second claim having been sent by the claimant to the mill owner for information and favourable disposal. The mill owner made to the widow an ex gratia payment, which she acknowledged.

On 21st June 1928, the Officer-in-Charge, Labour Statistics Bureau, Rangoon, as a result of an inspection of the proceedings in the case wrote to the Financial Commissioner (transferred subjects) criticising the action of the Commissioner, and suggesting that he should be enlightened as to the correct procedure. He received a reply dated 9th August 1928, from the Financial Commissioner, endorsing the criticisms of the Officer-in-Charge, Labour Statistics Bureau, and adding further criticisms. The reply concluded by requesting that the attention of the Commissioner be drawn to the alleged errors in procedure and that he be asked to take steps or rectify them. The claimant, he wrote, should be given an opportunity of proving her claim, for which purpose it was suggested that the District Magistrate, Ganjam, be asked to investigate it.

The correspondence was forwarded to the Commissioner, who after causing the claim to be investigated as suggested, and satisfying himself that it was a true claim, on 26th March 1929, required the mill owner to redeposit the amount of compensation. The mill owner objected on the ground that the Commissioner having by his order held that no claim was admissible, because none was made within six months of the date of the death, the Financial Commissioner had no power to reverse the order and direct the proceedings to be reopened. The Commissioner appears to have been inclined to agree with this view, and, in consequence, he made the present reference. It should be stated that the Commissioner who made the order directing the return of the compensation, the Commissioner who reopened the proceedings on receipt of the Financial Commissioner's letter, and the Commissioner who made the reference, were successive holders of the office.

The questions referred are:

(1) Was the Commissioner correct in accepting the reversal of his order by the Financial Commissioner and reopening the case without reference to the High Court?

(2) If he was correct, has he the power to direct a new deposit of the sum returned to (presumably "by" is meant) him?

Another question is suggested and may be thus formulated:

(3) If the answer to questions (1) and (2) are answered in the affirmative, should the ex gratia payment of Rs. 300 be deducted from the amount of compensation payable to the claimant?

The answer to the first question is simple. The Act gives the Financial Commissioner no power to issue any such order. S. 30 allows appeals to the High Court from certain orders, in particular, from an order disallowing a claim of a person alleging himself to be a dependant. Except, however, as provided by this section, no appeal lies from his orders, and there is no authority conferred by the Act, or by rules framed thereunder, on the Financial Commissioner or any other officer of Government to direct the Commissioner to reverse any decision at which he may have arrived. If and in so far as the Financial Commissioner did purport to direct the Commissioner to reopen the proceedings, his action was ultra vires. It is open, of course to anyone to make suggestions to the Commissioner, but if such suggestions are made by a superior officer of Government, it is desirable that they be not made in such a form as to be capable of interpretation as orders.

The second question, in the form in which it is put, having regard to the answer to the first question, does not exactly arise. It suggests, however, the question whether the Commissioner, having satisfied himself in the manner prescribed by the Act and the rules made thereunder that there were no dependants of the deceased workman, and having, in consequence, refunded to the employer the compensation deposited by him, has the power to reopen the matter on the application of a workman and to require the redeposit of the compensation. I have already stated that, in my opinion, the Commissioner had complied with the provisions of the Act and the rules, and had materials before him on which he could be satisfied that the workman had no dependants. He was, therefore, amply justified in refunding the deposit to the mill owner. S. 10 (1) enacts in the case of the death of a workman resulting from an accident, that no proceedings for the recovery of compensation shall be maintainable before a Commissioner, unless the claim for compensation with respect to the accident has been instituted within six months from the date of the accident but there is a proviso that the Commissioner may admit and decide any claim to compensation in any case, notwithstanding that the claim has not been instituted within six months from the date of the death, if he is satisfied that the failure to institute the claim was due to sufficient cause. At the date of the order of 24th August 1927, no claim had been instituted before the Commissioner by any dependant, and being satisfied that there was no dependant, all that he had to do was to record that fact and, under the provisions of S. 8 (4) to order the return of the deposit. Subsequent to the order, on 28th September 1927, he received a claim from an alleged dependant, which was amended by a claim received three days later. It was, under the terms of the proviso, open to him to admit and decide the claim, if he was satisfied that there was sufficient reason for not instituting it within six months from the death. Once the claim is instituted it lies open to the Commissioner, whether on his own motion, or on the suggestion of the Financial Commissioner (Transferred Subjects), or of any one else, to satisfy himself whether or not the applicant had brought herself within the terms of the proviso. The Commissioner, however, has never had his attention directed to this aspect of the case, and it is still open to him to make the necessary enquiries with a view to ascertaining whether there was sufficient cause for the delay, and if he is satisfied that there was such cause, to admit the claim.

If the claim is admitted, he has to decide it. The mill owner has already admitted liability for the consequence of the accident by depositing the compensation. It is suggested that the Commissioner, having under S. 8 (4), directed its refund, is functus officio and that he has no power under the Act to direct its redeposit. I do not consider that there is any substance in this argument. Section 8 (1) provides that compensation "payable" in respect of a workman whose injury has resulted in death shall be deposited with the Commissioner. The employer may dispute his liability. In that event, under S. 19 (1) the question of his liability has to be decided by the Commissioner. If the Commissioner decides against him, there is an obligation on the part of the employer to pay the compensation to the Commissioner, which may be enforced by the issue of an order under R. 8 of the Workmen's Compensation Rules, on the application of a dependant, but until the decision there is no such obligation. I fail to understand why an employer who has admitted liability should be in any better position than an employer who has not admitted liability. The circumstances that he has already made the deposit and that it has been returned to him under what must ex hypothesi be considered to be a mistake of fact, seem to me to be immaterial. I am of the opinion that subject to the observance of the provisions of R. 8, the Commissioner has power to order the redeposit of the compensation. I should point out, although the question does not strictly fall within the scope of this reference, that under R. 6, the employer is entitled to be a party to the distribution proceedings, and that it is open to him, if so advised, to contest the status of the alleged dependant.

The last question, in the form in which I think it should be stated, is whether the ex gratia payment of Rs. 300 should be deducted from the amount of compensation payable to the claimant. I am assuming for the purpose of the answer that it will be either admitted or established that the Rs. 300 was paid by the employer to the widow and was so paid as compensation for the accident. If there is any dispute on the point it should be enquired into and settled by the Commissioner. The Act does not forbid compensation being paid otherwise than through the Commissioner. The whole scheme of S. 8 under sub-S. (1) whereof compensation "shall" be paid to the Commissioner, seems to be designed for the protection of the employer against claims in respect of accidents where his liability is admitted or established. If he does so pay the compensation, he is protected against the claims of all dependants, whether or not they have applied to be parties to the distribution. If he makes the distribution himself he lays himself open to attack by persons who may afterwards turn up and claim to be dependants. But if he pays the correct amount to the only person who is a dependant, it is not, I think, open to that person to claim the amount over again, and if he makes to him a payment of less than the correct amount, he should, I think, be only required to pay the difference. It would probably be a protection to the employer in the present instance against the claims of other persons who may hereafter put forward belated claims if (in the event of the widow's claim to compensation being admitted and decided in her favour) the employer were to pay the whole of the compensation to the Commissioner under S. 8 (1). Section 8 (4) does not oblige the Commissioner to cause notice to be published and in the present instance, he might well dispense with republication. If that event he would refund Rs. 300 to the employer and pay the balance to the widow.

Criminal P. C., S. 503—Charge under Penal Code, S. 498—Identity of woman enticed in question—Accused insisting on issue of commission for her examination—Woman should be examined in chambers and not on commission.

In a prosecution under S. 498, Penal Code, where the identity of the woman, alleged to have been enticed, is in question and the accused insists on issuing a commission for her examination on the ground that she is married to a zamindar who observes pardah, the better course is, instead of issuing commission, the Dipchand Chandumal—for Applicant.

Hirdaram—for Opponents.

Percival, J. C.—This is a revision application against the order of the learned District Magistrate, Nawabshah, in which he directed that a commission should issue for the examination of the witness Sumri.

The case is brought by one Mahomed, son of Khairo Ode, against Bacho and others under S. 498, I. P. C. and it has been proceeding for a considerable time before the District Magistrate, Nawabshah, and the question is whether Sumri, who, according to the prosecution story, has been enticed away by the opponents, should give evidence at Nawabshah or be examined on commission at Dadu in the Larkana District. The complainant says that Sumri is his wife, while on the other hand the accused say that she is not the wife of the complainant, but she is married to a zamindar, named Chutto, who observes pardah; and that therefore a commission ought to issue.

In the course of the discussion it was admitted on behalf of the opponent that she could appear before the Magistrate at Dadu on commission; and that enquiry could be made as to whether she was wife of the complainant or not. Thus she will have to unveil herself at Dadu, as her identity is questioned. But if, this is once admitted, there does not appear that there is much distinction between her being examined on commission at Dadu and her appearing in chambers before the Magistrate at Nawabshah. Thus the question therefore really is whether she should appear before the Magistrate at Dadu or whether she should be obliged to go to Nawabshah. If we accept that position, then it seems to me that the right of the complainant that she should be examined by the Magistrate who is actually trying the case should prevail. It is suggested as she is living in the Larkana District, it will be hardship to her to be brought to Nawabshah, and reference is made to Vishnoo Nainaram v. Dipchand Sital Das (1) in which it is stated that the issue of commission is discretionary in criminal cases. It may be noted, however, that even in that case it was laid down that such discretion should be sparingly exercised and it was not granted in that particular instance.

It appears therefore that, on the ground of the distance of Dadu from Nawabshah, there is not sufficient reason for the grant of commission; and on the ground of her being pardanishin woman (assuming that she is a pardanishin woman because that is a question which is disputed between the two parties) there does not appear to be a sufficient reason, as indicated above, why she should be examined before the Magistrate at Dadu and not before the Magistrate at Nawabshah in chambers. It is laid down in Imperator v. Mewa Ram (2):

"Pardanishin woman cited as witnesses can be examined in suitable cases on commission, but the better course would probably be to examine them in chambers."

This view of the case appears to me to be correct; and, having regard to all the facts of the case, I am of opinion that the discretion exercised by the learned District Magistrate for the grant of commission was not justified in this case, and the better course would be, as indicated in Imperator v. Mewa Ram (2) that the woman Sumri should be examined in chambers at Nawabshah.

The order of the learned District Magistrate, is, therefore set aside, and Sumri is directed to appear before the trying Magistrate at Nawabshah, and be examined there in chambers. It may be stated that one objection taken was that there was a risk of the woman being dragged away by force by the relations and friends of the complainant. It does not appear, however, that this objection can be held to be valid. The opponent, if necessary can apply for police protection to prevent any such outrage taking place in or near the Court where she is to be examined.

Barlee, A. J. C.—I concur. The learned District Magistrate has given as a reason for his order that the lady is now married to a zamindar who observes parda. As it is the question at issue whether she is the wife of the zamindar or the run away wife of the complainant, I take it, the learned District Magistrate really meant that she must be assumed for the present to be the wife of a man with whom she is living and to be entitled to parda until it is proved that she is the wife of the complainant; and that he was unwilling to allow that this ostensible wife of a respectable zamindar should undergo the indignity of appearing in Court until there is some good reason for supposing that she was contrary. I think that there is considerable force in this view and where it is possible to avoid the examination of a lady in Court, I think, we should do so. But it is not a question in this case of merely recording a statement of a witness, for the principal question at issue is as to the identity of this lady; and whether she appears at Dadu or whether she appears at Nawabshah she will have to remove her Burka and expose her face to the Magistrate and to the witnesses for the prosecution. Otherwise the complainant will not have a fair chance of proving his case. This being so, I think, the most of the objections disappear. For it is obvious if the lady is to be obliged to expose her face in Court or in chambers, it is far better that she should go to Nawabshah and appear in the chambers of the trying Magistrate than that she should be examined at Dadu.

For these reasons, I concur in the order proposed by the learned Judicial Commissioner.

Muhammad Akbar Khan—Respondent.

Criminal Revn. No. 580 of 1929, Decided on 10th May 1929, reported by Sess. Judge. Attock, on 21st March 1929.

Criminal P. C., S. 488, Cl. 4—Wife living in adultery does not automatically deprive her of maintenance unless maintenance order is cancelled.

A wife who had been granted maintenance sued for recovery of arrears due and an order cancelling the maintenance on ground of adultery had been afterwards passed,

Held: that the cancelling order could not have retrospective effect so as to disallow the prior allowed maintenance and that a maintenance order stood good until it is cancelled.

[P 96 C 2]

Ghulam Mohyuddin—for Applicant.

Report.—On 12th July 1921, Mt. Bhag Sultan, applicant, was awarded maintenance at the rate of Rs. 13 per mensem from her husband Muhammad Akbar Khan respondent.

On 23rd June 1928, Muhammad Akbar Khan put in an application that as Mt. Bhag Sultan was living in adultery the order of maintenance should be cancelled. This application was granted on 11th December 1928, and I rejected the application for revision on 22nd February 1929.

On 7th July 1928, Mt. Bhag Sultan applied for the realization of Rs. 156 as the amount of her maintenance from 1st August 1927 to 31st July 1928. This application was rejected on the ground that the order of her maintenance had been cancelled.

The learned Magistrate having cancelled the order of maintenance on 11th December 1928, could not make it retrospective and disallow the maintenance from 1st August 1927 to 31st July 1928, for during that period the order of maintenance was in force. According to Cl. 4, S. 488, no wife shall be entitled to receive maintenance from her husband under this section, if she is living in adultery; but the fact that a wife is living in adultery does not automatically deprive her of the maintenance, for the order of maintenance once passed stands good until it has been cancelled. I have, therefore, the honour to report that the order of the learned Magistrate which is not warranted by law should be set aside.

Order.—Nobody appears on behalf of the respondent. I agree with the learned Sessions Judge that the order of the Magistrate could not be given a retrospective effect. The wife is entitled to the allowance that was due to her before the order under sub-S. 4, S. 488, Criminal P. C., had been made against her. I, therefore, set aside the order of the Magistrate disallowing maintenance for the prior period.

Criminal Appeal No. 529 of 1929, Decided on 25th November 1929, from order of Addl. Sess. Judge, Lahore, D/- 2nd February 1929.

(a) Criminal P. C., S. 196—Sanction for offence under Penal Code, S. 294-A—Name of accused appearing on back of paper—Presumption was raised under Evidence Act, S. 114, illus (e) and sanction held to be valid

While sanctioning the prosecution of accused for an offence under Penal Code S. 294-A the name of the accused was shown on the back of the paper instead of in the body of the sanction merely because there was not sufficient space left on the front side.

Held : that the initial presumption was that all the official acts were done in a regular manner and hence the sanction was valid.

(b) Penal Code, S. 294-A—Delivery of ticket books of lottery is sufficient publication.

Where the ticket books of a lottery were delivered with a view to the tickets therein being sold to others, the High Court, taking the delivery as a sufficient publication, confirmed the conviction of the accused under the latter part of S. 294-A : A. I. R. 1926 Sind 213, Dist.

[P 98 C 1]

Abdul Rashid—for the Crown.

B. R. Puri—for Respondent.

Bhide, J.—This is an appeal by the Local Government against the acquittal of one Mr. D. C. Jolly who was convicted by the trial Court under the second part of S. 294-A, I. P. C., and sentenced to a fine of Rs. 500 but was acquitted on appeal by the Additional Sessions Judge, Lahore.

A preliminary point has been raised by the learned counsel for the respondent that the whole trial was vitiated by the absence of a proper sanction under S. 196, Criminal P. C. It appears that sanction of the Local Government was produced at the outset but the names of the persons against whom the sanction was given were shown on the back of the paper instead of being mentioned in the body of the order. The order, however, clearly refers to 'under-mentioned' persons. The names of the persons were apparently shown on the back of the paper merely because there was not sufficient space left on the front side. The name of the present respondent is mentioned first and no question of any subsequent addition arises. The initial presumption is that all official acts are done in a regular manner. It cannot, therefore, be believed that the Chief Secretary signed the sanction, without the names of the accused persons being specified. No objection to the sanction was taken till the stage of arguments. If it had been taken at the initial stage—as it should have been when the sanction was produced the point could easily have been elucidated by putting the Chief Secretary into the witness box. We overrule the preliminary objection.

The case against the respondent briefly was that he was guilty of publishing 'proposals' in connexion with an unauthorized lottery inasmuch as he distributed tickets thereof which embodied the conditions on which prizes in the lottery were obtainable. The learned Additional Sessions Judge found that the respondent had a hand in the printing of the tickets and that a large number of tickets were found in the office of Messrs. Jolly Brothers at Lahore. He considered, however, the evidence as regards the actual sale of the lottery tickets by the respondents to be doubtful and held further that even if that evidence were to be believed a casual sale of a few tickets would not amount to sufficient 'publication' for the purposes of part 2, S. 294-A, I. P. C. It has been proved beyond any doubt that it was the respondent who gave the printing order to the Civil and Military Gazette Press. The learned counsel for the Crown has urged that this fact alone constitutes sufficient publication and has cited 26 Cox's Criminal Cases 664 as an authority in support of the contention. But this was never the case of the prosecution up till now and the respondent had no chance of meeting it. It was apparently assumed in the Courts below that printing did not constitute publication and even in the grounds of appeal before this Court it has been described as a 'preparation.' We, therefore, do not think it fair to allow the prosecution to set up an entirely new case at this stage.

The decision of the appeal really turns on the credibility of the evidence as regards the delivery of the lottery tickets by the respondent to three or four persons, who have appeared as witnesses. The trial Court remarked in one place that the fact the witnesses were met by a Head Constable of Police immediately after they came out of the office of Messrs. Jolly Brothers with the lottery tickets, raised the doubt that these people were sent to the office by the Head Constable himself. But even, if this were so, this fact alone will, obviously, not be sufficient to discard the testimony of those witnesses. The trial Court has not referred to any other ground for discrediting the evidence and in fact eventually believed it; for it has given a clear finding in the latter part of the judgment that it was proved that 'Mr. D. C. Jolly gave the tickets to several prosecution witnesses.' The learned Additional Sessions Judge, before whom the Crown was unfortunately not represented, seems to have overlooked this finding and assumed that the trial Court did not believe the evidence of the above witnesses. He has not discussed that evidence nor given any reasons whatever for considering it to be doubtful. Apparently, he considered it unnecessary to discuss the evidence as he held on the authority of A. I. R. 1926 Sind 213, that a 'mere casual and gratuitous' delivery of a few lottery tickets does not constitute an offence under S. 294-A, I. P. C. The remarks of the Judicial Commissioner, Sind, on this point in the above ruling are really in the nature of obiter dicta but apart from this they cannot apply to the present case as it does not appear that the delivery of tickets was casual or gratuitous in the present instance. The evidence shows clearly that the ticket books were delivered with a view to the tickets therein being sold by the witnesses to others, and this cannot be considered to be, in any sense, a mere casual or gratuitous delivery.

It has been urged by the learned counsel for the respondent that in an appeal from an order of acquittal, the appellate Court is not justified in interfering if the question is merely one of the credibility of the evidence, unless the finding of the Court below is manifestly wrong or perverse. But in the present instance, the finding of the Additional Sessions Judge does appear to fall under the latter category. The learned counsel for the respondent in taking us through the evidence was unable to point out any substantial ground for disbelieving the prosecution witnesses who have deposed to the delivery of the tickets. The witnesses appear to be disinterested. The trial Court, which heard the evidence, relied on their evidence while the learned Additional Sessions Judge gave no reasons whatever for discarding it. In these circumstances, we think the finding of the learned Additional Sessions Judge must be held to be manifestly wrong.

We accept the appeal and restore the conviction of the respondent under part 2, S. 294-A, I. P. C. As regards the sentence, the offence is punishable with fine up to Rs. 1,000 only. It seems unfortunate that the Crown was not represented in the Court of Sessions. If it had been represented, perhaps, the necessity of this appeal would not have arisen. Taking into consideration all the circumstances we sentence the respondent to a fine of Rs. 100 only. In default of payment of fine he will undergo simple imprisonment for two months.

v.

Emperor—Opposite Party.

Criminal Appeal No. 835 of 1929, Decided on 7th November 1929, from order of Sess. Judge, Ferozepore, D/- 21st August 1929.

Criminal Trial—Prosecution witness examined in Committing Magistrate's Court but not in Sessions Court on ground that he was hostile—Witness present but not examined by defence — Public Prosecutor is not bound to produce and examine such witness.

A prosecution witness was examined in the Court of the Committing Magistrate but was not examined by the Public Prosecutor as a witness in the Sessions Court on the ground that the witness was hostile. The witness was, however, present and the defence did not avail itself of the opportunity of examining him.

Held: that the Public Prosecutor was not bound to produce any witness who was not expected to give true evidence: A. I. R. 1922 Lah. 1, Rel. on. [P 100 C 1]

Hem Raj Wadhwa—for Appellant.

D. R. Sawhney—for the Crown.

Judgment.—Amar Singh, a Jat of the village Langiana, has been convicted in this case by the Sessions Judge, Ferozepore, of the murder of Mt. Saddam and sentenced to death. He has appealed and his case is also before us under S. 374, Criminal P. C., for confirmation of the death sentence. The murder was committed on 25th April 1924, but the trial was delayed, as the appellant is said to have been absconding till he was recently arrested. The material facts as alleged by the prosecution are briefly as follows: The deceased Mt. Saddam was at first married to Bhagwan Singh, brother of Amar Singh appellant. Bhagwan Singh died some six or seven years before the murder. Amar Singh, with whom Mt. Saddam was living thereafter, forced her to go through some form of marriage ceremony with him at Chambeli in the Faridkot State, but Mt. Saddam soon managed to escape and married thereafter Nikka Singh (P.W. 2) and began to live with him. Amar Singh brought a criminal complaint under S. 498, I. P. C., as well as a civil suit for restitution of conjugal rights against Nikka Singh but was unsuccessful. The relations between the parties were strained and the appellant as well as Nikka Singh were bound down under S. 107, Criminal P. C.

On the morning of 25th April 1924, at about 10 a. m. as Mt. Saddam was returning to her house after throwing some refuse on a dunghill at a distance of about 100 karams, she was attacked by the appellant with a chhavi and given several blows which resulted in her death. Her cries attracted Nikka Singh and the other witnesses to the spot, but the appellant managed to escape. The matter was promptly reported to the police by Nikka Singh on the same day at about 3 p. m.

The medical evidence proves beyond any doubt that Mt. Saddam was done to death by inflicting blows with a heavy sharp-edged weapon like a chhavi. The evidence as to the motive for the crime seems equally clear and is supported by documentary evidence in the shape of the judgments in the civil and criminal cases between the appellant and Nikka Singh. The eyewitnesses to the murder are Nikka Singh, Waryama, Raunaq Ram, Jiwan Singh, Sundar Singh, Prithi Nath and Sujana Singh. The first four appeared in the Sessions Court, but the remaining witnesses could not be examined in that Court, as the whereabouts of Sundar Singh and Prithi Nath were unknown and Sujana Singh had become insane. The evidence of Sundar Singh was, however, taken by the Committing Magistrate and that evidence as well as the statement of Prithi Nath and Sujana Singh taken down under S. 512, Criminal P. C., were transferred to the Sessions record. The learned counsel for the appellant has strenuously urged that the statements of Prithi Nath and Sujana Singh were not recorded by the Magistrate himself as required by S. 512, Criminal P. C., and were, therefore, inadmissible. The learned Public Prosecutor has contended on the other hand that the statements were duly recorded in accordance with the general provisions of Chap. 25, Criminal P. C. But from the evidence of the Ahlmad of the Magistrate's Court, who was examined as a witness, it seems doubtful if the evidence was recorded even in the presence of the Magistrate. The Magistrate has not recorded any memorandum of the substance of the evidence, nor given any reasons for not recording it.

In these circumstances, it seems clear, that even the provisions of Chap. 25 cannot be said to have been duly complied with. But even excluding the evidence of Prithi Nath and Sujana Singh, there seems to be ample evidence on the record to establish appellant's guilt and there is, therefore, no good ground for remanding the case for retrial as we are requested to do. There is some doubt as to whether Nikka Singh actually witnessed the crime, as his presence was not noticed by the other witnesses except Waryaman and the latter states that he saw Nikka Singh on the roof of his house while Nikka Singh says that he went to the lane when the murder was committed. But there seems to be no good reason whatever to disbelieve the testimony of the remaining witnesses. These witnesses appear to be disinterested. They were examined either on the first or the second day of the investigation and their cross-examination in the Court has not disclosed any substantial ground for discrediting their evidence. In the first information report Nikka Singh had tried to implicate two tenants of the appellant along with him as the assailants. The facts that these witnesses have not supported

Nikka Singh on that point goes to show that they are not giving evidence at his bidding. •

The learned counsel for the appellant urged in the end that one Jethu who was named as an eyewitness in the first information report was not produced in the Sessions Court. This witness was examined in the Court of the Committing Magistrate but did not state the facts correctly as alleged by the prosecution. The Public Prosecutor did not examine him as a witness in the Sessions Court in the circumstances on the ground that the witness was hostile. The witness was, however, present and the appellant had the opportunity of examining him in defence, but did not care to avail himself of it. The learned counsel for the appellant has urged that the Public Prosecutor could not give up the witness merely because he was 'hostile'. But the Public Prosecutor was not bound to produce any witness who was (according to his case) not expected to give true evidence: cf. Narain Das v. Emperor (1). In addition to the evidence of reliable eyewitnesses, there is also the significant fact that the appellant was absconding for some years after the murder, of which he has failed to give any reasonable explanation. The guilt of the appellant seems to be established beyond any doubt. His appeal is accordingly dismissed and the sentence of death confirmed.

P.N./R.K. Sentence confirmed.

Emperor
v.

Soopi—Accused—Respondent.

Criminal Appeal No. 526 of 1929, Decided on 18th November 1929, against order of First Class Magistrate, Gurdaspur, D/- 22nd December 1928.

(a) Evidence Act, S. 8—Rape—No direct evidence—Child on whom rape committed refused to make any statement—Prosecution tried to put statement of mother as regards answers given by child in reply to questions put to her—Statements held not admissible.

There was no direct evidence of the alleged offence of rape committed by a boy on a child. The raped child in answer to certain questions put to her by her mother made certain statements implicating the accused. When placed before the Court the child cried and in spite of every facility given by the Court to make her feel at home refused to make any statement whatsoever. The counsel for the Crown realizing the difficulty asked the Court to admit under provision of S. 8, the statement of the mother as regards the answers given by the child in reply to questions put to her.

Held: that the answers given by the child in reply to mother's queries could not be admitted in evidence by letting in the mother's statement and that to hold otherwise would be admitting hearsay evidence. [P 101, C 2]

(b) Evidence Act, S. 24—Oral confession—Accused not shown to know language in which questions put but in answer making signs—Conduct held did not amount to confession.

Where an accused, not shown to have understood English, is asked in broken English as to whether he was responsible for the act and he nods his head and salams in reply, the conduct does not amount to confession. It is impossible to determine what the accused understood to be the meaning of remarks addressed to him as to his complicity in the crime and without being satisfied that the accused exactly understood the meaning and the import of the question addressed to him, the signs made by him, standing by themselves are meaningless. He might have completely misunderstood what was sought to be conveyed to him and have thus made the signs which were intended to be in answer to something which was entirely different from what his questioners were anxious to put him and therefore confession remains unproved and so is no confession. [P 101 C 2, P 102 C 1]

(c) Criminal Trial—Conviction—Accused cannot be convicted on suspicion only.

Suspicion cannot take the place of legal evidence and proof and on the strength of mere suspicion an accused cannot be convicted.

Abdul Rashid—for the Crown.

Farrukh Hussain—for Respondent.

Agha Haidar, J.—A brutal and dastardly crime was undoubtedly committed on the person of a child aged about four years and nine months. The respondent, Soopi, a lad who gave his age as eleven or twelve years but who, according to the Magistrate, appeared to be about fifteen or sixteen was charged under S. 376, I. P. C., and tried by Magistrate with S. 30 powers. That Magistrate acquitted the accused. The Government has preferred an appeal to this Court against the order of acquittal under the provisions of S. 417, Criminal P. C.

The unfortunate victim of the rape is Violet Bartlett, the daughter of Sergeant Bartlett and Mrs. Bartlett. The respondent was in their service for four weeks but was dismissed on 27th February, 1928. The case for the prosecution is that Mrs. Bartlett on 27th February 1928, took a siesta after lunch, and that, while she was asleep the respondent raped the child Violet Bartlett. On 2nd March 1928 at about 12-30 p. m. the girl complained to her mother that she felt pain in her private parts. The mother, on examining the child's body, had no difficulty in finding that the girl had been raped and it is said that, on her asking the girl as to who was the person who had done the deed, the girl informed her that it was the accused. Sergeant Bartlett was sent for and the wife conveyed to him what the girl had told her. Sergeant Bartlett at once communicated the matter to the military police, with the result that the accused, who, after his dismissal by Sergeant Bartlett, had entered the service of Sergeant Major Sturgess, was brought to Sergeant Bartlett's quarters in the custody of the military policeman, Private Hughes. Private Ellis, the medical orderly, examined the private parts of the girl and without any hesitation came to the conclusion that the child had been raped. The matter was reported at the thana. In the meantime the child and the accused were both sent to the Civil Surgeon, who, after medically examining them, came to the conclusion that the private parts of the girl contained some gonorrheal discharge, while a similar discharge was found in the urethra of the accused. It is said that, when the accused was brought to the house occupied by Bartlett, the girl, Violet Bartlett, as soon as she saw him, said that he was the man who had "interfered with her." It is further stated that, on certain questions being put to the accused as to whether he had committed the act, he "confessed" that he had done so.

The question for the determination of the Court, therefore, is whether or not the guilt of the accused has been sufficiently established by reliable and legal evidence. The learned Magistrate, who tried the case, as already pointed out, did not consider the evidence sufficient to support a conviction. We have further to see whether, having regard to the manner in which S. 417, Criminal P. C., has been considered in a series of judgments in this Court, it can be said that the order of the Magistrate was foolish or palpably wrong and should not be allowed to stand.

It is admitted that there is no direct evidence of the alleged rape. The child according to the prosecution on 2nd March 1928, in answer to certain questions put to her by her mother, made certain statements implicating the accused. When placed before the Court, the child cried and, in spite of every facility given by the Court to make her feel at home, refused to make any statement whatsoever. The counsel for the Crown, realizing this difficulty asked the Court to admit, under the provisions of S. 8, Evidence Act, the statement of the mother as regards the answers given by the child in reply to questions put to her and relied upon a certain English precedent. This precedent, however, had no bearing whatsoever on the present case and may be dismissed from consideration at once. We have considered the language of S. 8, Evidence Act, and, in our judgment, the answers given by the child in reply to her mother's queries cannot be admitted in evidence by letting in the mother's statement under the provisions of that section. To hold otherwise would be admitting hearsay evidence in the case.

Reliance was also placed upon certain statements which the child made when the accused was brought before her. But then on this point there is a good deal of confusion and various statements are put into the mouth of the child by various witnesses. In these circumstances it would not be advisable to attach any importance to any alleged statement which the child might have made without knowing exactly the words used by her.

As regards the so called confession, the question has to be looked at from two points of view. Firstly, whether a confession was made in fact; and, secondly, if it was made, whether it is admissible in evidence. It has not been shown that the accused understood English. It is said that the accused was asked in broken English as to whether he was responsible for the act and that he nodded his head and salamed in reply. This conduct does not amount even to an oral confession. The accused only made certain signs and those signs were sought to be construed as being tantamount to a confession. In this connexion we may quote a passage from Taylor on Evidence, para. 161:

"Evidence of oral admission ought always to be received with great caution. Such evidence is necessarily subject to much imperfection and mistake; for either the party himself may have been misinformed, or he may not have clearly expressed his meaning or the witness may have misunderstood him, or may purposely misquote the expression used."

It is impossible to determine what the accused understood to be the meaning of the remarks addressed to him as to his complicity in the crime, and without being satisfied that the accused exactly understood the meaning and import of the question addressed to him, the signs made by him, standing by themselves, are meaningless. He might have completely misunderstood what was sought to be conveyed to him and have thus made the signs which were intended to be in answer to something which was entirely different from what his questioners were anxious to put him. Therefore, the confession, as a fact, remains unproved.

This being so, it is not necessary for us to consider the further question as to how the confession would be admissible in view of the fact that it was made in the presence of a military policeman.

The accused, when examined in July 1928 was not suffering from gonorrhea. The medical evidence, however, on one point is sharply divided. Doctor Kartar Singh said that gonorrhea could not be cured without treatment while on the other hand, Dr. Santsingh has stated that if the accused was suffering from gonorrhea in March last there was possibility and not probability of his being cured without treatment. We are inclined to accept the evidence of Major Gale, Civil Surgeon, Multan, who, on examining both the child and the accused on 2nd March 1928, found gonorrheal matter in the private parts of both. This coincidence no doubt creates some suspicion in our minds. But after all suspicion cannot take the place of legal evidence and proof and on the strength of mere suspicion the accused cannot be convicted.

We have given the matter our most anxious thought and we regret that the culprit, who was responsible for this atrocious crime, has not been brought to book; but, having regard to the fact that there is little or no evidence to connect the accused with the commission of the crime and in view of the principles which govern appeals from acquittals, we cannot see our way to disturb the conclusion arrived at by the trial Magistrate.

We, therefore, dismiss the appeal.

Criminal Appeal No. 879 of 1929, Decided on 9th November 1929 against order of Dist. Magistrate, Hoshiarpur, D/- 10th July 1929.

Penal Code, S. 124-A—Report of speech not verbatim—Portions taken down correctly taken down—Excerpts fair representation of general drift and subject matter bringing speech under S. 124-A—Conviction is justified.

Even though the speech taken down by the reporter may not be verbatim, provided there is nothing to show that such portions as were taken down were incorrectly taken down or that excerpts of the speech are not a fair representation of the general drift of the speeches and also provided the entire subject matter of the speech was such as to bring it within the purview of S. 124-A the conviction can be justified. [P 102 C 2, P 103 C 1. P 104 C 1.]

Badri Das—for Appellant.

Sunder Das for the Govt. Advocate—for the Crown.

Judgment.—The appellant one Pandah Sant Ram, alleged to be a petition-writer of Sialkot District, has been convicted under S. 124-A on account of two speeches delivered on 27th and 28th October 1928, and has been sentenced to one year's and to 18 months' rigorous imprisonment respectively. He has been recommended for treatment as a special class prisoner.

He has appealed and his learned counsel has taken me through the record. The main argument of the learned counsel was that the cross-examination of the reporter, Sardar Arjan Singh, showed that he had interpolated words afterwards and that the whole of the speeches had not been taken down at the time when they were delivered. It is fairly clear to me after seeing the original note-books of the Inspector that the whole of the speeches were not taken down, but there is nothing to show that such portions as were taken down were incorrectly taken down or that the excerpts of the speeches are not a fair representation of the general drift of his speeches. However, in considering the matter I bear in mind the fact that the speeches were not taken down verbatim.

In the first speech, which was made on 27th October, the appellant started by stating that he himself was non-violent at present though his opinion might change to-morrow. He then proceeded to invoke blessings on Dhanna Singh and Kartar Singh and on the paths which they used to tread. It has been proved that Dhanna Singh was a Babbar Akali, who was arrested in connexion with that movement and he appears to have died as a result of a bomb explosion. The Diwan itself at which these speeches were delivered was held to commemorate the memory of Dhanna Singh and other Babbar Akalis. It is a fact of history that the Babbar Akalis were for some time engaged in Jullundur and Hoshiarpur Districts in a series of murders and dacoities whose ostensible object was to wage war against the Government. The appellant proceeded to wish that his life should be as useful as that of Dhanna Singh and Kartar Singh. He then proceeded to exhort his sisters to protect their honour in the same way as Sita did in the troublous times that might come in 1930 when a struggle with the Government was to begin. He then stated that the king had promised that the blacks and the whites were to be treated as one without distinction, but that the English nation had not fulfilled that promise and if they did not do so soon they would have to leave India bag and baggage. Far from fulfilling that promise they had created communal dissensions and had brought Hindus and Mahomedans to ruin. He then stated that 1930 was fixed for Swaraj when instead of a drop of blood, rivers would have to be shed. Referring to the Simon Commission he spoke of them as the seven dacoits out of lakhs of dacoits, who had come to see how long India could be looted. He felt ashamed of the people who had given evidence before them and said that the proper persons had not been asked to give evidence. He recommended a boycott of the Simon Committee and praised the Nehru report describing the Government as satanic. He proceeded, the Indians should shed their blood to establish Swaraj. The spirit of India had changed; Indians would no longer be eaten but would eat others. Then comes a sentence, which, however is so cryptic that it is obvious that the sentence was not taken down in full and I do not, therefore, propose to lay any stress on it. The sentence begins "I say that a memorial of the English." The speech proceeds to exhort Hindus to be ready to shed their blood and Mahomedans to be ready to give a percentage of theirs as apparently they claimed a percentage of offices, taxes should be in kind and not cash, and it was necessary to prepare for the coming struggle and establish a Bardoli in the Doaba.

In the speech of 28th the speaker began by saying that he could trust the writers of diaries but not the Deputy Commissioner (an opinion which he seems to have changed now.) He then proceeded to extol the action of Dhanna Singh, who died to free his country. The Englishmen would not allow the Indians to live and nothing was to be gained by supplicating them as the example of the Purbias showed. Everybody should be ready in the Doaba to try and secure Swaraj and liberate the Punjab. The relations of the Babbar Akalis and their heirs should be provided for by the people of the Doaba. The Sikhs had the power to destroy London and to destroy the edifice of the satanic type of Government brick by brick. The speaker asserted that he was delivering this message on behalf of Malviya Ji, Satyapal and others. He declared that he had no confidence in Simon and that the ruddiness on the cheeks of each Englishman represented the blood of a hundred Indians. After this comes a sentence which is obviously dislocated from its context, in which it is stated that :

"in the presence of this rule our country our religion and even our gods are slaves."

The Sikhs should have courage to liberate their country as they have liberated their Gurdwaras. The real India was represented by the labourers and peasants who were then present and the rule of the poor was due to visit the world. If any one opposed this the speaker exhorted the audience to be ready to fight against him and to die.

After considering the entire subject matter of the speeches as well as the particular passages on which special stress has been laid by counsel for the Crown I am definitely of opinion that both the speeches come within the purview of S. 124-A and the conviction under that section is amply justified.

Counsel for the Crown did not, however, contend that the speech on the second occasion was worse than the speech on the first occasion and with this I agree. There is, therefore, no reason to distinguish between the sentences inflicted for the two speeches.

After considering the occasion, the audience present, the words used and and other relevant matters including the status of the appellant and the absence of the verbatim report, I reduce the sentence in each case to nine months' rigorous imprisonment; the sentences to run concurrently. As regards the recommendation made by the learned Magistrate, who tried the case, it is a matter for the Local Government.

v.

Emperor—Opposite Party.

Criminal Appeal No. 351 of 1929, Decided on 10th May 1929, from an order of Sess. Judge, Shahpur, D/- 7th March 1929.

(a) Evidence Act, S. 24—Retracted confession made voluntarily is sufficient to warrant conviction.

A confession made voluntarily without any pressure having been brought to bear upon the accused, is sufficient to warrant the conviction of the accused even although such confession may subsequently be retracted.

(b) Evidence Act, S. 24—Case entirely resting on confession—Manner in which confession obtained uncertain—Accused should get benefit of doubt—Criminal Trial.

If the case against the accused entirely rests on the confession made by the accused and there is a conflict as to the manner in which the confession is obtained, the accused is justified in asking the Court to give him the benefit of doubt.

[P 105 C 2]

Chandra Gupta—for Appellant.

I. M. Mackay for Govt. Advocate—for the Crown.

Agha Haidar, J.—In this case the appellant, Rahman, has been convicted under S. 302, I. P. C., by the learned Sessions Judge, Shahpur Division at Sargodha, and sentenced to death. He has appealed to this Court through the Jail authorities and the record is also before us under S. 374, Criminal P. C., for the confirmation of the sentence.

On the night of 3rd October 1928, Muhammad Ali deceased, son of Mirza (P. W. 5), left his house with the object of sleeping in his bajra field. He did not return home in the morning. His father Mirza went out to his fields and was informed by his younger son, Karam Ali, that Muhammad Ali was not to be found in the bajra field, and that there were marks of blood at the place. Mirza went to the spot and found a crowd of people already assembled there. He also found a trail of blood leading upto an unused well. Blood was also found at the brink of the well and a gunny bag was found in it containing a dead body. Mirza reported the matter to the police and the Sub-Inspector soon arrived at the spot and had the gunny bag containing the dead body taken out of the well. The corpse turned out to be that of Muhammad Ali who had apparently been murdered. The police started investigation and, in the end, challoped five persons, including the present appellant. With four of these persons we are not concerned, as they have been acquitted by the learned Sessions Judge. The learned Sessions Judge, however, convicted Rahman, who is the appellant before us.

The case against Rahman depends mainly upon the alleged confession which he made on 9th October 1928, before a Magistrate of the First Class. This confession is a detailed document and gives the account how Muhammad Ali was done to death by Rahman and his four accomplices. Certain articles were recovered from the house of Muhammad Ali, and it is argued on behalf of the prosecution that at least one of these articles, namely, a chadar, contained blood-stains, and, therefore, this recovery corroborates the confession of Rahman. It is admitted, however, that this chadar, standing by itself, apart from the confession, would not be sufficient to support the conviction of the appellant. If this confession were a voluntary one and made by Rahman without any kind of pressure having been brought to bear upon him, then there cannot be any doubt as to his guilt and his conviction must be maintained, even although it was subsequently retracted by Rahman in the Sessions Court.

It is argued on behalf of the appellant that Sardar Khan (P. W. 9), who is a Zaildar, in his cross-examination, stated as follows :

"I joined the investigation on 5th October . . . It was proposed during the investigation that Rahman should be given pardon. Rahman was told by me as well as by the Sub-Inspector and others that he will be granted pardon if he will disclose the true facts."

This witness was re-examined by the counsel for the prosecution and amplified the statement, which he had already made in the course of his cross-examination by saying :

"I, Sub-Inspector, Haidayat lambardar, Alam, son of Malli, and Alam lambardar were present when Rahman was asked to disclose the fact."

Now, if this statement were to be accepted as true, then under the provisions of S. 24, Evidence Act, the confession becomes inadmissible in evidence. The Sub-Inspector, Sayad Fateh Shah (P. W. 19), was examined and he stated in the course of his examination-in-chief that :

"no promise of pardon or inducement was held out by me nor was he (the accused) beaten by me."

In his cross-examination he said :

"I think I arrested him (the accused) after all the recoveries were made. So far as I remember, I took him to Sargodha on 8th morning. He expressed his readiness to confess from the very beginning."

Certain questions were put to this witness by the Court and in answer the witness stated as follows :

"There was no talk or proposal during investigation to make Rahman an approver on grant of pardon. It was on 8th that I made a request that Rahman's statement should be recorded."

I may also mention that Hidayat and Alam lambardar were also examined on behalf of the prosecution as P. Ws. 11 and 12 respectively. Alam, son of Malli, was offered only for cross-examination, but no questions were put to them.

The question now arises whether the statement of Sardar Khan is to be believed or not. If this witness is telling the truth then, of course, the confession will have to be eliminated from all consideration. It is a significant fact that, although Hidayat and Alam lambardar were examined after Sardar Khan had made his statement, no question whatsoever was put to them on behalf of the prosecution as to whether or not any inducement or promise was held out to Rahman in their presence by the Sub-Inspector and other persons taking part in the investigation along with him. The statement of the Sub-Inspector was relied upon by the learned Public Prosecutor as rebutting the evidence of Sardar Khan. The fact, however, remains that Sardar Khan, who was apparently an important witness on behalf of the prosecution, did make this statement and there cannot be any doubt that the appellant, under these circumstances is entitled to ask this Court to accept the evidence of this prosecution witness. In any case there is a conflict as to the manner in which this confession had been obtained by the prosecuting agency in the present case. Under these circumstances the appellant would be justified in asking this Court to give him the benefit of the doubt which undoubtedly arises in one's mind, having regard to the state of the evidence on the record as to the manner in which the confession of the accused had been obtained.

I am satisfied, therefore, that the appellant is entitled to the benefit of the doubt. I, therefore, giving him this benefit and setting aside his conviction and sentence, accept his appeal and order that he be released forthwith.

Broadway, J.—Admittedly the evidence on the record other than the confession of the appellant is insufficient to warrant his conviction. The question, therefore, is whether that confession is or is not admissible in evidence. The confession was retracted at the first possible moment by the appellant and he stated that it had been made at the instance of the police and was false. On 5th March 1929, Sardar Khan gave his evidence at the trial and in the course of this statement stated that Rahman had been told by him as well as by the Sub-Inspector and other responsible persons that he would be given a pardon, if he made a clean breast of the affair. Hidayat lambardar, Alam lambardar and Alam, son of Malli, were stated by Sardar Khan to have been present at the time and to have taken part in the offer. These three witnesses were not examined till 6th March 1929, and possibly for that reason the defence did not think it advisable to put any questions to them on this point and the prosecution not unnaturally refrained from raising the question. When the Sub-Inspector went into the witness-box on 6th March 1929, the question was raised definitely in examination-in-chief and again more definitely by the Court, and the Sub-Inspector flatly denied the statement made by Sardar Khan. I do not think it necessary to express any opinion as to which of these two witnesses is correct, as in any event the fact that a responsible person, such as the Zaildar, has made a definite statement that he together with others did make the promise and held out the inducement to the appellant that Sardar Khan says he did would be, to my mind, sufficient in this particular case to create a doubt as to how far the statement of Rahman was a purely voluntary one. To this doubt Rahman is clearly entitled, and I consider it would be unsafe to convict him on the evidence such as exists in this case. I, therefore, agree with my learned brother in accepting the appeal and acquitting the appellant. The sentence of death is not confirmed.

SHADI LAL, C. J. AND TAPP, J.

Rana—Convict—Appellant.

v.

Emperor—Opposite Party.

Criminal Appeal No. 828 of 1929, Decided on 6th November 1929.

Penal Code, Ss. 300 and 302—Death of boy due to dhatura poisoning administered in sharbat causing death within three or four hours—Intention to cause death held not essential to bring case under S. 300 as accused would be deemed to have intended bodily injury sufficient in ordinary course to cause death.

Dhatura was administered in sharbat on a boy 10 years old in order that according to accused's explanation the victim might become mad and his mother might seek accused's assistance for medical treatment of her son and so come under his influence. The boy died within three or four hours after drinking sharbat. The assessors were of opinion that there was no intention to cause death.

Held: (1) That the fact that the accused had no intention to cause death does not take the case out of the purview of S. 300. The act by which the death was caused was done with the intention of causing such bodily injury as was sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause death and the case satisfied the requirements of S. 300 so as to sustain conviction under S. 302. (2) That the explanation was reasonable and so case did not call for extreme penalty. [P 107.C 1]

Bhagat Ram Puri—for Appellant.

M. Sleem for the Govt. Advocate—for the Crown.

Shadi Lal, C. J.—The Sessions Judge of Ferozepore, concurring in the unanimous opinion of the assessors, has found the appellant, Rana, guilty of having administered dhatura poison to Suleman, a boy of ten years of age: and has sentenced the convict under S. 302, I. P. C., to the penalty of death.

The facts of the case lie within a narrow compass. There is ample evidence on the record that on the morning of 17th June 1929, the boy went out to play at about nine o'clock, and returned to his house at about ten, suffering from a severe pain in the stomach; and stated that he had drunk some sharbat given to him by the prisoner. He then vomited some watery substance and felt convulsions in his legs and arms. After about two hours he expired. The report of the Chemical Examiner makes it absolutely clear that dhatura was found in the stomach as well as in the small and large intestines of the unfortunate boy, and there can be no doubt that he died of dhatura poisoning.

The question for determination, however, is whether the poison was administered to the deceased by the prisoner Rana. On that point, we have the evidence of a woman Mt. Nura, who states that on the morning in question she went to the house of the accused in order to bake bread at his oven, and, while she was there Rana fetched the boy Suleman from the street where he was playing and gave him a glass of sharbat. The boy's grandmother Mt. Dani and one Haji depose to the fact that, when he returned to his house at about 10 a.m. he told them that he has taken some sharbat given to him by Rana, and that he felt sick shortly afterwards. Indeed, the prisoner himself admitted in the statement which he made before the Committing Magistrate on 3rd July that he had mixed dhatura in the sharbat which he had given to Suleman to drink. It is true that this confession was retracted on 16th July but taking into consideration the evidence summarised above there can be no doubt that the sharbat, which the boy drank, was given to him by the convict, and that the poison, the symptoms of which appeared shortly after the drinking of the sharbat, and which led to the death of the victim, was administered in the sharbat.

The assessors were of the opinion that the culprit had no intention to cause the death of the boy, but that fact does not take the case out of the purview of the definition of murder as contained in S. 300, I. P. C. It is true that dhatura is not exactly a deadly poison, but, if administered in a large quantity, it often proves fatal. That a large quantity was administered in the present case is clear from the fact that the victim died three or four hours after drinking the sharbat. The circumstances of the case show that the act, by which the death was caused, was done with the intention of causing such bodily injury as was sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause death: and the case, therefore, satisfies the requirements of S. 300, I. P. C. The conviction under S. 302, I. P. C., must, therefore be affirmed.

The prisoner had no enmity with his victim, though he entertained a feeling of resentment against his mother. In his confession referred to above he declared that he had administered dhatura in the sharbat in order that the victim might "become mad" and his mother Mt. Rajo might seek his assistance for the medical treatment of her son and again come under his influence. This explanation does not appear to be unreasonable, and do not think that this is a case in which the extreme penalty of the law should be exacted.

I would, therefore affirm the conviction but reduce the sentence of death to one of transportation for life. The appeal is accepted pro tanto and the order of the Sessions Judge modified accordingly.

v.

Emperor—Opposite Party.

Criminal Revn. No. 871 of 1929, Decided on 29th July 1929, against order of Sess. Judge, Gurdaspur, D/- 4th May 1929.

Criminal Trial—Person convicted on mere evidence that he pointed out places from which portions of stolen property were recovered—Person's father and brother also suspected but eventually discharged—Recoveries alone do not justify persons conviction—Evidence Act, S. 27.

The only evidence on which a person's conviction was based was that he pointed out three places from which portions of the stolen property was recovered. Person's father and brother were also suspected and eventually discharged.

Held: that as his relations were also concerned in the crime, it was possible for the person to have knowledge of the places without himself being guilty for any offence and so the recoveries alone were not sufficient to justify the conviction: 18 P. R. 1917 Cr. Dist.

Nand Lal—for Petitioner.

S. J. Puri—for the Crown.

Judgment.—The petitioner, Sohan Singh, has been convicted in this case under S. 411, I. P. C., and sentenced to undergo rigorous imprisonment for one year and to pay a fine of Rs. 100. The only evidence on which the conviction is based is to the effect that the petitioner pointed out three different places from which portions of the stolen property were recovered. Reliance has been placed on Mattu v. Emperor (1), but in the present instance it is to be remembered that two other relations of the petitioner, namely, his father and brother were also suspected and they were eventually discharged for want of adequate evidence. If these persons were concerned in the crime, it was quite possible for the petitioner to have knowledge of the places where the stolen property was concealed without being himself guilty of any offence. It seems to me, therefore, that these recoveries alone are not sufficient to justify the petitioner's conviction in the present case.

The learned counsel for the Crown attempted to support the conviction on the basis of a confession alleged to have been made by the petitioner. This confession was ruled out by the learned Sessions Judge on the ground that it was taken before the petitioner was actually arrested. It has been urged that the learned Sessions Judge has not taken correct view of the law and that the appellant must be deemed to be in police custody during the period when he was under police surveillance prior to his arrest. This is a point on which there appears to be conflict of authority:

it is not necessary to discuss it in detail as the learned Sessions Judge appears to have disbelieved the evidence as to confession even on merits. I accept the petition for revision and, setting aside the conviction and sentence of the petitioner, acquit him. The fine, if paid, shall be refunded.

v.

Nur Hussain—Accused—Respondent.

Criminal Revn. No. 946 of 1929, Decided on 25th October 1929, case reported by Dist. Mag., Rawalpindi, D/- 1st July 1929.

Criminal P. C., S. 562—First offence under Penal Code, S. 406 committed several years ago—Offender 55 years old—Amount involved not large—Sentence of Magistrate under S. 562 was upheld.

An offence under S. 406, Penal Code, was committed several years ago some time in 1925 and the amount involved was not large. The offender was 55 years of age and taking into consideration that it was his first conviction the Magistrate had sentenced him under S. 562, Criminal P. C. Reference was made under S. 438 for severer sentence.

Held: that Magistrate had not acted without reason in applying S. 562. [P 108 C 2]

*Partap Singh for Government Advocate—*for the Crown.

*Mohsin Shah—*for Respondent.

Facts.—Nur Hussain accused was the Secretary of the Co-operative Society, Nambal. On 31st December 1924, Fazal Muhammad, Sub-Inspector, Co-operative Societies, entrusted Rs. 56-7-0 to the accused for the purpose of deposit with the Central Bank, Murree, and obtained receipt Ex. P. T. from him. Fazal Muhammad had realized this amount from the various members of the Nambal Society. The accused did not deposit the amount in the Central Bank, but appropriated the same for his private use. On 20th July 1925 M. Zahur Hussain, Assistant Registrar, while inspecting the accounts of the Nambal Society questioned the accused about this sum, but the accused denied having received it from the Sub-Inspector. This was obviously false. The accused was prosecuted under S. 406, I. P. C., for committing criminal breach of trust in respect of Rs. 56-7-0 belonging to the society. In his statement in Court dated 31st January 1929 accused admitted the receipt of this sum and also the fact that he had spent it in defraying the marriage expenses of his daughter.

Grounds.—The Magistrate trying the case rightly convicted the accused under S. 406, I. P. C., but instead of sentencing him to any punishment he has directed his release under S. 562, Criminal P. C. The accused was holding a responsible post of the Secretary of a Co-operative Society and as such had committed criminal breach of trust in regard to the public money placed in his charge. An offence of criminal breach of trust by a person in charge of public moneys is one of a specially serious nature and calls for a severe sentence: vide 106 Indian Cases 337. The Magistrate has taken a very lenient view of the case and has, I suggest, wrongly exercised his discretion in releasing the accused under S. 562, Criminal P. C., on inadequate grounds.

I, therefore, forward the case under S. 438, Criminal P. C., for the orders of the High Court with a recommendation that the order of the Magistrate, First Class, dated 15th April 1929 releasing the accused under S. 562, Criminal P. C., be set aside, and to meet the ends of justice an adequate sentence of imprisonment be passed against the accused.

Order.—I have heard counsel and carefully considered the case, and have come to the conclusion that the conviction of the respondent must be sustained. The question of sentence is a difficult one. The offence was committed several years ago some time in 1925 and the amount involved is not large; the respondent is 55 years of age and, as stated by the Magistrate, this is his first conviction. While therefore I might myself have awarded a sentence of imprisonment I am not prepared to hold that the Magistrate acted without any reason when he applied S. 562, Criminal P. C. In these circumstances I must decline to alter the punishment awarded.

Dalip Singh—Convict—Petitioner.

v.

Emperor—Opposite Party.

Criminal Revn. Petn. No. 972 of 1929, Decided on 26th October 1929.

Penal Code, S. 167 — Lahore High Court Rules and Orders, R. 48 (5)—All conditions under R. 48 (5) not existing—Process server directed to sell attached immovable property made false report—Held he had committed offence under S. 167 (5).

Whether a process server is or is not to be used for the purposes of conducting a sale of attached moveables when all the conditions do not exist is for High Court to consider in connexion with subordinate Court concerned and not for the process server and that should be no excuse for the process server to make a false report. And if in spite the process server makes false report his conviction under S. 167 is justified. [P 103 C 1]

Shamihar Chand—for Petitioner.

Judgment.—It has been urged that the act done by the petitioner did not fall within the ambit of S. 167, I. P. C., for the reason that it was not the duty of the petitioner to conduct a sale.

Reference was made to Vol. I of the Rules and Orders issued by this Court for the guidance of the Subordinate Courts according to R. 48 (5) of which (p. 104) a process-server is not to be used for the purpose of conducting a sale of attached moveables except under certain conditions, all of which did not exist in the present case. It seems to me, however, that that is a matter for this Court to consider in connexion with the Subordinate Court concerned and that it forms no excuse for the petitioner's acts. He made a report which he was bound to do and that report was false and of such a nature as brings it within the four corners of S. 167, I. P. C.

In the circumstances I am not prepared to interfere in revision except in the matter of the sentence. The conviction involves the petitioner in serious consequences and I therefore, reduce the fine to one of ten rupees (Rs. 10.)

AGHA HAIDAR, J.

Mahandi—Accused—Appellant.

v.

Emperor—Opposite Party.

Criminal Appeal No. 664 of 1929, Decided on 8th November 1929, from order of Addl. Sess. Judge, Lahore, D/- 1st June 1929.

Penal Code, S. 96 — Person inflicting wounds in defending himself is not guilty — Penal Code, S. 304.

The law does not require a citizen to behave like a rank coward on any occasion. The right of self-defence as defined by law must be fostered in the citizens of every free country. If a man is attacked he need not run away and he would be perfectly justified in the eye of law if he holds his ground and delivers a counter attack to his assailants provided always that the injury which he inflicts in self-defence is not out of proportion to the injury with which he is threatened. [P 111 C 1]

Where the accused is attacked by a party of men armed with dangs and having no alternative but to defend himself to the best of his ability retaliates, he acts in private defence although in doing so he inflicts injuries some of which prove fatal. [P 110 C 2]

V. N. Sethi—for the Crown.

Judgment.—Mahandi and Siraj have each been convicted by the Additional Sessions Judge, Lahore, under S. 304, part 2, or in the alternative, under S. 325, I. P. C.. Mahandi has been sentenced to four years' rigorous imprisonment while Siraj's sentence is three years' rigorous imprisonment. The two convicts have appealed from the jail separately.

The trial of the accused in the Courts below was a protracted one. They were once convicted by a Magistrate and sentenced. On the matter coming up in appeal before the Sessions Judge the conviction was quashed and a retrial ordered. The result was that the case lasted for about a year. The Additional Sessions Judge has written a long judgment and I do not propose to go into the details which are to be found in it. Briefly stated, the facts are that Mt. Karimo went to live with her sister Mt. Nawab Bibi, who is the wife of Mahandi accused. It was suspected that Mt. Karimo was carrying on a liaison with Mahandi. She was, therefore, removed from Mahandi's house and ultimately came to live with Dina, her uncle. Some time after this Mahandi and Siraj, while going to a certain railway station, were walking along the bank of a minor which passed through the village in which Mt. Karimo was living with her uncle Dina. It is said that Mahandi was seen talking to Mt. Karimo while she was drawing water at the well. Another woman Mt. Kamon raised an alarm with the result, that Dina, Nur and Jhanda and perhaps two others came running with dangs towards the place where Mt. Karimo was. The Additional Sessions Judge has accepted the story that Dina jumped across the minor order to get at Mahandi and Siraj who were on the opposite bank and that Dina took the lead and was the first to aim a blow at Mahandi. This was followed by a free fight, according to the Additional Sessions Judge, between Dina and Nura on the one side and the accused on the other side. Dina received two injuries. One of these injuries was not very serious while the other caused fracture of the skull of which Dina died shortly afterwards. Nura, the henchman of Dina, received four simple contusions. The accused Mahandi also received four injuries. One of the injuries received by Mahandi was a dang blow behind his ear. Siraj received five injuries, three on the head, the fourth on the back and the fifth on the cheek involving one of the eyes. It would thus appear that while Dina and Nura received four injuries between them the number of injuries received by Mahandi and Siraj was nine.

The Additional Sessions Judge while dealing with the plea of self defence observed as follows:

"All the eyewitnesses referred to above and Jhanda (P. W. 3) and the injured man Nura (P. W. 5) have unanimously deposed that both the culprits were standing on the other side of the minor. The deceased Dina was the first man to come from his village and to jump over that minor. He then went to the other bank where the accused were standing and threatened them as to why they had come to his village. Mahandi accused then inflicted the first blow to his head and he fell down wounded. Other two blows were simultaneously inflicted to his head by both the accused. Nura advanced further in order to rescue him and he too was assaulted and ran away through fear. According to these eyewitnesses Nura had given only one blow to Siraj accused. None of these witnesses have attempted to explain as to how Mahandi received injuries. On the other hand the three defence witnesses who are quite disinterested persons have deposed unanimously that on learning the news that Mahandi was found talking to the girl Dina and his men came running to the spot with dangs in their hands. Both the accused were standing on the other side of the bank and Dina and his men jumped over the minor and assaulted the culprits. Dina had taken the lead and was the first man to aim a blow on Mahandi. Then a free fight ensued between Dina and Nura on one side and both the accused on the other, with the result that all four of them received injuries. This version appears more probable and true and it is fully corroborated by the medical evidence."

After recording this finding, which has not been challenged by the learned Public Prosecutor before me, the Additional Sessions Judge, curiously enough, proceeded to observe as follows:

"The presence of the accused on the spot is already explained. It does not appear improbable, as suggested by the assessors that the accused were travelling along the canal minor when by chance they came in contact with the girl. As there was a suspicion in the minds of her people that the accused Mahandi was carrying on a liaison with that girl, Mt. Koman's alarm succeeded in bringing the girl's uncle and cousin to the spot. They then indulged in a free fight with the accused Mahandi who was no doubt inimical to them. In a free fight like this when both the parties are armed with dangs it is impossible to say that one party had acted in self defence."

To my mind these two findings are clearly inconsistent as the Public Prosecutor had to admit somewhat reluctantly. I attach importance to the fact that Dina's party started by making a determined attack in that they were the first to jump across the minor in order to get at the accused who happened to be on the other side. It need hardly be emphasized that the accused could not possibly have visited the village which was the scene of the occurrence with any intention other than a pacific one. The theory of any attempted abduction on the part of the accused is very properly discarded by the Additional Sessions Judge himself, and the learned Public Prosecutor before me has very properly not supported it. The fact, therefore, remains that while the accused were going along the bank of the minor, Dina and his party ran towards them and jumping across the minor Dina opened his attack by aiming a dang blow at Mahandi. Under these circumstances Mahandi had no alternative but to defend himself to the best of his ability.

The Additional Sessions Judge at the conclusion of his judgment while justifying the conviction of the accused observed that "the accused had a chance to run away and as they persisted in standing at the minor thus giving an ample opportunity to other party to indulge in a fight with them they cannot be saved from the penal consequences of their active participation in the same fight."

This line of reasoning does not appeal to me and cannot be supported either by any known principle of law or by an appeal to common sense. I know there is a tendency in some Courts practically to ignore the sections of the Indian Penal Code which deal with the right of private defence; but it is my considered opinion that the law does not require a citizen, however, law abiding he may be to behave like a rank coward on any occasion. The right of self defence as defined by law must be fostered in the citizens of every free country and I am perfectly clear in my mind that if a man is attacked he need not run away and he would be perfectly justified in the eye of law if he holds his ground and deliver, a counter attack to his assailants provided always, that the injury which he inflicts in self defence is not out of proportion to the injury with which he was threatened. In the present case, there is no doubt on the finding of the Additional Sessions Judge that Dina's party opened the attack upon the accused and aimed a dang blow at Mahandi. It does not appear that beyond giving blow for blow the accused acted in a particularly cruel and brutal manner. Their assailants were armed with dangs and the accused carried nothing more than ordinary lathis. The party of the accused received injuries on the head but those injuries did not prove to be fatal. Unfortunately it happened that a blow given by one of the accused fell on the head of Dina with fatal results. I have already noted that Mahandi received a blow behind his ear and Siraj got three blows on his head. In my opinion under all the circumstances of the case and having regard to the findings of the Additional Sessions Judge, which the Public Prosecutor has not challenged before me, the accused are entitled to claim the benefit of the right of private defence. I would, therefore, accept their appeals, set aside their convictions and sentences and order that they be released forthwith.

FFORDE AND TEK CHAND, JJ.

Mahla—Convict—Appellant.

v.

Emperor—Opposite Party.

Criminal Appeal No. 783 of 1929, Decided on 30th October, 1929, against order of Sess. Judge, Hissar, D/- 5th August 1929.

(a) Criminal P. C., S. 337 (2) — Approver must be examined as witness in committal and subsequent proceedings of every person tried for same offence—Only death of approver can absolve Court from complying with this provision — Non-compliance renders trial illegal.

Section 337 (2) means that any person who has accepted a tender of pardon under the provisions of S. 337 must be examined as a witness in the Court of Committing Magistrate and the subsequent trial of every person tried for the same offence, provided of course that it is physically possible for the Crown to produce the approver. Non-compliance with this provision renders the trial illegal. If the approver dies after giving evidence before the committing Magistrate it is not imperative that the provision should be complied with but the facts that the approver appears to the Court to be an untrustworthy witness or that Court has come to the conclusion that he had not taken any part in the crime and his evidence of participation in it was a complete fabrication does not absolve the Court from complying with the statutory provisions. [P 112 C 1, 2]

(b) Criminal P. C., S. 337 (2)—Failure to comply with is not mere irregularity.

Failure to comply with provisions of S. 337 (2) is an illegality and not a mere irregularity in procedure and makes a trial void. [P 112 C 2]

B. A. Cooper,—for Appellant.

M. Sleem for the Government Advocate—for the Crown.

Fforde, J.—The appellant Mahla has been convicted by the learned Sessions Judge of Hissar of having murdered Jalal Din on the evening of 11th September 1927, and has been sentenced to death.

Three persons, Mukhtara, Dhanna and Bakhatarwar, were tried for this crime in February 1928, and at that trial one Harnam Singh, who declared himself to be an accomplice was granted a conditional pardon on turning approver. The result of that trial was that these three accused were acquitted, the trial Judge, who is the same Judge who tried the case now before us, having come to the conclusion that none of these persons, nor the approver, was present at the murder.

That more than one person took part in the crime is obvious as the victim was not only severely injured by gunshot wounds but was hacked about the head, neck and shoulder with some heavy incised weapon. In the present trial the prosecution case was that the appellant Mahla fired the gun which caused certain of the injuries and one Khema, who was tried with him, inflicted the incised wounds. Khema was acquitted.

After we had been taken through the whole of the evidence by Mr. Cooper who appeared for the appellant. Mr. Sleem, who appeared on behalf of the Crown, very properly drew our attention to the fact that the approver, who had given his evidence at the trial of the other persons who were charged with having participated in this crime was not produced as a witness in the case against the present appellant either before the Committing Magistrate or before the Sessions Judge. The question that arises for determination is whether the present proceedings under those circumstances are not vitiated.

Section 337 (2), Criminal P. C., provides that every person accepting a tender of pardon under that section shall be examined as a witness in the Court of the Magistrate taking cognizance of the offence and in the subsequent trial, if any. This statutory provision is imperative, and it seems to me clear that non-compliance with the mandatory directions renders the trial illegal. It was suggested in the course of arguments that if there has already been a trial in respect of a particular crime resulting in conviction or acquittal at which an approver has given evidence at the conclusion of that trial the approver's obligations as a witness are concluded and he need not appear at any subsequent trial of other persons charged with having participated in the same offence.

This argument appears to me to be entirely fallacious. There is no reason why the approver should be required to give evidence at the trial of one of several individuals accused of an offence, and not at the trial of the others merely because the others are brought to justice at different intervals of time. Take for instance the case of two persons charged with having committed an offence where the Crown thinks fit to try them separately. One is tried one week and the other the next week. At the first trial the approver is called to give evidence. Can it be suggested that the Crown need not produce him at the trial of the other accused the following week?

The section obviously means that any person who has accepted a tender of pardon under the provisions of S. 337, Criminal P. C., must be examined as a witness in the Court of the Committing Magistrate and at the subsequent trial of every person tried for the same offence, provided of course that it is physically possible for the Crown to produce the approver. It is quite possible that an approver may die after giving his evidence before the Committing Magistrate in which case of course the provisions of the Act cannot be complied with.

In the present case, it was possible to produce the approver as he was available at the time this case was before the Committing Magistrate and also when it was before the Sessions Judge, and the only reason that he was not produced was because the learned Sessions Judge had come to the conclusion that he had not taken any part in the crime and his evidence of participation in it, therefore, was a complete fabrication. The fact however, that an approver appears to the Court to be an untrustworthy witness does not absolve the Court from complying with the statutory provisions. The conditional pardon granted to the approver has not been withdrawn and he has not been proceeded against for the offence in respect of which he was given that pardon for the simple reason that the learned Sessions Judge came to the conclusion, as I have already observed that the man took no part whatsoever in the crime. The learned Sessions Judge's view, however, of the evidence is not conclusive, and the appellant in the present case is entitled to have an unsatisfactory witness put into the witness box when there is an unqualified statutory provision that such a witness shall be produced. As the failure to comply with the provisions of sub- S. 2, S. 337, Criminal, P. C., is an illegality and not a mere irregularity in procedure, the trial, in my judgment is void, as are the proceedings before the Committing Magistrate, and we must accordingly set aside the conviction and sentenced and leave it to the Crown, if so advised to take such further proceedings as they may think fit.

Professional Ethics.

It is constant experience to have intelligent layman ask "is it possible you can defend a man whom you believe to be guilty, is it honourable to do so?" To such a general question no answer is really possible without the consideration of many important points of public policy. Now and then we have the question of ethics presented in a manner that is too sharply defined to be entirely agreeable. According to the French at least in early days we are told of one occasion at least where the French Bar unanimously refused to defend an accused person on the ground that he was plainly guilty and the accused was executed and it was discovered too late that he was entirely innocent. It would seem, therefore, that this rule of the French Bar, if it still exists, cannot be thoroughly a good one.

"In the first place, while the accused may have committed the acts with which he has been charged, those acts may not constitute a crime at all. It seems, therefore, that a practitioner may justly defend an accused person at least to the extent of discussing the very important question whether the established acts of the accused constitute a crime.

Again the act with which the prisoner is charged may never have been committed at all. There have been cases where during the progress of a trial for a murder the person alleged to have been killed has walked into the Court.

There have been examples where persons have confessed the commission of crime where either no crime had been committed or the person confessing was perfectly innocent. Such cases may certainly admonish the most sensible counsel that he may defend a criminal in an apparently desperate predicament provided, however, that he does so by the methods that are right and proper.

Again, there is a dread disease called "insanity" which we claim to understand a little, but in regard to which we have a great deal to learn. Who shall dare to decide ex parte that an accused person who has committed some dreadful deed has really any sense? Here is an instance.

P. W. Capron writing in the "New York Tribune" recalls the interesting Freeman case. This man Freeman in the night murdered a whole family and sought a second family by name Godfrey. Excitement ran high. The cry for vengeance was strong. The late W. H. Seward then a young man satisfied that the man was insane and volunteered to conduct the defence. The defence showed that the murder was without provocation or motive. It also called the Superintendent of the Utica Insane Asylum to declare on the stand that the Negro was clearly insane. When asked in cross examination as to how he formed his opinion of insanity he replied from conversation and from the eyes and general features. When asked if he could pick out an insane person in that audience the Superintendent replied that he could if there were any. Being requested to do so the Superintendent surveyed the large audience and at length singled out an individual who he said was insane. The person indicted at once responded in oaths and frantic yells clearly showing that the Superintendent had made no mistake. Notwithstanding this strong defence the verdict was "guilty" and the sentence hanging. As the of execution drew near Seward induced the Governor to grant a respite but before this period expired the Negro died in prison. / An autopsy revealed an extensively diseased brain.

Jottings and Cuttings

(1) A lawyer brought a suit against a rich Corporation for a man of good standing in the community and of rather exceptional attainments. In the course of his arguments he declared in a loud voice for the purpose of gaining the sympathy of the jury "Gentlemen of the Jury, who are the parties to this important litigation? Why, on the one side there is a powerful Corporation with an overflowing treasury and on the other side (pointing to his client who was seated in the Bar) there is my poor, simple, uneducated client." A few days later a friend of the plaintiff enquired "Did you win your suit?" "Yes," was the reply. "Won my suit, but I shall never employ that lawyer again." He called me a fool and the jury believed it.

(2) There have been several instances recorded of cases where advocates have to get over many unpleasant situations created by dangerous and damaging admissions voluntarily made by their own clients during the trial. Here is an instance. George Washington Thomas, an able bodied Negro appeared before a Magistrate charged with stealing chickens. The Negro was accompanied by his lawyer Col. Simons a rising white attorney. The old Judge sauntered into the dingy Court room where he had reigned for more than 20 years and after calling for order he looked around on the little company there assembled. Seeing Thomas he pointed out to him and said "Be you the defendant in this case," quick as a flash, Thomas was on his feet and notwithstanding legal terms he exclaimed politely. "No, Sir, I am not the defendant. There is the defendant over there." And saying which he pointed out to his lawyer. There was a general laugh about the room in which the queer old Judge joined heartily. The darkoy felt abashed. He was visibly embarrassed and thinking of correcting the mistake if mistake it were, he said again, pointing at his lawyer "Yes, Sir, he is the defendant," and pointing to himself he said "I am the gentleman that stole the chickens."

S. 27, Evidence Act, and A.I.R. 1929 Lahore 344 (F.B.).

BY

F. C. WIDGE, Advocate, Karachi.

The principles of the adjective law of Evidence in criminal cases embodied in Ss. 24 to 27, Evidence Act—in themselves very wholesome and salubrious—have in their practical working always presented difficulties in the matter of their interpretation and application. Of these S. 27 which reads:

Provided that when any fact is deposed to as discovered in consequence of information received from a person accused of any offence in the custody of a Police Officer, so much of such information, whether it amounts to a confession or not, as relates distinctly to the fact thereby discovered, may be proved, is the one extremely difficult and ticklish.

The principle underlying the section may be stated thus:

"The broad ground for not admitting confession made under inducement, or to a police officer, or by person whilst in custody is the danger of admitting false confessions. But the necessity for the exclusion disappears in a case provided for by this section, when the truth of the confession is guaranteed by the discovery of facts in consequence of the information given. The prisoner's statement as to his knowledge of the place where the property or other article was to be found, being thus confirmed by the fact, is shown to be true, and not to have been fabricated in consequence of any inducement. It is this guarantee afforded by the discovery of the property, for the correctness of the accused's statement, which is the ground of the admission of the exception to the general rule. The fact discovered shows that so much of confession as immediately relates to it is true. Queen Emperor v. Babu Lal (1) at pp. 513, 517, 546."

"The principle that portions of a statement or confession may be admitted and others excluded is recognized in the Evidence Act S. 27. Legal Remembrancer v. Lalit Mohan Singh (2)."

The section has been the subject of considerable discussion at the Bar at the hands of very learned counsel, and at the Bench at those of very eminent Judges of the High Courts in India. Those who are for placing a narrow interpretation upon the language of the section do so as following the analogous rule of the English Common Law, while those who are in favour of placing a wider interpretation upon the terms of the section do so having in view solely the language of the section, for as his Lordship (Eford, J.) said in the course of his learned judgment in Harnam Singh v. Emperor (3):

"as S. 27, Evidence Act, has been drafted as have been almost all the provisions of that Act upon English principles of law laid down in decided cases."

His Lordship to the above remarks added:

"These principles are no doubt a very useful guide to the interpretation of the Indian Evidence Act. But in considering the effect of S. 27 it must be borne in mind that whereas in England a confession made to a police officer by a person in custody is admissible in evidence provided the prosecution first shows that it has not been obtained by any improper means such as coercion, threat or wrongful persuasion, S. 26, Evidence Act, prohibits such a confession being received in evidence at all unless it comes within the four corners of S. 27."

In the Full Bench ruling while adhering to his opinion as expressed in the earlier case qualified the remarks by relying on Lord Sinha's observations in Ramanandi Kuer v. Kalawati Kuer (4):

"It has often been pointed out by this Board that where there is a positive enactment of the Indian Legislature the proper course is to examine the language of that statute and to ascertain its proper meaning uninfluenced by any consideration derived from the previous state of the law or of the English Law upon which it may be founded."

His Lordship proceeded:

"I think there can be no doubt that the very restricted meaning given to S. 27, Evidence Act, has been due to the application of the English Law as it is interpreted by some of the English text books."

The one view is in accordance with analogous English law and practice, and the other is based on the interpretation of the Indian Act by itself without reference to English law upon which the Indian enactment on the subject may be supposed to be founded.

Queen Empress v. Babu Lal (1) is an important and early Position in Eng- standing land mark in land. the history of the judicial interpretation of this section and the position in England is thus described by his Lordship Straight, Offg. C. J. quoting Russell on Crimes and Misdemeanours:

"But the more established rule according to practice and later authorities, is that so much of the confession as relates strictly to the fact discovered by it may be given in evidence, for the reason of rejecting extorted confessions is the apprehension that the prisoner may have been induced to say what is false but the fact discovered shows that so much of the confession as immediately relates to it is true: R. v. Butcher (5), Wanikshalli's case (6)."

Thus it is proper, and is now the common practice to leave to the consideration of the jury, where a confession has been improperly obtained, the fact of the witness having been directed by the prisoner where to find the goods, and his having found them accordingly, but not the acknowledgment of the prisoner having stolen or put them there, which is to be collected or not from all the circumstances of the case: Wanikshalli's case (6). So when on an indictment for burglary it appeared that the prisoner had made a statement to a policeman under some particular circumstances which induced the counsel for the prosecution, with the approbation of the Court, to decline offering it in evidence; but in consequence of the statement containing some allusion to a lantern which was afterwards found in a particular place, the policeman was asked whether, in consequence of something which the prisoner had said, he made a search for the lantern, Tindal, C. J., and Parke J., were both of opinion that the w used by the prisoner with reference to the thing found ought to be given in evidence, and the policeman accordingly stated that the prisoner told him that he had thrown a lantern into a pond in Pocock's fields. The other parts of the statement were not given in evidence: R. v. Gould (7). Mr. Phillips (Vol. 1) after stating this case, adds:

"But the Judge in such a case would direct the jury, and so it is understood did direct the jury in that case, that his statement must not be taken as proof that he concealed but merely as evidence that he knew or was privy to the concealment from which together with the rest of the evidence they would consider whether it was probable that he concealed it himself."

The same position is well described by his Lordship Ffiorde, J., in Harnam Singh v. Emperor (8):

"the rule as laid down by Eldon, C. J., in R. v. Harvey (4) was that whether the knowledge of a fact was obtained from a prisoner under a promise which excluded the confession itself from being given in evidence an acquittal should be directed, unless the fact itself proved would have been enough to warrant a conviction without any confession leading to it."

That rule, however, was considerably relaxed in favour of the prosecution by later decisions and the rule of the common law now is, as stated by Taylor on Evidence, Vol. 1, p. 614, in these terms:

"When in consequence of information unduly obtained from the prisoner, the property stolen or the instrument of the crime or the body of the person murdered or any other material fact has been discovered, proof is admissible that such discovery was made conformably with the information so obtained."

The prisoner's statement as to his knowledge of the place where the property or other article was to be found being thus confirmed by the fact, is shown to be true and not to have been fabricated in consequence of any inducement. It is, therefore, competent to prove that the prisoner stated that the thing would be found by searching a particular place and that it was accordingly so found; but it would not, in such a case of a confession improperly obtained, be competent to enquire whether he confessed that he had concealed it there. So much of the confession as relates distinctly to the fact discovered by it may be given in evidence, as this part at least of the statement cannot have been false. Phipson on Evidence,

Edn. 6, p. 270, expressed the same rule in this way:

"Facts and documents disclosed in consequence of inadmissible confessions are receivable if relevant. And where property has been discovered or delivered up in this way so much of the confession as strictly relates thereto will be admissible, for these portions at least cannot be untrue but independent statements not qualifying or explaining the fact though made at the same time, will be rejected."

Phipson gives the following illustration of this principle:

"A is charged with burglary, the fact that after an improper inducement A confessed to having thrown a lantern into a pond and the fact that the lantern was found there are admissible: R. v. Gould (5); R. v. Harris cited by Joy, 88; R. v. Thirtell Vid. 84."

The trend of rulings of the late Punjab Chief Court and its successor the High Court of Judicature at Lahore has been to place a narrow construction upon the term of S 27, and to limit the admissible part of the accused's statement only to the portion relating distinctly to the fact thereby discovered. In Harnam Singh v. Emperor (8), the learned Judges (Ffiorde and Jai Lal, JJ.), thought the Chief Court had been putting a too narrow construction upon the section: vide Santa Singh v. Emperor (10); Tara Singh v. Emperor (11); Gurdit Singh v. Emperor (12) and Sulakhan Singh v. Emperor (13), and their Lordships not only followed, Sogianmuthu Padayachi v. Emperor (14); Shiva Bhai Beohar Bhatti v. Emperor (15) and Lalji Dusadh v. Emperor (16), and put a very wide interpretation upon it, but went a bit further and held that the information must be proved in the precise terms in which it was given and that there is no legal justification for splitting up or cutting down the statement of the prisoner so as to make it a vague and unintelligible statement and thus to defeat the very object with which S. 27 was enacted. As his Lordship Jai Lal, J., observed:

PATKAR AND WILD, JJ.

Emperor

v.

Ismail Hirji—Accused.

Criminal Ref. No. 74 of 1929, Decided on 4th September 1929, made by 2nd Presy. Magistrate, Bombay.

(a) Bombay Prevention of Gambling Act, S. 6—Arrest without warrant.

Under S. 6 the Commissioner of Police can arrest without warrant: 31 Bom. 438 and A.I.R. 1926 Bom. 195, Rel. on. [P 114 C 2]

(b) Criminal P. C., S. 4 (f)—Meaning and scope of "under any law for the time being in force" explained.

The words "under any law for the time being in force" S. 4 (f) are wide enough to include an express or implied provision of any law or enactment and would cover the application of the maxims qui facit per alium facit per se (whatever a man may do of himself, he may do by another, and qui per alium facit per se ipsum facere videtur (he who does an act through another is deemed in law to do it himself) to any provision of any enactment, in order to arrive at the true intention of the enactment. [P 115 C 1]

(c) Bombay Prevention of Gambling Act, S. 6—S. 6 does not impose any limitation on power of any person to make complaint.

Section 6 does not impose any limitation on the power of any person to make a complaint on oath to the Commissioner of Police. As a general rule any person, having knowledge of the commission of an offence, may set the law in motion by a complaint, even though he is not personally interested or affected by the offence: 13 Bom. 600, Foll.; A. I. R. 1929 Bom. 71, Ref. [P 115 C 2]

(d) Bombay Prevention of Gambling Act, Ss. 3, 4 and 6—Passage surrounded by building appropriated for betting business—Passage is "place" within Ss. 3, 4 and 6.

Where the passages are surrounded by buildings and are closed at night by doors and the accused have appropriated them for the business of betting, the business of betting is localized and this localization converts the passage into a "place," within the meaning of Ss. 3, 4 and 6: 37 Bom. 651, Rel. on.; Powell v. Kempton Park Race Course Co., (1899) A. C. 143; Eastwood v. Miller, (1874) 9 Q. B. 440 and Brown v. Patch, (1899) 1 Q. B. 892, Ref. [P 118 C 2]

(e) Bombay Prevention of Gambling Act, S. 6—Arrest by Police Officer authorized to arrest by Commissioner of Police and in his presence though not within view is not illegal.

Where the arrests by a police officer are under the express authority of the Commissioner of Police and in the presence of the Commissioner, though not within his view, the arrests by the police officer are not illegal. [P 116 C 2]

(f) Bombay Prevention of Gambling Act, S. 3—Betting explained.

A bet need not be as regards the issue of a future uncertain event and may be upon a past event, e. g., whether a particular horse won a race in a certain year. In such a case the bet is upon the accuracy of the information, belief or memory of the parties and the event is the proof that one or the other was accurate. A person may bet against what he believes the issue will be, e. g., a man may bet against a horse which he believes will win in order to secure himself against loss in either event: Thacker v. Hardy, (1878) 4 Q. B. D. 685; Carlill v. Carbolic Smoke Ball Co., (1892) 2 Q. B. 484, Rel. on. [P 117 C 1]

(g) Bombay Prevention of Gambling Act, S. 5—Date of horse race postponed—Bets were entered into irrespective of adjournment—Accused not contending that either race or particular horse should run on given particular date—Agreement to bet held to be wager amounting to offence.

Evidence in a case showed that the race which was to be run on 29th September was adjourned to 6th October early in the morning and still in the afternoon of that day bets were entered into with regard to the meeting which had already been adjourned, and the bets were to remain good for the race that was to be run on 6th October. The accused did not intend either that the race should run on 29th September or that a particular horse should run that day, as the condition of the agreement.

Held: that even though the race was postponed, the agreement to bet would be a wager and would amount to an offence under S. 5. [P 117 C 1]

(h) Criminal P. C., S. 432—Presidency Magistrate should not refer point of law which is covered by authority.

It is not open to a Presidency Magistrate under S. 432 to refer a point of law which is covered by an authority binding on him. [P 118 C 1]

P. B. Shingne—for the Crown.

Velinkar and W. B. Pradhan—for Accused.

The trying Magistrate referred the following questions to the High Court, under S. 432, Criminal P. C.:

1. Whether offences punishable under S. 4, Bombay Gambling Act 4 of 1887, as modified up to date are cognizable offences in all cases?
2. Whether the arrests are illegal?
3. Whether the Commissioner satisfied himself that there were good grounds for the suspicion of the complainant?
4. Whether the arrests by constables or by Sub-Inspector Salaskar are illegal?
5. Whether there was any gaming at all when the meeting was postponed?

Patkar, J.—In this case the Presidency Magistrate, Second Court, Bombay, has made a reference, under S. 432, Criminal P. C., submitting for decision certain points of law arising in a case pending before him.

One Ibrahim Ismail made a complaint on oath on 27th September 1928, before the Commissioner of Police, Bombay. Instead of issuing a special wa. under S. 6, Bombay Prevention of Gambling Act, 1887, he personally raided the premises in company with other police-officers. The Commissioner entered the main entrance and Sub-Inspector Salaskar entered the side gate and arrested accused 2 and 3. Police constable No. 714 C. T. arrested accused 4. R. B. Sabaji arrested accused 1 and Inspector Achrekar and Havaldar 932-K arrested accused 5, 6 and 8. Accused 7 was arrested by another policeman. Panch-namas were made of the articles found in the passage and on the person of the accused. 27 slips were found in the passage bearing the names of the horses, the amount of bet, win or place, and single or double. The punters got receipts for the payments made to the bookmakers in the form of printed cart chits with numbers thereon which were inserted in the slips for identification. Three cart chits were found in the passage, and four cart chit books were also found in the passages. Currency notes of the value of Rs. 145 and a money-bag dropped by accused 3 were found in the passage.

The learned Magistrate instead of making a reference to this Court ought to have decided the points involved in this case leaving the parties aggrieved to approach this Court in case they were dissatisfied with his decision.

The first question referred by the learned Magistrate is, whether offences punishable under S. 4, Bombay Prevention of Gambling Act 4 of 1887 as modified up to date are cognizable offences in all cases. In Emperor v. Fernad (1), it was held that as a First Class Magistrate has under S. 6, Gambling Act 4 of 1887, power to give authority, under a special warrant to certain police-officers, to make arrest and search, the legislature must be presumed to have intended that the First Class Magistrate should have authority to make the arrest and the search himself, if necessary, according to the principle of the legal maxim that : "whatever a man sui juris may do of himself, he may do by another," and its correlative that : "what is done by another is to be deemed done by the party himself."

case. In Emperor v. Abasbhai (3) it was held by Marten and Madgavkar, JJ., following the decision in Queen-Empress v. Deodhar Singh (4), that the offences under Ss. 4 and 5 were cognizable offences within the meaning of S. 4 (f), Criminal P. C., rather than non-cognizable offences under sub-Cl. (n) of that section. In Emperor v. Chandri (5) it was held by Fawcett, J. that there were serious limitations on the power of arrest under S. 10, Bombay Prevention of Prostitution Act 11 of 1923, and that any case where those conditions are not complied with cannot be described as a cognizable case. Under S. 6, Gambling Act, and on the authority of the decision in the case of Emperor v. Fernad (1), the Commissioner of Police could arrest without a warrant, and the words "a police-officer may arrest" in S. 4 (1) (f) do not mean every or any police-officer, and provided that a superior police-officer has power to arrest without a warrant, the offence is a cognizable offence. It was further held by Madgavkar, J. in Emperor v. Abasbhai (3), that the report of the police officer could have been treated in that case as a complaint. Both the learned Judges came to the conclusion that the Magistrate had jurisdiction as the offences were cognizable, and that the case fell under S. 190 (b), Criminal P. C. The learned Magistrate ought to have followed the clear ruling of this Court in Emperor v. Abasbhai (3).

It is urged, however, on behalf of the accused that the remarks of Chandavarkar, J., in Fernad's case (1) were obiter, and that, according to the definition of a cognizable offence in S. 4 (1) (f), Criminal P. C., the offences under Ss. 4 and 5, Gambling Act, would not be cognizable offences as a police officer could not arrest in accordance with Sch. 2, Criminal P. C., or under any law for the time being in force, without a warrant. It is further urged that in Sch. 2, relating to offences under other laws, an offence punishable with imprisonment for less than one year or with fine only is a non-cognizable offence, and under S. 6, Gambling Act, no express power is given to the Commissioner of Police to arrest or to make the search himself as is conferred by S. 5, Bengal Public Gambling Act 2 of 1866, and that the case of Queen-Empress v. Deodhar Singh (4), followed in Emperor v. Abasbhai (3), is based on S. 5, Bengal Act. S. 6, Gambling Act, is correctly interpreted by the decisions referred to above which are no less binding on us than on the Magistrate. The words "under any law for the time being in force" in S. 4 (f), Criminal P. C., are, however, in my opinion, wide enough to include an express or implied provision of any law or enactment and would cover the application of the maxims qui facit per alium facit per se (whatever a man may do of himself, he may do by another) and qui per alium facit per seipsum facere videtur (he who does an act through another is deemed in law to do it himself) to any provision of any enactment, in order to arrive at the true intention of the enactment. Though the Act was amended several times since the decision in Fernad's case (1), the legislature has not expressed its true intention to be otherwise than that determined by judicial decisions. It is to be presumed that there is no intention to prevent the application of such maxims unless there is something in the language or in the object of the statute to the contrary: see Maxwell on the Interpretation of Statutes, Edn. 6, p. 134.

Question 2 is, whether the arrests are illegal. It is contended that the arrests are illegal on the following grounds: (1) that there was no complaint on oath. (2) that the passage is not "a place" within the meaning of S. 6, Gambling Act (3), that the Commissioner did not satisfy himself that there were good grounds for the suspicion, and (4) that the Commissioner could not authorize the constables to arrest, and the arrests by Sub-Inspector Salaskar were not in the actual presence of the Commissioner.

The first point arising for decision is whether Ex. A is a legal complaint on oath before the Commissioner of Police. According to the decision in Emperor v. Tribhovan Motiram (6), the Commissioner of Police was competent to administer an oath to Ibrahim Ismail under S. 6, Gambling Act. It is urged, however, that though the word "complaint", in S. 6 is not to be understood in a technical sense, Ibrahim who made the complaint to secure a reward cannot be considered to be a person who had any grievance, and, therefore, was not competent to make a complaint. S. 6. does not impose any limitation on the power of any person to make a complaint on oath to the Commissioner of Police. In In re, Ganesh Narayan Sathe (7) it was held that as a general rule any person, having knowledge of the commission of an offence, may set the law in motion by a complaint, even though he is not personally interested or affected by the offence. The objection, therefore, raised on this point on behalf of the accused is, in my opinion, without substance.

The second question arising for decision is, whether the passage is a "place" within the meaning of S. 6, Gambling Act. In Emperor v. Jusub Ally (8) it was held by Batty, J., that the machwa must be considered to have been a place within the meaning of S. 4 rather than of S. 12, being more of the nature of a house or room than of a place ejusdem generis with a street or thoroughfare. In Emperor v. Fattoo Mahomed (9), a small open space surrounded by house on all sides and accessible only by a narrow lane was held to be a place within the meaning of S. 4, Gambling Act, as being appropriated for the business of betting. There appears to be no conflict in the decisions in Jusub Ally's case (8) and Fattoo Mahomed's case (9) to justify a reference on this point. In Powell v. Kempton Park Racecourse Co. (10) Lord James of Hereford held (p. 194):

"Speaking in general terms, whilst the place mentioned in the Act, must be to some extent ejusdem generis with house, room, or office, I do not think that it need possess the same characteristics; for instance, it need not be covered in or roofed. It may be, to some extent, an open space. But certain conditions must exist in order to bring such space within the word "place." There must be a defined area so marked out that it can be found and recognized as "the place" where the business is carried on and wherein the bettor can be found."

In Eastwood v. Miller (11) it was held that an enclosed area, though uncovered, might as well be "a place" within the Act, as a place either covered with canvas as a tent or a light structure as a building. It is a question of fact in each case whether the business of betting is localized so that people may fairly resort to the place where it is carried on. I may also refer in this connexion to the case of Brown v. Patch (12). It would be for the Magistrate to consider on the evidence whether the passages are "a place" within the meaning of the Act. Having regard to the decision in Emperor v. Fattoo Mahomed (9), there appears to be no ground for any doubt justifying a reference on this point by the Magistrate.

The third point is, whether the Commissioner satisfied himself that there were good grounds for the suspicion that any place is used as a common gaming house. It is a question of fact which the Magistrate has to decide on the evidence in the case and is not a question of law which should have been referred by him to this Court.

The fourth point is, whether the arrests by the constables or by Sub-Inspector Salaskar are illegal. Under S. 6, Gambling Act, the Commissioner of Police has the power to give authority, by special warrant under his hand, to any Inspector, or other superior officer of police, of not less rank than a Sub-Inspector:

(a) to enter, with the assistance of such persons as may be found necessary, by night or by day, and by force, if necessary, any such house, room or place, and

(b) to take into custody and bring before a Magistrate all persons whom he finds therein, whether they are then actually gaming or not.

According to the authorities to which I have already referred the Commissioner of Police had the power to enter with the assistance of such persons as may be found necessary and to arrest the persons whom he found therein. It is not possible for the Commissioner of Police alone, if he intended to raid the premises, to arrest a multitude of persons. It is, therefore, provided by the legislature that he may enter with the assistance of such persons as may be found necessary. Mr. Salaskar in his evidence says that he was instructed to raid the premises with his men by the rear gate simultaneously with the raid from the main gate by the Commissioner of Police. The arrests, therefore, by Salaskar were under the express authority of the Commissioner of Police and in the presence of the Commissioner though not within his view. I think that the arrests by Mr. Salaskar were not illegal. It is not contended before us that arrests by any other police officer were illegal. The point loses any importance in this case as the offences are cognizable and the Magistrate has jurisdiction to investigate the case under S. 190, Cl. (b). It is not therefore necessary to go into the question urged by the learned Government Pleader that even on the assumption that the offences were not cognizable the Magistrate had jurisdiction to treat the report by the police officer as a complaint under S. 190, Cl. (a), according to the view of Madgavkar, J., in Emperor v. Abasbhai (3) and the decision in Emperor v. Shivaswami (13).

The last question is, whether there was any gaming at all when the meeting was postponed. It appears from Ex. T that the race which was to be run on 29th September was postponed to 6th October. It is urged on behalf of the accused that in a wager both the parties must contemplate the determination of the future uncertain event as the sole condition of their contract, and as in the present case the future uncertain event did not happen, there was no wager, and reliance is placed on Anson on Contract, pp. 230 and 231, and the case of Ellesmere (Earl) v. Wallace (14). In the present case, the charge against the accused was under Ss. 4 (a) and 4 (c) and not under S. 5, Gambling Act. The question, therefore, does not really arise in the present case. In Halsbury's Laws of England, Vol. 15, p. 267, para. 549, it is stated as follows:

"A wagering contract has been described as one by which two persons, professing to hold opposite views touching the issue of a future uncertain event, mutually agree that, dependent upon the determination of such event, one shall win from the other, and that other shall pay or hand over to him, a sum of money or other stake; neither of the contracting parties having any other interest in that contract than the sum or stake which he will so win or lose."

there being no other real consideration for the making of such contract by either of the parties."

A bet is defined in Thacker v. Hardy (15) and Carlill v. Carbolite Smoke Ball Co. (16). A bet need not be as regards the issue of a future uncertain event and may be upon a past event, e. g., whether a particular horse won a race in a certain year. In such a case the bet is upon the accuracy of the information, belief or memory of the parties and the event is the proof that one or the other was accurate. A person may bet against what he believes the issue will be e. g., a man may bet against a horse which he believes will win in order to secure himself against loss in either event. In Ellesmere (Earl) v. Wallace (14), the jockey club was not interested in the result of the races and the provision relating to the prizes was in no way dependent upon the result of the races as they were to be given in any event and the only event outstanding between the parties, viz., whether the defendant's horse would run in the race depended solely on the volition of the defendant and not upon the determination of any future event.

The evidence in the present case shows that the race which was to be run on 29th September was adjourned to 6th October early in the morning, and still in the afternoon of that day bets were entered into with regard to the meeting which had already been adjourned, and the bets were to remain good for the race that was to be run on 6th October. The parties did not intend either that the race should run on 29th September or that a particular horse should run that day, as the condition of the agreement. I think that even though the race was postponed the agreement to bet would be a wager and would amount to an offence under S. 5, Gambling Act. A question in the present case is, whether on the evidence accused 1 having the use of a room or place in the premises of the Akbar Manufacturing and Press Company did use the same for the purpose of a common gaming house, and accused 2 to 8 did assist accused 1 in conducting the business of the said common gaming house, and thereby accused 1 committed an offence punishable under S. 4 (a) and accused 2 to 8 committed an offence punishable under S. 4 (c) of Act 4 of 1887, and the learned Magistrate has to find on the evidence whether the room or the place in question is a common gaming house. That question would depend on the evidence in the case and the fact that a particular race was adjourned on 29th September to 6th October does not affect the question.

I would, therefore, answer the reference, on the points referred to, as stated above.

Wild, J.—This is a reference under S. 432, Criminal P. C., by the Presidency Magistrate, second Court, in which he refers five questions for the opinion of this Court.

The prosecution out of which this reference arises was one under S. 4, Bombay Prevention of Gambling Act of 1887 and the facts are shortly these: On 27th September 1928, one Ibrahim Ismail's sworn statement was taken by the Commissioner of Police, Bombay, and he complained that the premises of the Akbar Manufacturing Co. were being used as a bucket shop or office for receiving bets on horses. On 29th September the Commissioner of Police, without issuing a warrant under S. 6, Bombay Prevention of Gambling Act to any other police officer to search the premises, himself raided the premises. He entered by the front door and Sub-Inspector Salaskar entered by the rear or side door. The premises consist of buildings with two open passages at right angles one to the other. It was found that the passages were being used for the purpose of betting on horse races that were to take place that day at Poona. Arrests were made; some of the accused were arrested by Sub-Inspector Salaskar and by one of the police constables of his party out of sight of the Commissioner of Police and others were arrested in his presence. It subsequently transpired that at the time of the raid the race meeting had been postponed.

The first question referred is, whether offences punishable under S. 4, Bombay Prevention of Gambling Act 4 of 1887 as modified up to date are cognizable offences in all cases. The learned Magistrate appears to doubt the correctness of the ruling in Emperor v. Abasbhai (3), though he admits that he is bound to follow it. I am of opinion that it is not open to the Presidency Magistrate under S. 432, Criminal P. C., to refer a point of law which is covered by an authority binding on him nor is it clear on what ground the learned Presidency Magistrate doubts the correctness of the ruling in Emperor v. Abasbhai (3). He refers to the case of Emperor v. Chandri (5). But the facts there were completely different. In that case the arrest for an offence under the Bombay Prevention of Prostitution Act was not on a complaint or by an authorized police officer and the arrest was, therefore, held to be illegal. Here the arrest for an offence under the Bombay Prevention of Gambling Act was by an officer (the Commissioner of Police, Bombay) who could have issued a warrant of arrest. The question really is not whether the offence in this case is a cognizable one but whether the Commissioner of Police was empowered to arrest. In Emperor v. Fernad (1), it was held that a person who is authorized to issue a warrant under S. 6, Bombay Prevention of Gambling Act could himself arrest without a warrant and this case was followed in Emperor v. Jaffur Mahomed (2) and Emperor v. Abasbhai (3). The principle enunciated in the case of Emperor v. Fernad (1), is a common sense one. In the case of Magistrates it has been enacted in S. 65, Criminal P. C., that they have this power. As under the Criminal Procedure Code warrants of arrest are not issued by police officers, it was unnecessary for the Code to make a similar provision in the case of police officers. There would appear, therefore, to be no reason to suppose that the principle enunciated in the case of Emperor v. Fernad (1), is incorrect. My answer, therefore, to the first question would be that the Commissioner of Police of Bombay was in the circumstances of this case authorized to arrest the accused.

The second question is, whether the arrests are illegal as there was no complaint on oath and the passage is not a "place" within the meaning of S. 6, Bombay Prevention of Gambling Act. With regard to the first branch of this question it is not contended by the learned counsel for the accused that there is no statement on oath by the informer. It is, however, contended that the word "complaint" in S. 6, should bear its ordinary meaning of "information given by a person aggrieved." That, however, is not the meaning of the word "complaint" as defined in S. 4 (1) (g), Criminal P. C., and as ruled in the case of In re, Ganesh Narayan Sathe (7):

"any person having knowledge of the commission of an offence, may set the law in motion by a complaint, even though he is not personally interested or affected by the offence."

The informant in this case was not interested but it is not necessary to suppose that the word "complaint" in S. 6 is to be given any other meaning than that which it bears in the Criminal Procedure Code. I hold then that there was a complaint on oath as required by S. 6.

As regards the second branch of the question whether these passages constitute a "place" within the meaning of S. 6, Bombay Prevention of Gambling Act, the facts of the present case are very similar to those of the case of Emperor v. Fattoo Mahomed (9). There it was held that a small area limited by metes and bounds, surrounded on all sides by buildings, and appropriated for the business of betting by the accused as a lessee was a place within the meaning of S. 4. Here the passages are surrounded by buildings and are closed at night by doors. It is true that the accused have not leased the passages for their business but they have appropriated them for the business by using them. In this way the business of betting has been localized and it would seem that this localisation converts the passages into a place as held in the case just cited. In S. 3, Bombay Prevention of Gambling Act, "common gaming" house is defined as a house, room or place in which instruments of gaming are kept, etc., and it is clear from the ruling just cited that the common factor in the expressions "house, room or place" is not that they are roofed over but that they are sufficiently definite. In this case as the passages are limited by the buildings and doors, it would appear that they are a place within the meaning of Ss. 3, 4 and 6, Bombay Prevention of Gambling Act.

The third question is, whether the Commissioner satisfied himself that there were good grounds for the suspicion of the complainant. As this is altogether a question of fact, I would leave it to the learned Presidency Magistrate to decide.

The fourth question is, whether the arrests by constables or by Sub-Inspector Salaskar are illegal. As to this it may be presumed that, before the raid, orders were given by the Commissioner of Police to Sub-Inspector Salaskar to arrest those who might be found in the passages. It may be that the arrests were not made within sight of the Commissioner of Police but they can be considered in the circumstances to have been made in his presence. It can hardly be urged that in a case like this where a number of persons are to be dealt with, the person authorized to arrest must personally make the arrest in each case. If the arrest is made in his presence and on his order it is certainly sufficient in accordance with the maxim qui facit per alium, facit per se. I would, therefore, hold that the arrests by the constables and by Sub-Inspector Salaskar are not illegal.

The last question is, whether there was any gaming at all when the meeting was postponed. It is argued that as it was understood by the betters on the horses and the accused that the bets were with respect to races which were to take place that afternoon at Poona and at the time when the bets were made the races had been postponed there was no gaming in this case, that is to say, there was no wagering or betting. No authority has been cited for the proposition that if one or both parties are under a misapprehension as to the subject of the wager or bet there is no wager or bet made. All that the wagerers in a case like this demand is that they should be paid an amount of money if the horse selected by them wins or is placed at the race in which the horse is to run. When they have made their bet and it has been accepted by the taker the transaction is a complete wager or bet. It may be that in a case like the present where the race meeting is postponed or cancelled the person who has paid his money would be entitled to get the money back, but, in my opinion, it cannot be said that the bet has not been made. Similarly, the abetment of an offence is under the Penal Code punishable whether the offence abetted is or is not committed. I am, therefore, of opinion that the fact that the race meeting was in this case postponed does not mean that there was no gaming.

Emperor—Opposite Party.

Criminal Revn. Petn. No. 1200 of 1929, Decided on 23rd November 1929, from order of Sess. Judge, Karnal, D/- 18th July 1929.

Criminal P. C., S. 197—Municipal Commissioner moving Court to issue search warrant acts as a public servant—Provisions of S. 197 must be followed where he is accused of offence done in discharge of his duty.

R was a Municipal Commissioner as well as the Honorary Secretary of the Committee. A resolution was passed directing that R should conduct certain prosecution against one K. During the trial R moved the Court for search warrant which turned out to be unnecessary. As a result K lodged a complaint against R under S. 500, Penal Code :

Held: that R had filed the complaint under the authority of the Municipal Committee and acted in his capacity of a Municipal Commissioner when he asked for a search warrant and whatever he did, he did as a public servant. His action regarding the search warrant could not, therefore, be called in question unless and until the provisions of S. 197 were complied with. [P 120 C 1]

Shamair Chand—for Petitioner.

Kanhya Lal—for the Crown.

Judgment.—The petitioner in this case, Muhammad Rafiq, is a member of the Municipal Committee of Shahabad in the District of Karnal. Not only is he a Municipal Commissioner, but he is also the Honorary Secretary of that committee. The members of that committee found it necessary to pass a resolution for the prosecution of one Kanhya Lal on charges under S. 477 (a), I. P. C., and by the same resolution directed that the petitioner, as the Honorary Secretary, should conduct the prosecution. On 16th March 1929 the petitioner filed the necessary complaint and on 4th April of that year moved the Court for a search warrant which turned out to be unnecessary. As a result Kanhya Lal instituted a complaint under S. 500, I. P. C., against Muhammad Rafiq who pleaded that whatever he did, he did as a public servant and that, therefore, the complaint could not proceed until the provisions of S. 197, Criminal P. C., had been complied with.

The trial Court, as well as the Sessions Judge, came to the conclusion that the prosecution could proceed without recourse to S. 197, Criminal P. C., as Muhammad Rafiq's action on 4th April 1929 was that of the Honorary Secretary of the committee and not that of a Municipal Commissioner. It is against that conclusion and the refusal of the learned Sessions Judge to quash the proceedings that this proceeding under S. 439 has been lodged.

Now, there can be no doubt that Muhammad Rafiq in filing the complaint did so under the authority of the Municipal Committee. He was so authorized because he was the Honorary Secretary of that committee and the fact that he held the post of Honorary Secretary did not deprive him of the responsibilities or the privileges of his Municipal Commissionership. Had he not been a Municipal Commissioner he would not have been the Honorary Secretary of this committee, and he would not, therefore, have been authorized to file the complaint against Kanhya Lal. In the present case it seems to me beyond any doubt that whatever he did, he did because he was directed to lodge this complaint and that as a matter of fact, he acted in his capacity as a Municipal Commissioner when he asked for a search warrant. His action on 4th April 1929 cannot, therefore, be called in question unless and until the provisions of S. 197, Criminal P. C., have been complied with, and I, therefore, accept this revision and quash the proceedings leaving it open to the complainant to take such action under S. 197, Criminal P. C., as he may think proper.

Criminal P. C., S. 441.—Under S. 441 reasons can be supplied where no reasons are given under S. 370—Reasons already given under S. 370 cannot be contradicted by those given under S. 441.

Section 441 is not enacted to enable Presidency Magistrates to give fresh reasons for their decisions contradictory to those already given; but to enable them to supply reasons where in exercise of their privilege under S. 370, they have given no reasons at all.

—for Petitioner.

for Respondent.

Order.—The procedure of the learned 2nd Presidency Magistrate cannot be supported. He dismissed a complaint and discharged the accused which he is empowered to do under S. 370, Criminal P. C., without giving any reasons. But he elected to give as his reason, that there was no legal evidence. This was taken up on revision and on the face of the record the learned Presidency Magistrate is wrong and there is legal evidence, the sworn statement of P. W. 3. But the Magistrate submits a report under S. 441, Criminal P. C., reiterating his statement that there is no legal evidence, and recording for the first time that he disbelieves P. W. 3. This argues great confusion of mind because if the evidence of P. W. 3 requires judicial consideration there evidently is legal evidence.

It seems obvious that at the time he discharged the accused the Magistrate never directed his mind to the credibility of P. W. 3, because he held that there was no legal evidence.

His subsequent argument is not of much use; in fact S. 441, Criminal P. C., is not enacted to enable Presidency Magistrates to give fresh reasons for their decisions contradictory to those already given; but to enable them to supply reasons where in exercise of their privilege under S. 370, Criminal P. C., they have given no reasons at all. This petition must be allowed and further inquiry ordered. The discharge is cancelled.

BARLEE, J. C.

Mahomed Jamal and another—Accused—Appellants.

v.

Emperor—Opposite Party.

Sessions—Criminal Appeals Nos. 72 and 70 of 1929, Decided on 10th August 1929, from order of Addl. City Mag., Karachi.

(a) Penal Code, S. 279 — No danger to public, no conviction under S. 279.

If there is no danger to the public, outside the car who are using the road no offence under S. 279 is committed. [P 121 C 2]

* (b) Penal Code, S. 107— Motor driver allowing unlicensed person to drive car— Motor driver cannot be convicted as abettor under S. 107.

Where a motor driver allows an unlicensed person to drive the motor car, who injures passengers by upsetting the car and who thereby is convicted for an offence under S. 337, the motor driver cannot be convicted as an abettor under S. 107 as it cannot be said that he intended the car should be driven rashly and negligently. [P 121 C 2]

(c) Motor Vehicles Act, S. 16 — Motor driver not specifically charged under S. 16 — He cannot be convicted under that section — Criminal P. C. S. 242.

The fact that an unlicensed person was charged with driving a motor car without a license and pleaded guilty to that charge is not sufficient to justify a Court in convicting the motor driver of having allowed him to drive, where he was not specifically charged with that offence under Motor Vehicles Act, S. 16. [P 122 C 2]

Gurdassing J. Shahani—for Appellants.

D. N. O'Sullivan—for the Crown.

Judgment.—Appellant 1 has been convicted of an offence under Ss. 279 and 337, I. P. C., and appellant 2 has been convicted of abetment.

The facts according to the judgment of the lower Court are that on 2nd April, appellant 2 started to drive a bus from Malir to Karachi at 6 p. m. After he had gone some way along the Malir Road he gave up his seat to the appellant 1 and himself sat at the back of the car. Appellant 1 who was not a licensed driver continued to drive the car and upset it, with the result that some of the passengers were injured. He was, therefore, prosecuted under the sections mentioned above and convicted. It has been contended by Mr. Shahani on his behalf that S. 279 has no application inasmuch as there was no evidence that the appellant was driving the car to the danger of any person using the public road.

This appears to be correct, for if there was no danger to the public outside the car who were using the road no offence under S. 279 can have been committed. But it appears that the appellant has committed an offence under S. 337 because he actually caused hurt to persons in the bus by a rash and negligent act. It has been very faintly contended that his act was not rash and negligent. But there is the evidence on record of Loda, a pleader of this Court, and of another gentleman who was seated in the bus, that the appellant was driving the car at a dangerously fast speed and the speed has been described by Loda as a speed faster than the mail train. That may be an exaggeration, but it is reasonable to suppose that the speed was dangerously fast considering the character of the road. For this reason I cannot interfere with the conviction under S. 337. The sentence does not seem to be unduly severe. A motor car is a very dangerous machine in the hands of an unskilled driver and the appellant is lucky that he has not had to answer a far more serious charge.

The result is that the conviction and the sentence under S. 279 against appellant 1 Mahomed Jamal are set aside but his conviction and sentence under S. 337 are confirmed and he is directed to undergo the unexpired portion of his sentence.

The offence of abetment, however, as the learned A. P. P. admits cannot be made out. Appellant 2 certainly aided appellant 1 in driving the car but it cannot be said that he intended that it should be driven rashly and negligently. If he committed an offence it must be one under the Motor Vehicles Act, but he has not committed the offence under S. 107 with which he had been charged.

The learned A. P. P. had asked me to convict appellant 2 of an offence under S. 16, Motor Vehicles Act, that is of having allowed a person who had no license to drive a motor car of which he was himself in charge. Mr. Gurdassing in reply has urged that his client cannot be convicted of this offence since he was not charged with it.

Section 242, Criminal P. C., directs that when an accused appears before a Magistrate, the particulars of the offence of which he is accused shall be stated to him and he shall be asked if he has any cause to show why he should not be convicted. It is clear from the record that appellant 2 was not asked to plead to a charge of an offence under the Motor Vehicles Act. He was charged with aiding and abetting accused 1 in driving rashly and negligently; and, if the offence under the Motor Vehicles Act was included in the offence with which he was charged he could be convicted of the former. But I cannot agree that the charge of allowing an unlicensed man to drive is included logically in the charge of abetting his driving rashly and negligently.

The question then is whether the fact that appellant 1 was charged with driving without a license and pleaded guilty to that charge is sufficient to justify me in convicting appellant 2 of having allowed him to drive, though he was not specifically charged with that offence.

In my opinion, it is absolutely necessary that all these rules of procedure should be very strictly followed and, therefore, as the law requires that, before a man can be convicted of an offence the particulars of that offence must be stated to him, the appellant cannot be convicted under the Motor Vehicles Act, for certainly the particulars of an offence under S. 16 were not stated to him. It makes no difference at all that in the circumstances he could have had no conceivable defence.

I am unable, therefore, to convict appellant 2 of any offence. And I do not think that I have power to remand the case so that the prosecution may have an opportunity of correcting the mistake made by the learned Magistrate. They must file a fresh complaint against appellant 2 if they wish to secure a conviction under the Motor Vehicles Act.

The conviction and sentence of appellant 2 are set aside and he is directed to be set at liberty.

(b) Penal Code, S. 75—Enhancement of sentence should not rest on previous security bond when accused is not questioned about it.

In the trial the fact that the accused had been called upon to give security for good behaviour on no less than three occasions, was taken into consideration, from the police papers in awarding a heavy sentence. The accused was not asked whether he was bound over as a badmash.

Held, that it was not proper to rely upon that circumstance for enhancement of sentence.

W. B. Chandiramani—for Applicant.

C. M. Lobo—for the Crown.

Rupchand, A. J. C.—The accused was put on his trial before the Additional City Magistrate, Karachi, for the offence of stealing one shawl worth Rs. 8-0-0. It appears that about 5-30 a. m., while passing through the Somerset Street, the accused removed the shawl from complainant's body while he was sleeping on the public road. At that time the accused was not aware that he was being shadowed by two policemen. When he was arrested he denied possession of the shawl which he had hidden on his person, but on being searched he admitted his guilt. It was discovered by the police that the accused had six previous convictions of theft, the last being in 1911, and that the accused had been sent up as a badmash since on three different occasions and bound over in 1916.

At the trial the accused pleaded guilty to the charge and admitted his previous convictions. For some reasons which are not apparent on the record but which may be surmised, the learned Magistrate did not ask the accused whether he had been bound over as a badmash or not. The learned trying Magistrate sentenced him to two years rigorous imprisonment, taking into consideration inter alia his previous convictions and made no reference to the badmashi proceedings.

In appeal, the learned Judicial Commissioner confirmed the sentence and in addition to the grounds referred to by the learned Magistrate observed that the accused had been called upon to give security for good behaviour on no less than three occasions and that his case did not merit any leniency. The accused has come to us in revision.

Now, it is no doubt true that a conviction which is at least 18 years old cannot by itself form a good ground for a heavy sentence. It is also equally true that the learned Judicial Commissioner was in error in relying upon the police papers sent to the Magistrate showing that the accused had been sent up as a badmash when the accused had not been questioned about the badmashi proceedings. In the absence of an opportunity having been afforded to him in that behalf, it was hardly proper to rely upon that circumstance, for enhancement of the sentence. But these two points to which our attention has been drawn are in our opinion not sufficient for us to warrant our interference in revision. The law vests a discretion in the trying Magistrate to pass adequate sentence in each case and it is for him to decide after taking into consideration all the pertinent circumstances of the case, what should be the adequate sentence. No rule of thumb can be laid down by a higher tribunal as a guide for the trying Magistrate in awarding an adequate sentence: see the observations of Lord Alverston in Regina v. Thornton (1). The maximum sentence provided for this offence was three years. It is true that the Magistrate could only inflict a maximum sentence of two years, but there were circumstances which justified him in inflicting on the accused that sentence. The accused was not a juvenile, and the offence committed by him was such as could not be easily detected.

It is a well recognized rule of practice that the more deficient in certainty the sentence is, the severer it should be. Looking to the circumstances of this case it was within the competence of the learned Magistrate to award the maximum sentence which he could impose. It has been repeatedly laid down that before this Court would interfere in revision on the question of sentence, it should be satisfied that the sentence was so unreasonable and so excessive as to require a reduction. Sitting in revision we are not prepared to hold that the discretion exercised by the learned Magistrate in awarding a sentence of two years which has been accepted as proper by the learned Judicial Commissioner, is one which can be interfered with in revision. We accordingly dismiss the application.

C. M. Lobo—for the Crown.

Judgment.—The applicants have been convicted by the Additional City Magistrate, Karachi, No. 1, under Ss. 4 and 5, Prevention of Gambling Act and Nos. 2 to 8 under S. 5, Gambling Act. They have applied to this Court for revision of the convictions and sentences.

This case was tried summarily by the Magistrate and no appeal lies against the sentences.

The facts as they appear from the judgment are that Sub-Inspector Abdul Latif learnt that applicant 1 Assudomal had started a gambling house at Keamari. He made inquiries and then obtained a search warrant under S. 6, Gambling Act, and raided Assudomal's shop after midnight on 25th March 1929. He found the eight applicants in the shop sitting on chairs round a table and playing cards. He arrested them and a pack of cards and a two anna piece which he found on the floor. Besides this evidence and that of the mashirs the prosecution called the informant Ghulam Mahomed who deposed that he had been to Assudomal's shop to gamble at 11 p. m. the same night and that he had gambled there and that Assudomal was taking "Nal." The learned Magistrate held that there was a presumption under S. 7 that the house was being used as a common gambling house and the persons found there were present for the purpose of gambling; and apart from this presumption he held on the evidence that it had been proved that the accused were gambling and that accused 1 was taking "Nal."

Mr. Motiram who has appeared for all the applicants has contended that no presumption should have been drawn from the fact that the warrant was issued because, firstly the warrant was not a special warrant issued under S. 6 of the Act, and, secondly, that the house in which the applicants had been found playing cards had not been clearly described in the warrant.

This second point does not seem to us to be one of substance. The warrant authorised the Sub-Inspector, Keamari, to search the shop "Verhomal Issardas, General Merchant, Jackson Bazar, Kea-mari." Verhomal has three shops in that neighbourhood, a general shop, and adjoining it a flour and grain shop, and also a Pan Bini shop. And it is contended that because he had three shops the description given in the warrant is vague. But, as has been pointed out by the learned Magistrate, though he had three shops he had not got three general shops. And it is perfectly clear that the shop raided was a general shop because there was a sign board at the door of the shop. We think that the house was described with sufficient accuracy.

On the other point, we are unable to agree with the learned Magistrate. The warrant was issued to the Sub-Inspector, Harbour Police Station, Keamari. Now there are three Sub-Inspectors at the Harbour Police Station, Keamari, so prima facie this warrant was not specially directed to any one Police Officer as is required. A special warrant must be a warrant which is specially directed to a person by name and not one which can be endorsed over to any other Police Officer of similar rank: vide Emperor v. Mithu (1). It follows that this was not on the face of it a special warrant as it could have been executed by any of the three Sub-Inspectors.

It has been contended that inasmuch as the Sub-Inspector who obtained the warrant himself executed it, the provisions of the law have been sufficiently satisfied, that is to say, that a warrant which is given to a Police Officer personally and executed by him, is a special warrant. But we do not think that this argument is valid. In our opinion a warrant is not a special warrant if it is not on the face of it a special warrant; and if it is not directed to a special officer, extraneous evidence cannot be admitted to prove that it was meant to be executed by a Special Police Officer personally and only by him.

Since the warrant in this case was not a special warrant it follows that the learned Magistrate was not entitled to draw any of the presumptions mentioned in S. 7 of the Act. But we find that in this case there was sufficient evidence apart from the warrant to show that the house was being used as gambling house. The eight applicants were actually found gambling and there was direct evidence of one witness on oath that applicant 1 who was the owner of the shop had that night been making a profit out of the gambling by taking 'Nal.' It has been urged that we should not accept this witness' evidence inasmuch as he was an informer, a bad character and unworthy of credit. But the learned Magistrate who believed him must have taken his character into consideration and it is only very rarely that this Court will, sitting as a Court of revision, go into questions of fact and reverse findings of fact of the lower Courts. We see no reason to do so in the present application and therefore we dismiss this application.

Badalmal—Opponent.

Criminal Ref. No. 222 of 1929, Decided on 19th September 1929, made by the Sess. Judge, Sukkur.

Penal Code, S. 193—False evidence given on solemn oath—Retraction of false evidence on detection of fraud—Intention not to give false evidence cannot be inferred.

Where the accused retracts his false statements, made on solemn oath in a witness box, only when he discovers that his fraud has been detected, no Court can infer from the subsequent correction or retraction that there is no intention to give false evidence: 19 *Bom. C. M. Lubo—for the Crown.

D. Punwani—for Opponent.

Aston, A. J. C.—This is a reference by the learned Sessions Judge, Sukkur, who has forwarded the record and proceedings in the case of Crown v. Badalmal who was tried by the City Magistrate, Sukkur, for an offence of perjury under S. 193, I. P. C. and sentenced to suffer rigorous imprisonment till the rising of the Court and to pay a fine of Rs. 100 or in default to three months' rigorous imprisonment.

The facts of the case briefly are that one Dostali and two others were charged under Ss. 457/380, I. P. C. with an offence relating to the theft of bullocks. The accused asked for a summons to one Kishnomal Sabhagomal as a defence witness. On 19th September 1928 the Court peon called the name of Kishnomal Sabhagomal and in response to the call the respondent Badalmal, son of Sadhumal entered the Court, stepped into the witness-box and declared on solemn affirmation that he was Kishnomal, son of Sabhagomal and gave evidence with regard to the alleged offence. He deposed to the fact that Idoo gave Dostali a bullock and a cow with a calf, that Dostali came to him and asked for pen and ink and that after 15 minutes Dostali took him to sign the receipt and he attested the receipt, that Sher Mahomed stood surety for both Dostali and Idoo, and for the cattle and receipts were written near a Kandi tree outside the Jalpir Shrine. During the trial of the case the complainant was sent to fetch the bullocks and the further deposition of the witness was suspended. On the return of the complainant he informed the Court that the respondent Badalmal was not Kishnomal son of Sabhagomal. The respondent realizing that his fraud had been discovered confessed to the personation and admitted that the evidence which he had given was false. Complaint was filed against him under S. 193 and he was tried by the learned City Magistrate, Sukkur. The learned Sessions Judge recommends that the sentence may be enhanced and that Badalmal may be sentenced to a substantial period of imprisonment.

Several rulings have been cited on behalf of the respondent which lay down that a deposition of a witness must be regarded as whole: Pandu v. Namgi, In re (1). There it was held by Batchelor, J. and Heaton, J. that it was not desirable to subject an accused to a prosecution for perjury who had been deliberately making a number of false statements on oath and when subsequently confronted with the evidence of his Karkoon had retracted his former statements. In Soni v. Emperor (2) it was held that it was inadvisable to prosecute a man for coming to his right mind. This case was cited with approval in Lachmi Narain v. Emperor (3) where it was laid down that a prosecution for perjury was undesirable when the witnesses correct themselves. In Palani Palgan,

(3) [1913] 16 O. C. 81=19 I. C. 712=14 Cr. L. J. 280.

In re (4) the Madras High Court pointed out that a subsequent correction or retraction may negative the intention to give false evidence. In (1864) W. R. 10 it was held that witnesses should have a locus penitentiae.

It seems to me that a distinction is to be drawn between those cases where a witness either through stress of skilful cross-examination or from other circumstances while under examination in the witness box makes false statements which he soon afterwards retracts in the course of his deposition and the case of a man who deliberately, wilfully and intentionally enters the Court with the intention of giving false evidence and retracts his statement and admits that his evidence is false only when he is found out. The learned Magistrate in this case has held that the accused only retracted his false statements when he discovered that his fraud had been detected. It is clear that in a case of this kind, no Court could infer from the subsequent correction or retraction that there was no intention to give false evidence. The crime was serious and intentional and we agree with the learned Sessions Judge that a substantial period of imprisonment is necessary.

We therefore add the sentence four months rigorous imprisonment to the sentence of fine inflicted by the learned Magistrate. We set aside the sentence of one day's simple imprisonment.

Partabrai D. Punwani — for Applicants.

C. M. Lobo—for the Crown.

Kalmual, A. J. C.—This is an application in revision asking us to set aside the convictions and sentences passed against the applicants father and son under S. 500, I. P. C., sentencing each of the applicants to a fine of Rs. 200 or in default to suffer simple imprisonment for two months, by Mr. W. M. Hassanally, Special First Class Magistrate, Karachi. An appeal was filed against the sentences in the Judicial Commissioner's Court on its Sessions Side but the same was rejected and the sentences confirmed.

Both the accused and the complainant belong to one Jamait or goldsmiths belonging to Cutch residing in Karachi. There are two factions in this Jamait the accused belonging to one faction and the complainant to the other faction. It appears that Ibrahim, son of Ali Mahomed, one of the accused lodged a complaint against the brother of the complainant in Cutch in connexion with ornaments said to have been stolen by complainant's brother from the possession of one Hirbai, a relation of the complainant, with whom the same had been deposited. The complaint was dismissed. It is said that taking advantage of that complaint the accused between 7th and 11th June 1928, circulated a story in Karachi to the effect that Ibrahim, son of Ali Mahomed, son of one of the accused had filed a complaint against a brother of the complainant and that immovable property of the brother of the complainant had been attached and that the shop of the complainant at Karachi would soon be attached. The two complaints filed in Karachi by Muṣo the complainant one against Ali Mahomed and another against his son Ismail show that these defamatory statements were made to several people in Karachi on some occasions by Ali Mahomed and on other occasions by his son Ismail. The complainant on account of such statements circulated by the accused suffered in reputation and in business inasmuch as some of his customers withdrew from him gold deposited for making ornaments while others who had dealings with him refused to give him credit. The defence to these complaints was that one Adam was given the above said (defamatory) information by the complainant himself and that he had circulated the same in the bazar and not the accused.

The cases against both the accused as requested by their counsel were consolidated with the result that there was only one trial. This was evidently done under S. 239, Cl. (d), Criminal P. C.

After the evidence for the complainant had been recorded showing that the accused had made statements of the kind above stated to different people on different occasions sometimes by one accused and sometimes by the other between 7th and 11th June 1928, a charge was framed against both the accused to the following effect :

" That between the 7th and 11th June last at Karachi you both made or published the following imputation concerning Moosa son of Yusif to wit that you or Ibrahim son of Ali Mahomed had got the property of Moosa attached in Cutch and that you or Ibrahim had obtained an order of attachment against Moosa's property at Karachi and that his Karachi property would also be attached in 2 or 3 days' time or words to that effect intending to harm or knowing or having reason to believe that it would harm the reputation of the said Moosa Yusif and thereby committed an offence punishable under S. 500, I. P. C. "

The accused thereafter led evidence mainly to prove that they could not have made a statement defamatory of the nature above said to Adam who was not on visiting terms with them. The Magistrate convicted both the accused of the offence of defamation and sentenced each to pay a fine of Rs. 200.

The first contention raised against the conviction and sentences is that the joint trial was bad, and that, therefore, the entire proceedings were vitiated. This contention in our opinion is unsound as S. 239, Cl. (d), Criminal P. C., one contemplates joint trial of more than one accused of the nature in question of offences committed in the course of the same transaction. The same transaction implies oneness of purpose: see Woodward v. Emperor (1) and this as alleged does exist in this case, the object of both the accused being to defame the complainant about the same matter. Both the father and son seem to have been associated together in circulating on different occasions the statement above referred to. This objection, therefore, on behalf of the accused must fail.

The next objection is that the charge against each of the accused lacks in necessary particulars that are required by law and that this has prejudiced the accused. There is no doubt that both the accused as disclosed in the evidence made defamatory statements to the same effect accused 1 having made it on three occasions and accused 2 on four occasions to different people. There is equally no doubt that each such statement was defamatory and if proved would constitute a distinct offence of defamation. It appears, however, that the Magistrate was under the impression that defamatory statements in effect the same though made on different occasions to different people, however, constitute one offence on the part of each of the accused. It is this wrong impression probably that is responsible for the charge framed as it was done in this case in the lower Court. The charge is silent as to the occasions when the statement complained of was made by accused 1 and is equally silent as to the occasion when it was made by the other accused. There is nothing in the charge to show (there being as many as seven occasions) which of these statements the accused were asked in the charge to meet. This must have necessarily led to the prejudice of the accused in defending the case against them. Cf. Behari Malton v. Queen Empress (2). There were as many as seven instances when the complainant is said to have been defamed. It is not clear at all in the charge as to which incident was each one of the accused called upon to meet. In the absence of such information in the charge the accused could not be said to have had an opportunity to meet the same as required by law, nor can such a charge be in compliance with S. 233, Criminal P. C. The Magistrate has convicted each of the accused of one offence and not of more than one but there is nothing absolutely to show either in the charge or in the judgment to what statement each of the accused is guilty of. The judgment, in other words, is silent as to the occasion when defamatory statements of which the accused have been found guilty were made. The charge is, therefore, in the present case vague and indefinite in that respect. Reading Ss. 221 to 223, Criminal P. C., there could be no doubt that the object underlying is to enable the accused to know with accuracy and certainty and with the greatest precision possible what acts they have committed. S. 233, Criminal P. C., requires a separate charge to be framed in respect of each offence. In the present case, this has not been done. As held by the High Courts of Allahabad and Calcutta disregard of the provisions of S. 233, Criminal P. C., is not an irregularity that could be remedied by S. 537, Criminal P. C., but is altogether illegal: Emperor v. Fattu (3) Pares Nath Sircar v. Emperor (4).

In a defamation case reported in Bishwanath Das v. Keshab Gandhabanik (5) it was held that the charge was a proper charge inasmuch as it did not set forth the particular occasions on which defamation was said to have been committed so as to give the accused person an opportunity of defending himself with reference to each act alleged to have been committed by him. In my opinion, therefore, error in the charge has vitiated the entire trial with convictions following. Even if S. 537 applies to the present case, I have no doubt that the accused have been prejudiced as they were deprived of an opportunity of meeting specific defamatory statements complained of. Under the circumstances we set aside the conviction and sentences and direct that the accused be refunded amounts they have paid. We send accordingly, the case back for trial according to law in view of the above remarks.

Barlee, J. C.—I agree with the proposed order.

The complainant alleged that the two accused had between them committed no less than seven offences and there was no legal obstacle to their being tried jointly for all these seven offences if they were considered to have been committed in the course of one transaction. But as a matter of fact after recording the evidence about seven offences the learned Magistrate framed a charge which reads as if it was a charge of one offence. The accused led evidence which was directed against the charge of one particular offence that one of them had published a libel to a man called Adam. The Magistrate then convicted the accused holding that even if they had not published the libel to Adam, there was evidence that they had published it to others. It seems to me that it is very difficult to say in these circumstances that the accused have been convicted of the offence with which they were charged.

I agree that this case should go back to the Magistrate who should frame a clear and a specific charge or charges of the offences for which in his opinion there is a prima facie evidence and should give them an opportunity of defending themselves as regards each charge.

Penal Code, S. 124-A—Writer can discuss policy of Government but attributing base motives to Government amounts to offence.

It is of course open to a writer to criticize any policy of the Government as permitted by Explanations to S. 124-A but if he proceeds to attribute base motives to Government of having deliberately ruined the subjects etc., he will be liable to be punished under S. 124-A.

Where the article as a whole is calculated to bring the British Imperialists, whose policy is criticised, into hatred and contempt and there are clearly references to the acts of Government of India leading to the inference that the Government of India is included among the Imperialists an offence under S. 124-A is committed. [P 129 C 2]

Mazhar Ali Azhar—for Appellant.

Ram Lal—for the Crown.

Judgment.—The appellant Arjan Singh, editor, printer and publisher of an Urdu Journal named "Kirti" has been convicted in this case under S. 124-A, I. P. C., in respect of an article beginning with the words, "We are going to witness the spectacle of a Great War," which appeared in the issue of that paper of January last and has been sentenced to rigorous imprisonment for a year.

The writer discusses the situation on the Indo-Afghan Frontier in these days and tries to show that a Great War is likely to be the outcome of the British Imperialist policy. He accuses the British Imperialists of having incited and helped the tribesmen on the Frontier against their King and warns Indians against helping the British in the forthcoming war as the British rule in India has ruined them and as they only got bullets in the Jallianwala Bagh, in return for the services rendered by them during the Great War.

Taking the article as a whole there seems no doubt that it is calculated to bring the British Imperialists, whose policy is criticised into hatred and contempt. The only point which needs consideration is whether the "Imperialists" as referred to in the article may be taken to include the "Government established by law in British India". The learned counsel for the appellant has argued that the article only refers to the policy of the British Cabinet and not of the Government of India and hence it cannot fall within the provisions of S. 124-A, I. P. C. But, on a careful perusal of the article, I am unable to accept this contention. The language of the article is somewhat guarded, but there are clear references in the article to the acts of the Government in India which leave no doubt that the Government of India is included by the writer amongst the Imperialists whose policy he is criticising. At the very outset, the writer says that the war, which is about to break out on the Frontier is merely for safeguarding the British Imperialism "which is destroying and ruling us and which is making us poor and penniless every day". In the second paragraph he refers to the tragedy of Jallianwala Bagh which could not in any sense be considered to be an act of the British Cabinet. Further on, the writer refers to the bomb thrown on the occasion of the Dusohra festival at Lahore, and suggests that it was thrown merely to incite Hindus and Mahomedans to fight with one another. This also appears to refer clearly to the policy of the Government of India and not of the Cabinet in England. In the end the writer refers to the slow recruitment for the impending war referring again apparently to the recruitment in India.

The above references seem to me to leave no doubt that the Government established by law in British India is as much the object of the attack as the Imperialists in England. It is, of course open to a writer to criticise any policy of the Government as permitted by the explanations to S. 124-A, but if he proceeds to attribute base motives to Government and accuses Government of having deliberately ruined the subjects etc., he will be liable to be punished under S. 124-A, I. P. C.: cf. Queen Empress v. Ramchandra Narayan (1). In the present instance the writer warns Indians not to help the Imperialists, not because Imperialism itself is objectionable, but because British Imperialism has destroyed and ruined Indians and is rendering them poor and destitute every day, and because the Indians got no reward for their services during the Great War, except the bullets at Jallianwala." The passages in which the writer refers to the policy of "Divide and Rule" and suggests that a bomb was deliberately thrown on the occasion of the Dusehra at Lahore, to create dissensions between Hindus and Musalmans are equally mischievous. These passages are clearly calculated to excite disaffection towards the Government established by law in British India and come within the scope of S. 124-A, I. P. C.

Taking the article as a whole, however, the sentence appears to be rather severe. I accept the appeal to the extent of reducing the sentence to rigorous imprisonment for the period already undergone.

Rankin, C. J.—In this case 11 accused were put upon their trial before the learned Sessions Judge and a jury. Eight have been found guilty by a majority of three to two and they have been convicted by the learned Judge. The case arose out of an affray which appears to have occurred in connexion with a dispute as to who had the right of possession of certain agricultural land. The occurrence took place at three or four o'clock in the afternoon of 22nd July 1928. The learned Judge in his charge to the jury has described the occurrence which would appear to show that both the complainant party and the accused party were present. Many of them were armed and so far as the complainant's party was concerned, they were in possession of one gun and a member of the party of the accused was shot with it. The questions for the jury have been very lucidly and elaborately set forth in the charge. The learned Sessions Judge has explained most satisfactorily the importance of the question of possession. He has shown to the jury that unless they find that the complainant's party were in possession they cannot find the common object of the charge under S. 147, Criminal P. C. and also they would have to consider the serious question of private defence. Upon reading the charge as a whole it does not appear to me that any objection of a serious kind can be taken to it. In the end Mr. Talukdar for the accused persons lays stress upon the objection which he makes to the way in which the learned Judge has dealt with the question as what is the first information report.

In this case it would seem that the affray having taken place in the afternoon of 22nd July the first person to lodge a complaint within the meaning of S. 154, Criminal P. C. was one of the accused party. He made no complaint of anything having been done by his own party, but he complained that the complainants had assaulted them. The next day that is, on 23rd July, it appears that the complainant's party two of whom were badly wounded went to the hospital and before they went there they informed the constable at the police station that three people had been injured. It would appear that they went nearer to the Falta Police Station than the Diamond Harbour Police Station. At about 2 o'clock one of the party went to the former Police Station and could not find the officer-in-charge and accordingly he went back to the hospital and next morning that is, on 24th, he came to Falta Police Station to see the officer-in-charge and made a complaint under S. 154, Criminal P. C. At the trial the learned Judge has treated this as the first information report for the purposes of the present case; the others have not been treated as the first information report. The question which has been raised by Mr. Taluqdar is whether the counter-information of 22nd July is not the first information report which would prevent that of 24th July being received in evidence, save at the instance of the defence, by reason of S. 162, Criminal P. C. In my judgment the contention of Mr. Taluqdar is not sound on the facts of this case. The first information report which is to be dealt with properly under S. 154, Criminal P. C. is a different thing from the statements made to a police officer in the course of an investigation such as are brought within S. 162, Criminal P. C. I do not assent to the proposition that because a person of the party of the accused goes first to the police station and says that some of the complainant's party has committed an offence, the real complaint against the accused must be kept off the record save on terms under S. 162, Criminal P. C. It is a question of fact whether a statement made to a police officer in the course of an investigation in such cases comes under S. 162 or is made by way of complaint to commence an investigation under S. 154. The two matters are dealt with differently in the Code. One says that even if the statement is reduced to writing, is not to be signed whereas the other statement is to be reduced to writing and is to be signed.

In my opinion the first information within the meaning of the Code which applies to this particular trial was the document of 24th July which has been properly treated as the first information. In these circumstances I am of opinion that the appeal fails and must be dismissed.

The accused must surrender to their bail and serve out the unexpired portion of their sentences.

Section 144 makes provision for a contingency that local and temporary orders may, at times, be made without there being a real danger of breach of the peace or other reason justifying it. *Mirtyunjy Chatterji and Debabrata Mukherji—*for Petitioners.

Rankin, C. J.—In this case an order was made under S. 144, Criminal P. C., prohibiting the petitioners from exercising any act of possession in respect of a certain fishery. The Magistrate made this order on the basis of a police report and that police report did state that a serious breach of the peace was likely to take place unless such an order was made. Thereupon the petitioners applied to the Magistrate to show cause against the order. In the meantime a complaint had been preferred against the petitioners for a breach of the order and the Magistrate for that reason refused to proceed as he is directed by the section to do and to give the petitioners proper opportunity of showing cause against the order. The petitioners' case appears to be that they could have shown to the Magistrate's satisfaction that there was no likelihood of a breach of the peace. The petitioners went on appeal to the District Magistrate who rejected their petition. They accordingly have come to this Court in revision and ask us to set aside the order. By the time we are dealing with it the order has expired and is now of no effect.

Mr. Chatterjee on behalf of the petitioners has referred us to certain cases in which this Court has set aside an order of this character notwithstanding that it had expired by lapse of time : see the cases of J. A. Thomson v. Emperor (1); Bishessur v. Emperor (2); Chandra Kanta v. Emperor (3); Chandra Nath v. F. I. Ry. Co. (4); Ram Gopal v. Narayan Das (5). So far as the actual order itself is concerned I am not of opinion that that order was without jurisdiction. It is true that one may doubt whether it would not have been better to proceed under S. 145, Criminal P. C., or to proceed under some other section. But on the plain terms of S. 144 it is impossible to hold, in my view, that the order is without jurisdiction. These petitioners have been prosecuted under S. 188, I. P. C. and the policy of the legislature with reference to section 188 is to make provision for a contingency that local and temporary orders may, at times, be made without there being a real danger of breach of the peace or other reason justifying it. Accordingly under that section it has to be proved that the accused not merely disobeyed the lawful order but that the act of disobedience was such as caused or involved the risk of a breach of the peace or other danger or trouble. It appears to me, therefore, that if the petitioners in this case are in a position to show that by fishing or by doing what they were forbidden to do no risk of a breach of the peace was occasioned they would have a complete defence to the proceeding.

We are asked to send the matter back to the Magistrate notwithstanding that the order has expired so that he may begin the proceedings again, as regards the petitioners' showing cause against the order. I cannot find that this Court has ever made such an order as that after the time when the order under S. 144 Criminal P. C. has expired, nor do I think that, it would be a reasonable order to make. It appears to me that if it were shown that the order under S. 144, Criminal P. C. was without jurisdiction we might be justified in view of the prosecution in setting it aside. It does not appear to me that that can be made in this case. This rule must be discharged.

Criminal Appeal No. 96 of 1929, Decided on 2nd August 1929, from decision of Sess. Judge, Dinajpur, D/- 8th January 1929.

Evidence Act, S. 6—Statement made by girl to her mother after transaction is over—Statement is not relevant under S. 6—Evidence Act, S. 8, Illus. (j).

Where the statement of the girl to her mother does not form part of the transaction viz., the raping of the girl, or occur during it, but is made after this transaction is over, when the perpetrator had gone away and the girl came away from the scene of occurrence to her mother's house, the statement is not relevant under S. 6. Cuming, J.—This is an appeal by one Sreehari Sawarnakar who was tried by the learned Sessions Judge of Dinajpur sitting with a jury on a charge of rape on a child of some eight or nine years old. The jury unanimously found the accused guilty and the learned Judge agreeing with verdict sentenced him to five years' rigorous imprisonment and 16 strokes. The facts are briefly these: The girl who was raped named Durgamani was living with her mother one Sailabala who is a widow. On the day of occurrence the mother of the accused came to call Durgamani to collect firewood with the accused who was also collecting firewood. Durgamani went with the accused to a place called Puranbhita where they began to collect firewood. While the girl was engaged in, collecting wood the accused Sreehari caught hold of her, placed her on the ground and proceeded to have sexual intercourse with her. Finally he let her go and the girl went back weeping to her mother to whom she told the matter. After some delay information was given to the authority and the appellant was put on his trial with the result already mentioned.

The appellant pleaded not guilty and it was suggested that the charge was the result of enmity. It was further suggested that the injury on the girl was due to the bite of a leech. The first point urged by the learned vakil for the appellant is that the learned Judge misdirected the jury by telling them that there was no evidence that the girl had been bitten by a leech beyond the doctor's statement, that it was possible that the wound on the girl was caused by the biting of a leech. The learned vakil contends that there is a statement by the girl's mother that the girl said that she had been bitten by a leech. The learned Judge was quite correct in saying that there was no evidence that the girl had been bitten by a leech beyond the doctor's statement. The statement of the girl's mother as to what the girl said is not evidence of the fact that she had been bitten by a leech. It could possibly be used to corroborate or to contradict the statement made by the girl. By itself it would not be substantive evidence of the fact that she had been so bitten. The learned vakil contends that under S. 6, Evidence Act, her statement to the mother would be a relevant fact. S. 6 provides as follows :

"Facts which, though not in issue, are so connected with a fact in issue as to form part of the same transaction are relevant, whether they occurred at the same time and place or at different times and places."

It is clear that the statement of the girl to her mother, if she had made any, did not form part of the transaction by which I understand the raping of the girl or occur during it. This transaction, namely raping of girl, was over when the perpetrator had gone away and the girl came away from the scene of occurrence to her mother's house. Therefore, this statement is not relevant under S. 6. Even then it would not be evidence of the fact that she had been bitten by a leech. It could only be evidence of the fact that she made that statement to her mother. There is therefore no misdirection by the learned Judge on this point.

The learned vakil then contends that the learned Judge did not tell the jury that the statement to the mother could be used to contradict the girl, and that the learned Judge should have specifically drawn the jury's attention to the statement. As a matter of fact the jury's attention was drawn to the fact that the mother had said that the daughter told her that she had been bitten by a leech. The jury themselves specifically questioned the girl on the point, for at the end of her cross-examination there is a note :

"To the jury. It is not true that when I came home after the occurrence I told my mother that I had been bitten by a leech. I told my mother that I had been raped by accused."

Therefore although the learned Judge did not in his charge specifically draw the attention of the jury to this point the jury's attention had been drawn to it as is clear from the girl's answer quoted above. Therefore the omission on the part of the learned Judge to draw specifically the jury's attention to the point is of no importance.

It has next been argued that the mother Sailabala admitted in her cross-examination that since a certain salis she did not allow the accused to come to her house and the learned vakil suggests that the Judge should have put to the jury whether it is likely that in such circumstances the girl would be allowed to go with the accused. The learned Judge did draw the attention of the jury to the fact that there was enmity between the parties. He did not doubt specifically suggest to the jury that they might consider the question as to whether, if there was any enmity between the parties, the girl would have gone with the accused to gather wood. No doubt the Judge might have put this point to the jury. But I do not think that the putting of this point specifically to the jury is of much importance when the jury's attention was drawn to the fact that there was enmity between the parties.

Then it is urged that the learned Judge should have drawn the attention of the jury to the contradiction between the statement of the girl that the place of occurrence was visible from other houses and the evidence of the Sub-Inspector who investigated the case that the actual spot of occurrence was not visible from other houses.

The Sub-Inspector was shown the spot by the child. The child, no doubt, said that Puranbhita is visible from certain other places. That is not the same as saying the place of occurrence is visible. The actual place of occurrence may be somewhere inside the Puranbhita. There is no contradiction between the girl's statement and that of the Sub-Inspector. The girl was not asked whether the place on which she was, was visible from other houses.

Lastly it has been urged by the learned vakil for the appellant that the sentence is too severe. Looking at the facts of the case we are not prepared to say for one moment that the sentence is severe. The rape has been perpetrated on a child of nine. In such cases infliction of whipping is a very suitable form of punishment in addition to the sentence of imprisonment. The result is, the appeal is dismissed. The accused, if on bail, must surrender to serve out his sentences.

v.

Emperor—Opposite Party.

Criminal Appeal No. 109 of 1929, Decided on 6th August 1929, from judgment of Sess. Judge, Faridpur.

(a) Criminal Trial—Evidence—Examination of witnesses—Prosecution is not obliged to examine witnesses who will not speak truth—Defence has privilege to cross-examine such witnesses which they must exercise at right time.

The prosecution is under no obligation to examine witnesses who it has reason to believe will not speak the truth. It is usual in such circumstances for the prosecution to tender such witnesses for cross-examination. The defence, however, is certainly entitled to claim that privilege but having omitted to do so they cannot be permitted to make capital of the fact that these witnesses were not cross-examined: 8 Cal. 121, held too widely stated. [P 185 C 1]

(b) Criminal Trial—Evidence—Presumption—Presumption of correctness attaching to finally published Record-of-Rights relates only to possession at time of its preparation—Such presumption by lapse of time (10 or 12 years) is rendered of weakest description—Record-of-Rights.

The presumption of correctness, which attaches to the finally published Record-of-Rights, relates only to possession at the time when the record is prepared; and, even if such presumption can be made in a criminal trial, it is clear that where there has been an interval of ten or 12 years between the preparation of the record and the occurrence of an offence in respect of dispute arising over possession of land, any presumption arising from the record is obviously of the weakest possible description. Indeed the probative value is practically nil since all sorts of changes may obviously take place in the course of 10 or 12 years. [P 185 C 2]

(c) Criminal P. C., S. 540—Court has power to admit rebutting evidence to contradict evidence of defence.

Under S. 540 Court has power to admit rebutting evidence for the purpose of contradicting evidence adduced on behalf of the defence, if the Court thinks it to be essential to the just decision of the case. [P 185 C 2]

B. C. Chatterji and Suresh Chandra Talukdar—for Applicants.

Debendra Narain Bhattacharyya—for the Crown.

Graham, J.—This is an appeal by three persons named Nayan Mandal, Panchanan Mandal and Moti Lal Mandal who have been convicted by the Sessions Judge of Faridpur on a trial with the aid of a jury and convicted under Ss. 148 and 304 (part 1) read with S. 149, I. P. C., and sentenced as follows: Nayan Mandal to rigorous imprisonment for ten years under S. 304 (part 1) read with S. 149, I. P. C., and Panchanan Mandal and Moti Lal Mandal to five years' rigorous imprisonment under S. 304 (part 1); read with S. 149, I. P. C. No sentences were inflicted under S. 148, I. P. C.

The case for the prosecution was that on the day of occurrence the complainant with a number of other persons had gone to cultivate a certain plot of land and that the accused came in numbers variously armed and ordered them to stop cultivating the land. The complainant's party refused and thereupon the accused attacked them and one Tarini was killed and one Lakhi Kanta was also injured and died afterwards. The defence was that the accused were in possession of the land and were cultivating it, and that the complainant's party came up and attacked them while they were peacefully cultivating the land and that any injuries, which were caused, were caused by the accused in the exercise of their right of private defence.

On behalf of the appellants three points were argued before us. It was first contended that the learned Sessions Judge erred in allowing the prosecution to withhold four witnesses named Abhoy Charan Shikari, Ramananda Biswas, Bonomali Biswas and Jagabandhu Biswas, who were examined in the committing Court, but were not examined in the Sessions Court, or tendered for cross-examination. It is urged that they ought at least to have been tendered for cross-examination. Two of these witnesses Abhoy and Ramananda were named in the first information. In the committing Court they were declared hostile because they did not support the prosecution. The prosecution is under no obligation to examine witnesses who it has reason to believe will not speak the truth: see Empress v. Dhunno Kazi (1). It is usual in such circumstances for the prosecution to tender such witnesses for cross-examination, and it is not clear whether this procedure was adopted or not. The defence, however, was certainly entitled to claim that privilege. Having omitted to do so they cannot be permitted to make capital of the fact that these witnesses were not cross-examined.

As regards the other two witnesses Banamali and Jagabandhu there does not appear to be anything to show that they were material witnesses. The prosecution was not bound to examine them. The remarks which have been made above apply to these witnesses also.

It is also urged on behalf of the appellants that the learned Judge should have told the jury that if material witnesses are not called, it may be presumed that, if they had been called, they would not have supported the prosecution. The charge does, however, contain a direction of this nature.

Secondly, it was contended for the appellants that the learned Judge misdirected the jury inasmuch as he did not clearly and explicitly tell them that the settlement record was in favour of the accused and that the presumption was that the record is correct. The learned Judge has referred to the point in his charge. It was perhaps not so clearly put as it might have been. But however that may be, it is well settled that the presumption of correctness, which attaches to the finally published Record-of-Rights, relates only to possession at the time when the record is prepared, and, even if such presumption can be made in a criminal trial, as to which, speaking for myself, I entertain some doubt, it is clear that where there has been an interval of 10 or 12 years, as in this instance, between the preparation of the record and the occurrence, any presumption arising from the record is obviously of the weakest possible description. Indeed the probative value is practically nil since all sorts of changes may obviously take place in the course of 10 or 12 years. The material question in a case of this description is possession at the date of the occurrence. If the learned Judge had told the jury that the settlement record gave rise to a presumption in favour of the possession of the accused at the date of the occurrence he would certainly have misdirected them.

Thirdly and lastly, it was urged for the appellants that the defence was seriously handicapped by the fact that rebutting evidence was allowed to be brought on the record at the 11th hour for the purpose of contradicting the evidence adduced on behalf of the defence, and it was further contended that certain documents, which were called for from the Sadar Registration Office, were not admissible in evidence, and that the trial has been vitiated by the reception of inadmissible evidence. As regards the first part of this contention reference may be made to S. 540, Criminal P. C., and S. 135, Evidence Act. S. 540 empowers the Court at any stage to summon any person as a witness, if his evidence appears to it to be essential to the just decision of the case. S. 135, Evidence Act, lays down that the order in which witnesses are produced and examined shall be regulated by the law and practice for the time being relating to civil and criminal procedure respectively, and in the absence of any such law by the discretion of the Court. I think, therefore, that the Court had power to admit this evidence and that the objection on this point must fail. Finally as regards the objection that the documents in question Exs. X and Y, are not admissible in evidence we think there can be no doubt that these documents are public documents, and they were, therefore, rightly admitted. In the result all the points which have been urged on behalf of appellants fail, the appeal must be dismissed and the convictions and sentences are confirmed.

Lort-Williams, J.—I agree. I desire to add that, in my opinion, the statement of Wilson, J., in Empress v. Dhunno Kazi (1), p. 124 is too wide. The learned Judge says:

"The only legitimate object of a prosecution is to secure not a conviction, but that justice be done. The prosecutor is not, therefore, free to choose how much evidence he will bring before the Court. He is bound to produce all the evidence in his favour directly bearing upon the charge. It is prima facie his duty, accordingly, to call those witnesses who prove their connexion with the transactions in question, and also must be able to give important information. The only thing that can relieve the prosecutor from calling such witnesses is the reasonable belief that, if called, they would not speak the truth. If such witnesses are not called without sufficient reason being shown, the Court may properly draw an inference adverse to the prosecution."

It is difficult to understand what in practice would be the effect of the first part of the learned Judge's dictum, namely that the only legitimate object of a prosecution is to secure not a conviction, but that justice be done. If the evidence in the hands of the prosecution points to the conclusion that a crime has been committed, it is the legitimate object of the prosecution to see that the prisoner is convicted. If the evidence in hand does not point to the probability that he is guilty of a crime, he ought not be prosecuted at all. Consequently if the prosecution are of opinion that the evidence in their possession points to the probability that the prisoner has committed a crime, obviously in their view justice would be done by his conviction, which it should be their object, to secure. The dictum, therefore, though rhetorically and theoretically excellent, is meaningless in practice. The law in my opinion is correctly stated in Archbold's Criminal Pleadings, 27th Edn., 496:

"Although in strictness it is not necessary for the prosecutor to call every witness whose name is on the back of the indictment, (or, in India, "whose deposition has been taken"), it has been usual to do so, that the defendant may cross-examine them."

That is supported by a number of cases, the first being R. v. Simmonds (2) and the last being R. v. Barley (3):

"If counsel will not call the witness, the Judge in his discretion may: R. v. Simmonds (2). . . . However the prosecutor is not bound to call them all; though he ought, it has been said, to have them in Court, that they may be called for the defence, if the prisoners choose: R. v. Cassidy (4)."

The latter part of the learned Judge's statement about the presumption which may be drawn, is of course correct. If the prosecution, in their discretion, do not choose to call such a witness, then the presumption may be drawn that his evidence, if given, would be unfavourable to their case.

CUMING AND LORT-WILLIAMS, JJ.

Natabar Haldar — Accused — Appellant.

V.

Emperor—Opposite Party.

Criminal Appeal No. 107 of 1929, Decided on 30th July 1929, from decision of Sess. Judge, Bakarganj, D/- 14th December 1928.

(a) Criminal P. C., S. 297—Summing up of evidence—Judge should sift and analyse evidence for prosecution and draw attention of jury to defence raised.

In summing up of evidence the Judge should not confine himself to detailing chronologically the evidence given by the witnesses for the prosecution without sifting or analyzing it and without directing the jury in any way upon the value or weight which ought to be or might be attached to it. He ought also to draw the attention of the jury to the defence raised. Omission to do either makes the Judge of little assistance to jury. [P 198 C 1]

(b) Criminal P. C., S. 297—Misdirection to jury—Direction upon Ss. 302 and 304—In direction under S. 302, Judge not adhering to words of section used word "possible" for "likely" held amounted to misdirection.

A Judge after explaining Ss. 302 and 304, Penal Code, said in his charge to jury. "If, however, you find that the accused had neither the intention nor the knowledge requisite under S. 302 consider his liability under S. 304." He then read and explained that section and continued "if you hold that he intended to cause the deceased such bodily injury that death would be possible but not the most probable result you will find him guilty under S. 304, Part I, or if you hold that he had no such intention but knew as a reasonable man that the deceased's death would be a likely consequence of his act you will find him guilty under S. 304, Part 2."

Held: that there was misdirection.

Suresh Chandra Talukdar and Bhu-pendra Nath Dutt Roy—for Appellant.

Anib Chandra Roy Chowdhury—for the Crown.

Lort-Williams, J. — The accused Natabar Haldar alias Natak was tried before the learned Sessions Judge at Barisal with a jury under S. 302, I. P. C. for causing the death of one Karim Shah. Along with the accused his brother Nandabashi was also tried under S. 302 read with S. 114, I. P. C. for abetting him. He was acquitted. The case of the prosecution was that the two accused brothers, Nandabashi and Natabar, lived together and were tenants of Abdul Kader Talukdar of Chatra. Narendra Nath Bose was the landlord's Tahsildar and Karim Shah was his Mridha. In the afternoon of Tuesday 27th March 1928 Narendra (with Karim) had gone to the Bari of the two brothers where he found them and also Mahommad Shah and Abdul Karim Bari.

There was some conversation and Narendra demanded the rent due from the brothers. Nandabasi said that they were unable to pay them and the Tahsildar and Karim were about to depart when Nandabasi invited them to the inner hut at the north Viti of the Bari to say something to them. Thereupon they went to the north Viti hut, Natabar also accompanying them and there they sat down. An altercation then arose between the two brothers and Karim Shah with regard to a Jaisudi Bari which apparently the latter had taken possession of, but the possession of which was claimed by the brothers. They complained that he did not pay any rent for this Bari. His answer was that various people held mortgages on the property and he did not know to whom to pay the rent. When the altercation had been going on for about 20 minutes, Natabar who had gone inside the hut suddenly appeared with a leja and speared Karim as he sat on the verandah. He attempted to get up and Nandabasi then got up and helped Natabar to press the leja home. Karim rolled over and died within a few minutes. Narendra got up and ran out of the Bari for help. Mohammad Shah who had been left at the Baithak-khana heard his brother Karim cry out and ran to the north Vita hut and saw his brother lying in front of the door of the hut and Natabar standing on the verandah with a leja in his hand. He tried to drag the body away but Nandabasi cried to his brother to kill him if he persisted in the attempt. Mohammad then ran away from the Bari. On his way he passed a number of people who had been called as witnesses and he told them all that his brother had been killed by Natabar. Various witnesses came to the Bari and were threatened by Natabar who said that he would kill anybody who came near or tried to take the body away. Some of the witnesses alleged that he had said that he would kill them as he had killed Karim. The wound upon Karim when examined afterwards by the doctor were found to be consistent with having been done with a leja. The chest was slashed open and the wound perforated the upper lobe of the left lung, the left varticle of the heart in two places and the stomach in two places. It is obvious therefore that considerable force must have been used.

Natabar's defence was that he had had a quarrel with a neighbour on account of the neighbour's son interfering with his Panbaroj, that somebody suggested that he should go to his landlord to have the matter decided, and that the landlord instead of helping him had fined him Rs. 25 apparently on three separate occasions making the fine Rs. 75 in all. He also sentenced him to be slapped with a shoe but this part of the sentence was remitted. He says further that in consequence of his inability to pay the fine imposed the landlord had sent his servants for the purpose of collecting the fine and that they with a number of other persons had attacked him when he was attending to his Panbaroj and that he had ran away towards his Bari when a leja had been thrown at him but missed him. He managed to get into his Bari and when he tried to shut the door another leja was thrown at him which grazed him on the thigh and in turn he picked up the leja which had been thrown on him and either threw it back or used it in his defence with the result that, during the fight which ensued, Karim was struck. These shortly are the facts.

The sole witness of actual striking of Karim was Narendra but Mahomed saw the body almost immediately afterwards, and as I have said certain witnesses deposed that Natabar threatened them that he would kill them as he had killed Karim. It will be observed that a considerable part of the evidence of the persons who say that they saw Mahomed running and heard his news is as consistent with the case for the defence as it is with that of the prosecution. It would fit in with either story. Uday Chandra Roy, prosecution witness 11, said in his cross-examination that the men he had seen were running with something like lathis in their hands and that from within the Basabari he heard Natabar cry out that he was being murdered.

Mr. Taluqdar on behalf of the appellant has complained first of all that the learned Judge has not properly put the case of the defence to the jury. He has also raised a point of law with regard to the learned Judge's direction upon S. 304, I. P. C. In view of the opinion which we have formed as to the learned Judge's direction in law it is not necessary to deal at length with the first point taken on behalf of the accused. But reading the charge as a whole I am of opinion that it does not sufficiently draw the attention of the jury to the defence raised, nor does it show the importance of the evidence of Uday Roy in his cross-examination. The learned Judge, as so many learned Judges in the mofussil seem to do, simply detailed chronologically the evidence given by the witnesses for the prosecution without sifting or analysing it and without directing the jury in any way upon the value or weight which ought to be or might be attached to it, and by so doing has really failed to give that help to the jury which he ought to have given. As I have already pointed out in a recent case the spirit of the Code demands that there shall be more than a bare statement of facts in the learned Judge's charge. Otherwise he can be of little assistance to the jury.

The point raised in the learned Judge's direction in law refers to the following passage in his charge. He had explained Ss. 302 and 304 and eventually said this:

"If, however, you find he had neither the intention nor the knowledge requisite under S. 302 consider his liability under S. 304, I. P. C."

He then read and explained that section and continued

"If you hold that he intended to cause Karim Shah such bodily injury that death would be a possible but not the most probable result you will find him guilty under S. 304 part 1 or if you hold that he had no such intention but knew as a reasonable man that Karim's death would be a likely consequence of his act you will find him guilty under S. 304 part 2."

In our opinion this direction would have been quite correct if he had not used the word "possible," but had adhered to the words of the section and had used the word "likely."

It becomes clear, that the Judge's direction is wrong, if you apply it to a concrete instance. I may repeat here the example which I suggested during the discussion—If Natabar had struck a blow with the leja on Karim's skin it is clear that Karim might have died from septic poisoning arising from the wound. His death would be a possible result of what Natabar had done but not the most possible result. According to the learned Judge's direction such an act would come within S. 304 part 1. We are clearly of opinion that it would not. It might possibly come within S. 304 part 2. But it is more than likely that such an act would not come within the purview of S. 304 at all. In view of the fact that the jury have convicted the accused of an offence under S. 304, part 1, it cannot be said that this misdirection may not have misled the jury.

In these circumstances we are of opinion that the conviction and sentence must be set aside and the appellant retried.

Sunnat Mondal—Accused—Petitioner.

v.

Makar Sheikh—Complainant—Opposite Party.

Criminal Revn. No. 779 of 1929, Decided on 23rd August 1929.

Criminal P. C., S. 232—Charge under Penal Code, S. 498 alleging accused as taking away woman from complainant's custody—Evidence showing that she was taken from one B's house—Scanty evidence connecting accused with offence—Retrial was not ordered on amended charge.

In a charge framed under S. 498 against the accused in the trial Court, it was alleged that he had taken the woman away from the complainant's custody, but the nature of the evidence showed that the charge was intended to relate to the alleged taking away of the complainant's wife from one B's house. There was, however, no finding that B had the care of the woman on behalf of her husband, the complainant, nor was there any evidence on the record that would justify such a finding.

Held: that from the very scanty nature of the evidence connecting the accused with the offence, it would not be proper to order a retrial on an amended charge. [P 139 C 1, 2]

Mrityunjoy Chattopadhyaya and Monindra Nath Banerjee—for Petitioner.

Patterson, J.—If the evidence is believed, the complainant's wife was enticed away by a woman named Hazari Bibi, was taken away from Hazari Bibi's house by the present accused and was then detained or concealed for several days in the house of one Mujahar Fakir.

In the charge framed against the accused in the trial Court, it was alleged that he had taken the woman away from the complainant's custody and having regard to the nature of the evidence, it must be supposed (though this has not been clearly stated,) that the charge was intended to relate to the alleged taking away of the complainant's wife from Hazari Bibi's house. There is, however, no finding that Hazari Bibi had the care of the woman on behalf of her husband, the complainant, nor is there any evidence on the record that would justify such a finding. On the contrary, the evidence goes to show that the woman had already been taken away from the complainant's custody by Hazari Bibi before ever the accused appeared on the scene.

It is possible that, if the charge had been framed differently, and if the matter had been more fully investigated the accused might have been convicted in respect of the subsequent concealment or detention of the woman in Mujahar Fakir's house, but it is clear that, in the present state of the record, the conviction and sentence under S. 498, I. P. C., cannot be sustained. The Rule must therefore be made absolute, and in view of the very scanty nature of the evidence connecting the present applicant with the offence, I do not think it would be proper to order a retrial on an amended charge.

The accused will be released and his bail bond discharged and the fine if paid will be refunded.

Bikram Ali Pramanik and others—Appellants.

v.

Emperor—Opposite Party.

Criminal Appeal No. 58 of 1929, Decided on 24th July 1929, against decision of Asst. Sess. Judge, Pabna, D/- 17th January 1929.

(a) Criminal P. C., S. 236 — Alternative charges under Ss. 395 and 457, Penal Code, are not bad in law.

Offence under S. 457 is really in some cases a minor offence to offence under S. 395 and there can be no reason why there should not be alternative charges of these two offences.

* (b) Evidence Act, Ss. 149, 154—(Per Cuming, J.)—Leading questions may be asked without declaring witness hostile — (Lort-Williams, J. contra.)

Section 154 read with S. 143 provides that the Court may allow the party to put leading questions to his own witnesses. This does not necessarily mean that he must declare the witness hostile and cross-examine him. It is only when he declares the witness hostile and cross-examines him that he cannot rely upon his evidence. Where the public prosecutor asks a witness some questions with the permission of the Court desiring to get from him not a contradiction of what he said but something in addition, he cannot be said to have cross-examined the witness. The questions are merely leading questions. [P 140 C 2, P 141 C 1]

Per Lort-Williams, J., contra.—Ss. 143 and 154 read together do not give power to prosecution to put leading questions to their own witnesses even with the assent of the Judge. The meaning of S. 154 is that with permission of the Court they may treat a witness hostile and cross-examine him. [P 141 C 2]

(c) Criminal P. C., S. 298—Charge to jury—Charge is defective where no direction as to weight to be attached to evidence of co-accused against accused is given.

Where in the charge to the jury the Judge does not give any direction to the jury as to how they should treat and the weight they should give to evidence of an accused person as against his co-accused it is impossible to say how far such omission does not prejudice the accused and retrial should be ordered.

Dinesh Chandra Ray—for Appellants.

Debendra Narain Bhattacharjee—for the Crown.

Cuming, J.—This is an appeal by two persons Bikram Ali Pramanik and Kudratulla Khan. These two persons together with one Samatulla were tried by the learned Additional Sessions Judge of Pabna and a jury on charges of dacoity and house breaking by night. The jury unanimously found all the three persons guilty under S. 457, I. P. C., and not guilty under S. 395, I. P. C. The appeal of Samatulla has been summarily dismissed and that of the other two appellants is now before us.

The case for the prosecution briefly was that these persons together with a number of other persons broke into the house of the complainant on the night of 27th May 1928. The defence briefly was a denial of the whole occurrence; and there was a suggestion in the case of Samatulla of enmity.

The first point raised by the learned vakil for the appellants is that the alternative charges under Ss. 395 and 457, I. P. C., are bad in law. Why it is bad in law I am unable to understand. Offence under S. 457, I. P. C., is really in some cases a minor offence to offence under S. 395. There can be no reason why there should not be alternative charges of these two offences.

The next point raised is that the learned Judge has not properly dealt with or has misdirected the jury with regard to a certain alleged confession. It is alleged that Samatulla, whose appeal has been rejected, on the night of the dacoity made a confession to a cousin of his one Ketab Ali Sarkar in which he admitted that he and the two appellants had committed dacoity in the house of the complainant. In dealing with this confession the learned Judge's charge to the jury is as follows:

"P. W. 15 Ketab Ali, a deed writer in the Salanga Registration Office says that the accused Samatulla is his cousin and that he went to him at about 3-30 a. m. on the night of occurrence and requested him to save him as his name had been mentioned in connexion with the dacoity. This person says that after pressure being put, the accused Samatulla stated that he with the other two accused and also two other persons had committed the dacoity. The witness admits that there was a quarrel between him and the accused Samatulla regarding the deduction of Rs. 10 from the price of three maunds of sweetmeats taken by Samat from his shop. This witness further admits that he (Samat) also said that his name had been falsely mentioned in the Ejhar at the Thana. P. W. 15 was not examined by the Sub-Inspector. It is for you to say whether the accused Samatulla went to this witness on the night of occurrence and made the confession."

With regard to the alleged confession itself it is to be found in the evidence of Ketab Ali Sarkar when examined before the Magistrate. There he stated that Samatulla on being pressed said that he, Bikram Ali, Kudar Ali Khan and two others committed dacoity in the house of Chandulla Sarkar. When examined in the Sessions Court he states as follows:

"Accused Samatulla is my co-villager. At about 3 and 3-30 a. m. the Nanigachi mela day I came to know of a dacoity in Chandulla's house. . . . Accused Samatulla came to me that night. He is here. He said that his name had been taken in connexion with the dacoity in Chandulla's house. He asked me to go to the Prodhans of that Parah. I told him to come in the morning as I could not go at that hour of the night. He did not come to me any more. He said that three names were mentioned in connexion with the dacoity, viz., those of Bikram and himself and the man who was a Hindu before and converted to be a Mahomedan afterwards."

It would be noticed that in that statement Samatulla does not say that he and the other two appellants committed the dacoity. He only says that three names had been mentioned. The Public Prosecutor was evidently not satisfied with that statement; for he asked the permission of the Court to put further questions to the witness and he then asked as follows:

"Did Samatulla tell you that he and Bikram and Kudratulla and two others had committed dacoity in the house of Chandulla Sarkar."

The answer was "yes, he said so." Mr. Roy who appears for the appellants contends that the Public Prosecutor having declared the witness hostile and cross-examined him it was not open to the prosecution to rely upon the evidence of this witness. The only effect of declaring the witness hostile and cross-examining him was to discredit the witness altogether. But it does not appear that the prosecution wished to cross-examine the witness for the purpose of discrediting his evidence. As far as can be seen what the Public Prosecutor did was to ask the permission of the Court to put questions to this witness which might be put by the adverse party. From this it cannot be said that he intended to declare the witness hostile and to cross-examine him. S. 154 read with S. 143, Evidence Act, provides that the Court may allow the party to put leading questions to his own witnesses. But that I do not think necessarily means that he must declare the witness hostile and cross-examine him. * It is only when he declares the witness hostile and cross-examines him that he cannot rely on his evidence. It will be seen from a perusal of the evidence that what the Public Prosecutor desired to get from the witness was not a contradiction of what he had said but something in addition. He was not cross-examining his own witness but with the permission of the Court was asking him leading questions. That is not necessarily to cross-examine. This is clear from S. 154 itself which does not say that a person who calls a witness may cross-examine him in certain circumstances but that he might put questions to him which might be put in cross-examination by the adverse party. That is not the same as cross-examining him. If it were, the Code would have said so.

Be that as it may, it has further been argued by Mr. Roy that the Judge has entirely failed to direct the jury as to how they should deal with the evidence of a co-accused. Here Mr. Roy stands on firmer ground. As far as can be seen from the charge of the learned Judge he gave no direction whatever to the jury on this point. It is clear from his charge that he did not tell the jury that the statement of Samatulla that he himself, Bikram, Kudar Ali and two others were the persons who had committed the dacoity could only be used against Samatulla and therefore apparently has allowed it to be used, as in certain circumstances it can be used, against the co-accused, but he entirely neglected to draw the attention of the jury to a very important matter, namely, the way in which this evidence was extracted from the witness. The witness first of all made no mention whatever of the fact that Samatulla had made a statement to him in which he said that he, Bikram, Kudar Ali and two other persons had committed dacoity; and it is only in answer to the leading question by the Public Prosecutor which practically put into the witness's mouth the answer which he wanted that the witness stated that Samatulla had told him that he, Bikram, Kudar Ali and two others had committed the dacoity. Neither does he give any direction to the jury as to how they should treat and the weight they should give to the evidence of an accused person as against his co-accused. It is impossible for us to say that the omission of the Judge to bring this fact to the notice of the jury has not seriously prejudiced the two accused persons.

In these circumstances we must set aside the verdict of the jury and direct that the appellants be retried.

Lort-Williams, J.—I agree with my learned brother that this conviction should be set aside and the two appellants retried.

I desire to add that in my opinion Ss. 143 and 154, Evidence Act, read together do not give power to the prosecution to put leading questions to their own witnesses even with the assent of the Judge.

The meaning of S. 154 is that they may, with the permission of this Court, treat a witness as hostile and cross-examine him. The wording of S. 154 shows that the legislature did not intend to distinguish the law in this country from the law which obtains in England.

GRAHAM AND LORT-WILLIAMS, J.J.

v.

Balai Ghose and another—Accused.

Jury Ret. No. 31 of 1929, Decided on 7th August 1929, made by Addl. Sess. Judge, Burdwan, on 17th March 1929.

(a) Criminal P. C., S. 307 (2)—High Court should not interfere with verdict of jury unless it is manifestly wrong.

The High Court has to consider the entire evidence and to decide after giving due weight to the opinion of the Sessions Judge and the jury whether the charge was made out against the accused. High Court should not interfere with the verdict of the jury unless it is shown that the verdict was manifestly wrong and that there were no sufficient materials to justify it. [P 142 C 1]

(b) Criminal Trial—Retracted confession—Independent corroboration showing that confession is true should be required.

There is nothing to prevent a confession although retracted from being given effect to as against the maker. But where the confession has been retracted the general rule is that independent corroboration of the confession should be required in order that the Court may be satisfied that the confession is true. [P 142 C 1, 2]

(c) Criminal P. C., S. 103—Object is to obtain as reliable evidence as possible of search.

The object of the section is presumably to obtain as reliable evidence as possible of the search and to exclude the possibility of any concoction or malpractice of any kind. It is incumbent upon the police to try to comply with the provisions of the section. There is no harm in the police officer who makes the search being called as witness at the trial but such officer cannot be deemed to be an entirely satisfactory witness for the purposes of proving the search. [P 143 C 2]

Debendra Narain Bhattacharya—for the Crown.

* Graham, J.—This is a reference under S. 307, Criminal P. C. by the Additional Sessions Judge of Burdwan in connexion with a dacoity case which was tried by him in which the jury by a majority verdict of 4 : 1 were of opinion that the accused were entitled to the benefit of the doubt. The learned Additional Sessions Judge being of opinion that the verdict was erroneous and wholly against the weight of evidence has referred the case to this Court.

Under the provisions S. 307 of the Code we have to consider the entire evidence, and, to decide after giving due weight to the opinion of the Sessions Judge and the jury, whether the charge was made out against the accused, and whether the verdict was right or not. It has not been the practice of this Court according to the trend of decisions on the subject to interfere with the verdict of a jury unless it is shown that the verdict was manifestly wrong and that there were no sufficient materials to justify it.

The evidence which was adduced in this case by the prosecution consisted of : (1) confessions made by each of the accused Balai Ghosh and Motleb Sheikh of their guilt, these confessions having been subsequently withdrawn in the committing Court; (2) the evidence of Satya Bala Dasi and her father Fakir Jelja, who have deposed as eyewitnesses to the dacoity, and have each of them identified one of the accused, Satya Bala having identified Motleb Sheikh and her father having identified the other accused Balai Ghosh ; (3) thirdly in addition to this evidence there is as against the accused Balai Ghosh, the evidence that certain ornaments or pieces of ornaments, Exs. 9 to 12, were found on search in his house.

Now so far as the confessions are concerned there is nothing to prevent a confession although retracted from being given effect to as against the maker. But where the confession has been retracted the general rule is that that independent corroboration of the confession should be required in order that the Court may be satisfied that the confession is true. In view of the fact that both these confessions were promptly withdrawn when the accused came before the committing Magistrate we think that it would not be altogether safe to rely entirely upon them in the absence of any independent evidence to corroborate them. It becomes necessary therefore to examine the evidence in order to see how far the confessions are corroborated.

A very important part of the case consists of the evidence of Satya Bala Dasi and her father Fakir Jelja, and in that connexion the crucial point is whether Fakir Jelja was in his daughter's house on the night of the dacoity. If these witnesses have spoken the truth, and if their identification of the two accused is accepted, then this would undoubtedly furnish valuable corroboration of the truth of the confessions. But the evidence in the case and the facts and circumstances seem to give rise to the considerable doubt as to whether Fakir was at the place of occurrence on the night in question, as he alleges. In the first information, which he lodged before the police at 8.30 a. m., on 19th March 1928, he stated that he was not in his daughter's house when the dacoity took place, and he gave an account of the dacoity which purported to be as described to him by his daughter ; and further he concluded by saying that he had come to his daughter's house at noon on the day following the dacoity, and having heard the details of the occurrence he had come to the Thana to give information. In view of the explicit statement by Fakir Jelja that he was not present at the time of the dacoity it is difficult to accept his statement in evidence that he was there and saw what took place. The explanation which he has given for this change in his story is that on the way to the Thana the Chowkidar told him to inform the Daroga that he (Fakir) had not been in his daughter's house at the time of the dacoity. Now the Chowkidar Moti Chandra is a man aged about eighty years and it is difficult to imagine any reason why he should have given any such instruction to the informant. The learned Sessions Judge seems to have been of opinion that the Chowkidar was not a reliable witness and had suppressed the truth. There does not, however, seem to be any sufficient ground for such a conclusion.

There is one significant fact in connexion with the question, which as I have said is a very important question, as to whether Fakir was or was not present at the time of the dacoity, and that is the delay which took place in the lodging of the first information. The occurrence took place at midnight on 17th March and the first information was not lodged until 8-30 a. m., on 19th March, the police station being about 14 miles distant from the place of occurrence. If Fakir was present at the time of the occurrence it seems to be hardly probable that he would not have lodged the information sometime during the course of the following day, especially in view of the fact that he is not alleged to have been injured in any way. Dacoity is a serious matter, and, if he was there as alleged, the natural course would have been to lose no time in going and giving information to the police. On the other hand the delay in lodging information is consistent with the other version that Fakir was not present at the time of the occurrence, and that he came on the following day about midday after hearing of the dacoity, and then having learnt the particulars went to the Thana. There is therefore considerable doubt whether Fakir Jelia really was a witness of the occurrence, and although there is the evidence of witnesses who speak to his presence, in view of his own clear statement in the first information that he was not there, and the circumstances to which I have referred above which supports that statement, the only conclusion possible appears to be that he did not see the dacoity, and that he has been introduced as an eyewitness for obvious reasons. If that view is accepted then, of course, it materially affects the evidence of Satya Bala Dasi also, because she has throughout described her father as having been present and has given details of what he did. If those statements are untrue, no reliance can safely be attached to her evidence as a whole.

Then in connexion with the identification of the accused there is the fact that it is mentioned in the first information that the dacoits wore Malkocha and Galpato, and that being so their identification would naturally be a matter of extreme difficulty.

As regards the accused Balai Ghose there is the further evidence as to certain ornaments and pieces of ornaments, which are alleged to have been found at his house. With regard to this part of the case it seems to me that the evidence as to the house search is not altogether satisfactory. The section of the Criminal Procedure Code relating to such searches is S. 103 which lays down that before making a search the officer about to make it shall call upon two or more respectable inhabitants of the locality to attend and witness the search. The object of the section is presumably to obtain as reliable evidence as possible of the search, and to exclude the possibility of any concoction, or malpractice of any kind.

In this instance the witnesses who have been examined to prove the search are the Sub-Inspector of Police, witness 12 for the prosecution, and a witness named Probodh Chandra Gossain, witness 11 for the prosecution, who is described as a cultivator. There can of course be no harm in the Police Officer, who made the search, being called as a witness at the trial, but an officer who is connected with the investigation cannot be deemed to be an entirely satisfactory witness for the purpose of proving the search. It was incumbent upon the police to, at any rate, make some attempt to comply with the provisions of the section. It is possible that there were no persons living near the place of occurrence who would fulfil the definition of respectable inhabitants used in the section. In that case, however, some evidence to that effect ought to have been given. Furthermore it appears that although two persons apart from the Sub-Inspector were called as witnesses to the search, and though these persons signed the search list, only one of these persons was called as a witness at the trial. No explanation appears to be forthcoming of the omission to examine the other witness and there can be no doubt that it was the duty of the prosecution to produce him as a witness at the trial.

Taking the evidence as a whole and taking into consideration all the facts and circumstances it seems to me that a reasonable doubt does arise as to the guilt of the accused, and that it cannot be said that the jury were not justified in giving the benefit of that doubt to the accused. Certainly it cannot be said that their decision was in any sense perverse.

The result, therefore is that this reference must be rejected and the accused are acquitted and released.

Criminal Revn. No. 624 of 1929, Decided on 15th August 1929.

Criminal P. C., S. 139-A—In enquiry under S. 137 provisions of S. 139-A ought to be complied with.

Before proceeding to make a relevant enquiry under S. 137 the Magistrate ought to comply with the provisions of S. 139-A. The Magistrate's duty is to find whether there is reliable evidence in support of the denial. When the Magistrate does not apply his mind to the question and does not come to any finding on the point, he does not follow the correct course. [P 144 C 1, 2]

Girija P. Sanyal and Hari Das Gupta—for Petitioners.

Hemendra Ch. Sen and Satyendra Ch. Sen—for Opposite Parties.

Rankin, C. J.—In my opinion this rule must be made absolute. The Magistrate has not complied with the provisions of S. 139-A Criminal P. C., before proceeding to make relevant enquiry under S. 137. What happened was that the Magistrate having made a conditional order, the present petitioners appeared before him. It is clear that they denied the existence of any public right of way. The question is whether the Magistrate found that there was any reliable evidence in support of this denial. True, it was no part of his business to try this matter. His business was to find whether there was any reliable evidence in support of the denial. Then, what happened was that he adjoined the case so that the petitioners might adduce evidence in support of this denial. Then the petitioners made a suggestion that the Magistrate might go to the spot and hold his enquiry. Thereupon he ordered a local enquiry to be held and as the result of that local enquiry he got a certain report. This report was to the effect that it was a foot way and not a way for carriages and carts and so on. Then the matter came back to the Magistrate but he never applied his mind, so far as I can see, to the question whether there was any reliable evidence in support of the denial, nor has he come to any finding on that point. On the contrary he did proceed thinking that he was proceeding under S. 137 and tried himself the question whether there was a public right of way or not. He says:

"Two points require determination viz., whether the public have lawfully used the way and whether the defendants caused any obstruction therein."

Under S. 137 the first matter does not arise at all. Then he observes:

"This fact is also proved by P. Ws. 2, 3, 5, 6 and 8. P. W's. have also proved that the disputed way was 7 or 8 cubits wide."

It seems to me that in these circumstances the complaint of the petitioners is made out. If this learned Magistrate was going to try the question whether there was a public right of way or not under S. 137, then he was going to do the very thing he was told not to do. That question has got to be decided one way or the other under S. 139-A. It is clear to me that the Magistrate did not take the correct course.

This rule is made absolute and the order absolute is set aside. The case must go back to the learned Magistrate in order that he may try it again according to law.

Kali Bilash Hazra—Accused—Appellant.

v.

Emperor—Opposite Party.

Criminal Appeal No. 39 of 1929, Decided on 5th August 1929.

(a) Criminal P. C., S. 211—Accused, complying with S. 211, is entitled to have attendance of witnesses at Sessions trial enforced—Non-compliance not prejudicial to accused does not vitiate conviction.

An accused, who has complied with the requirements of S. 211 of the Code, and has put in at once his list of defence witnesses, is entitled as of right to have the attendance of those witnesses at the Sessions trial enforced in the event of their ignoring, or failing to comply with the summons. Failure to enforce such attendance when not prejudicial to accused does not vitiate conviction.

(b) Criminal P. C., S. 211—Accused must put in his list of defence witnesses on the day of order of commitment—If accused fails, Magistrate has discretion to allow such application or not.

It is ordinarily incumbent on the accused to put in his list of defence witnesses at once, that is to say, on the day when the order of commitment is made, and that if he does not do so, the Magistrate will have a discretion to allow or not to allow any such application if it is made on any subsequent date. If, however, such an application is made and is allowed, then the application whether under sub-S. (1) or sub-S. (2) will be governed by the same principle.

Mrityunjoy Chattopadhyaya and Manindra Nath Banerji—for Appellant.

Debendra Narain Bhattacharya—for the Crown.

Graham, J.—This is an appeal by one Kali Bilash Hazra who has been convicted by the unanimous verdict of the jury under S. 471, I. P. C., and sentenced to two years' rigorous imprisonment. There was also a charge under S. 193, I. P. C., in respect of which the accused was found by the unanimous verdict of the jury to be not guilty.

The only point which has been taken on behalf of the appellant is that the learned Additional Sessions Judge was in error in not allowing the accused further opportunity to examine two witnesses named Hari Das Banerji and Rai Rakhal Mandal, who were alleged to have been material witnesses for the purpose of the defence, and who, though duly summoned by the Magistrate, had failed to attend the Sessions Court on the date fixed for the hearing of the case. The relevant sections of the Code of Criminal Procedure are Ss. 211 and 291. S. 211 is as follows :

"(1) The accused shall be required at once to give in, orally or in writing, a list of the persons (if any) whom he wishes to be summoned to give evidence on his trial. (2) The Magistrate may, in his discretion, allow the accused to give in any further list of witnesses at a subsequent time etc."

Section 291 lays down :

"The accused shall be allowed to examine any witness not previously named by him, if such witness is in attendance; but he shall not, except as provided in Ss 211 and 231, be entitled of right to have any witness summoned, other than the witnesses named in the list delivered to the Magistrate by whom he was committed for trial."

Section 231 referred to herein has no application in this case.

There can be no doubt I think that, an accused, who has complied with the requirements of S. 211 of the Code, and has put in at once his list of defence witnesses, is entitled as of right to have the attendance of those witnesses at the Sessions trial enforced in the event of their ignoring, or failing to comply with the summons. When processes have been issued by the Court it is the duty of the Court to enforce them. Now in the present case the facts relating to the summoning of these witnesses are these: The commitment order was passed on 7th July. It was the duty of the defence, as required by S. 211, to at once file the list of witnesses who were required to be summoned to attend in the Sessions Court. The list of defence witnesses was, however, as the record shows, filed on 10th July and summonses were duly issued. The trial commenced in the Sessions Court on 7th January and upon that date an application was made to the Court drawing attention to the fact that two of the defence witnesses namely Hari Das Banerji and Rai Rakhal Mandal were not present and asking that they might be summoned if necessary by an urgent telegram. The Additional Sessions Judge thereupon directed the prosecution to take necessary steps in the matter and a telegram was sent. On the following day 8th January these witnesses were not in attendance, and another application was filed on behalf of the defence asking that their attendance might be enforced and alleging that the accused would otherwise be prejudiced. It appears that two other witnesses were present on that day and the Additional Sessions Judge directed that the accused might examine those two witnesses, but they were not examined by the defence and the trial was concluded without any evidence for the defence being recorded.

On behalf of the Crown it is contended in the first place that the list which was filed by the accused on 10th July was not a list in respect of which he was entitled as of right to ask the Court to enforce the attendance of the witnesses; and secondly it is urged that these two witnesses, upon whose attendance so much stress has been laid, were not material witnesses, and that therefore the appeal ought not to be entertained.

With regard to the first point it seems clear from S. 211 that it is ordinarily incumbent on the accused to put in his list of defence witnesses at once, that is to say on the day when the order of commitment is made and that if he does not do so the Magistrate will have a discretion to allow or not to allow any such application if it is made on any subsequent date. If, however, such an application is made and is allowed, then the application whether under sub-S. (1) or sub-S. (2) will be governed by the same principle. The learned Additional Sessions Judge having exercised his discretion and issued summonses on the defence witnesses mentioned in the list of 10th July was in my judgment bound to enforce the attendance of these witnesses who were in contempt. I do not therefore think that there is any substance in the first contention.

The second ground, however, is to my mind of greater importance. The question is whether these two witnesses Hari Das Banerji and Rai Rakhai were really witnesses of material importance in the case, whether the accused has been prejudiced by the omission to examine them, and whether the appeal should be allowed on that ground. It is very difficult to ascertain anything definite or tangible from the record to show that these witnesses were in any sense important witnesses for the purpose of the defence. The accused in his statement in the committing Court said nothing about them. Speaking for myself I do not attach much importance to that fact because I do not consider that the accused is under any obligation to indicate the nature of the defence which he is going to make in the Sessions Court. Indeed there may be very good reasons why he should prefer not to do so. But when we come to the Sessions Court the position is somewhat different. He there again made a statement and again there was no reference whatever to these two witnesses. It might perhaps be reasonably expected that he would then say that he had paid the money to the complainant, and that he had done so in the presence of these two persons.

But there is another circumstance even more important in connexion with this aspect of the case, and it is this—that in the previous civil suit the accused made a definite statement, which has been proved in this case and has been marked as Ex. 5, in which he stated that he paid this sum of Rs. 135 to the decree-holder, that is to say the complainant in this case and obtained a receipt, and in cross-examination he further stated that when he paid the money to the decree-holder, the decree-holder, his brother, and son were present. No mention whatever was made in that statement of these two persons Hari Das and Rai Rakhai, and if these two persons were present when the money was paid it seems to be inconceivable that no mention would be made of the fact. If therefore we allow this appeal and send the case back for retrial, the accused would be confronted with the statement which he made at the trial of the civil suit and it would necessarily be very difficult to accept the evidence of these witnesses even if it supported the accused in the face of that statement previously made by the accused himself. Having regard to all these facts we are not satisfied that these two persons are material witnesses and that we should be justified in setting aside the conviction and sentence upon the ground which has been urged before us.

The appeal therefore fails and the conviction and sentence are affirmed, appellant will surrender to his bail and serve out the remainder of his sentence.

Criminal Revn. No. 17 of 1929, Decided on 18th March 1929, from order of Sess. Judge, Raipur, D/- 7th January 1929, in Criminal Revn. No. 28 of 1928.

Criminal P. C., S. 488 — Application by wife for maintenance — Both husband and wife examined — Case closed for orders — Pleader for husband appearing and wishing to argue case and file documents — Court ruling him out and passing judgment against husband — Proper enquiry held not made — Case ordered to be retried.

The wife applied for maintenance allowance and both the wife and husband were examined and the case was closed for orders to be pronounced on a certain date. When the pleader for the husband appeared and wished to argue the case and file some documents, the Court, however, ruled him out and passed orders against the husband. It was contended that the Court's action was justified inasmuch as the husband did not intimate his desire to adduce evidence on the date when the case was closed.

Held: that it was immaterial that the husband did not do so as the Court was bound to ask him if he wished to adduce evidence before closing the case and so there being no proper enquiry the case required to be retried.

Order.—Almelubai is the wife of a Punnuswami. This lady presented an application on 10th August 1928 in the Court of Mr. Rizve, Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Dhamtari, claiming maintenance allowance from her husband. She was examined on affirmation on the same day and a notice issued to the husband to show cause against the application. At the next hearing on 3rd September 1928 (carelessly put down in the order sheet as 3rd August 1928), the husband appeared and filed a written statement. Both the husband and wife were further examined on this date and the case was closed for orders to be pronounced on 4th September 1928. When the pleader for the husband appeared and wished to argue the case and file some documents but the learned Sub-Divisional Magistrate ruled him out and passed an order under S. 488, Criminal P. C., against the husband to pay Rs. 15 per month to the wife.

The husband filed a revision against the aforesaid order in the Court of the Sessions Judge, Raipur, who has referred the case under S. 438, Criminal P. C., with a recommendation that the procedure adopted by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate being highly irregular, it has prejudiced the husband seriously and that a retrial should, therefore, be ordered by this Court.

The learned pleader for the lady argued that because the husband did not on 3rd September 1928 intimate to the Magistrate his desire to adduce evidence the Court was justified in closing the case for orders and even in refusing to receive documents at the adjourned hearing before the order was passed. In my opinion the Court was bound to ask the husband if he wished to adduce evidence before it closed the case. The result is that there has been no proper enquiry in the case. I, therefore, accept the reference and the recommendation made by the learned Sessions Judge and setting aside the order of the trying Magistrate, send the case back for retrial according to law.

Criminal Revn. No. 201-B of 1929, Decided on 5th November 1929, referred by Sess. Judge, Akola.

Criminal P. C., S. 350—Discretion given to a Magistrate to act or not to act upon evidence recorded by his predecessor is controlled by proviso 1 to S. 350—Option is given to accused and it can be exercised only once when second Magistrate commences proceedings.

The discretion given to a Magistrate by S. 350 (1), to act or not to act upon the evidence recorded by his predecessor is not absolute but is controlled by proviso 1 to that section and it is solely left to the accused whether to claim the right to have the witnesses already examined by the previous Magistrate recalled and re-examined by the succeeding Magistrate. This right, however, has to be exercised by the accused only once, that is at the time "when the second Magistrate commences his proceedings."

G. P. Dick—for the Crown.

M. B. Niyogi—for Accused.

Order.—The facts leading to this reference under S. 438, Criminal P. C., are very clearly stated by the learned Sessions Judge, Akola, in these words:

"Criminal Case No. 50 of 1927 of the First Class Magistrate, Basim, was owing to a defect in procedure, remanded by the Judicial Commissioner's Court. It is now proceeding as case No. 86 of 1929 in the Court of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Basim. Owing to transfer of the Magistrate who first tried the case, S. 350, Criminal P. C., applied. Four accused said that they wanted all the prosecution witnesses and all the Court witnesses to be resummoned and reheard, while the remaining 8 said that there should be a de novo trial from the beginning (पुनः पौष्ट्यापस्तुन चालवात्र) See applications dated 14th March 1929. In the original case there were witnesses for the prosecution, for defence and for Court. On 19th August 1929 when called upon to enter upon their defence, all the accused prayed that the defence evidence recorded in the previous case and the evidence of Court-witnesses 2, 3, 4 and 5 should be taken as evidence in the present case, and that the original defence witnesses should not be reheard, but that they wanted to give some additional defence evidence. The Magistrate rejected this application."

One more important fact has also to be noted. In para. 21 of this Court's order in Criminal Revision No. 29-B of 1928, Kinkhede, A. J. C., had definitely laid down that :

"all the evidence for both parties which has gone on record between 20th October 1927 and 14th November 1927 and also thereafter must be treated as expunged therefrom and the trial resumed from the stage from which the illegality crept in, except so far as the accused may dispense with such expunction."

When the aforesaid directions were given, it was probably not known that the proceedings after remand would not be conducted before the same Magistrate who had recorded the whole of the evidence at the previous trial. Therefore, when the case came to be retried by the present Magistrate the option given to the accused by the order of this Court was further supplemented by the option expressly reserved to them by proviso. 1 to S. 350 (1), Criminal P.C. The first four accused admittedly exercised this option by naming some of the witnesses examined by the former Magistrate to be resummoned and examined afresh before the new Magistrate and impliedly agreed not to expunge the evidence of the rest of the witnesses recorded at the previous trial, while the rest of the accused wanted the whole of the trial to be conducted de novo, clearly implying that the whole of the evidence whether for the prosecution or defence recorded previously should be expunged and all the witnesses examined afresh.

None of the cases cited before the Sessions Judge or in this Court cover the point actually requiring decision in the present case. It is, however, clear that the discretion given to a Magistrate by S. 350 (1), Criminal P. C., to act or not to act upon the evidence recorded by his predecessor is not absolute but is controlled by proviso. 1 to that section and it is solely left to the accused whether to claim the right to have the witnesses already examined by the previous Magistrate recalled and re-examined by the succeeding Magistrate. But it is equally clear from the language of the proviso that this right has to be exercised by the accused only at the time "when the second Magistrate commences his proceedings."

Viewed in this light the decision of the trying Magistrate at the commencement of the proceedings to examine all the prosecution witnesses afresh was perfectly in order because all the accused wanted the whole lot of prosecution witnesses to be reheard by him but his second order, which is the subject of the present reference, is evidently wrong as it has the effect of overriding the option of the first four accused not to have their evidence in defence, already recorded at the previous trial, reheard. Since in their application dated 14th March 1929 these accused had impliedly agreed that except the prosecution witnesses and Court witnesses, whom they wished to be resummoned and reheard, the rest of the evidence should not be expunged, the trying Magistrate was, in my opinion, bound to give effect to this agreement.

The exercise of the option given to the accused both under the order of this Court and the proviso to S. 350 (1), Criminal P.C., could, however, be exercised only once and they having definitely exercised the same in a particular manner by their separate applications of 14th March last and the fresh trial having proceeded upon that basis none of the accused had any right to change the course of the trial as they wished to do by their subsequent joint application of 19th August last in which they stated that they did not desire to have certain Court witnesses and defence witnesses resummoned and re-examined. The order passed on this application by the trying Magistrate was, in my opinion, not strictly a legal one. I, therefore, set aside the said order and direct that the trying Magistrate do retain and act on the evidence of witnesses examined by the first four accused before his predecessor and only re-summon or re-examine the Court witnesses and witnesses for the other accused. The first four accused will of course have the right to summon fresh witnesses in their defence if they so desire.

T. J. Kedar—for Applicant.

A. V. Khare—for Non-Applicant.

Order.—This is an application to revise the order of the District Magistrate, Wardha, by which he exempted the accused Mt. Bhimi, the non-applicant here, from personal attendance through the trial. The applicant Mt. Sarji has filed a complaint against Bhimi for an offence under S. 323, I. P. C. and the case is being tried by the Tahsildar, Wardha. To start with, a summons was issued to her; she was served but, instead of appearing in person, she sent her husband to represent her. The Court ordered the husband to produce the accused in person, but she did not so appear and this time sent a pleader to represent herself. The case, however, could not be taken up for some reasons for two hearings and on the adjourned hearing the Magistrate again ordered a summons to issue to the accused. No process fee was paid by the complainant and thereupon the complaint was dismissed under S. 204 (3), Criminal P. C.

The case went to the District Magistrate, who thereafter sent the case for disposal to another Magistrate. Eventually, however, the case was again sent back to the Tahsildar and the accused was again summoned. On the date of the hearing the accused again appeared through a pleader and made an application for being exempted from personal attendance. This was not allowed and, instead, a bailable warrant of arrest was issued against her. She was not found and it appeared to the Court that she was avoiding service. A proclamation under S. 87 was therefore issued and, after it was published, the trial commenced under S. 512. Another warrant of arrest was again issued against her.

In the meanwhile the accused filed an appeal before the District Magistrate and was allowed exemption from personal attendance. This order is the subject matter of this revision and runs as follows :

"Previous proceedings indicate that the girl had absconded although there is no evidence to this effect. A certificate of illness is filed and it is stated by counsel that she has been living at Amraoti. In view of the fact that the girl voluntarily appeared (through counsel) and reopened proceedings and that she is young, I allow her to appear through counsel without putting in personal appearance."

The first contention is that the order of the District Magistrate was without jurisdiction as, at that stage no appeal could lie, nor could any such order be passed in revision except by this Court. This has been conceded by the other side, but it is urged on behalf of the accused that the District Magistrate's order, though defective in this respect, could be maintained as this Court had power to pass the very same order in revision. The powers of this Court under Ss. 435 and 439, Criminal P. C., are wide and a High Court can proceed in the matter even suo motu and interfere if it considers just and proper. A High Court can call for and examine, the record of any proceedings and interfere even when a certain order, though legal, is improper.

A perusal of the proceedings makes it clear that the accused did not altogether disobey the summons; for every time that she was served she did make arrangements to represent herself before the Court. The only particular in which she disobeyed was as regards attendance in person. I fully agree in the reasons given by the District Magistrate in the concluding portion of his order and consider that it would be improper and unnecessary to compel the personal attendance of the accused. She is a young woman of a fairly respectable class and might naturally regard personal appearance as an accused as a greater punishment than a fine. Again, there appears to be nothing in particular for which the trial Magistrate considered her personal attendance necessary. I therefore agree that the trial Magistrate's order in compelling her personal attendance, in the circumstances of the case, was not proper.

It has, however, been contended by the learned pleader for the applicant that, as a warrant of arrest had been issued against the accused, her personal attendance could not be excused under S. 205, and that therefore the whole trial would be vitiated if she were allowed to remain absent. In support of this contention I have been referred to the case of Abdul Hamid v. Emperor (1). In that case, however, it appears that in the first instance, a warrant of arrest was issued against the accused; again, the accused was found not to have moved in the matter of his representation in Court and the persons who appeared for him so appeared without his authority. Both these circumstances are wanting in the case before me; for, here, though the accused might subsequently have been arrested, it was only a summons that was issued against her in the first instance. I am not sure if the Patna case is an authority for the proposition, urged on behalf of the applicant, viz., that, even where, in the first instance, a summons were issued, if subsequently during the course of the trial an accused is produced before the Court under a warrant of arrest his personal attendance cannot be exempted. If the Patna decision really goes to this length, I must say with due respect that I do not accept that view. S. 205 has to be read and construed with reference to the preceding S. 204 also with reference to the heading of the Chapter, in which both the sections occur, viz., "Of the commencement of proceedings before Magistrate." It has again to be construed with reference to the next preceding four sections occurring in Chap. 16, and has to be read as continuation of all these provisions; and, when so read, it would be clear that it applies to all cases where a summons is issued in the first instance to an accused, irrespective of the fact whether he appears in answer to the summons or has to be brought in by a warrant of arrest issued subsequently.

Even if the above contention were in order and the present case were not covered by S. 205, this Court can, under its inherent powers, as declared by S. 561-A, pass an order excusing the personal attendance of the accused and permitting him to represent himself in Court by a pleader. The inherent jurisdiction of this Court can be invoked so long as no act is done in conflict with any of the provisions of the law or the general principles of criminal jurisprudence. That such a direction does not conflict with the provisions of the Criminal Procedure Code would be clear if a reference were made to the provisions of Ss. 353 and 366 (2). These provisions clearly contemplate cases where the whole trial can take place in the absence of the accused, including the stage of delivering the judgment in cases where the sentence imposed is one of fine only.

The case-law on the subject also does not stand in the way of the exercise of such power; for, in Emperor v. C. W. King (2) and Raj Rajeshwari Debi v. Emperor (3) the High Court did pass an order dispensing with the personal attendance of the accused and allowed him to appear by a pleader throughout the Sessions trial. In the latter case the committal proceedings were indeed initiated with a summons; but in the former, this point has not been made clear; at any rate, no importance seems to have been attached to it. Both these cases have been followed with approval in In re, Kandambini Devi (4).

Ip Maung Po Fyün v. Hakasing (5), where the personal attendance of the accused was dispensed with, even his pleader's statement was considered to be his statement under S. 342. Similarly, in Emperor v. Dorabshah (6) it has been held that in similar circumstances there was nothing illegal in acting upon the plea given by the pleader of the accused under Ss. 242 and 243 in summons cases.

The principles of criminal jurisprudence also are not abrogated by holding a trial at the instance of the accused in his absence so long as he makes arrangements to represent himself in the trial by a pleader. The rule of holding a criminal trial in the presence of the accused is made especially for his benefit and there is nothing to prevent him from waiving the benefit if he likes. The case would certainly be different, and the trial bad, if it is held without his consent in his absence or, even in the presence of a pleader engaged for him, if the engagement has not been made by the accused: Emperor v. Sardar (7); Abdul Hamid v. Emperor (1).

In the case before me the accused has herself moved in the matter and is willing to represent herself throughout the trial by her pleader. There can therefore be no force in the contention that the trial would be bad because it would be held in her personal absence. For the reasons given above, I would not disturb the order that has been passed by the District Magistrate, though he was not competent to do so. The trying Magistrate should now proceed with the trial so long as a pleader engaged by the accused appears and need not ordinarily compel her appearance except to hear judgment under S. 366 in case he means to award a sentence heavier than that of fine. As the prosecution witnesses have been examined in her absence and her pleader was also not present, the trial Magistrate should now start with the trial afresh. With these remarks the application is dismissed.

Criminal Appeal No. 35-B of 1929. Decided on 2nd September 1929, against judgment of First Class Magistrate, Mandla, D/- 22nd June 1929.

Penal Code, S. 84—Mere ailment before offence is not sufficient defence—Apparent motive for offence is not necessary.

A person is not entitled to claim relief under S. 84 simply for the reasons that he is ailing for some time before commission of an offence, that he does not take food for some days and that there is no apparent motive for committing the offence: 17 C. P. L. R. 113, Appl.

G. G. Hatvalne—for Appellant.

G. P. Dick—for the Crown.

Judgment.—The appellant has been convicted by Chandorkar, Magistrate First Class, Akola, exercising powers under S. 30, Criminal P. C., of an attempt to murder Mt. Amirbi and sentenced to five years rigorous imprisonment. The facts of the case are clearly proved and are briefly these: The appellant had been ailing for sometime before 12th April last and his mother Gulabbi (P. W. 2), therefore, called Amirbi (P. W. 11) to come to her house and keep her company for the night. Amirbi accordingly went there and prepared "Harira" food for the appellant and he ate it. Thereafter every inmate of the house, except probably the appellant, went to sleep in the same room in which was the appellant. Sometime after this Amirbi was roused from her sleep by the blow given to her by the appellant with a hatchet and the appellant further struck her two or three more blows after she had got up and then she fell unconscious. Gulabbi also got up hearing the cries of Amirbi and then Gote Khan (P. W. 4) and Jabbar Khan arrived upon the scene and secured the appellant and attended to the wounded woman.

The appellant in his examination pleaded ignorance of all the events that happened on that eventful night. As there was no evidence to bring the case of the appellant within the purview of S. 86, Penal Code, the trying Magistrate held him guilty of an offence under S. 307, I. P. C.

Mr. Hatvalne who appeared for the appellant in this Court argued that there being evidence to show that the appellant was ailing for sometime before the occurrence and had not taken food for some days and from the absence of motive it should be presumed that the case was covered by S. 84, I. P. C. The law on the point of legal insanity to bring a case within the purview of S. 84, I. P. C., has been fully and elaborately discussed by Sir Henry Stanyon in Emperor v. Kataya Kisan (1) and applying the principles laid down there to the facts proved in the present case I am decidedly of opinion that the appellant has failed to make out a claim for relief under S. 84, I. P. C. But in view of the fact that the appellant was in a bad state of health when he committed the crime for which apparently no motive is even suggested by the prosecution, I consider that the ends of justice will be met if I reduce the sentence from five years passed by the trying Magistrate upon the appellant to three years rigorous imprisonment, which I hereby do. With this modification of the sentence I dismiss the appeal.

Santoki—Accused—Non-Applicant.

Criminal Revn. No. 274 of 1929, Docided on 16th September 1929, made by Sess. Judge, Jubbulpore, on 22nd
July 1929.

Forest Act, S. 26 (d)—Cattle grazing in the Government forest—Owner not authorizing directly nor indirectly such grazing—He cannot be convicted.

A Person's cattle were found grazing in the Government forest in charge of a boy. The person had not authorized either directly or indirectly the boy to graze the cattle in the forest.

Held: that he could not be convicted: 11
N. L. B. 76, Ref. [P 152 C 2]

S. C. Dutt Chaudhury — for Non-Applicant.

Order.—This is a reference by the Sessions Judge, Jubbulpore, recommending that the conviction of Santoki by a Magistrate First Class, Mandla, under S. 26 (d), Forest Act, be quashed as it was in conflict with the law propounded by this Court in Saiyyad Rahim v. Emperor (1).

The facts are that eight buffaloes belonging to the accused were found grazing in the Government forest block No. 18 in charge of one lad named Shankar. It is established by the evidence of Chhiddi (D. W. 2) that the accused had employed Shankar's father and not Shankar as grazier and it is not proved that the accused had, in any way authorized directly or indirectly Shankar to graze his cattle in the forest block No. 18. The conviction of the accused under these circumstances was, therefore, clearly illegal.

The learned District Magistrate supports the conviction on the ground that because in his examination the accused referred to the license (Ex. D-1) which he had obtained from the purchaser from whom he had purchased some of the buffaloes which were found grazing in the Government forest, it could be presumed that the accused:

"moant to graze the buffaloes in Government forest on the original license and therefore connived at the illicit grazing."

The statement of the accused as recorded by the Magistrate is as under:

"The eight buffaloes were covered by a license, hence my grazier may or may not have grazed them in Government forest. I have no personal knowledge of this."

The statement quoted above cannot surely be construed in the manner suggested by the learned District Magistrate in his explanation. The accused clearly denied all knowledge of the illicit grazing and it was, therefore, necessary for the prosecution to have established knowledge or connivance on the part of the accused to connect him with the offence. I therefore accept the reference and set aside the conviction of the accused. The fine if paid will be refunded.

Criminal Appeal No. 198 of 1929, Decided on 3rd May 1929, from order of Third Addl. Sess. Judge, Lucknow, D/- 15th February 1929.

(a) Criminal P. C., S. 269 (3)—Failure to write separate judgment does not vitiate the trial.

Failure to write a separate judgment in a case where the procedure laid down by S. 269 (3) is followed, does not vitiate the trial.

An accused was tried by a jury with an offence punishable under S. 395, Penal Code, and was acquitted being found not guilty. In the same trial he was tried for an offence under S. 396, Penal Code, with the same jury sitting as assessors. The Judge stated both cases for the benefit of jury and his summing up covered both the charges.

Held: that it was not necessary for the Judge after having summed up at great length to write again another full and elaborate judgment covering exactly the same ground so far as S. 396, I. P. C. charge was concerned and failure to write a separate judgment did not vitiate the trial where nothing was gained by accused in repeating the same remarks in two separate documents: A. I. R. 1922 Mad. 502, Ref.

K. P. Misra—for Appellant.

H. K. Ghose—for the Crown.

Judgment.—The learned counsel for the appellant has taken a preliminary objection that there is no judgment such as is required by the Criminal Procedure Code in existence against his client. The circumstances are these: Under special rules laid down by the Local Government certain Sessions cases triable in the Lucknow District are tried by a Sessions Judge and a jury and other sessions cases are tried by a Sessions Judge with the aid of assessors.

Under the provisions of S. 269, Criminal P. C., when an accused in these circumstances is charged at the same trial with several offences of which some are and some are not triable by jury, he is tried by the Court of Sessions and a jury for such of those offences as are triable by jury and by the Court of Sessions with the aid of the jurors as assessors for such of them as are not triable by jury. In this particular case the above procedure was followed. The appellant was tried by a jury for an offence punishable under S. 395, I. P. C., and was found not guilty. He was accordingly acquitted on that charge. In the same trial he was tried for an offence punishable under S. 396, I. P. C. As this offence was not triable by a jury he was tried with the same jury sitting as assessors. It was necessary for the learned Sessions Judge to state both cases for the benefit of the jury. He did so. His summing up, which was very clear and very full, covered both charges. The heads of the charge, which he dictated, covered 30 type-written pages and in his charge he has gone over the whole ground in respect of both the charges, has stated the law, has stated the facts, and has discussed the evidence for and against in respect of every one of the accused persons. As far as he possibly could, he refrained from indicating his opinion, as to the value of the evidence. He would not have been in the wrong if he had indicated his opinion, provided he had not attempted to force his opinion on the jury, but he did not indicate his opinion against any accused. He had told the jury that in his opinion there was no evidence upon which they could convict the appellant on a charge under S. 395.

The jury accepting that view acquitted the appellant. As assessors they found him guilty under S. 396. The Judge then wrote a further order in which he stated his agreement with the views of the jury as to the value of the evidence against the appellant on the charge under S. 396. He then found him guilty and proceeded to convict him. Now it is argued that this procedure was wrong and that it was necessary for the Judge, after having summed up at great length, after having stated the heads of his charge to the jury and summarized them in a type-written note of thirty pages to write again another full and elaborate judgment covering exactly the same grounds in so far as the S. 396 charge was concerned. It is suggested that his failure to write this judgment vitiates the trial. The only decision which we can find reported in the regular law reports dealing with this point is the decision of a Full Bench of the High Court of Madras in A. T. Sankaralinga Mudaliar v. Narayana Mudaliar (1). In that case the Full Bench decided that the failure to write a regular judgment might be considered an error in procedure.

dure but that, if it were, it was a mere irregularity cured by S. 537, Criminal P. C. There is no decision reported in the recognized law reports to the effect that the failure to write a separate judgment vitiates the trial. The learned counsel for the appellant informs us that there is a decision in "unreported criminal cases of the Bombay High Court" edited by Ratan Lal Ranchhod Das which supports that view, but we do not consider that under the law we should be justified in considering any decision other than the authorized decisions. We would go further than the Madras High Court in this respect and would look at the substance of the Criminal Procedure Code on this point. The Criminal Procedure Code lays down among the requisites of a judgment of this nature that it should be either written by the presiding officer of the Court or taken down from his dictation. Here it was taken down from his dictation. Every page if dictated has to be signed by him. Here every page is signed by him. It has to be dated and signed by the presiding officer in open Court at the time of pronouncing it. It was dated and signed by the presiding officer at the time of pronouncing it. The judgment should specify the offence (if any) of which, and the section of Indian Penal Code or other law under which the accused is convicted and the punishment to which he is sentenced. All these particulars are given. The judgment has to contain the point or points for determination. The point or points for determination are given in the charges to the jury. The judgment has to give the decision. The decision is given in the subsequent order. The judgment has to give the reasons for the decision. The reasons for the decision are given in the subsequent order. These are all the requisites.

We consider that the charge to the jury read together with the subsequent order compose a good judgment in law and we would consider it most unfortunate if they did not do so. Nothing is gained by the accused or anyone else by repeating the same remarks in two separate documents and; if it unfortunately were the law that when the Judge has already said what was requisite in one part he should have to copy it over again into another, the law would stand in need of revision. But as we read the law the objection is not founded. We now examine the appeal on the merits. The appellant having been convicted by the Judge sitting with assessors has every right to challenge the conviction on the merits. The evidence against the appellant is that he was implicated by an approver. That in itself does not carry the case very far; but there is against him the strong evidence of one of the victims of the dacoity, a man called Prithi and of the wife of Prithi. They identified the appellant distinctly as having been one of the dacoits. Prithi did not know the appellant before but he has picked him out of a crowd as one of the men who had assaulted him. Prithi's wife had seen the appellant before and she gave a good description of his appearance. She did not previously know his name. The evidence on the other side was evidence that the appellant had quarrelled with Prithi's wife because she had taken some mangoes of his without his permission and that he had quarrelled with the approver at a fair. He further put up evidence of alibi. The learned Judge and the assessors believed the evidence of identification and disbelieved the evidence produced for the defence. After hearing the appellant's learned counsel we have arrived at the same conclusion. We do not consider the sentence passed on the appellant excessive and dismiss the appeal.

v.

Emperor—Opposite Party.

Criminal Revn. No. 96 of 1929, Decided on 3rd October 1929, against order of Dist. Mag., Sitapur, D/- 11th September 1929.

(a) Criminal P. C., S. 478—Revenue Court is not barred from proceeding under S. 478 with regard to offence committed in mutation proceedings—U. P. Land Revenue Act (1901), S. 48.

Proceedings in mutation are proceedings within the meaning of S. 476 and the Court concerned with the proceedings is a revenue Court within the meaning of S. 48, Land Revenue Act of 1901. A revenue Court has therefore jurisdiction under S. 478 when the offence is committed before it in any proceedings even non-judicial. Moreover mutation proceedings are judicial proceedings within the meaning of the Criminal Procedure Code though ordinarily they may not be so and there is no bar, therefore, to a revenue Court from proceeding under S. 478 with regard to an offence committed in mutation proceedings before it : A. I. R. 1926 P. C. 100, Ref. [P 155 C 2]

(b) Criminal P. C., S. 478—Code permits no appeal against order under S. 478—Magistrate passing order not as criminal Court but as revenue Court—District Magistrate cannot interfere under S. 435.

The Code permits no appeal against an order under S. 478. The powers of the District Magistrate under S. 435 and the following sections are confined to interference with criminal Courts subordinate to himself. When, therefore, a Magistrate does not pass an order as a criminal Court but as a revenue Court the District Magistrate has no jurisdiction to revise his order. [P 156 C 1,2]

R. F. Bahadurji—for Appellant.

H. K. Ghose—for the Crown.

Judgment.—The facts are as follows: A lady called Barkatunnissa, Taluqdarni of Ant taluqa died at Lucknow on 13th April 1927. Six persons Mahbub Ali and five others applied jointly for entry of names before the revenue Court. Certain other persons opposed them. Eventually Mr. Narsingh Narain Rao, Assistant Collector, First Class, Sitapur, recorded the names of Abadi Begam, Khalil Khan and Fida Ali as entitled to engage for the revenue of the Ant taluqa. In the course of the proceedings before him an alleged will was produced. Mr. Narsingh Narain Rao considering that this will was forged and that a criminal offence had been committed before him, and considering the case triable exclusively by the Court of Sessions completed an enquiry and committed certain persons to take their trial before the Sessions Court. He proceeded under S. 478, Criminal P. C. His attention was drawn to the commission of the offence by a complaint made by the police authorities before him in the course of his enquiry. As a result he committed to Sessions Rani Abadi Begam and nine others but refused to commit to Sessions Pt. Lachhman Prasad Joshi. After he had refused to commit Pandit Lachhman Prasad Joshi to Sessions, the District Magistrate of Sitapur purporting to act under the provisions of S. 437, Criminal P. C. committed Pandit Lachhman Prasad Joshi to Sessions on the same charge.

I have before me two applications, the first is by Rani Abadi Begam and three other persons who were committed to Sessions by Mr. Narsingh Narain Rao and the second is by Pandit Lachhman Prasad Joshi. The first application was argued by Dr. Kitchlu and the second by Mr. Bahadurjee. Dr. Kitchlu took the objection that the offence, if any, had not been committed before a revenue Court in the course of the judicial proceedings, and that thus Mr. Narsingh Narain Rao had no jurisdiction under S. 478. Dr. Kitchlu suggested that Mr. Narsingh Narain Rao was not at the time presiding over a revenue Court. I do not accept that contention. Mr. Narsingh Narain Rao was concerned with proceedings in mutation, that is to say, it was his duty to record the names of some persons or others on a disputed succession under the provisions of S. 40, Local Act, 3 of 1901. He was thus acting as a Court of record and was a revenue Court within the meaning of S. 48, Local Act 3 of 1901. The proceedings in mutation were certainly proceedings within the meaning of S. 476, Criminal P. C. I am not disposed to consider that such an officer would have no jurisdiction under the provisions of S. 478, if he were conducting proceedings other than judicial proceedings when the alleged offence was committed before him. I base my view upon the wording of S. 478 which is as follows :

When any such offence is committed before any civil or revenue Court, or brought under the notice of any civil or revenue Court in the course of judicial proceedings"

The construction I place upon those words is that a revenue Court has jurisdiction when the offence is committed before it in any proceedings. When the offence is brought to its notice the Court has only jurisdiction when it is brought under its notice in the course of judicial proceedings. The argument of Dr. Kitchlu would require the section to have been drafted as follows :

"When any such offence is committed before or brought under the notice of any civil or revenue Court in the course of judicial proceedings."

But apart from this, mutation proceedings are judicial proceedings within the meaning of the Criminal Procedure Code. Ordinarily speaking, mutation proceedings are not judicial proceedings. Their Lordships of the Judicial Committee have laid down in Nirman Singh v. Rudra Partab Narain Singh (1) :

"that proceedings for the mutation of names are not judicial proceedings, in which the title to and the proprietary rights in immovable property are determined. They are much more in the nature of fiscal inquiries instituted in the interest of the State for the purpose of ascertaining which of the several claimants for the occupation of certain denominations of immovable property may be put into occupation of it with the greater confidence that the revenue for it will be paid."

But the judicial proceedings contemplated under S. 478 are judicial proceedings within the meaning of the Code of Criminal Procedure, as here the words have a special meaning. S. 4 (m) defines judicial proceedings to "include any proceeding in the course of which evidence is or may be legally taken on oath."

In mutation proceedings evidence may be legally taken on oath and evidence is usually taken on oath. In this particular case evidence was taken on oath. I thus find that there was no bar to Mr. Narsingh Narain Rao proceeding under S. 478 and refuse to quash the commitment of Rani Abadi Begam and the other persons who have applied with her. I dismiss their application.

The case of Pandit Lachhman Prasad Joshi is, however, different. Mr. Narsingh Narain Rao refused to commit him to Sessions. Mr. Narsingh Narain Rao passed no order under S. 476 either making a complaint or refusing to make a complaint. If he had passed such an order an appeal would have lain under S. 476 B. He refused to commit Pandit Lachhman Prasad Joshi. In what capacity did he pass that order? He passed that order, in my opinion, as a revenue Court, although for the purpose of his enquiry he was exercising the powers of a Magistrate. Nevertheless he was not a criminal Court but a revenue Court exercising the powers of a Magistrate. The Code permits no appeal against an order under S. 478. The powers of the District Magistrate under S. 435 and the following sections are confined to interference with criminal Courts subordinate to himself. As I understand the case Mr. Narsingh Narain Rao did not pass this order as a criminal Court but as a revenue Court and as Mr. Narsingh Narain Rao was a revenue Court the District Magistrate as District Magistrate had no jurisdiction to revise his order. In these circumstances I consider that the application of Pandit Lachhman Prasad Joshi must succeed. I allow application No. 96 and quash the commitment of Pandit Lachhman Prasad Joshi.

Criminal Appeal No. 192 of 1929, Decided on 3rd May 1929 from order of Sess. Judge, Fyzabad, D/- 4th April 1929.

* (a) Criminal P. C., S. 162—Oral statement made by any person to police officer during investigation cannot be used for contradicting defence witness.

No oral statement made by any person to a police officer in the course of an investigation under this chapter and no record of any such oral statement can be used for any purpose in a Court of law in respect of an offence under investigation at the time when such statement was made, except for the purpose of contradicting a prosecution witness. It can only be used for that purpose under special conditions. Such a statement cannot be used for the purpose of contradicting a defence witness.

(b) Penal Code, S. 302—Incident on moonless night—Identification evidence of alleged eyewitnesses disbelieved—Only evidence of identification being dying deposition—Deceased not in a position to make long statement—Declaration obtained as answers to leading questions—Family of the deceased deliberately putting attack some hours back—Conviction was set aside.

Some persons were tried under S. 302 for having murdered one B. The occurrence took place on a moonless night under a thick tree. The so called eyewitnesses were disbelieved on the point of identification. The only evidence against the accused was the first report and the dying deposition of the deceased. The deceased was not able to make a long statement. The dying declaration was not an unaided effort but consisted of answers to leading questions put by the disbelieved alleged witness. The family of the deceased had deliberately chosen to put the attack back some two hours before it actually occurred.

Held: that under the above circumstances it was impossible to uphold the conviction.

Jagat Narayan, A. N. Mullah, Ram Nath Shargha and L. S. Misra—for Appellants.

G. H. Thomas, Govt. Advocate—for the Crown.

Judgment.—Ganga, Jaggu, Rama Shankar, and Dwarka have been convicted by the learned Sessions Judge of Fyzabad on a charge under S. 302, I. P. C., and sentenced to death subject to confirmation by this Court. They appeal. The reference in confirmation is also before us. On 10th December 1928, Nageshar, a Brahman who resided in a hamlet of Bhati had left his village early in the morning with his son Baijnath to appear in a case before an Honorary Magistrate in the village of Jajwara some eight miles away. He and his son were answering a charge of house trespass in order to commit an offence, under S. 451, I. P. C. this charge being brought against them by the police on a complaint of a chamar. Three of the appellants Ganga, Jaggu and Rama Shankar had given evidence in this case and they were at the Court of the Honorary Magistrate that day for the purposes of cross-examination. Ganga, Jaggu and Rama Shankar went away. They went away at 4 o'clock and at sunset Nageshar and Baijnath returned to the village. It is in evidence that Baijnath pressed on, leaving his father to follow him. It appears that sometime that night Nageshar was the victim of a murderous attack with knives which took place under a mahwa tree 320 yards distant from his house. He received severe injuries as a result of which he died the following day.

The case for the prosecution is that the four appellants together with a man called Janga, the brother of Ganga, were waiting for Nageshar on his way home and that they attacked him at about 9 o'clock in the night before he had reached his home. The evidence in support of this story is the evidence of Baijnath who says that while in his own house he was aroused by the cries of his father and that he came out at the time and the place already stated and saw the attack on his father. There is further the evidence of a Brahman called Achebar who says that hearing cries he ran towards the spot and met certain men running away from the spot. Both Baijnath and Achebar have named the four appellants and Janga as the men whom they saw. In addition there is what purports to be a dying deposition of the deceased man Nageshar and a mass of oral evidence that Nageshar from the beginning named the five men in question as his assailants. The case has been tried very carefully by an experienced Judge and it is only due to him where we differ with him to explain why the evidence which he considered reliable is not considered reliable by us. The first fact which struck us very forcibly but which has not struck him as forcibly is this. The post-mortem examination of the body of the deceased showed that his stomach contained a pound and a half of dal and rice which had hardly been digested. We have emphasized in this Court that too much stress should not be laid upon the condition of the food in a deceased man's body when the question is what time has passed between his death and his last meal. The reason why one does not usually lay great stress on such evidence is that the most recent medical researches have shown that sometimes the process of digestion is very greatly delayed when the deceased is an Indian and the food is vegetable food. But here we consider that we are on firm ground in drawing certain inferences from the fact that this food had hardly been digested at all. We know for certain that the deceased man had left his own village to go to Jajwara which is eight miles away very early that morning. It is most unlikely that very early that morning he would have eaten a pound and a half of cooked rice and dal. While he and his son were at Jajwara they would very likely have eaten something but, being Brahmans, if that something had been cooked food, they would have had to cook it themselves and it was most unlikely that they would cook dal and rice by the wayside. There is no evidence that they took any vessel for the purpose. Thus the condition of this food in his stomach would appear to us to indicate clearly that he was murdered after he had returned to his village, and after he had partaken of a meal. In other words he was not murdered at 9 p. m. but probably about 11 p. m. and this one fact appears to us sufficient to discredit the evidence of Baij Nath, Achebar, and the others.

There is thus left alone the fact that the deceased man mentioned the names of the four appellants and the name of Janga as his assailants. Now we have it in the first place that it was a moonless night. It was the night before a new moon. There may have been some light from stars but there was no other light. The deceased met his death under a tree. It is not impossible that in these circumstances he could have recognized his assailants, but there must be a distinct doubt as to whether he could have done so and this doubt is strengthened by the following circumstances: In the first place he mentions the name of Janga. Janga is Ganga's brother and it is in evidence that Janga had been absconding from the village for the last year. It is true he might have returned that night but the inclusion of Janga's name throws a further element of doubt into the case. We next come to the form of the first report and the dying deposition taken. The deceased had been very severely cut about the throat. It was possible for him to speak but it would have been very difficult for him to make a long statement and to make a detailed statement. There is no reason why he should not have been able to give the name of the person whom it is believed to be his assailants, but we are unable to believe that either the first report or the dying deposition were the deceased's unaided efforts. They appear to us to bear every sign of being recorded as answers to leading questions. Those leading questions must have been supplied by Baijnath. There is no reason to suppose that the deceased man did not give the names of the four appellants as four of those his assailants, but the anxiety to supply details does not assist towards an acceptance of the correctness of his statement. We thus have it that the only case against the appellants consists of the fact that the deceased man stated that they and Janga were the men who had attacked him. Every attempt has been made to improve upon this story by the addition of details which are not genuine details. The night was a moonless light. The star light may or may not have supplied sufficient means of recognition. The family of the deceased have deliberately chosen to put the attack back some two hours before it actually occurred and the evidence of identification given by Baijnath and Achebar does not convince us.

In these circumstances it is impossible to uphold the convictions.

Before we leave this case we have to note one point. The learned Sessions Judge permitted statement made before the police and recorded in the diaries to be brought on the record for the purpose of contradicting the witnesses for the defence. He was not right in adopting this course. S. 162, Criminal P. C. as amended is clear on the point. No oral statement made by any person to a police officer in the course of an investigation under this chapter and no record of any such oral statement can be used for any purpose in a Court of law in respect of an offence under investigation at the time when such statement was made, except for the purpose of contradicting a prosecution witness. It can only be used for that purpose under special conditions. Such a statement cannot be used for the purpose of contradicting a defence witness.

As a result the appeals succeed, the convictions are set aside and Ganga, Jaggu, Rama Shankar and Dwarka will be set at liberty.

Emperor—Opposite Party.

Criminal Revn. Appln. No. 103 of 1929, Decided on 15th November 1929, from order of Addl. Sess. Judge, Bahraich, D/- 4th September 1929.

* Penal Code, S. 197—False affidavit sworn in by accused for supporting transfer application—No protection is given to the accused.

Where the law does not prohibit the administration of an oath or solemn affirmation and where in fact the practice of the Court directs that an oath or solemn affirmation must be administered before the affidavit is accepted, there cannot be any protection for an accused person who commits perjury in such a document. The fact the affidavit was made for supporting transfer application in a case in which he was an accused is immaterial: 12 Mad. 451, Dist.; 19 All. 200 and 23 All. 331, Doubted and not Foll. [P 159, C 2]

A. N. Mulla—for Applicant.

G. H. Thomas—for the Crown.

Judgment.—One of the questions raised in this criminal revision is of considerable importance. The applicant Prag Datt filed what purported to be an affidavit asking for the transfer of two cases one of which was a case in which he was a complainant and the other of which was a case in which he was an accused. The cases were criminal cases pending in the Courts of two Magistrates. The learned District Magistrate of Bahraich considering that a statement in the so called affidavit was false has ordered the prosecution of Prag Datt under the provisions of S. 476, Criminal P. C., and his order has been upheld by the learned Additional Sessions Judge of Bahraich. The first point taken by the learned counsel is that as Prag Datt was an accused person in one of those cases he could not be prosecuted for giving false evidence, even if he had given false evidence. The position taken by the learned counsel is that an accused person who makes an affidavit to support a transfer application or to support an application for bail or to support any other application of the same kind can make any false statement he wishes and that he cannot be prosecuted under the law.

The learned counsel has certain decisions which support his view. The first of these was a decision of a single Judge of the Allahabad High Court In the matter of Barkat (1). The second was a decision which followed the rule laid down in the previous decision. It was of another Judge of the Allahabad High Court in Emperor v. Bindeshri Sing (2). There is further a decision of a Bench of the Madras High Court in Queen Empress v. Subhaya (3). But this last has no bearing on the subject. In that case an accused person had been ordered by a Court to make a statement of solemn affirmation. He was subsequently prosecuted for making a false statement. As the action of the Court in directing that person to make a statement on solemn affirmation was directly opposed to the provisions of S. 5, Oaths Act (10 of 1873) the Bench decided that the statement itself could not be taken as a statement on oath and that thus there could be no prosecution. But in the two Allahabad cases the facts are very different. Here it was a question of an affidavit made by an accused person who had a right to make an affidavit and who was not

"For my own part, I have no doubt that the legislature intended to protect an accused person from the ordeal of examination as a witness and to render him incapable, therefore, of being punished for the making of false statements upon oath, or otherwise, so long as his case is sub judice."

His Lordship did not refer to any express provision of the law which supported this view. He appears to have considered that he was following the spirit of the law in laying down that an accused person even when under the law capable of making an affidavit who made a false statement was protected in his perjury. This view was followed by Mr. Justice Richards in the second case. The learned Judge, however, added nothing to the reasons in the first case. He stated solely that he considered himself bound by the previous decision. We are of opinion that this view cannot be accepted. S. 193, I. P. C. lays down that whosoever intentionally gives false evidence in any stage of a judicial proceeding has committed an offence. Giving false evidence is defined by S. 191 and an affidavit is evidence within the meaning of S. 191. The question of the fabrication of false evidence must also be considered. We cannot find it possible to accept the view of the learned Judges of the Allahabad High Court greatly as we respect them. When the law prohibits the administration of an oath or solemn affirmation to an accused person the matter is of course different. In those circumstances there can be no perjury. But where the law does not prohibit the administration of an oath or solemn affirmation and where in fact the practice of the Court directs that an oath or solemn affirmation must be administered before the affidavit is accepted we cannot see how there can be any protection for an accused person who commits perjury in such a document. If the case stood alone on the first point the present application would certainly fail, but the learned counsel has brought to our notice a circumstance which appears to have been overlooked by the Courts below. On an examination of the so called affidavit we find that it was never sworn at all. It was admittedly admitted by error although no oath or solemn affirmation had been taken as to the truth of its contents. v.

Emperor—Opposite Party.

Criminal Appeal No. 474 of 1929, Decided on 13th July 1929, against order of Addl. Dist. Mag., Amritsar, D/- 3rd May 1929.

(a) Penal Code, S. 376 — Complainant pregnant—Medical evidence is still of help to prosecution.

It cannot be said that medical evidence cannot help the case for the prosecution, because the complainant is pregnant at the time when the rape is alleged to have been committed.

[P 160 C 2]

(b) Penal Code, S. 376 — Mere finding semen on complainant's clothing is not sufficient to prove rape.

The report of the chemical analyser regarding the presence of semen on the complainant's clothing is not sufficient to prove that the complainant is actually raped.

Nand Lal—for Appellant.

Diwan Ram Lal—for the Crown.

Judgment.—The appellant Jalal has been convicted under S. 376, I. P. C., and has been sentenced to a term of five years' rigorous imprisonment. The story for the prosecution is as follows :

On the day preceding the last Id Mt. Barkat Bibi the wife of a faqir, was alone in her house when the appellant Jalal and an absconder named Ghulaman entered the house, dragged her into a Kothri; and each in turn committed rape on her. She called for help and several people appeared including her mother-in-law and a man named Atma Singh. These persons saw the appellant and the absconder escaping. Shortly afterwards a sufed posh appeared on the scene and Mt. Barkat Bibi told him, as she had already told the other two, that she had been raped by the appellant and Ghulaman.

I have heard Dr. Nand Lal at considerable length on behalf of the appellant Jalal. It is urged in the first place that there is no independent witness, but this contention is falsified by the evidence of two of the principal witnesses Atma Singh and the sufed posh, neither of whom has any connexion with the complainant. Another argument urged by Dr. Nand Lal is that the report of the occurrence was not made to the police until the following day. I have considered this question, but I am satisfied that the prosecution has given adequate reasons for the delay in making the report. It appears that the complainant set out towards the police station, but was intimidated by the friends of the appellant and she went home and managed to proceed to the thana on the following day.

A more important question has been raised. The record shows that the complainant was never examined by any medical expert. It is urged on behalf of the Crown that because the complainant is a married woman and was actually pregnant at the time, the medical evidence could not have helped the case for the prosecution. With this view I am not prepared to agree. Apart from the statement of the complainant herself there is no real evidence that penetration was actually effected. The report of the Chemical Examiner regarding the presence of semen on the complainant's clothing is not sufficient to prove that the complainant was actually raped. It is, however, quite clear from the evidence that the appellant and his companion entered the house of the complainant and committed criminal assault upon her. I accordingly accept the appeal in so far that I alter the conviction from one under S. 376 to one under S. 354, I. P. C., and I sentence the appellant to two years' rigorous imprisonment.

DALIP SINGH, J.

Taj Muhammad — Accused — Petitioner.

v.

Emperor—Opposite Party.

Criminal Misc. Petn. No. 263 of 1929, Decided on 22nd November 1929, for transfer of criminal case.

 Criminal P. C., S. 526—Order for re-trial from the stage of irregularity—Order for transfer was made where accused agreed not to demand fresh trial.

Convictions of certain accused were set aside on appeal on the ground that provisions of S. 342 had not been complied with, and re-trial was ordered from the place where the irregularity had occurred. The accused prayed for transfer on the ground that as they had no further statement or evidence to offer it was a foregone conclusion that the Magistrate would convict them, again.

Held: that no general rule could be laid down for such cases but as the counsel for petitioner had said that the accused would not demand a de novo trial which otherwise they could claim, the case could be transferred to another Magistrate who was to take up the trial from the place where the irregularity had occurred. [P 161 C 1]

J. G. Sethi—for Petitioner.

Sundar Das for Government Advocate — for the Crown.

Order.—This is a transfer application which raises a somewhat novel point. The accused were convicted by the learned Magistrate. On appeal the learned Sessions Judge set aside the conviction on the ground that the provisions of S. 342, Criminal P. C., had not been complied with and he directed that the trial should be taken up from the place where the irregularity had occurred. The accused now say that they have really nothing to add to the statement which had been previously recorded and have no further evidence to offer than the evidence they have already offered, and therefore, it is a foregone conclusion that the learned Magistrate who has already convicted them, will convict them again. They, therefore, pray for a transfer.

The point raises this difficulty that if the transfer application is granted the accused can demand a de novo trial and therefore the order of the learned Sessions Judge directing that the trial should proceed from the stage where the irregularity occurred would practically be rendered nugatory. On the other hand, it is clear that it is in all human probability but natural for the accused to apprehend that the Magistrate who had once expressed his opinion will come to the same conclusion on the evidence which has already been taken. It may also be urged that really the whole thing is a technicality and that really the accused are not suffering any substantial injustice by the same Magistrate trying the case again. I lay down no general rule for such cases though the learned counsel for the petitioners has cited a Patna ruling which is almost on all fours in which Bucknill, J., held that in such cases a transfer was desirable. The learned counsel for the petitioner tells me that the accused will not demand a de novo trial. In these circumstances I allow the petition and transfer the case to another Magistrate who will proceed to take up the trial at the stage where the original irregularity took place and then proceed to dispose of it according to law.

Arjan Singh—Accused—Appellant.

v.

Emperor—Opposite Party.

Criminal Appeal No. 822 of 1929, Decided on 17th November 1929, from order of Addl. Dist. Magistrate, Amritsar. D/- 27th July 1929.

Penal Code, S. 124-A—Publication bringing British Government into hatred etc., in any form whatever amounts to offence.

If the subject matter of a publication is likely to bring Government into hatred or contempt or excite disaffection towards it and if it has been published with the intention of producing such effect, it would be immaterial for the purpose of S. 124-A whether the publication assumes the form of a life-sketch or a poem or an allegory or some other form.

The publishing of the life sketch of a person who was admittedly a member of a society whose avowed object was to overthrow the Government established by law in British India is an offence under S. 124 when no reasonable explanation is forthcoming as to why the author thought it fit at that particular time to publish the life sketch. The crucial point for decision in such case is the intention with which the life sketch has been published which is to be gathered from the subject-matter as well as the surrounding circumstances.

Mazhar Ali Azhar—for Appellant.

Judgment. — The appellant Arjan Singh editor printer, and publisher of an Urdu journal called "Kirti" has been convicted in this case under S. 124-A, I. P. C., for publishing in the journal a life sketch of one Jiwand Singh who is described as a martyr. Jiwand Singh was a villager from the Hoshiarpur district who apparently went to America in search of livelihood in 1907. There he learnt the use of arms and later on joined the Ghadar society and took a vow along with other members of the society to destroy the "tyrannical" Government of this country. He returned to India about 1914-15. The Ghadar party decided to hold a meeting at Lahore in February 1915, at which plans for a mutiny were to be laid out. But the Police got news about the meeting and arrested many men of the party at Jiwand Singh's house, where the meeting was held. Jiwand Singh managed to escape. He decided to collect arms and shot at first a sentry on duty at a railway bridge. Two sepoy were shot later on by Jiwand Singh and his companions and their rifles with some ammunition were taken. He murdered one Chanda Singh Zaildar who had the reputation of being a great "Jholichuk" (nickname for "loyalist"), after evading pursuit for a considerable time, he was eventually arrested tried and hanged in 1917.

It has been urged on behalf of the appellant that the life-sketch referred to above is purely of a historical character and that its publication does not amount to an offence under S. 124-A, I. P. C. After carefully considering the matter, I am unable to accept this contention in the circumstances of this case. The crucial point for decision is the intention with which the life-sketch has been published. If the subject matter of a publication is likely to bring Government into hatred or contempt or excite disaffection towards it, and if it has been published with the intention of producing such an effect, it would be immaterial for the purposes of S. 124-A, I. P. C., whether the publication assumes the form of a life-sketch or a poem, or an allegory or some other form.

The intention of the writer in such cases has to be gathered from the subject matter of the publication as well as the surrounding circumstances. In the present instance no reasonable explanation is forthcoming as to why the author has thought it fit to publish at this juncture the life-sketch of a person who was admittedly a member of society whose avowed object was the overthrow of the Government established by law in British India and who was convicted and hanged for crimes committed in pursuance of that object as long ago as 1917. This is, moreover, not the only life-sketch of its type which the author has published. In successive issues of the journal, life-sketches of several other persons convicted of similar offences against the Government have appeared. The manner in which the life sketch has been presented clearly shows the author's sympathy with the aims and aspirations of the convicted persons. In the present instance Jiwand Singh has been glorified as a martyr and the writer's intention to hold him up as an ideal worthy of imitation in the present times would seem clear from the general tenor of the life-sketch and the verses which appear at the beginning and the end.

Taking into consideration the facts stated above, I hold that the appellant has been rightly convicted. As regards the sentence, the case seems to be of a somewhat unusual type, and I think a moderate sentence will suffice in the present instance. I accept the appeal to the extent of reducing the sentence to the period of rigorous imprisonment already undergone.

Bhana Mal—Accused—Appellant.

v.

Emperor—Opposite Party.

Criminal Appeal No. 852 of 1929, Decided on 12th November 1929, from order of Sess. Judge, Delhi, D/- 30th August 1929.

Penal Code, S. 300—That assault followed sudden quarrel without premeditation and that accused comes from peaceful trading class are extenuating circumstances and extreme penalty should not be inflicted.

Where the weapon used, the part of the body aimed at and pierced, and the violence with which the blow was inflicted lead to the inference that the accused intended to cause such bodily injury as was likely to cause death even though the accused did not intend to cause death, the accused can be rightly convicted of murder. [P 163 C 2]

But the fact that the assault followed sudden quarrel without premeditation is an extenuating circumstance as also the fact that accused belongs to a peaceful trading class and extreme penalty of law should not be inflicted and sentence should be reduced to transportation for life. [P 164 C 2]

Moti Sagar and Hem Raj Mahajan—for Appellant.

Des Raj Sawhny—for the Crown.

Judgment.—Dr. Moti Sagar, who appears for Bhana Mal appellant concedes that it was Bhana Mal who inflicted the injury to which the deceased Kallu Mal succumbed, but contends that the offence committed by him though culpable homicide, did not amount to murder, and that, even if it did, Bhana Mal deserves the lesser punishment provided by S. 302, I. P. C., and not the sentence of death that has been passed against him by the learned Sessions Judge.

Kallu Mal deceased was a prosperous commission agent of Delhi and Bhana Mal was his adopted son. The latter had a son of the name of Puran Mal aged 16 years and another son much younger. Bhana Mal married twice and had the two sons by the two wives respectively but he was at present a widower. Kallu Mal's wife was also dead, and so the family consisted of Kallu Mal, Bhana Mal and the two sons of the latter. Kallu Mal was an old man of 60 while Bhana Mal is 38 years of age.

It appears that Kallu Mal did not let Bhana Mal participate in his business. He with his grandson Puran Mal went regularly to the business premises about 11 a. m. and returned about 9 p. m. and kept the ready cash of the business locked up in his safe inside a small room of the residential house. On the fateful morning Kallu Mal handed the keys of the safe etc. to Puran Mal to take out the money to be carried to the shop as usual. At this juncture Bhana Mal came out of the room where he had been sitting alone and snatched the keys from Puran Mal to open the safe. Kallu Mal forbade him and told him that if he was in need of money he would himself give it to him. Thereupon some dispute arose as to who should open the safe, and ultimately Kallu Mal settled this by saying that his servant Sripat should do so. Bhana Mal then handed the keys to Sri-pat, but Kallu Mal instead of directing Sripat to open the safe told him to lock the doors of the room. This annoyed Bhana Mal and he snatched the keys from Sripat, Kallu Mal then endeavoured to get the keys from Bhana Mal and thereupon the latter plunged a knife into Kallu Mal's heart causing him to fall on the ground where he expired in a few moments.

According to the medical evidence Kallu Mal bore a stab wound in the chest deep down to the heart which was cut. The pulmonary artery was also cut. The cause of death was obviously the perforation of the heart through a stab wound in the chest.

From the account of the occurrence given above, the conclusions clearly follow, (1) that Bhana Mal was not trusted by Kallu Mal, and (2) that Bhana Mal resented this, and stabbed his father in a fit of anger. He had no justification whatsoever for proceeding to take by force what his father was not willing to give him. The learned counsel argues that it could not be said that the appellant inflicted the injury with intent to cause death, and that all that could be predicated of him was that he acted with the knowledge that the injury might prove fatal. We are, on the other hand, of opinion that, the weapon used, the part of the body aimed at and pierced, and the violence with which the blow was inflicted, lead to the inference that, even if the accused did not intend to cause death, he intended to cause such bodily injury as was likely to cause death. He has, therefore, been rightly convicted of murder.

As regards the punishment there can be no manner of doubt that the assault followed a sudden quarrel without premeditation. Having regard to this extenuating circumstance and fact that the appellant belongs to a peaceful trading class it does not appear necessary to exact the extreme penalty of law. We, therefore, reduce the sentence to one of transportation for life and accept the appeal to this extent.

v.

Emperor— Opposite Party.

Criminal Appeal No. 824 of 1929, Decided on 9th November 1929, from order of Addl. Dist. Magistrate, Amritsar, D/- 26th July 1929.

(a) Penal Code, S. 124 (A) — Allegations against Home Government do not amount to offence under S. 124 (A).

A paragraph containing following statements was printed and published by editor of a newspaper. The writer said that the English had made a fine move for taking possession of Kabul by their duplicity. On the one hand the Afghan King had been made to introduce European fashions in his country and on the other the Afghan subjects had been incited to rebel against their king.

Held: that the allegations did not fall within the scope of S. 124-A. There was no reference in the paragraph to the Government established by law in British India. The policy criticised was that of Home Government and not of Indian Government. The language also was not such as could be reasonably held to be calculated to excite disaffection towards His Majesty or the Government of British India.

(b) Penal Code, S. 124 (2) — Where allegations bring Government to hatred and contempt, writer is guilty.

An article in a newspaper contained following paragraph: Under their rule the English have displayed such acts of oppression, high handedness, excesses, tyranny, repression and dishonesty as are making the world civilization feel ashamed. English rule in India depends upon those bad characters of number 10 of England who have become notorious for their folly, barbarity and hard heartedness. Such cruel, unmannerly and foolish persons are sent as officers of this country as might be considered burdensome for England's soil. This is the reason why the general massacre of Jullianwala Bagh, the bloody field of Guru-ka-Bagh and the Karbalas and bloody scenes of Nankana Sahib and Jaito are being seen in India.

Held: that the object of the article was evidently to bring the Government into hatred and contempt and to threaten it with vengeance and destruction. The writer was therefore guilty of offence under S. 124 (2).

Mazhar Ali Azhar—for Appellant.

Ram Lal—for the Crown.

Judgment.— Criminal appeals Nos. 824 and 825 of 1929 are connected and can be disposed of together. They arise out of two case in which Lachhman Singh, editor, printer and publisher of Gurmukhi paper called "Qaumi Babbar Shar" was convicted under S. 124-A in respect of two articles headed "Kabul da samachar" (news from Kabul) and Naukar Sahai Zulzim da nawan daur arambh hogiya (commencement of a new era of repression by the bureaucracy) which appeared in that paper and sentenced to rigorous imprisonment for one year and eighteen months' respectively the sentences to run concurrently.

The first article consists only of a brief paragraph in which the writer says that the English have made a fine move for taking possession of Kabul, by their duplicity. On the one hand, the Afghan King has been made to introduce European fashions in his country and on the other the Afghan subjects have been incited to rebel against their King. Whatever one may think of these allegations they do not appear to fall within the scope of S. 124-A, I. P. C. There is no reference in the paragraph to the Government established by law in British India, and it may well be argued that the policy criticised is that of the Home Government and not of the Indian Government. Nor is the language of the paragraph such as could be reasonably held to be calculated to excite disaffection towards His Majesty or the Government of British India. The learned counsel for the Crown was unable to put forward any substantial ground in support of the conviction in respect of this article and I consider the conviction to be unsustainable.

The second article, however, is clearly seditious. It is a direct attack on the personnel and the methods of the British Government in India. The following paragraph will be sufficient to indicate its general tenor and purport.

"Under their rule the English have displayed such acts of oppression, high-handedness, excesses, tyranny, repression and dishonesty as are making the world civilization feel ashamed. English rule in India depends upon those bad characters of number 10 of England who have become notorious for their folly, barbarity and hard-heartedness. Such cruel, unmannerly and foolish persons are sent as officers of this country as might be considered burdensome for England's soil. This is the reason why the general massacre of Jullianwala Bagh, the bloody field of Guru-ka-Bagh, and the Karbalas and bloody scenes of Nankana Sahib and Jaito are being seen in India."

The learned counsel for the appellant urged that that the object of the writer was simply to bring home to the Government the advisability of adopting conciliatory methods in India, but on a perusal of the article this argument seems to me to be wholly untenable. The writer's object is evidently to bring the Government into hatred and contempt and to threaten it with vengeance and destruction.

The article is one of the worst specimens of its type and in the circumstances the sentence passed in respect of it cannot be considered to be excessive.

I accept appeal No. 824 of 1929 and set aside the conviction and sentence in respect of the article "Kabul da sama-char."

I reject appeal No. 825 of 1929.

v.

Emperor—Opposite Party.

Criminal Appeal No. 562 of 1929, Decided on 17th July 1929, from order of Sess. Judge, Lahore, D/- 22nd May 1929.

Penal Code, S. 302—That murderer is 19 or 20 years of age and murder prompted by veneration for founder of religion is not extenuating circumstance.

The mere fact that the murderer is only 19 or 20 years of age and that the act was prompted by feelings of veneration for the founder of his religion and anger at one who had scurrilously attacked him, is a wholly insufficient reason for not imposing the appropriate sentence provided by law: A. I. R. 1928 Lah. 531, Ref.

[P 166 C 1, 2]

Mohammad Ali Jinnah and Farrukh Hussain—for Appellant.

Ram Lal and J. L. Kapur—for the Crown.

Broadway, J.—Ilam Din, son of Talia Mand, a Tarkhan of some 19 or 20 years of age, and a resident of Mohalla Sirianwala, Lahore City, has been convicted of having caused the death of one Rajpal on 6th April 1929, and, under S. 302, I. P. C., has been sentenced to death. He has appealed, and the case is also before us under S. 374, Criminal P. C.

The deceased was a Hindu book-seller having a shop in the Hospital Road. Some little time back he had given grave offence to the Muslim community by the publication of a pamphlet entitled "Rangila Rasul." He had been proceeded against under S. 153-A, I. P. C. in connexion with this publication, and after a protracted trial, had been convicted in January 1927. His conviction was, however, set aside by the High Court in May 1927.* The pamphlet was a scurrilous production and had wounded the susceptibilities of certain members of the Muslim community to such an extent that his acquittal was followed by two abortive attempts to murder the author, with the result that it was found advisable to afford him police protection.

It seems that he had recently gone on a visit to Hardwar and, during his absence, the guard was removed. He returned from Hardwar on 4th April and whether the guard had not yet been restored or had temporarily absented himself (the point is immaterial) he was murderously attacked in his shop at about 2 p. m. on 6th April.

That his assailant intended to cause death is established by the medical evidence which shows that he received no less than eight wounds, seven being incised and one a punctured one. The nature of these injuries also show that Rajpal endeavoured to defend himself, for four of the incised wounds were on his hands. He received a wound on the top of his head that cracked the right parietal bone, two incised wounds above the spine of the left scapula and a punctured wound in his chest. This last pierced the heart cutting the fourth rib and caused almost instantaneous death.

The case for the prosecution is that the appellant purchased a knife from Atma Ram (P. W. 8) on the morning of 6th April, proceeded to the shop of the deceased at about 2 p. m. and attacked him as he was sitting on the gaddi in the outer verandha writing letters. The assault was witnessed by Kidar Nath (P. W. No. 2) and Bhagat Ram (P. W. No. 3) employees of the deceased who were in the shop at the time, the former sitting at work in the inner verandah and the latter standing on a ladder in the outer verandah or room arranging books on the shelves. They raised an alarm, threw books at the appellant who dropped his knife and ran out. He was pursued by Kidar Nath and Bhagat Ram who were joined outside by Nanak Chand (P. W. No. 4) and Parma Nand (P. W. No. 5). The appellant turned into a woodyard belonging to Vidya Rattan, who had seen the pursuit from his office door and who hastened into the woodyard and seized the appellant, being assisted by the pursuers who were on his heels. The appellant is then stated to have repeatedly and loudly proclaimed that he was neither a thief nor a dacoit but had "taken revenge for the prophet." Ilam Din was taken to the deceased's shop, the police were notified and took over the appellant and the investigation.

A very brief report was made by Kidar Nath who said nothing of the assertion made by Ilam Din when he was captured, and did not mention the name of his fellow servant.

On the following day as a result of a statement made by Ilam Din to the Police the shop of Atma Ram was discovered, and on 9th this Atma Ram picked out the appellant at an identification parade held under the supervision of a Magistrate as the man to whom he had sold the knife found in Rajpal's shop.

There can be no doubt that Atma Ram could have sold the knife as he had several of identically the same make and pattern, two of which have been produced as exhibits. He stated that he bought these knives at an auction sale of Medical Stores.

M. Jinha has attacked the prosecution story on various grounds. He urged that Kidar Nath was not a reliable witness because (1) he was an employee of the deceased and, therefore, "interested;" (2) he had not stated in the First Information Report (a) that Bhagat Ram was with him, and (b) that the appellant had stated that he had avenged the Prophet. As to Bhagat Ram it was contended he, as an employee, was interested, and as to the rest that there were variations in some of the details.

Objection was taken to the admissibility of the statements made to the police which led to the discovery of Atma Ram, and Atma Ram's identification of Ilam Din and his testimony regarding the sale of the knife to Ilam Din were characterised as untrue and improbable. (His Lordship after discussing the evidence held that the guilt had been established and proceeded as follows.) Mr. Jinnah finally contended that the sentence of death was not called for and urged as extenuating circumstances, that the appellant is only 19 or 20 years of age and that his act was prompted by feelings of veneration for the founder of his religion and anger at one who had scurrilously attacked him.

As was pointed out in Amir v. Emperor (1):

"the mere fact that the murderer is 19 or 20 years of age, * * * is a wholly insufficient reason for not imposing the appropriate sentence provided by law."

The fact that Ilam Din is 19 or 20 years of age is not, therefore, a sufficient reason for not imposing the extreme penalty and I am unable to see that the other reasons advanced by Mr. Jinnah can be regarded as affording any excuse for a deliberate and cold blooded murder of this type.

I would, therefore, dismiss the appeal and confirm the sentence of death

v.

Lal Singh—Respondent.

Criminal Revn. Petn. No. 1300 of 1929, Decided on 25th November 1929, from order of Dist. Mag., Sialkot, D/- 10th July 1929.

Criminal P. C., S. 253—Magistrate can discharge accused before entire case is complete—But District Magistrate is justified in directing further inquiry when it is incomplete.

Where a Magistrate discharges the accused without allowing the complainant to adduce all his evidence, it cannot be said that there is a full and complete inquiry in the case, and the order of the District Magistrate directing full inquiry should not be interfered with. S. 253 no doubt gives a Magistrate power to discharge before entire case is complete and such order is legal, but when the inquiry has been incomplete the District Magistrate acts with equal legality in directing further inquiry.

Mool Chand—for Petitioners.

Gulam Mohyuddin—for Respondent.

Judgment.—In this case an order of discharge has been set aside by the District Magistrate, Sialkot, and the petitioners have come up to this Court under S. 439, Criminal P. C. through Mr. Mool Chand who has urged that the Magistrate's order was a legal one and that, therefore, the learned District Magistrate ought not to have set it aside. That the order of the Magistrate was legal and fell within his powers, as defined in S. 253, Criminal P. C., is perfectly clear. It is also a fact that that the order shows that the Magistrate had carefully considered the evidence that had been led. Unfortunately it also shows that the complainant was not allowed to adduce all his evidence. On 24th November 1923, the case was adjourned to 4th December 1928, for the "rest" of the witnesses. Mr Ghulam Mohyuddin, who appears for the respondent before me, stated that, on 4th December 1928, his client was present with the remaining witnesses but that, instead of recording their statements, the learned Magistrate discharged the accused and announced his order to that effect. That there was evidence present, as alleged by Mr. Ghulam Mohyuddin, appears to be correct from the fact that, at the conclusion of his order, the learned Magistrate says that "it is needless to examine further evidence." In these circumstances it cannot be said that there has been a full and complete enquiry in this case. That S. 253, Criminal P. C. gives the Magistrate power of discharge before the entire case is complete is evident, and, therefore, the order is legal; but the Court of the District Magistrate acted with equal legality in directing further enquiry, inasmuch as the enquiry had not been a complete one. I am aware that this Court expects a very careful use of revisional powers by Courts below in matters of this kind; but, when there has not been a complete enquiry into a charge and a Court, having jurisdiction, directs that a full enquiry be made, I do not think I should be justified in interfering. I, therefore, dismiss this petition.

Abdul Haq—Accused—Respondent.

Criminal Revn. No. 817 of 1929, Decided on 18th December 1929, on report by Sess. Judge, Karnal, on 6th May 1929.

* (a) Criminal P. C., S. 439—Improper order of acquittal can be set aside by High Court on appeal by Local Government or on reference by Sessions Judge.

An improper order of acquittal can be set aside by the High Court either on a regular appeal by the Local Government when ordinarily moved by the District Magistrate or in revision ordinarily on a reference by the Sessions Judge. Where the first alternative is not available, there can be no legal bar to the adoption of the second alternative. But the power is to be exercised in exceptional cases only where there has been either denial of the right of a fair trial or a flagrant failure of justice: A. I. R. 1924 Lah. 451; 24 All. 846; 25 All. 128; A. I. R. 1922 Mad. 502 (F. B.); and 42 Cal. 612, Ref.; A. I. R. 1928 Lah. 844, Rel. on. [P 169 C 1]

* (b) Criminal P. C., S. 439—S. 439 need not be read subject to S. 417.

Section 439 need not be read subject to S. 417 and reference can be entertained when the Local Government has been moved to prefer an appeal or having been moved has declined to prefer such appeal: A. I. R. 1926 Pat. 176; and A. I. R. 1929 Pat. 139, Rel. on. [P 168 C 2]

(c) Penal Code, S. 218—Sub-Inspector of Police making incorrect report with intent to cause injury to complainant is guilty under S. 218

Where a Sub-Inspector of Police makes a report knowing it to be incorrect and with intent to cause injury to the complainant his act is clearly covered by S. 218. The word "charged" in S. 218 is not restricted to the narrow meaning of enjoined by a special provision of the law: 27 Cal. 144, Rel. on. [P 171 C 2]

* (d) Criminal Trial—Evidence in case of defamation woman alleged to have illicit pregnancy cannot be compelled to submit to medical examination—Her refusal is no evidence against her—Penal Code S. 500.

It is well settled that in a defamation case based on an allegation that a woman has had illicit pregnancy she cannot be compelled to submit to a medical examination against her consent and her refusal to do so is not evidence against her: Agnew v. Jobson, 18 Cox. Cr. C. 625; and Latter v. Braddede, 50 L.J.Q.B. 448, Rel. on. [P 171 C 1, 2]

Order.—This is a reference under S. 438, Criminal P. C., by the Sessions Judge, Karnal, recommending that the order of Mr. S. K. Kirpalani, District Magistrate, Karnal, acquitting the respondent, Abdul Haq, Sub-Inspector of Police, Asandh, of offences under Ss. 218 and 500, I. P. C., be set aside.

At the commencement of the hearing Dr. Nand Lal for the respondent raised a preliminary objection that the reference was not competent and that this Court had no jurisdiction to entertain it. In support of this objection the learned counsel cited Emperor v. Achhar Singh (1). In the matter of Aminuddin (2), Emperor v. Madar Bakhsh (3), Sankaralinga Mudaliar v. Narayana Mudaliar (4) and Faujdar Thakur v. Kasi Chowd-

Jury (5). None of these cases, however, lays down that the Sessions Judge has no power under S. 438 to make a reference to the High Court to set aside an order of acquittal or that this Court cannot entertain the reference. On the other hand, all these rulings presume that this Court does possess such jurisdiction, though they lay down that it must be exercised most sparingly and only in exceptional cases, where there has been a grave and flagrant miscarriage of justice.

Taking these cases in the order in which they were cited, we find that all that was laid down in Emperor v. Athar Singh (1) was that :

"ordinarily the High Court should not entertain a reference under S. 438 made by a Sessions Judge against an order of acquittal and that there were no special reasons in that particular case to do so."

In the matter of Aminuddin (2) as well as in Emperor v. Madar Bakhsh (3) the references had been made by the District Magistrate and it was held that such a reference ought not, as a general rule, be entertained. In Sankaralinga Mudaliar v. Narayana Mudaliar (4) there was no reference by a Subordinate Court but the matter came up before the High Court on a revision petition filed by the relations of the deceased person against an order acquitting the accused of offences under S. 302, I. P. C., and the High Court held that it will not ordinarily act at the instance of private parties except "when it is urgently demanded in the interests of public justice." Faujdar Thakur v. Kasi Chowdhury (5) was also a revision petition directly presented in the High Court, and it was definitely ruled that the High Court possessed jurisdiction under S. 439 to set aside an order of acquittal, but it was remarked (Jenkin, C. J., and Fletcher J., Teunon, J., contra) that it had now become a settled practice not to interfere ordinarily in such cases at the instance of a private prosecutor. It will thus be seen that none of the rulings relied upon supports the broad proposition put forward on behalf of the respondents.

Dr. Nand Lal conceded that S. 439 of the Code is couched in general terms and invests the High Court with jurisdiction to set aside an order of acquittal but he urged that this jurisdiction could be exercised only on petitions directly presented before it and not on a reference by the Sessions Judge or the District Magistrate. I can find no warrant for this extraordinary contention, which is clearly contrary to the phraseology used by the legislature. S. 439 expressly lays down that the revisional powers of the High Court may be exercised in the case :

"of any proceedings the record of which has been called for itself or which has been reported for orders or which otherwise comes within its knowledge."

In the reports, numerous cases will be found in which High Courts have interfered on such references. The latest case in this Court is Emperor v. Data Ram (6) where Addison, J., accepted a reference under S. 438 from the Sessions Judge, Karnal and setting aside the acquittal, directed a retrial.

Nor am I impressed by the argument that S. 439 should be read subject to S. 417 and that the reference should not be entertained where the Local Government has not been moved to prefer an appeal to this Court under the latter section, or having been moved has declined to prefer such appeal. This contention appears to have been recently raised before the Patna High Court in Siban Rai v. Bhagwant Dass (7) and Wazir Kunjra v. Emperor (8) and overruled. The question has been discussed at length by Macpherson, J., in these cases and as his reasoning and conclusions have my complete and wholehearted concurrence, I think I cannot do better than quote the following passages from his judgment :

In the former case the learned Judge observed :

"Again too much stress may easily be laid upon the remedy available under S. 417 even in police cases. An appeal against acquittal is a special weapon in its armoury which the Local Government judiciously reserves for exceptional occasions, and which is only used after most anxious consideration and in cases which are themselves of great public importance or in which a principle is involved. It cannot be expected that Government will dull the edge of that salutary provision by utilizing it freely in cases which though of importance to individual subjects, are of no or of little general interest. Actually, therefore, a remedy under S. 417 is practically non-existent in the less heinous cases whether they are private or public prosecutions. Yet where justice fails in this country, it undeniably does so at least as much by erroneous acquittal as by erroneous conviction."

In the latter case the learned Judge re-affirmed the same proposition and added:

"It is obvious that the Local Government can only deal with a very small proportion of erroneous acquittals. It can, therefore, be reasonable to refuse to entertain a reference by the District Magistrate only where it is clear that the case is one of that small proportion of cases in which the Local Government would be expected to move on account of their special importance to the administration but has failed to do so. S. 438 is intended to cover all cases of irregularity and injustice including acquittals which come to the notice of the eyes and ears of the High Court. Manifestly it must cover at least cases of erroneous acquittals with which the High Court would interfere under S. 439 at the instance of a private party who comes direct to the High Court. The greatest caution must be exercised in whittling down a provision of law which is itself clear."

"Then again in many of the cases referred by a District Magistrate the circumstances were special. Here, however, is a case much more suitable for a reference than for an appeal under S. 417. Even if the reference had been made by a District Magistrate it is impossible to believe that any Court of justice having jurisdiction, as this Court admittedly has, would permit a manifestly erroneous acquittal induced by the inadvertence to stand."

"Further assuming that ordinarily the High Court will not interfere with an acquittal on a reference by a District Magistrate who has the means of communicating with the Local Government with a view to an appeal under S. 417, it does not follow that the position should be the same in respect of a reference by the Sessions Judge who has no such means, whose outlook on the matter cannot but be purely judicial and who must either act under S. 438 or not at all. Mr. Asghar is unable to cite any decisions where a reference by Sessions Judge was refused for the reasons set out in the decisions relating to a reference by the District Magistrate. It is also clear that S. 439 (5), relied on in a Madras case has no application and in numerous cases this Court has interfered with acquittals at the instance of the private prosecutor."

After giving full consideration to Dr. Nand Lal's arguments and studying the authorities cited by him, I have no doubt that this Court has jurisdiction to entertain a reference by the Sessions Judge against the order of acquittal and, if necessary, to set it aside, though such power must be exercised in exceptional cases only, where there has been either a denial of the right of a fair trial or a flagrant and glaring failure of justice.

For the foregoing reasons, I overrule the preliminary objection, and proceed to see if the present case is one as would justify interference on the revision side, according to the principles stated above.

The circumstances which have given rise to this reference are that on 27th February 1928, a complaint was lodged in the Court of the District Magistrate, Karnal, by one Nathu Koka (P. W. 1), who is a member of the local panchayat at Asandh, and is described by the prosecution witnesses as one of the most respectable persons in the locality, paying a large sum of money as income-tax and land revenue. It was alleged that the respondent Abdul Haq who was at that time Sub-Inspector of Police at Asandh, had got annoyed with the complainant in connexion with the proposed lease of certain premises and had threatened him with serious consequences. In order to get the complainant into trouble, the respondent is said to have arranged with Mrs. Yuhanna Khan (P. W. 2), who is nurse in the local hospital and with whom he (respondent) was carrying on a love intrigue, to write out a petition (Ex. P. E.) addressed to the Superintendent of Police, containing a false recital that the complainant, Nathu, had illicit intimacy with his widowed daughter-in-law, Mt. Pankho (P. W. 12), that in consequence she had become pregnant, and that Nathu and Mt. Pankho were making attempts to cause miscarriage. In this petition it was suggested that enquiry should be made into this matter and necessary steps taken to guard the pregnant woman so that she might not commit suicide. This petition purported to have been signed by a fictitious person called Khair Din, son of Feroze Khan, Pathan, of Asandh, and was dated 10th February 1928. Though addressed to the Superintendent of Police it was not sent to that officer but was put in a cover addressed to the Sub-Inspector of Police, Asandh. The cover was posted on 16th February and delivered to the respondent on the 18th. The respondent kept this petition with him till the 22nd, when he made a report (Ex. P. F.) to the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Kaithal. In this report he stated:

"I received this application by post on 18th February 1928. I have myself enquired secretly about the allegations made therein. I am in every way satisfied with the veracity of the contents of the application. An attempt has been made to obtain some medicine through Sub-Assistant Surgeon, Asandh, for causing abortion. I have also learnt secretly that the dispensary nurse was taken to the woman in question for this purpose. But up till now abortion has not been caused effectively. Successive attempts in this behalf are still going on uninterruptedly. I had a private talk with the nurse about this matter She certainly found the woman pregnant. She refused to cause abortion Besides the above an attempt was made to ascertain the fact about the said woman's pregnancy through Abdul Hakim, son of Wazira, Zafarson of Allah Bakhsh and Bholu of Alya These men obtained information through women and told me that Mt. Pankho had certainly an illicit pregnancy and Nathu had been making repeated attempts to cause abortion As causing abortion in this manner constitutes an offence it is submitted by means of this report that whatever orders may be deemed proper and lawful for the safeguard of the pregnancy may be passed"

On this the Sub-Divisional Magistrate passed an order (Ex. P. L.) on 23rd February 1928, that it was necessary under the circumstances to guard the pregnancy, that Mt. Pankho's statement should be recorded and she should be got medically examined, and reasonable security taken for the guarding of the pregnancy. On receipt of this order the respondent caused the complainant to furnish security for Rs.1,000 for not allowing Mt. Pankho to go anywhere, and recorded her statement, in which she denied that she was pregnant. The complainant alleged that the respondent tried to disgrace him and his daughter-in-law and demanded a sum of Rs. 3,000 for hushing up the matter. On his refusing to pay the amount he took Mt. Pankho in custody and brought her to Karnal for medical examination. Thereupon Nathu lodged the complaint before the District Magistrate praying that Mt. Pankho be restored to him and action taken under the Penal Code, against the respondent and certain other persons.

The District Magistrate after holding an enquiry framed charges under Ss. 218, 384 and 500, I. P. C., against the respondent and one Nathu Qazi. He, however, eventually acquitted both of them. In his judgment he found: (a) that it had been proved that the respondent had got annoyed with Nathu, complainant, for the reason mentioned in the complaint and that he had threatened him with dire consequences: (b) that Mrs. Yuhanna Khan was carrying on a love intrigue with the respondent and was ready to do anything to oblige him: (c) that the petition (Ex. F. E.) was copied by Mrs. Yuhanna Yuhaman Khan from a draft which was in the handwriting of the thana Muharrir at the request of Nathu, Qazi, and that though addressed to the Superintendent of Police, Karnal, this petition was posted to the address of the Sub-Inspector, Asandh, and received by the respondent on 18th February 1928; (d) that on receipt of this letter the respondent made a report (Ex. P. F.) dated 22nd February 1928 and the latter passed orders (Ex. P. L.) thereon; (e) that on receipt of these orders the respondent went to Nathu's house and took steps to compel Mt. Pankho to undergo medical examination against her will; (f) that S. 218, I. P. C., was inapplicable as the respondent could not be said to have been "charged" with the preparation of Ex. P. F., which is the basis of the prosecution; and (g) that no offence under S. 500 was established as Ex. P. F. could not be said to be an incorrect document so far as the factum of Pankho's pregnancy was concerned.

Now if the findings in (a) are correct there can be no doubt that S. 218 was clearly applicable. The learned District Magistrate obviously misread Ex. P. F. in assuming that it did not state that that complainant had committed or attempted to commit an offence, and that all that the report contained was a mere allegation that Mt. Pankho and Nathu were "preparing to commit an offence." Now the extracts from Ex. P. F. given above show that the respondent had clearly stated that attempts had been made to cause abortion by means of medicine obtained from the Sub-Assistant Surgeon and through the nurse but that these attempts had so far been ineffective. It was also stated that "successive attempts in this behalf are still going on uninterruptedly."

If it is hardly necessary to point out that an attempt to cause miscarriage is punishable under Ss. 312 and 511, I. P. C. It is, therefore, an "offence" within the meaning of S. 4 (O), Criminal P. C. Being a non-cognizable offence, of which information had been received by him by the petition, Ex. P. E. it was under S. 155 (1) the duty of the respondent as an officer in charge of the Police Station at Asandh, to enter it in the book kept for the purpose, and in order to enable him to investigate the offence to obtain the order of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate under Cl. (2) of that section. Further, as pointed out by the learned Sessions Judge, the respondent had under S. 23, Police Act, a statutory duty cast upon him to take steps to prevent the commission of the offence, and for that purpose also to report the matter to the Magistrate. If, therefore, the respondent made the report Ex. P. F. knowing it to be incorrect and with intent to cause injury to the complainant, his act was clearly covered by S. 218, I. P. C. It should also be borne in mind that the word "charged" in the section is not restricted to the narrow meaning of "enjoined by a special provision of the law": Queen Empress v. Deodhar (8).

In this connexion it is also necessary to note another error in the judgment of the learned District Magistrate. In Ex. P. F. the Sub-Inspector had stated that he had made enquiries about Mt. Pankho's pregnancy from three persons named, Abdul Hakim, Bholu and Zafaroo. Now these persons gave evidence at the trial as prosecuting witnesses 13-15 and stated that the respondent had never made any enquiries from them and that so far as they knew Mt. Pankho was not pregnant. They were not cross-examined at all by the respondent on these points, and the learned counsel for the respondent has not been able to refer me to anything on the record which might throw doubts on their veracity. There was, therefore, no justification for the remark of the District Magistrate that:

"It was not difficult to think that these witnesses were not speaking the truth."

In addition to this there is the significant fact that the respondent made no enquiries whatever from Khairuddin, the alleged writer of P.E. Indeed it has been shown that any such person was in existence at Asandha at the time.

Lastly the learned District Magistrate has erred in law in drawing an inference adverse to the prosecution from the refusal of Mt. Pankho to have herself medically examined. It is well settled that in a defamation case, based on an allegation that a woman has had illicit pregnancy, she cannot be compelled to submit to medical examination against her consent and her refusal to do so is not evidence against her: see Queen Empress v. Pudman (9); cf. Agnew v. Jobson (10) and Latter v. Braddele (11). If, therefore, the learned District Magistrate's findings in (a) to (e) above are correct, there is no doubt that his ultimate conclusions are not only erroneous but have resulted in a gross miscarriage of justice. In my opinion the case is an exceptional one and the only course open to me is to accept the recommendation of the Sessions Judge, set aside the order of acquittal and order that the respondent be re-tried under Ss. 218 and 500, I. P. C., by the District Magistrate, Karnal.

I wish, however, to make it clear, that the District Magistrate, who will now try the case should come to his own conclusions on the evidence which will be produced before him, and should not be influenced by the fact that I have set aside the order of acquittal by his predecessor.

The Deputy Registrar will see that the records are transmitted to the lower Court forthwith.

v.

Emperor—Opposite Party.

Criminal Appeal No. 634 of 1929, Decided on 11th November 1929, against order of First Class Magistrate, Gujrat, D/- 7th June 1929.

* (a) Penal Code, S. 366—Presumption
—When woman is kidnapped it is with one or other intents mentioned in S. 366.

It is practically impossible for the prosecution in cases of kidnapping and abduction to establish affirmatively the intention with which a woman is abducted. But it is a fair and justifiable presumption that when any woman is kidnapped or abducted it is undoubtedly with one or other of the intents specified in S. 366. The intention is more or less a matter of inference though there may be cases where the matter is capable of direct proof. It is for the accused to explain away incriminating circumstances. [P 173 C 2]

(b) Criminal Trial — Mere accessory is not punishable under Indian Law.

A person whose tonga is used for the purpose of abducting a girl is an accessory after fact according to English Law but as such is not punishable under Indian Law when there is nothing in the evidence to show that he conspired with or abetted the person abducting the girl. [P 174 C 1]

(c) Evidence Act, S. 114, Illus. (g)—Scope.

Non-production of witnesses cited by prosecution when their evidence was unnecessary cannot justify adverse inference when there is nothing else on record to justify it. [P 173 C 1]

Din Muhammad—for Appellants.

W. B. O'Connor for the Government Advocate—for the Crown.

Judgment. — The five appellants in this appeal have been convicted under S. 147, I. P. C., of rioting and under S. 366/149, I. P. C., of the abduction of Mt. Ghulam Fatima (20), the wife of one MerajudDin, an Arain, of Gujranwala, on 6th March 1929.

Each of them has been sentenced to concurrent sentences of five years' and one year's rigorous imprisonment in respect of both offences.

The case for the prosecution was that Mt. Ghulam Fatima being an accused in a case under S. 406, I. P. C., pending before the Bench of Honorary Magistrates at Gujrat was proceeding to the Court from the town on the morning in question accompanied by her father, Nabi Bakhsh and Miran Bakhsh with whom the woman, her father and her surety one Mushtaq Hussain, stayed during the night. On reaching the Circular Road Miran Bakhsh separated going on to his well and at this juncture the appellants, except Allah Ditta, son of Imam Din, and three other persons said to be absconding, pounced upon the girl and her father and while some held the latter the other seized the girl and forcibly placed her in the tonga of the appellant Allah Ditta, son of Imam Din, which was standing by and which, it was alleged, had been previously hired for the purpose. The girl managed to get out of the tonga whereupon she was again seized and put into the back seat by the appellant Abdullah and one of the absconders.

Jowaya and Barkat appellants seated themselves on either side of her keeping her down in her seat while Allah Ditta son of Jamal Din sat down beside the driver, and the tonga was then rapidly driven away in the direction of the Grand Trunk Road. This commotion appears to have attracted the attention of several persons who getting into two tongas followed the abductors of Mt. Ghulam Fatima. Mohammad Amin, Supervisor of Arboriculture in the District Board, Gujrat was cycling from the Courts towards his house and on seeing what was taking place he also followed the tonga on his bicycle. Near the bauli on the Grand Trunk Road the pursuers overtook the tonga containing the girl, and the appellant Jowaya on seeing this was alleged to have pushed Mt. Ghulam Fatima out of the tonga and he, Barkat and Allah Ditta son of Jamal Din jumped out and ran in the direction of the fields, while Allah Ditta, the driver, drove on in the direction of Wazirabad. Jowaya, Barkat and Allah Ditta, son of Jamal Din were pursued and captured and taken to the City Police Station along with Mt. Ghulam Fatima, her father and several other persons, Mt. Ghulam Fatima made the first report at 1.30 p. m. the same day.

The above account is supported by the evidence of several witnesses, including that of Dr. Mrs. Narinjan Singh, Sub-Assistant Surgeon in charge of the female Hospital at Gujrat, who examined Mt. Ghulam Fatima the same evening and found five simple injuries on her person.

The appellant Jowaya admitted having been captured near the bauli, as alleged by the prosecution, but denied having abducted Mt. Ghulam Fatima or having pushed her out of the tonga. He stated that he would file a written statement, but there is none on the record.

Barkat denied having had any hand in the abduction of Mt. Ghulam Fatima or that he was arrested near the bauli, but stated he was caught near the City Police Station while returning from Jalalpur Jattan where he had gone to purchase a horse. He attributed his implication to enmity.

Allah Ditta, son of Jamal Din, also denied having been captured near the bauli or having had any hand in the abduction of Mt. Ghulam Fatima.

Allah Ditta the tonga driver stated that Mushtaq Hussain hired his tonga and put Jowaya appellant and Mt. Ghulam Fatima in it. Near the bauli his tonga was overtaken and he stopped on being asked to do so. Jowaya and Mt. Ghulam Fatima were taken away and he thereupon returned to the tonga stand.

Abdullah appellant denied having participated in the affair.

The appellants produced 23 witnesses in their defence; two of these deposed that no such occurrence as alleged by the prosecution, took place. Ghulam Mohammad (D. W. 5) gave evidence in support of the story of Allah Ditta the tonga driver, while D. Ws. 6 and 7 deposed to having seen the girl, Mt. Ghulam Fatima, quietly driving away in the tonga of Allah Ditta with another man. D. Ws. 15-17 testified to Barkat and Allah Ditta son of Jamal Din having been at Jalalpur Jattan on 6th March in connexion with the purchase of a house. In this connexion it may be noted that Allah Ditta son of Jamal Din did not plead an alibi when examined.

The appellant Abdullah produced certain evidence to show that he was suffering from malaria at the time and that from the 5th to 8th March he was under the treatment of Hakim Hakam Shah (D. W. 13).

The learned counsel for the appellant has urged that six witnesses and Mush-taq Hussain, who according to the first information report was an eyewitness and all of whom were cited as witnesses, were not produced by the prosecution. He contended that these witnesses had been purposely withheld by the prosecution and in the circumstances it should be presumed under illustration (g) to S. 114, Evidence Act, that their testimony would have been unfavourable to the prosecution. I am not prepared to draw this inference as there is nothing on the record which would tend to show that these witnesses were withheld for any such reason. It seems to me that the prosecution, as stated, considered their evidence unnecessary and this is in view of the ample evidence on the record as to what had occurred seems to have been a correct view.

Counsel then submitted that there was no mention in the first information report as to Muhammad Amin (P. W. 13) having followed the tonga of the abductors. Now this man admittedly did not go to the police station when the first information report was recorded. He went there in the evening and himself informed the police that he had witnessed the occurrence whereupon his statement was taken down by the Sub-Inspector.

Certain evidence was produced on behalf of the appellant Abdullah to show that there was a love affair or intimacy between him and Mt. Ghulam Fatima. She denied this, but I agree with the learned Magistrate that there was something of this nature between the two and it is possible that this supplied the motive for the abduction. In my opinion the evidence for the prosecution is clear and convincing. The witnesses particularly Mohammad Amin (P. W. 13) seem to be entirely disinterested and have no motive whatever for falsely implicating the appellants. Moreover three of the appellants were actually captured when trying to escape from their pursuers, and the evidence in support of the alibis of Abdullah, Barkat and Allah Ditta son of Jamal Din is utterly worthless and has been rightly rejected by the learned Magistrate. The fact that Mt. Ghulam Fatima also bore certain injuries on her person supports the case for the prosecution as these injuries could only have been caused owing to her being forcibly seized and partly to her being pushed out of the tonga, when her abductors were overtaken.

Finally learned counsel for the appellants submitted that there was nothing to show with what intention Mt. Ghulam Fatima had been abducted and as abduction per se was not punishable the appellants were not guilty of having committed any offence. Obviously it is practically impossible for the prosecution in cases of this nature to establish affirmatively the intention with which a woman is kidnapped or abducted, but in my opinion it is a fair and justifiable presumption that when any woman is kidnapped or abducted, it is undoubtedly with one or other of the intents specified in S. 366. I really cannot see what other intention the abductor or abductors of a woman can have in a case of this nature except that she should be forced to marry some person against her will or forced or seduced to illicit intercourse. In the present case, as has been shown above, this presumption is strengthened by the fact that there was an intimacy between Mt. Ghulam Fatima and the appellant Abdullah.

I fully agree with the view taken by Moti Sagar, J. in Chandu Singh v. Em- peror (1), that the intent with which a woman is abducted or kidnapped is more or less a matter of inference though there may be cases where the matter is capable of direct proof, but very generally one has to infer from the circumstances of the case and the subsequent conduct of the accused as to what was the intention with which the kidnapping or abduction had been brought about. As pointed out by the learned Judge in that case the circumstances though incriminating to outward appearances may yet be capable of a perfectly good and reasonable explanation and may be fully compatible with the innocence of the accused. In such cases it would be for the accused to explain away the incriminating circumstances and to prove that he or they had no improper or sinister object in view. In the present case no such explanation is forthcoming.

For the above reasons I would hold that the prosecution established their case and there is no doubt that, except the appellant Allah Ditta son of Imam Din, the others have been rightly found guilty of having abducted Mt. Ghulam Fatima with one or other of the intents mentioned in S. 366, I. P. C. I am not satisfied that the appellant Allah Ditta son of Imam Din was a party to this affair at its inception. His tonga was undoubtedly used for the purpose of taking away the girl, but there is nothing in the evidence to show that he conspired with or abetted the other appellants in the matter. He was clearly an accessory after the fact according to English Law but as such is not punishable under the Indian Law. I would, therefore, give him the benefit of the doubt and hold that his guilt has not been proved, and accepting the appeal so far as he is concerned, I set aside his conviction and sentence, acquit him and direct that he be set at liberty forthwith. I affirm the conviction of the other four appellants, but taking into consideration all the attendant circumstances I would reduce the sentence under S. 366, I. P. C., in the case of each of these four appellants to three years' rigorous imprisonment. The appeal is accepted pro tanto in their cases.

TEK CHAND, J.

Faqir Singh—Accused—Petitioner.

v.

Emperor—Opposite Party.

Criminal Misc. Petn. No. 284 of 1929, Decided on 14th December 1929 for transfer of case from Court of First Class Magistrate, Lahore, to some other Court.

Criminal P. C., S. 526—Under S. 342 Court alone has power to examine accused—Magistrate acting as mouthpiece of Public Prosecutor in conducting examination of accused—It is valid ground for transfer of case from his Court.

The Court alone is authorized to examine the accused person and the counsel for the complainant or the prosecution should not be allowed to take part in the examination. Under S. 342 the questions should not be put so as to cross-examine the accused or with a view to elicit from him statements which would lead to his conviction. Further it is of the utmost importance in a criminal case that the trying Magistrate should keep himself at arm's length from both sides and should try to hold the scales even between them. He should not conduct the proceedings in such a manner as to give an impression that he is being guided by one side or the other. Where a Magistrate does not discharge these statutory functions under S. 342 in a judicial manner and acts as the mouthpiece of the Public Prosecutor in conducting the examination of the accused that is a valid ground for the transfer of the case from his Court. [P 175 C 1,2]

Abdul Rashid—for the Crown.

Order.—This is an application for transfer of a criminal case pending against the petitioner in the Court of Mr. Mehdi Hussain, Magistrate, First Class, Lahore. The grounds on which the application is based are set out in detail in the affidavit of the petitioner dated 7th October 1929. I have heard the petitioner and counsel for the Crown at length and have also examined the relevant portions of the record, and agree with Mr. Abdul Rashid that none of these grounds, except that mentioned in Cl. (b), para. 3 (if true) can justify a transfer of the case at this state. The only question for determination, therefore, is whether the allegations in this clause are correct. The learned Additional Government Advocate denies that the trial Magistrate or the Public Prosecutor acted in the manner alleged, and in support of his contention he has read to me an extract from a letter dated 13th December 1929, received by him from the Public Prosecutor. In this letter the Public Prosecutor admits, however, that his "memory of the events in this case is not very clear." His version of the incident, recorded after seven months, cannot, therefore, be a safe guide in this respect.

It is, however, not necessary to investigate the matter further, as the application presented by the petitioner before the Magistrate on 28th May 1929, and the Magistrate's remarks thereon made on the same day leave no doubt as to the real facts. In para. 3 of this application the petitioner stated :

"That after the record of the evidence the Court asked Public Prosecutor to frame questions for examination of the applicant and his co-accused. The Public Prosecutor gave typed questions to Court and asked the Court to read out these questions and ask the applicant and his co-accused to give answers. Kindly put this application on the record and also permit me to know whether the questions given to the Court by Public Prosecutor in original are in existence or not. The Court has not placed the same on record so far. On this the Magistrate's note is "Correct." The Public Prosecutor had been asked to argue and make suggestions, and the questions after consideration and reading the file were put by me."

Now if before examining the accused under S. 342, Criminal P. C. the Magistrate really asked the Public Prosecutor to frame the questions and the latter gave to the Magistrate a typed paper containing the suggested questions and the Magistrate conducted the examination on these questions, he certainly acted in a manner which was likely to raise a reasonable apprehension in the mind of the accused that they would not have a fair trial in his Court. It is hardly necessary to point out that the Court alone is authorised to examine the accused person and the counsel for the complainant or the prosecution should not be allowed to take part in the examination. The law allows the Court and not the complainant to put questions to the accused and the object with which the examination is to be conducted, is clearly stated in the statute viz. :

"to enable the accused to explain any circumstances appearing in the evidence against him."

The questions should not be put so as to cross-examine the accused or with a view to elicit from him statements which would lead to his conviction.

The form of some of the questions put to the petitioner in this case is clearly open to objection, and it seems highly likely that they were taken from the typed paper handed over to the Magistrate by the Public Prosecutor. It is of the utmost importance in a criminal case that the trying Magistrate should keep himself at arm's length from both sides and should try to hold the scales even between them. He should not conduct the proceedings in such a manner as to give an impression that he is being guided by one side or the other.

I am of opinion, that the action of the learned Magistrate in not discharging his statutory functions under S. 342, Criminal P. C., in a judicial manner, and in acting as the mere mouthpiece of the Public Prosecutor in conducting the examination of the accused, is a valid ground for the transfer of the case from his Court. I therefore, withdraw the case from the file of Mr. Mehdi Hussain and direct the District Magistrate to try it himself or remit it to another Magistrate of competent jurisdiction at Lahore.

The petitioner has stated before me that he does not want a de novo trial, but will continue the proceedings from the stage at which they were in Mr. Mehdi Hussain's Court, when the record was sent for by this Court. There seems to have been some dispute in the Magistrate's Court as to the prosecution witnesses who were to be re-summoned for cross-examination. The petitioner has stated before me that he wants the following six persons only to be re-summoned for this purpose :

- (1) Jaikishan Das.
- (2) Ram Nath.
- (3) Dwarka Das.
- (4) Mohammad Din.
- (5) Ali Mohammad, and
- (6) Diwan Chand.

The learned Additional Government Advocate has no objection to this being done. The Magistrate, who will now deal with the case will resubmit these witnesses, as also the witnesses for the defence, at an early date and proceed with the hearing from day to day.

JAI LAL, J.

Gowardhan Das Kapur—Complainant
—Petitioner.

v.

Abbas Ali—Accused—Respondent.

Criminal Misc. Petn. No. 252 of 1929, Decided on 27th November 1929, for re-transfer of case to First Class Magistrate, Lahore.

(a) Criminal P. C., S. 526—Proper application for transfer should be insisted upon when allegations are made against trial Magistrate.

It is no doubt true that a District Judge can transfer a case suo motu, but when action is taken at the instance of a party, a proper application should as a rule be insisted upon, specially when allegations are made against the trial Magistrate. The functions of the District Magistrate under S. 528 which empowers him to transfer cases from the Courts of the Magistrates subordinate to him are judicial functions and must be exercised with due observance of the procedure and formalities which have to be followed in all other judicial matters. He must be moved by a proper application openly presented in the Court by the aggrieved party personally or through a person duly authorized by him for that purpose. Sufficient ground for transfer must be shown and notice to the other side must be issued before order for transfer is passed. The Magistrate has also to record his reasons for transferring the case. [P 177 C 1, 2]

(b) Criminal P. C., S. 526—Condition of not trying de novo cannot be imposed by order of transfer—Criminal P. C., S. 350 (1).

The District Magistrate cannot impose, without the consent of the accused while transferring a case, a condition that there would be no de novo trial, the right being recognized by S. 350 (1). [P 178 C 1]

(c) Criminal P. C., S. 528—Case should not be transferred merely on basis of general allegations regarding communal feeling.

Courts should not be influenced by general allegations regarding the so called communal feelings and cases should not be transferred on basis of such allegations for an intolerable position would arise if it were open to any accused person in a case of a communal or quasi communal nature to obtain a transfer of a case from the Court of a Hindu Magistrate merely because he, the accused, was Mohammedan or vice versa.: A. I. R. 1928 Nag. 21, Foll. [P 178 C 2]

Bishen Nath—for Petitioner.

Order.—It is necessary to set out at some length the facts of this case.

The petitioner Gowardhan Das is complainant in a case under Ss. 323, 509 and 341, I. P. C. The respondent, the accused, is Abbas Ali Shah, constable, who on 10th May 1929, was posted on traffic duty. It appears that Gowardhan Das was proceeding on a bicycle from the direction of the Shahalmi Gate in Lahore where Abbas Ali Shah was on duty, and apparently there was some dispute between the two, in consequence of which it was alleged by the constable that Gowardhan Das had disobeyed his signal. The latter was consequently sent up for trial under the Motor Vehicles Act but was let off with a warning by a Magistrate. In the meantime Gowardhan Das filed a complaint under the sections mentioned above against Abbas Ali Shah in connexion with the same incident. This case was being tried by Rai Sahib Nathu Ram, a Magistrate of the First Class, Lahore, who, after recording the complainant's evidence, framed a charge against the accused. After the charge had been framed the accused, Abbas Ali Shah, made an application to the Senior Superintendent of Police, Lahore, on 22nd August 1929, requesting him to move the District Magistrate to transfer the case to some other Court. The application, it may be mentioned, has the following heading :

To

The District Magistrate, Lahore.

Through

The Senior Superintendent of Police, Lahore,

but from the prayer it appears that it was really meant for the Senior Superintendent of Police. In this application after stating the previous history of the case, as already recited above, the constable stated that he doubted that justice would be done to him by the Court trying the case and in support of this assertion he mentioned the following facts:

“(1) The general impression which the learned Magistrate holds, in respect of which he has expressed his opinion to some persons is almost against the officials deputed to traffic duty.

“(2) The complainant Gowardhan Das is closely related to the owner of house in which the learned Magistrate resides. Although this fact is not affecting the learned Magistrate, yet it is a natural consequence of every day events that the story told by the complainant's party, who are acquainted with the Magistrate, would have much weight, more so than the statement put up in my defence.”

The Senior Superintendent of Police on 23rd August 1929, that is, the next day, sent the application to the District Magistrate with the following note:

“I have made inquiries into this case and I understand that the accused constable believes that he will not get a fair trial in this Court. I would prefer not to go into details but would request that the case be, if possible, transferred to the Court of the Additional District Magistrate.”

Thereupon the District Magistrate passed the following order on 24th August 1929 :

"I imagine the Police Constable's fears to be quite without foundation. But in the circumstances and on the understanding that de novo trial is not asked for I will transfer the case to Additional District Magistrate," and actually sent the case to the Additional District Magistrate on 26th August 1929, with the following order :

"See application attached. Will Additional District Magistrate decide this case please ?"

The complainant thereupon made an application to the District Magistrate, on 23rd September 1929, praying that the case be transferred to some other Magistrate than the Additional District Magistrate on the main ground that the procedure adopted by the District Magistrate in transferring the case from the Court of Rai Sahib Nathu Ram was illegal and that as the Additional District Magistrate was suggested by the Senior Superintendent of Police as the proper Magistrate to try the case, the complainant did not expect that there would be an impartial trial in his Court. The District Magistrate on 2nd of October 1929, passed the following order on this application :

"The applicant is the complainant. I can think no more suitable Court to try a case between a Khatri and a Muhammadau than Mr. Lewis who is a Christian. The apprehension that justice will not be done must be unjustifiable. Refused."

This is an application by the complainant for revision of the order of the District Magistrate and for transfer of the case from the Court of the Additional District Magistrate of Lahore.

While I have absolutely no reason to hold that the Additional District Magistrate will not try the case impartially and fairly, I consider that for reason that I will presently state this application for revision must be accepted and the case sent back for trial to Rai Sahib Nathu Ram, Magistrate, in whose Court it was originally pending when it was transferred by the District Magistrate by his order of 24th August 1929.

In the first instance, there was no proper application before the District Magistrate for the transfer of the case. It is no doubt true that a District Magistrate can transfer a case suo moto, but when action is taken at the instance of a party a proper application should as a rule be insisted upon specially when allegations are made against the trial Magistrate. The Senior Superintendent of Police, Lahore, therefore, had no locus standi to move the District Magistrate to transfer the case in the manner described above as the functions of the District Magistrate under S. 528, Criminal P. C., which empowers him to transfer cases from the Courts of the Magistrates subordinate to him, are judicial functions and must consequently be exercised with due observance of the procedure and formalities which have to be followed in all other judicial matters. He must be moved by a proper application openly presented in Court by the aggrieved party personally or through a person duly authorised by him for the purpose. In the present case there was no such application and it does not appear that the constable ever appeared before the District Magistrate.

Next, before the District Magistrate could pass an order transferring the case it was necessary for him to issue notice to the other side. This was not done in the present case. Though there is no express statutory provision making such notice necessary, it has been repeatedly held by this Court that ordinarily such notice should be given by the District Magistrate and that his proceedings are liable to be set aside by this Court in the absence of a notice. This was pre-eminently a case in which notice should have been given specially in view of the allegations though vague made against the Magistrate.

Thirdly, in my opinion, there was no sufficient ground disclosed in the application made by Abbas Ali Shah to the Senior Superintendent of Police for transfer of the case nor was the application supported by any affidavit, testifying to the correctness of the allegations made therein. Such an allegation that a :

"general impression which the learned Magistrate holds and in respect of which he has expressed his opinion to some persons," who are not even mentioned, is too vague a statement to be taken notice of by any judicial tribunal.

With regard to the next allegation the constable himself states that the fact that the complainant Gowardhan Das is closely related to the owner of the house in which the Magistrate resides

"is not affecting" the latter. In the first instance, there is no proof on the record that the Magistrate is residing in a house which is owned by a person who is closely related to the complainant Gowardhan Das. Even if it were so, that is no ground for the transfer of the case from his Court. The note by the Senior Superintendent of Police while making no definite allegation against the Magistrate appears to contain a suggestion of bias, when he says that he would prefer not to go into details, but in the absence of such details the District Magistrate was not justified in entertaining the suggestion for transfer (assuming it was properly made) and in any case the Magistrate should have been given an opportunity to explain them before the case could be transferred from his Court. This was not done in the present case.

Moreover sub-S. (5), S. 528, Criminal P. C., makes it incumbent on the District Magistrate to record his reasons before transferring the case. In this case not only no such reasons were recorded but those mentioned were reasons for not transferring the case.

With regard to the understanding that "a de novo trial was not asked for" it is to be noted that the accused was not present before the District Magistrate when the order was passed and there is no record that he agreed to this condition and it is doubtful whether the District Magistrate could impose such a condition either with or without the assent of the accused whose right to claim a de novo trial is recognized by proviso (a) to S. 350 (1), Criminal P. C.

When by means of an application for transfer of the case these irregularities were brought to his notice by the complainant the District Magistrate recorded an order which I feel compelled to disapprove. Neither party had alleged that there was a communal question involved in the case, nor do the circumstances of the case show that there was any reason to hold that the Magistrate was being influenced by any communal considerations. It seems therefore that the learned District Magistrate had no justification for making the remarks which he made on 2nd October 1929. I have no reason to think that the Magistrates in Lahore, both Hindus and Muhammadans, are not above communal prejudices when deciding cases in which the parties belong to the different religions, otherwise they would be unfit to exercise their magisterial functions.

As remarked by Agha Haidar, J., in Gyan Singh v. Crown (Case No. 252 of 1927) :

"If the Courts were to be influenced by general allegations regarding the so called communal feelings, and transferred cases on the basis of such allegations, the result would be that the whole system of administration of justice upon which the fabric of the civilised society rests would be paralysed" and :

"the party who pleads prejudice and bias in a particular Judge of Magistrate must prove affirmatively that such bias and prejudice do as a matter of fact exist."

In Pandurang Krishna Deotale v. Emperor (1) (Misc. Petition No. 29 of 1927) Mr. Findlay, Judicial Commissioner, Nagpur, observed that :

"an intolerable position would arise, if it were to be open to any accused person in a case of a communal or quasi communal nature to obtain a transfer of a case from the Court of a Hindu Magistrate merely because he, the accused was Muhammadan or vice versa."

With the above remarks I entirely agree and would add that in this case there was no question of a case of even a quasi communal nature and further that if cases were to be transferred from the Court of the Magistrates on such vague allegations as were made in this case and communicated to District Magistrates in such illegal manner, it would become impossible for the Magistrates to work with independence and sense of security from unnecessary interference which are so essential for the discharge of their judicial functions fairly and impartially. And therefore I cannot approve of the manner in which and of the reasons for which a transfer of this case was secured from the Court of Rai Sahib Nath Ram.

To sum up, there was no application before the District Magistrate made by a competent person which was, as I have stated above, necessary in the circumstances of this case, nor was an application made in open Court, as the law recognises only applications made in open Court, no definite allegations were made against the Magistrate nor were the allegations that were actually made supported by an affidavit; the District Magistrate did not give the requisite notice to the other party and did not record any reasons in support of his order of transfer as he was required to do and when all these irregularities were brought to his notice, he sought to support his order on grounds which were both improper and illegal.

The proper order that under the circumstances I must pass is to set aside the orders of the District Magistrate dated 24th August 1929 and 2nd October 1929, and to send the case back to Rai Sahib Nathu Ram, Magistrate of the First Class, with directions to resume the case from the stage at which it was transferred from his Court. I order accordingly.

TEK CHAND AND FFORDE, JJ.

Khanun—Appellant.

v.

Emperor—Opposite Party.

Criminal Appeal No. 711 of 1929, Decided on 23rd October 1929, against order of Sess.-Judge, Shahpur, D/- 13th July 1929.

(a) Criminal P. C., S. 164—Confession can be recorded on holiday and in any place.

There is no provision of law which forbids a Magistrate from recording a confession on a Sunday or any other holiday and at a place other than the Court-House. [P 180 C 1]

(b) Penal Code, S. 302—Murder of wife who continues intimacy with paramour in spite of repeated reprimands—Case held to be fit one for lesser sentence than death.

The deceased was seen talking to her paramour L. who had been following her from place to place, and when reprimanded by the accused she replied that she did not like to live with him but would again elope with L. She persisted in this statement and repeated it shortly before occurrence which resulted in accused strangulating her to death.

Held: that the accused was guilty of murder but under the circumstances case was fit one for lesser penalty than death. [P 180 C 2]

M. L. Puri and Shanti Narain Sawhney—for Appellant

J. M. Mackay—for the Crown.

Tek Chand, J.—Khanu, son of Alu, Kalera, of Derwal in the Shahpur District, has been convicted under S. 302, I. P. C., of the murder of his wife Mt. Sardaran, and has been sentenced to death. He has appealed through Mr. M. L. Puri, and the record is also before us under S. 374, Criminal P. C., for confirmation of the sentence.

The case for the prosecution is that, before her marriage with the appellant, Mt. Sardaran had eloped twice with one Lalu Saggu; that, after the marriage, she continued her intimacy with him and that he followed her wherever she went. On the day of the occurrence, the appellant and the other members of his family were encamped in Chak No. 107 S. B., and in the afternoon the appellant saw Lalu talking to Mt. Sardaran. He reprimanded her and advised her to mend her ways, but she replied that she would again elope with Lalu. Shortly after, the appellant and Mt. Sardaran went from the dera to bring fodder and on the way the appellant again advised her to give up her connexion with Lalu Saggu, but she did not agree. When they had gone about a mile from the dera she told him that she did not like to live with him. This enraged the appellant and he wrapped her dopatta round her neck and twisted it. She struggled for a while but he gave a violent twist to the dopatta and thereupon she fell down and died on the spot. On this the appellant took out a chhuri from his loin cloth and indicted an incised wound 7" long on her throat. Leaving the dead body on the spot, the appellant went back to his dera and returned with a bullock and a sack. He stripped the body of the dopatta and other clothes and ornaments and placed it in one of the pockets of the sack. He put a number of stones in the other pocket, and loading the sack on the bullock drove it across the jungle and threw it in a deserted well in the square of Subedar Sewan Singh (P. W. 4). On 9th March 1929, Sewa Singh servant of the Subedar, noticed sack floating in the well and informed his master, who communicated the information, to the police at Sargodha.

There is no direct evidence of the crime and the case against the appellant rests principally on the confession, which he made under S. 164, Criminal P. C. before Chaudhri Mushtaq Ahmad, Magistrate, First Class, Sargodha, on 17th March 1929. He retracted this confession before the committing Magistrate and stated that he had been tortured by the police to make it. He repeated this allegation before the learned Sessions Judge. There is, however, not a tittle of evidence on the record to suggest that the police coerced or tortured the appellant to make the statement or that they held out any promise, inducement or threat to him. The confession appears to have been properly recorded in strict accordance with law and the evidence of Chaudhri Mushtaq Ahmad (P. W. 6), shows that he had satisfied himself that it was being freely and voluntarily made. Mr. M. L. Puri has laid great stress on the circumstances that the confession was recorded on a Sunday and in the office of the Central Co-operative Bank, Sargodha, where the Magistrate happened to be at the time, and not in the Court-House. He is, however, unable to point out any provision of the law which forbids a Magistrate from recording a confession on a Sunday or any other holiday and at a place other than the Court-House.

The narrative of events as given in the confession is very convincing and there seems to be no doubt as to its genuineness. It is true that the appellant retracted it at the trial, but we find it amply corroborated on the record. After having made the confession the appellant took the Magistrate, Chaudhri Mushtaq Ahmad to the spot in the jungle where Mt. Sardaran had been killed and picked up a number of blood-stained stones. This spot was not known to the police before. He then led the Magistrate along the zig zag route which he had taken and pointed out the dal in which the dead body had been thrown.

At his instance the investigating party proceeded to his original home in Mauza Drawi, which is situate at a distance of 50 miles from the scene of the occurrence, and then he produced from an earthen vessel the dopatta, the kurta, the loin cloth and the ornaments which Mt. Sardaran was wearing at the time of her death, and also the chhuri with which her throat had been cut. Of these the dopatta and the lungi have been proved to have been stained with human blood.

Further corroboration is afforded by the statement of Muhammad (P. W. 7) that on the evening in question he had seen the appellants and Mt. Sardaran going together with sickles in their hands to the jungle for cutting fodder that after sunset the appellant returned alone, and that when it had become dark he went with a bullock in the direction of the jungle.

After giving the case my best consideration I am of opinion, that it has been fully established that Mt. Sardaran was killed by the appellant in the manner described in the confession. I have no doubt that in wrapping the dopatta round her neck and twisting it with great force the appellant intended to inflict such bodily injury on her as he knew was likely to cause death and that his act clearly amounts to murder as defined in the Indian Penal Code. Mr. Puri has stressed the point that in the confession he stated that in wrapping the dopatta round her neck and pulling it he merely intended to threaten her and not to kill her. His intention, however, is to be judged not by what he now says, but by the nature of the act which he himself has described in detail in his confession. It is also significant that after she had fallen down and died, he at once proceeded to cut her throat with a big knife which he had taken with him. In my judgment the appellant has been rightly held guilty of the offence of murder and I would uphold his conviction under S. 302, I. P. C.

As regards the sentence, I am of opinion, that it is a fit case in which the lesser penalty should be imposed. The deceased was seen talking to her paramour Lalu, who had been following her from place to place, and when reprimanded by the appellant she replied that she did not like to live with him but would again elope with Lalu. She persisted in this statement and repeated it shortly before occurrence.

I would, therefore, accept the appeal and while affirming the conviction would reduce the sentence to transportation for life.

ZAFAR ALI AND BHIDE, JJ, Narainjan Singh—Convict-Appellant.
v.

Emperor—Opposite Party.

Criminal Appeal No. 186 of 1929, Decided on 4th November 1929, against order of Sess. Judge, Lahore, D/- 9th August 1929.

Penal Code, S. 304 (1)—Deceased wife found with paramour—Husband trying to seize paramour struck with knife by paramour who ran away—Wife preventing husband from seizing him—Husband consequently striking wife with knife—Husband held guilty not of murder but under S. 304.

The deceased who was the wife of the accused was unchaste. One night when he came home from his field at the last watch of night he found his wife and her paramour sleeping on the same cot but hearing the footstep the paramour got up and as the accused tried to seize him he struck him with knife and then escaped by jumping over the wall but dropped the knife which the accused picked up and wanted to run after him when the deceased grappled with him to prevent him from doing so. The accused therefore attacked her with knife and inflicted many injuries. The accused bore incised wounds on palm surface of the right little finger which might have been the result of blow given by the paramour and was seen and identified while running away by many of the prosecution witnesses.

Held: that the accused acted under grave and sudden provocation. [P 181 C 1]

Nand Lal—for Appellant.

D. R. Sawhney—for the Crown.

Judgment.—The appellant Narainjan Singh has been convicted by the Additional Sessions Judge of Lahore of the murder of his wife Mt. Indar Kaur. and has been sentenced to death.

The appellant admitted that it was he who attacked the deceased at the last watch of the fateful night and inflicted upon her with a knife the injuries to which she succumbed, but he pleaded sudden and grave provocation. All the four assessors accepted this plea, but the learned Additional Sessions Judge did not. We find ample support for it in the prosecution evidence itself.

It is common ground that the deceased was unchaste and that the appellant came home from his field at the last watch of the night. His version was that he found his wife and her paramour Wasakha Singh sleeping on the same cot, but hearing his footsteps Wasakha Singh got up. As the appellant tried to seize him he struck him with a knife and then escaped by jumping over the wall but dropped the knife. The appellant picked it up and wanted to run after him when the deceased grappled with him to prevent him from doing so. It was then that he attacked her with the knife and inflicted many injuries. He bore an incised wound on the palm surface of the right little finger which might have been the result of the blow given by Wasakha Singh.

Among the persons who were attracted to the spot were Surain Singh (P. W. 9), Phulla Singh (P.W. 10) and Teja Singh (P.W. 11). All the three deposed that the woman was reputed to be unchaste and was suspected of having illicit intimacy with Wasakha Singh. Surain Singh stated:

"People were saying that Wasakha Singh, had run away."

Phulla Singh stated:

"I saw a man running away who appeared to be Wasakha Singh. The accused was saying that he had come from outside and had seen his wife and Wasakha Singh sleeping together on the same cot and for this reason he had stabbed her and Wasakha Singh had escaped. He had also stated that the woman had caught hold of him when he was going to pursue Wasakha Singh, and had thus enabled Wasakha Singh to escape."

Teja Singh stated:

"the people who were assembled there were saying that Wasakha Singh was caught sleeping with the woman and he had run away. The accused had stated that he had come from his fields at night when he saw his wife and Wasakha Singh sleeping together. On seeing him Wasakha Singh ran away. He wished to pursue him but his wife grappled with him and thus enabled Wasakha Singh to escape."

The above evidence bears out the appellant's version and shows that he acted under a grave and sudden provocation. We, therefore, accept the appeal and alter the conviction to one under S. 304, Part 1, Penal Code and sentence the appellant to rigorous imprisonment for three years.

Criminal Misc. Petn. No. 264 of 1929, Decided on 13th December 1929, for transfer of the case from the Court of Magistrate First Class, Lahore, to some other Court.

Criminal P. C., S. 526—Where cross-examination by Magistrate on question suggested by Public Prosecutor after defence cross-examination arouses suspicion in mind of accused—Case should be transferred.

Where the Magistrate cross-examines a prosecution witness (after he is cross-examined by the defence) on question suggested by the Public Prosecutor and this arouses a reasonable apprehension in the mind of the accused that the Magistrate is taking the side of the prosecution, there is sufficient cause for transferring the case to another Magistrate though not in another district. [P 182 C 1]

—for Petitioners.

R. C. Soni—for the Crown.

Order.—Of all the allegations made in support of this application under S. 526, Criminal P. C., for the transfer of the petitioners' case to some other district, the most serious are those contained in para. 6 of the affidavit filed with the application. It appears that the learned Magistrate who is trying the case undertook to cross-examine a prosecution witness (after he had been cross-examined by the defence) on question suggested by the Public Prosecutor and thus cross-examined the witness at considerable length. This has quite reasonably roused an apprehension in the mind of the accused that the Magistrate is taking the side of the prosecution. I therefore consider it necessary to accept this petition for transferring the case to another Magistrate, though I find no sufficient ground for transferring it to another district. I order accordingly, that the case be transferred to Mirza Mehdi Hussain's file who is one of the senior Magistrates here.

Kashi Nath and another — Respondents.

Criminal Appeal No. 520 of 1929, Decided on 10th September 1929, from an order of Addl. Sess. Judge, Cawnpore, D/ 2nd April 1929.

(a) U. P. Excise Act, S. 60 (a) — Where cocaine and weighing machines and packing material is found in a small house by one of joint brothers both must be supposed to have knowledge of dealings with cocaine.

Where in a small common house occupied by two brothers belonging to a joint Hindu family, and running a common business, there are discovered not only an enormous quantity of cocaine but all the necessary weighing machines and packing material to deal with it, it is idle to suggest that both brothers would not know of the dealings in cocaine. One brother could not possibly carry on business in cocaine without knowledge of the other when they live in small confined rooms. [P 183 C 1]

(b) U. P. Excise Act, S. 60—Onus is on persons in possession of cocaine to prove satisfactory reason.

When once the possession of cocaine with the accused is found as a fact the onus is upon them to prove that they had sufficient reasons for being in possession of cocaine. [P 183 C 1,2]

U. S. Bajpai—for the Crown.

Saila Nath Mukherji — for Respondents.

Judgment.—This is the appeal on behalf of the Local Government. Two men, Kashi Nath and Chunni Lal, were acquitted on appeal by the learned Sessions Judge of Cawnpore of a charge of being in possession of cocaine, an excisable article, contrary to S. 60 (a), United Provinces Excise Act. In this case both the Magistrate who originally tried the case and the learned Sessions Judge were in entire agreement upon the findings of fact; but the learned Sessions Judge came to the conclusion that it was his duty to set aside the judgment of the learned Magistrate on this ground:

"I have no doubt that either both the brothers or one of them deals in cocaine, but it cannot be said that necessarily both the brothers are dealing and if one of the brothers is dealing in cocaine which of them is so dealing."

The facts are that the two accused are brothers. They are members of a joint Hindu family, and they mess together and carry on a common business. It is admitted, at any rate, that the accused occupy a portion of a house, called baithak, which consists of a room with a tin shed upon it, from which cocaine was recovered, the lower room being rented out to some other person. Opposite, on the other side of the lane, is the house of the aunt-in-law of Kashi Nath, and it is alleged by the prosecution that the dalan and kothri of that house are also in the occupation of the two accused. On 30th June 1928, on information received, the police raided the house of Kamal Devi and the baithak. They took with them search witnesses. At the time of the search the two accused were not present in either of the houses. In the dalan of the house of Kamal Devi were discovered six small packages of cocaine in a tin canister, 5 or 6 rattis, a candle and sealing wax. In the kothri which was a small room and was found locked up, there was a locked box. Both the room and the box were broken open, and in the box were discovered 47 packages of cocaine, all sealed up in one envelope in all some 73 totals of cocaine was discovered. In a niche in the kothri was discovered a weighing scale with white powder upon it. In the baithak across the road, the staircase leading to the apartment was found locked, and the lock was broken. In the baithak a steel box was discovered, which was also locked. This was also broken open, and in it were discovered one packet of cocaine, a knife and some sealing wax. There were also in this baithak three weighing scales and some sheets of wax paper.

In our view the prosecution have satisfactorily proved that the dalan and the kothri were occupied by the two accused. But, even if we did not so find, it is at any rate admitted that the baithak was occupied by the accused. It is not suggested in this case that the cocaine had been planted by the police. Indeed, it was idle to allege that such a large quantity of cocaine could be planted. If the prosecution evidence is true that in a locked up steel box in the baithak there was a package of cocaine, on this evidence alone a conviction would be correct. The facts in this case are overwhelmingly against the accused. The only point which we have to consider is the one upon which the learned Sessions Judge acquitted the accused.

It seems to us quite clear that, where in a small common house occupied by two brothers belonging to a joint Hindu family, and running a common business, there are discovered not only an enormous quantity of cocaine but all the necessary weighing machines and packing material to deal with it, it is idle to suggest that both brothers would not know of the dealings in cocaine. One brother could not possibly carry on business of this size without the knowledge of the other living as they did in small confined rooms. This is not the case of a large house, with one brother's apartment separate from the other. We are satisfied that the evidence can point only to the fact that both brothers were implicated in this cocaine business. No other finding, in our view, is possible. We are, therefore, of opinion that this cocaine was in the possession of both of them within the meaning of S. 60 (a), United Provinces Excise Act. Having found this as a fact, the onus cast by the Act upon the brothers is to prove that they had satisfactory reason for being in possession of the cocaine. No private person could have a satisfactory reason for keeping in possession no less than 73 tolas of cocaine. Therefore, no attempt has been made to provide a satisfactory reason. No satisfactory reason being provided, the accused are both guilty of the offence with which they are charged. We set aside the acquittal order of the learned Sessions Judge. We convict the accused. The only question that remains is one of sentence.

It is to be noted that the learned Magistrate inflicted the maximum sentence upon the accused, namely, two years' rigorous imprisonment and a fine of one thousand rupees each. Although we agree that the crime is an extremely serious one, we think that the sentence is excessive. The accused have already been punished to the extent of Rs. 2,000 the value of the cocaine discovered in their possession. Cocaine to that value is in the possession of the Government, and that expenditure the accused will never recover. The evidence in this case is that the accused started this business only recently. We are also informed that one of the houses of the accused is mortgaged. There is at least no evidence that they have made any profit out of this business. Under all the circumstances of the case, we consider that a sentence of one year's rigorous imprisonment and a fine of one hundred rupees upon each of the accused will be sufficient to meet the ends of justice. We do not think that this is a case in which the accused should be bound over for good behaviour after they have served out their terms of imprisonment in this case.

Ah Phone—Applicant.

v.

Emperor—Opposite Party.

Criminal Revn. No. 151-B of 1929, Decided on 13th May 1929, against order of Sub-Divisional (Special Power) Magistrate, Henzada, in Criminal Misc. No. 35 of 1929.

Criminal Trial—Case ready for hearing—Adjournment should not be made simply for finding out evidence existence of which is entirely problematical.

Cases may arise where evidence is difficult to procure and numerous and lengthy adjournments must be granted, but when once the case is ready for hearing adjournment should not be made in order to search for evidence, the existence of which is entirely problematical.

The Court prosecutor came to the Court intending to base his case upon the evidence of the witnesses called. These witnesses for the prosecution denied that the accused committed the offence for which he was tried. There was no intimation that further evidence was forthcoming but the prosecutor informed the Court that he would file list of additional witnesses later.

Held: that adjournment should not be made in the case and accused should not be kept under shadow of a charge. [P 184 C 2]

Hay—for Applicant.

Judgment.—This case is referred by by the Sessions Judge, Henzada, with a view to setting aside an order made by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Henzada. The charge was under S. 64-A, Excise Act, for earning a livelihood by the sale of illicit seinye. On 9th February 1929, the Sub-Divisional Magistrate issued notice to "all prosecution witnesses to appear on 19th February."

On this day the accused Ah Phone appeared with his advocate; no less than four witnesses were examined for the prosecution. All these persons with one exception denied categorically that the accused was reputed to earn his livelihood by selling illicit seinye. A headman, however, did say that he had heard from some one whom he did not remember and whose accuracy he was not able to vouch for that the accused did earn his livelihood in the manner suggested.

According to the diary the Court prosecutor being in this unfortunate position intimated that he would file a further list of additional witnesses later. Thus it is evident that he came to Court intending to base his case upon the evidence of the four witnesses he called. He had already in effect closed his case. In order to allow a roving commission to obtain other evidence the Sub-Divisional Magistrate adjourned the case. This he certainly should not have done. There was no intimation that further evidence was forthcoming, and it is perfectly clear that as the witnesses relied on by the prosecution would not give the evidence expected of them an endeavour was made to put matters right by making a search in the hope of finding others who would prove more satisfactory and ordering the accused to attend whenever summoned.

It is true that at a later date three prosecution witnesses are said to have attended the Court, but this application had been filed meanwhile. The facts I have set out above are taken from the diary in the case, but the Sessions Judge was of opinion that the Magistrate on the conclusion of the hearing on 19th February said he would pass orders later in the day, but instead ordered the adjournment I have referred to; and moreover the Sessions Judge also thought that the Court prosecutor was not instructed at all. If so, of course the Magistrate is still more to blame for not disposing of the case once and for all. Cases should not be adjourned sine die for further evidence unless there is some real foundation for believing that such evidence in fact exists; and moreover accused persons should not be kept under the shadow of a charge in circumstances such as these. The action of the Magistrate was certainly oppressive.

There is no doubt of course that cases may arise where evidence is difficult to procure and numerous and lengthy adjournments must be granted, but when once the case is ready for hearing as this case apparently was, adjournments should not be made in order to search for evidence, the existence of which is entirely problematical. One further point must be referred to. I observe that the Magistrate has signed the certificate appearing upon the usual form provided for recording the statement of the accused. The certificate is of course that such statement was taken "in the presence and hearing etc. of the Magistrate." But no statement whatever is recorded. This absurd and irregular action of the Magistrate is on a par with the general conduct of the proceedings which I have already described. The order of 19th February 1929, is set aside and the proceedings instituted on 22nd January 1929 are quashed.

So far as proceedings before charge are concerned, copies of witnesses' statements made to the police should not be granted until the stage of cross examination is reached. If that stage is allowed to go by without application being made, an accused must wait until the witness is again about to be subjected to cross-examination before he can claim grant of a copy. Under S. 145, Evidence Act, until the occasion arises for putting the statement to the witness it cannot legally be used for any purpose whatsoever. K. N. Ganpathi for Public Prosecutor—for the Crown.

* Order.—The Revision Petition is presented by the Public Prosecutor against an order passed by the Sessions Judge of Salem in the following circumstances: In C. C. No. 103 of 1928 on the file of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Hosur, certain of the prosecution witnesses had been examined and cross-examined. Application was then made on behalf of the accused under S. 162, Criminal P. C., for copies of the statements which these witnesses had made to the police. The learned Sub-Divisional Magistrate refused the request on the ground that the proper occasion for making it had gone by. The learned Sessions Judge, however, pointed out that the accused would have a right of further cross-examination after the framing of a charge, and in view of this circumstance ruled that copies should be given.

whether an accused person can apply for, and be granted, such copies (where not already applied for and granted) at any time before the cross-examination after charge takes place, or whether he must wait until at least the witness is in the box and the cross-examination due to begin. Mr. Ganapathi for the learned Public Prosecutor contends that this latter condition must be satisfied.

So far as appears—and I have not had the advantage of hearing the other side—this precise point has not been dealt with in any reported case. In Peramaswami Rayudu, in re (1) Krishnan and Wallace, JJ. held that, since the purpose of furnishing the copy is to contradict the witness, the witness must already have made a statement which lays him open to contradiction. Accordingly, application can only be made, and a copy granted when the witness is under cross-examination. This, however, only lays down the procedure so far as the first cross-examination is concerned. The question was answered in very much the same way by a Calcutta Bench in Madari Sikdar v. Emperor (2). The learned Judges say not only that the witness must be under cross-examination but that

"the cross-examination must lay the foundation for the suggestion that the evidence given by the witness in Court is contradicted by his statement recorded under S. 161, Criminal P. C. and it is only then that the accused is entitled to ask the Judge to refer to the writing and grant him copies."

I find it not a little difficult to understand how a cross-examining counsel can found a suggestion of contradiction between two statements one of which he has not seen; and this part of the decision has been criticized by Rankin, C. J. in a later case (Babarali Sardar v. Emperor, A. I. R. 1929 Cal. 182). That case left it open whether the proper time to apply was when the witness appears in the box or when the cross-examination commences. In Emperor v. Usman (3), the later stage was deemed to be the appropriate one, having regard to the terms of S. 145, Evidence Act.

Accepting then, that so far as proceedings before charge are concerned, copies should not be granted until the stage of cross-examination is reached, I am inclined to the view that if that stage is allowed to go by without application being made, an accused must wait until the witness is again about to be subjected to cross-examination before he can claim grant of a copy. For, in the first place, until the witness so appears there is no certainty that he will be available for cross-examination, and therefore no certainty that the statement can be used for the only purpose for which the accused may possess it. But further, if the law requires that grant of the copy for use in the original cross-examination should be contingent upon that cross-examination being due to begin, the same principle would seem to apply to cross-examination after charge. Under S. 145, Evidence Act, if it is intended to contradict a witness by a writing :

"his attention must, before the writing can be proved, be called to those parts of it which are to be used for the purpose of contradicting him."

Until the occasion arises for putting the statement to the witness it cannot legally be used for any purpose whatever; and I see no reason why it should be placed in the accused's hands until that stage in the trial has been reached when he may so use it.

Whether adherence to this rule would give rise to inconvenience in practice is scarcely a relevant consideration if it is the correct rule. Equal inconvenience, if any, would attach to the application of the rule to the earlier cross-examination as to the later. Upon a request for a copy being made, the Court must necessarily afford the accused a reasonable opportunity for obtaining it before he is deprived of the opportunity to cross-examine upon it. But with a little contrivance that ought not to result in serious delay.

I allow the Criminal Revision Petition, set aside the orders of the Sessions Judge and the Sub-Divisional Magistrate and direct the Sub-Divisional Magistrate to proceed in accordance with the above observations.

Criminal Revn. Cases Nos. 643 to 646 of 1929, and *Cases Referred Nos. 31 to 34 of 1929, Decided on 4th October 1922 by Sess. Judge, Chittoor Division, D/- 6th August 1929.

(a) Criminal P. C., S. 361—Sub-Ss. (1) and (2) are not mutually exclusive—Translation of English evidence must also be made.

An accused person is often in a much better position than his pleader to follow the drift of the evidence and it is obvious that he ought to be kept informed of what is being said. Where therefore certain witnesses at the original trial give evidence in English, translation of such evidence should be made, for the first two paragraphs of S. 361 are not mutually exclusive: A. I. R. 1923, Cal. 27, Disc. from. [P 186C 2]

(b) Criminal P. C., S. 537—S. 537 is wide enough to cover any irregularity and retrial should not be ordered unless there is failure of justice.

Section 537 may be taken to cover any irregularity in the widest sense of that term, provided there has been no failure of justice. The appellate Court ought not to order a retrial in a case where provisions of S. 361 are overlooked without satisfying itself whether or no a failure of justice has been occasioned: *A. I. Public Prosecutor—for the Crown.

Order.—This is a reference from the learned Sessions Judge of Chittoor. In four appeals the Joint Magistrate of Chandragiri has ordered a retrial of the appellant because certain witnesses at the original trial gave evidence in English and their evidence was not translated to the appellant as required by S. 361, Civil P. C.

The Sub-Divisional Magistrate in my opinion was right in holding that the code lays down that such translation should be made and with all respect I do not agree with the ruling in Hari Narayan Chandra v. Emperor (1) that paras. 1 and 2, S. 361 are mutually exclusive. An accused person is often in a much better position than his pleader to follow the drift of the evidence and it is obvious that he ought to be kept informed of what is being said. But the Sub-Divisional Magistrate misdirects himself when he observes that the irregularity cannot be cured under S. 537,

(1) A. I. R. 1928 Cal. 27.

Criminal P. C. No doubt after Subramania Ayyar v. Emperor (2) an idea prevailed that S. 537, Criminal P. C., did not apply to the mandatory provisions of the code, although there is nothing in the section itself to give it such a restricted shape. But the ruling in Abdul Rahman v Emperor (3) has dispelled that idea, and S. 537 may be taken to cover any irregularity in the widest sense of that term, provided there has been no failure of justice. The Sub-Divisional Magistrate ought not to have ordered retrial in those cases without satisfying himself whether or no a failure of justice had been occasioned.

With these observations his order in all four cases is set aside, and he is directed to rehear the appeals.

Criminal Revn. No. 181 of 1929 and Criminal Revn. Potn. No. 184 of 1929, Decided on 6th September 1929, from judgment of Bench Magistrates, Olacamund, D/- 18th October 1928, in Summary Trial No. 610 of 1928.

(a) Criminal P. C., Ss. 265 and 367—Judgment and record must in all cases be signed by all members present—Words “presiding officer of Court” do not show that judgment may be signed only by chairman of Bench as they are compendious description of all classes of judicial officers—All members signing register containing sentence and thus agreeing in judgment—But judgment signed only by Chairman—Omission to sign by all is mere irregularity.

The intention of S. 265 is that by whomsoever the judgment and record may have been written, they shall be signed by all the members present. The words “presiding officer of the Court” do not afford any assistance in the construction of S. 265 and do not show that the judgment may be signed only by the Chairman of the Bench; they are no more than a compendious description of all classes of judicial officers, Magistrates and Judges who have to pronounce judgments. But the failure to comply with a mandatory provision of the Code is not necessarily an illegality and thus where all the members of the Bench sign the register, in which the sentences are embodied, and thus agree in the judgment, their omission to comply with the technical requirements of the law in the fact that the judgment is signed only by the chairman is a mere irregularity which occasions no failure of justice: A. I. R. 1928 Mad. 1172, Doubtful.

(b) Criminal P. C., S. 526 (8)—Rejection of application made under S. 526 (8) for adjournment on ground that it is made after trial was begun is contrary to S. 526 (8) and vitiates whole proceedings.

Where the accused in the course of a trial applies for an adjournment for the purpose of moving the High Court for transfer and the Court rejects the application on the ground that it had been made after the trial had begun, such rejection is contrary to the terms of S. 526 (1) and vitiates the whole proceedings.

V. L. Ethiraj—for Petitioner.

Public Prosecutor—for the Crown.

Order.—The petitioner has been convicted by a Bench of Magistrates. He comes up in revision on the ground that the judgment convicting him is illegal as it has been signed only by the Chairman of the Bench. We think that that is a perfectly good ground of objection. S. 265, Criminal P. C., is divided into three subsections. The first provides that records and judgments shall be written by the presiding officer in English or in the language of the Court or in his mother tongue. The second proscribes that, if authorised by the Local Government, a Bench may employ a clerk to prepare the record or judgment, which shall be signed by each member of the Bench present and taking part in the proceedings. The third directs that, if no such authority has been given, the record which presumably includes the judgment shall be prepared by a member of the Bench and signed “as aforesaid” and shall then be “the proper record.” The first subsection says nothing about signing the record or judgment, but deals merely with the language in which they shall be written. The intention, we think, is that by whomsoever the judgment and record may have been written they shall be signed by all the members present. We have been referred to a decision contra by Devadoss, J., in Rama Kottia v. Subba Rao (1), which is based on the wording of S. 367, Criminal P. C. With great respect we do not consider that that section affords any assistance in the construction of S. 265. The words “presiding officer of the Court" are no more than a compendious description of all classes of judicial officers, Magistrates and Judges, who have to pronounce judgments.

The Public Prosecutor invites our attention to S. 537, Criminal P. C. and argues that the omission should be treated as an irregularity which has occasioned no miscarriage of justice. It has been held that the failure to comply with a mandatory provision of the Code is not necessarily an illegality. In this case all the members of the Bench signed the register in which the sentence was embodied. They obviously agreed in the judgment and we do not think that their omission to comply with the technical requirement of the law as to the signing of it was anything more than an irregularity, which occasioned no failure of justice.

There is, however, a further and fatal objection. It is founded on that disastrous provision of law, sub-S. (8), S. 526, Criminal P. C., which is absolutely imperative in its terms. The petitioner in the course of the trial, applied for an adjournment for the purpose of moving the High Court for a transfer but the Bench rejected the application on the ground that it had been made after the trial had begun. That was, of course, no ground at all. Such an application can be made in the course of a trial and must, unfortunately, be granted. To refuse it, contrary to the terms of the section, is to deny the applicant an absolute right conferred on him by the statute and vitiates the whole proceedings. We set aside the conviction, but, as the case arises out of a family dispute, do not order a retrial.

A. Narasimha Ayyar for Public Prosecutor—for the Crown.

Order.—The six petitioners have presented this petition against their convictions under Ss. 147 and 328, I. P. C., and sentences of two months' rigorous imprisonment and a fine each of Rs. 25. The ground taken is with reference to the terms of the charges and a certain finding of fact of the learned Sub-Divisional Magistrate in appeal. The charge alleges that the petitioners :

"Were members of an unlawful assembly and in prosecution of the common object of such assembly, viz., in wreaking vengeance for the social dishonour done to you at the social functions of the day, proceeded to the house of P. W. 1 at Kovvali, arming yourselves with sticks, challenged P. W. 1 to come out, committed the offence of rioting and caused injuries on three of the prosecution witnesses."

The Stationary Sub-Magistrate found that the evidence established the various components of the charge, including the fact of social dishonour caused to the petitioners on the day previous to the occurrence. It appears that a woman had died and a dinner and other ceremonies were to take place. There was some unpleasantness over the invitation of the accused to this dinner and when, after the dinner a ceremony called "Suddulu" was performed they were not accorded due honours. The Sub-Divisional Magistrate, adverting to the circumstance that this affair of the "Suddulu" is not mentioned in the earlier reports, considers that it may have been a later development. He goes on to add that the evidence established ill feeling between the parties and that petty incidents due to it had taken place before the occurrence, among these incidents being the unpleasantness over the invitation to the dinner. It is at least doubtful, therefore, whether he does not find established some part of what the charge described as social dishonour done at the functions of the day.

The error that was clearly committed in drafting the charge was to insert as the common object of the accused what was in fact nothing other than a motive. Accordingly, the phrase :

"In wreaking vengeance for the social dishonour done to you at the social functions of the day " may be regarded as pure surplusage and in deciding what should have been the essential components of the charge may be omitted from consideration. We are left, therefore, with the allegation that the accused formed an unlawful assembly, went to the house with sticks, committed rioting and caused injuries to three witnesses. It is no doubt true that, as so revised, the charge does not explicitly recite a common object, which should properly have been to beat or injure these persons. The question is whether it was, therefore, so defective as to require that the accused should now be acquitted. Mr. Lakshmananna, for the petitioners, has showed me several decisions principally originating from the Calcutta High Court and one : In re., Loganathaiyar (1) (at p. 40) from Madras, the substance of them being that, where the common object recited in the charge is different from the common object found a charge of rioting cannot be sustained and the accused person should be acquitted : see for instance Rahimuddi v. Asgar Ali (2) and Paresh Nath Sircar v. Emperor (3). In the latter case, which was decided by three Judges ; Rampini, J., who wrote a dissenting judgment, was of opinion that the provisions of S. 537 cured the defect inasmuch as the accused could not have been in any way prejudiced. In a later Calcutta case Silajit Mahto v. Emperor (4) it was recognized that :

"It is not a general proposition of law that a conviction under S. 147, I. P. C., cannot be supported wherever the common object, as stated in the charge, is not precisely made out. The question in each case is whether the common object established agrees in essential particulars with that laid in the charge."

The same principle was given expression to in Babbon Sheikh v. Emperor (5). I have been referred to no authority for the view that failure to define expressly and accurately the common object with which an unlawful assembly acts is not such an error, omission or irregularity as may be cured by S. 537, Criminal P. C. I think, accordingly, that I should only be justified here in interfering in revision if it appears that the accused were prejudiced by the manner in which the charge was drafted. I am unable to discover any ground for this view. It must have been quite clear that the case they had to meet was, as set out in the charge, that, as an unlawful assembly, they went into the house and injured the inmates, and I think it was equally clear that the common object imputed to them was that which they put into effect. I see, therefore, no sufficient reason to revise the convictions and I dismiss the revision petition.

Criminal Revn. No. 429 of 1929 and Criminal Revn. Petn. No. 388 of 1929, Decided on 18th October 1929, from order of the Sess. Judge, North Arcot, in Criminal Appeal No. 19 of 1929.

Criminal P. C., S. 423—Prosecution broken in every respect—Appellate Court cannot send case for retrial—Appellate Court orders retrial for supplying formal defects.

The appellate Court can no doubt order a retrial under S. 423, Criminal P. C., but hardly where the prosecution has hopelessly broken down in every respect, so as to enable the prosecutor to substantiate some new charge against the accused, or to produce evidence which might easily have been produced at the first trial. It is rather for supplying formal defects that an appellate Court orders retrial: 42 Mad. 885, Rel. on. [P 190 C 1]

K.S. Jayarama Ayyar—for Petitioner.

Public Prosecutor—for the Crown.

Order.—The petitioner was tried under S. 15, Act 8 of 1899. It is a summons case but a charge was framed that petitioner had either sold 31 cans of dangerous petroleum to an unlicensed person, or had transported the same cans through that person without a pass, and therefore, he had committed an offence under S. 15 (2) of the Act.

The offence under S. 15 (c) is breaking any condition contained in a license under the Act. The lower Court found the accused guilty under S. 15 (c) of having sold 31 cans to an unlicensed person, which must mean that selling to an unlicensed person contravenes some condition of his license. The license was never proved, and, assuming that that could be a remediable omission, this Court has been unable to discover from the rules what condition in what license would have been contravened.

The prosecution, therefore, entirely failed to make out its case in the Court of trial.

The learned Sessions Judge came to the same conclusion, observing quite correctly that upon the essential points of the case there is neither evidence nor finding, and he could not uphold the conviction. He considered, however, that the proper course was to order a retrial. Here it must be found that the learned Judge exceeded his proper function. In certain circumstances he can no doubt order a retrial under S. 423, Criminal P. C., but hardly where the prosecution has hopelessly broken down in every respect, so as to enable the prosecutor to substantiate some new charge against the accused or to produce evidence which might easily have been produced at the first trial. It is rather for supplying formal defects that an appellate Court orders retrial: see Varadarajulu Naidu v. Emperor (1). The petition is allowed and the petitioner acquitted. The fine will be refunded if that has not been done. [Ed. The case adds nothing to 42 Mad. 885.]

Criminal Revn. No. 391 of 1929, and Criminal Revn. Petn. No. 354 of 1929, Decided on 16th October 1929 against judgment of Sess. Judge, Coimbatore Division, D/- 18th March 1929.

Criminal Trial — Counter cases should be tried by one Judge and judgment should be pronounced when both cases are finished.

Cases and counter cases should be tried in quick succession by the same Judge, who should not pronounce judgment till the hearing of both cases is finished. [P 190 C 2]

K. S. Jayarama Ayyar for M. Krishna Bharathi—for Petitioner.

The Public Prosecutor—for the Crown.

Order.—The petitioner has been sentenced to one year's rigorous imprisonment for stabbing a man in the neck with a spear, and six months rigorous imprisonment concurrently for hurting a man in S. C. No. 158 of 1928, Coimbatore. In S. C. No. 157 of 1928, he was the complainant, with the plea that certain of the prosecution witnesses in S. C. No. 158 had set upon him.

There is no clear law as regards the procedure in counter cases, a defect which the legislature ought to remedy.

It is a generally recognized rule that such cases should be tried in quick succession by the same Judge, who should not pronounce judgment till the hearing of both cases is finished.

This precludes the danger of an accused being convicted before his whole case is before the Court, and also prevents there being conflicting judgments upon similar facts. But at the same time the rule involves obvious difficulty. It seems to infringe the fundamental principle that the Court must not import any facts into a case which are not to be found upon the record. To take an illustration, suppose in the first of the cases the accused succeeds in showing that the prosecution has failed to prove its charge, and then in the second case the same accused as complainant goes into the witness box and breaks down in cross-examination so as to convince the Court that the truth lies with the other side. Can the Court be expected to dismiss this circumstance from its mind, and if it does not do so, what legal justification is there for importing it into the case already heard?

The only way in which such a procedure can be justified is by setting up a fiction that the case and the counter case are really one; and this fiction should be made a reality by statute. If a Court were empowered to link cases, as they link files in a secretariat there would also be the incidental advantage of a great saving of time. At present in each case the evidence of every witness must be fully recorded, and what P.W. 1 says for the prosecution in one case must all be written out again when he repeats it as D.W. 1 in the other case.

But whether there be a statutory enactment or not the point remains that for practical purposes a case and its counter are one, and it is this that makes these general observations particularly germane to the present case.

Because the lower Courts have entirely ignored this principle, the learned Assistant Sessions Judge, when the two cases were referred to him, changed their order for some reason which the record does not divulge, and proceeded to try 158 before 157. Then when 158 was concluded he wrote his judgment upon it and the Public Prosecutor had no other course open to him than to withdraw 157 which that judgment had irrevocably discredited.

The learned Sessions Judge on appeal finds that this procedure did not prejudice the accused:

"There was no restriction regarding the manner in which he might defend himself. There was nothing to prevent him from examining in his defence all his own prosecution witnesses."

That no doubt is true; but on the other hand there was nothing to compel him to do so; and when he expected all these prosecution witnesses to be examined in his own case, he was probably well advised not to subject them to an earlier cross-examination. Was the accused ever warned that if the Judge was against him on the first case, the second would be dropped? Presumably not, and if he was not warned, it can never be said that he was not prejudiced.

There was, as the learned Judge observes, no actual illegality in taking up the case first and disposing of it before the other was heard, but it offends against the accepted practice.

He adds:

"the public prosecutor having requested that this case might be tried first, the Assistant Sessions Judge was well within his rights in acceding."

The Assistant Sessions Judge should certainly have left a note explaining on what the request was based, and why he acceded. In its absence there arises a suspicion that the Public Prosecutor suggested that he would succeed in 158 and then it would not be necessary to try 157, and if so, the suggestion was scarcely proper.

As the accused was not given the opportunity which he expected would be given him of examining all his evidence, there must be a retrial.

There is one point upon which this Court offers no opinion, but which should be borne in mind. If it is found that the accused was going on duty (apparently the sentence was enhanced on some such consideration) what was he doing with a spear? The finding and sentence are cancelled and petitioner is ordered to be retried by the District Magistrate or any Magistrate subordinate to him having jurisdiction and no previous connexion with the case. He may remain on bail till the case is concluded.

Criminal P. C., S. 173—Form of charge sheet—Legality considered.

Section 173 does not require to be entered in charge sheet abstract of evidence given by each of the witnesses and the charge sheet prescribed by G. O. No. 3487 Law (General) dated 16th October 1928 and published in the Fort St. George Gazette dated 23rd October 1928 can be legally prescribed under S. 173 although it requires less details to be given than the form previously prescribed and is not illegal.

T. S. Venkataraman—for Petitioner.

Order.—The information given in the chargesheet in this case is not very full; but I cannot say that it does not comply with the provisions of S. 173, Criminal P. C. The contention that that section requires that an abstract of the evidence to be given by each of the witnesses mentioned should be entered in the report of charge sheet appears to me unsound. Nor is there in my opinion anything in the suggestion that this form of charge sheet, prescribed by G. O. No. 3487 Law (General), dated 16th October 1928, and published in the Fort St. George Gazette dated 23rd October 1928, could not legally be prescribed under S. 173, Criminal P. C., because it requires less details to be given than were required in the form previously prescribed. This petition is dismissed.

(a) Criminal P. C., S. 476—Any Court seized of transferred case can complain.

(b) Criminal P. C., S. 476—Forging document—Document filed—Presumption is that it was one given to pleader.

In a prosecution under S. 476 for filing a forged document, there is a fair presumption that the document filed was the one given to pleader. [P 192 C 2]

V. L. Ethiraj and N. Somasundaram—for Petitioner.

The Public Prosecutor—for the Crown.

Judgment.—Petitioner has been sentenced to three years' rigorous imprisonment by the Assistant Sessions Judge, Guntur, under Ss. 471 and 467, I. P. C. for filing a forged receipt in a suit on a promissory note in which he was defendant.

Two points are taken in revision. Firstly, that if a case is transferred only the Court which originally received the forged document can complain under S. 476 Criminal P. C. It is a continuing offence and any Court seized of the case can complain.

Secondly, that the learned Sessions Judge misdirected himself when he observed that the burden of proof did not lie upon the prosecution to prove that the receipt filed by the pleader was the receipt given to the pleader by the accused. The observation is not happily worded because the burden is on the prosecution to make out its case. It might have been said rather, that there is a fair presumption that the document given to a pleader is the document filed, and the accused should offer some rebuttal. I do not find that the learned Judge failed to regard the case from this aspect, or that the petitioner has been prejudiced. That ends the matter so far as revision is concerned, but there has been discussion of the merits, and I may add that on the merits I agree with the lower Courts.

The petitioner's defence is that a forged receipt was substituted for a genuine receipt by his enemies. He has done little to show that there was a genuine receipt. In the suit he cited no evidence to prove it, and gave up his plea of discharge when the plaintiff took an oath. He never summoned the attester who might corroborate the writer.

His enemies are not likely to have elaborated a plot merely to defeat his plea of discharge to the amount of Rs. 150 and the chances of getting him prosecuted for perjury were remote. If the suit had come on for trial, and he had at once said that the receipt was not the receipt he gave his vakil, the Court would not have prosecuted him. And anyone who had taken the trouble to arrange this trap, would have taken care to spring it in the suit itself. If the suit were settled without reference to the document there was great risk of the Court declining to move in the matter of a document which had not really affected the issue.

If the plaintiff himself was in the plot he certainly would not have taken an oath instead of putting the petitioner to the proof of his alleged discharge. And if the petitioner genuinely believed that he held the plaintiff's thumb-marked receipt he would never have consented to abide by an oath and lose his money. As for the futility of the fabrication, people for whom litigation is a tissue of falsehood lose all sense of truth and cannot distinguish between a good and a bad lie; just as some are colour blind they become truth blind. The petition is dismissed.

Privy Council Appeal No. 114 of 1929.

* * Privy Council—Criminal Trial—No substantial injustice—No departure from requirements of natural justice—Privy Council does not interfere—It is not Court of Criminal appeal.

Lordships of the Privy Council do not act in criminal matters as a Court of Criminal Appeal and are not concerned to regulate procedure of Courts in India or to criticise what is mere matter of procedure and in the complete absence of any substantial injustice or in the complete absence of anything that outrages what is due to natural justice in criminal cases Privy Council does not interfere. [P 193 C 1,2]

E. C. Morey—for Appellant.A. M. Dunne and W. Wallach—for the Crown.

Viscount Sumner—As this is a capital case, and as the conviction took place so long ago as February last, their Lordships* think it best to give their reasons for the conclusion at which they have arrived, without taking further time to put them into writing.

The appellant's conviction and sentence having been confirmed on appeal, he applied to their Lordships last July for special leave to appeal. His petition was allowed, his point being in substance that he had been convicted without having had a fair opportunity of knowing what the charge was that he had to meet, and particularly of raising defences other than the one raised, or of relying on any circumstances which would have reduced the offence to a minor one. Under those circumstances their Lordships did what they rarely have occasion to do, and advised His Majesty in Council to grant special leave ex abundanti cautela, so that it might be discussed at length whether he had in truth been deprived of so important an opportunity.

Mr. Morey has put the case before their Lordships, as he always does, with great clearness and fairness. He complains that the charge recorded was that Atta Khan and a number of others, seven in all, were members of an unlawful assembly armed with deadly weapons and that in prosecution of a common object and in furtherance of a common intention, one of the members, Atta Mohammad, caused the death of Gulam Muhammad, and all were thereby, under Ss. 149 and 34, I. P. C., guilty of causing the death of Gulam Muhammad and thereby committed an offence punishable under Ss. 302, 149, 148 and 34, I. P. C. S. 34 was introduced by way of amendment or addition afterwards. The phraseology of the charge is common, but it is true that of these sections which are mentioned one after another, some refer to the substance of the offence, and others, or one, at any rate, of them, to the punishment of the offence.

As the result of the trial, the appellant alone was found guilty, but he was found guilty of being the intentional cause of the death of Ghulam Muhammad. He appealed, and admittedly his notice of appeal contained no suggestion whatever of the case that is now made on his behalf. He had pleaded an alibi at the trial, and in his grounds of appeal he embodied various criticisms upon the weight of the evidence, and then he added that an assault under these conditions would amount to private defence and that the offence does not amount to murder and that the sentence called for should have been much lighter.

He appeared by an advocate on the appeal and had been legally defended at the trial, and it is as clear as possible that, with full knowledge of the course which the trial had taken, neither the appellant himself nor those who represented him had any sense whatever of the injustice that is now urged or any idea of his having been deprived of the opportunity of knowing the charge on which he was tried or of raising defences appropriate to that charge. The argument is that because there was no specific mention of S. 300, I. P. C., as the section under which he was being proceeded against and because he was charged as a member of an unlawful assembly, with acting with a common object and in furtherance of a common intention, he being the person who struck the blow the acquittal of all the other persons put an end to that charge, and the possibility that he might be nevertheless convicted under S. 300 was one that had never been explained to him properly or at all, and one, which it must be taken did him the serious injustice of misleading him as to his true position and depriving him of what might have been a successful defence.

The proceedings on the appeal, however, make it quite clear that in fact he was deprived of no proper opportunity, that the nature of the charge was quite sufficiently known to him and to the advocate who appeared for him, and that he was unconscious of having suffered any wrong of that kind until the appeal fell into able hands in this country.

It is well to add that there has been no complaint that he was not separately indicted, and no reliance has been placed on S. 233, Criminal P. C., the case has been solely put upon departure from statutory provisions as to stating and explaining the particular charge, which has been proceeded with.

Under these circumstances their Lordships think it quite plain that there has been no departure from the requirements of natural justice, and that there has been a trial which in all substance was fair and which has given the prisoner every real opportunity that he required to understand the charge and make his defence.

The practice of their Lordships' Board is so well settled with regard to such a case that it is unnecessary to cite authorities or to re-state principles. The most that is said here is that certain statutory requirements of procedure were not satisfied, and as their Lordships have so often had occasion to say India is provided by law with a complete and carefully devised Criminal Procedure Code applicable to the Courts of Criminal review, which have considered this case and the functions of which have been discharged. Their Lordships, in advising His Majesty, do not act in criminal matters as a Court of criminal appeal, and are not concerned to regulate procedure of Courts in India or to criticize what is mere matter of procedure. Accordingly, their Lordships find it unnecessary to discuss the points which have been raised as to the propriety of such a form of indictment as this, as the utility and extent of explanations such as the Code refers to and as to the validity of such sections as S. 225 as an answer to any irregularity that there may have been. They do not desire it to be understood that they think that the contentions raised on behalf of the appellant on those points could be sustained. No opinion was expressed in the Court below as regards that and the point was never considered there. Their Lordships have, therefore, nothing to say upon these questions except that they are questions for the Indian Courts in the exercise of their criminal jurisdiction.

In the complete absence of any substantial injustice, in the complete absence of anything that outrages what is due to natural justice in criminal cases, their Lordships find it impossible to advise His Majesty to interfere. Their Lordships, therefore, will humbly advise His Majesty that for these reasons this appeal must be dismissed.

Criminal Revn. No. 701 of 1929, Decided on 6th December 1929.

Criminal P. C., S. 231—No duty on Court to ask accused if he wishes to recall or re-examine any witness.

There is no duty laid on the Court under S. 231 to ask the accused if he wishes to recall or resubmit prosecution or defence witnesses and so there is no breach of any provisions in S. 231 if the Court does not so enquire. It is essential that the accused should ask for permission. A. I. R. 1924 All. 665, Ref. [P 195 O 1]

Saila Nat'l Mukerji—for Applicants.

M. Waliullah—for the Crown.

A. Sanyal—for Opposite Party.

Judgment.—The plea is raised for a fresh trial, because it is alleged that after the trial Court altered the conviction from S. 323 to S. 325, I. P. C., the applicants were not allowed to recall or resubmit prosecution and defence witnesses and examine them with reference to the alteration of the charge and were further not allowed to call more witnesses whom the Court may think material. The reader has gone through the record and has not discovered any application of the applicants to be permitted to call witnesses.

There is no affidavit by any legal practitioner appearing in the trial Court that an oral request was made to recall previous witnesses or to summon new ones. There has, therefore, been in my opinion no breach of the provisions of S. 231. It would be instructive to compare those provisions with the provisions of S. 256 where duty is laid on the Court to ask the accused to state at a particular period of the trial whether he wishes to cross-examine any and, if so, which of the witnesses for the prosecution whose evidence has been taken. No such duty is laid on the Court under the provisions of S. 231, and so to make those provisions applicable there must be some evidence that the Court refused the request of the complainant or the accused to recall or summon witnesses. Reference was made to the case of Mohan Lal v. Emperor (1). In that case also the learned Judge has not stated that any duty lay on the Court to enquire of the accused whether they would recall previous witnesses or summon new ones.

Most of the injuries were simple, and the grievous hurt was not of any moment. It further appears that the complainant tried to make up a false charge of theft against the applicants. Taking these facts into consideration I reduce the substantive sentence of six months to two months, otherwise the application is dismissed. The applicants shall surrender to undergo the balance of their sentence. The fine and imprisonment in default are maintained.

Louis Dias—Accused.

Criminal Reference No. 81 of 1929,
Decided on 9th October 1929.

(a) Penal Code, S. 504—S. 504 applies also to insulting words written in letter.

There is nothing in S. 504 which confines the insult to spoken words and would not cover words written in a letter. [P 195 C 2]

(b) Penal Code, S. 504—Provocation to cause other offence than breach of peace also comes within S. 504.

A person is within the ambit of S. 504 not only if the provocation offered by him is of such a character as to cause the person provoked to commit a breach of peace but even if it is of such a nature as to cause him to commit any other offence: A. I. R. 1927 Lah. 129, Foll.; The Queen v. Adams, (1888) 22 Q. B. D. 66, Rel. on; 4 Bom. L. R. 78, Ref. [P 195 C 2]

(c) Penal Code, S. 504—Intention to cause breach must be present—Person insulted is reduced to state of abject terror making breach of peace improbable is immaterial.

Mere abuse unaccompanied by an intention to cause a breach of the peace or knowledge that a breach of the peace is likely does not come within S. 504. On the other hand an insult which under ordinary circumstances would be likely to provoke the person insulted to cause a breach of the peace is within the provisions of the section although the person insulted may have been reduced to a state of abject terror so as to render improbable that he would commit a breach of the peace: 39 Mad. 531 and 10 Mad. 353, Rel. on. [P 196 C 1]

Olieveria and L. Souza—for Complainant.

M. M. Bhesania and K. N. Koyajee—for Accused.

Patkar, J.—In this case the Presidency Magistrate, 4th Court, has submitted under S. 432, Criminal P. C., for the opinion of this Court a question of law arising in a case pending before him. The question submitted by him is as follows:

“Do abusive words (granting that they are insulting) conveyed in a letter sent by post constitute an offence under S. 504, I. P. C. so as to make the writer of that letter liable for the intentional insult and thereby giving provocation to the receiver of that letter, intending or knowing it to be likely that such provocation will cause him to break the public peace or to commit any other offence?”

It is conceded on both sides that the letter in the present case was not sent by post but was sent by a messenger. Under S. 504 the ingredients of the offence are: (1) intentional insult, (2) provocation to any person, and (3) an intention or knowledge that such provocation will cause the person insulted to break the public peace or commit any other offence. There is nothing in the section which confines the insult to spoken words and would not cover words written in a letter.

We agree with the view of Sir Shadi Lal, C. J., of the Lahore High Court, in Gul Muhammad v. Pir Akbar Ali (1), that a person is within the ambit of S. 504, I. P. C., not only if the provocation offered by him is of such a character as to cause the person provoked to commit a breach of peace but even if it is of such a nature as to cause him to commit any other offence. In that case the insult or the abuse was conveyed by a letter and was not delivered face to face. Similarly, in the case of The Queen v. Adams (2), where the accused was tried and convicted on an indictment charging him with having unlawfully and maliciously written and published to a young woman of virtuous and modest character a defamatory letter concerning her character for virtue and modesty it was held that the conviction could be sustained, as under those circumstances, the defamatory letter might reasonably tend to provoke a breach of the peace. According to the English law defamatory matter even if published only to the person defamed will support an indictment if it might reasonably and probably tend to provoke a breach of the peace: see Halsbury's Laws of England, Vol. 18, para. 1216, p. 656.

In the present case the letter was sent by a messenger and it is not beyond the range of possibility that the complainant might lose his temper and break the public peace, or assault the messenger and commit an offence. The decision in the case of King Emperor v. Chunibhai (3), is not inconsistent with this view.

Mere abuse unaccompanied by an intention to cause a breach of the peace or knowledge that a breach of the peace is likely does not come within S. 504: see Re Kuppusami Aiyar (4). On the other hand an insult which under ordinary circumstances would be likely to provoke the person insulted to cause a breach of the peace is within the provisions of the section although the person insulted may have been reduced to a state of abject terror so as to render improbable that he would commit a breach of the peace: see Empress v. Jogayya (5). The insult again may be of such a character that a person of ordinary temperament would not complain of the abuse and the abuse might come within the terms of S. 95, I. P. C.

It is, therefore, for the Magistrate to consider whether, under the circumstances of the present case, the insult which was conveyed to the complainant by the written letter is of such a character as to come within the ambit of S. 504. It is not possible to give a categorical answer to the question submitted to us. With this expression of opinion we will return the papers to the Magistrate.

Criminal Appeal No. 141 of 1929, Decided on 9th August 1929.

(a) Evidence Act, S. 32 (1)—Dying declaration can be proved by examining person recording it or person who heard its being made—It must be taken as a whole and portion only cannot be allowed.

The method of proving the dying declaration and the method usually adopted is to examine the person who recorded the statement as to what the deceased said or to examine some person or persons who were present at the time and heard the statement being made; and the statement if admissible must either go in as a whole or not at all and if otherwise no portion of it should be allowed to go in evidence.

(b) Criminal P. C., S. 299 — Although Judge be of opinion that witness ought not to be believed for giving different version, provided deposition in lower Court is put in under S. 288, jury is at liberty to believe evidence in lower Court.

Where deposition of witness for prosecution in preliminary enquiry under Chap. 18, is put in evidence under S. 288, Criminal P. C., by the defence, it is open to jury to believe the evidence if they so wished although the Judge may be of opinion that the witness having given different version in the lower Court ought not to be believed.

(c) Evidence Act, S. 33—Dying declaration made to Sub-Inspector—Sub-Inspector examined under S. 208, Criminal P. C., but not cross-examined — Sub-Inspector dying before Sessions Trial — Deposition can be admitted in evidence.

Where the deceased makes his dying declaration as to the cause of his death to a Sub-Inspector of Police just before death, and the Sub-Inspector is examined under S. 208 but not cross-examined by defence, if the Sub-Inspector dies before Sessions trial, his deposition is admissible under S. 33 in the Sessions trial.

under Ss. 147 and 304 read with S. 149, I. P. C. and sentenced to one year's rigorous imprisonment and six years' rigorous imprisonment respectively, the sentences being directed to run concurrently. The appellants Nos. 2, 3, 4, 5 and 9 have also been convicted under S. 323, I. P. C. and sentenced to six months' rigorous imprisonment.

The case for the prosecution was that at about 11 p. m. on the night of 19th April last one Mayan Khan, who died subsequently as the result of certain injuries received, hearing a noise in his cowshed went outside, that he was thereupon seized by a number of people who dragged him along and trampled upon him and beat him severely. His brother Ayen Khan who went to his aid is also alleged to have been beaten. Several of Mayan's ribs were broken and he died on the following day. At about midnight he had been brought to the house of one Jayan Pramanik. Information of the occurrence was lodged at the thana about a mile distant at 5 a. m. next morning. In the course of the investigation which followed a dying declaration was made by Mayan to the Sub-Inspector of Police. The Sub-Inspector was examined in the Committing Court to prove this, but he died before the Sessions trial. The prosecution sought to put in the deposition of the Sub-Inspector under S. 33, Evidence Act. The learned Sessions Judge held that it could not be admitted in evidence on the ground that no specific opportunity had been given to cross-examine the witness. While, however, disallowing the prayer to put in the deposition the learned Judge directed that portions of the statement itself as recorded by the Sub-Inspector, in which the names of Mayan Khan's assailants are mentioned, might go in on the ground that some of the witnesses had deposed to those statements as having been made by Mayan Khan in their presence to the Sub-Inspector. These facts are referred to because one of the main points in the appeal is connected with this dying declaration.

The accused all pleaded not guilty to the charges but do not appear to have set up any very definite defence. Some of them pleaded enmity and the accused Rahimuddi pleaded an alibi.

On behalf of the appellants objections have been taken to the learned Sessions Judge's charge upon several grounds. The ground upon which most stress was laid was that the learned Judge having rejected the dying declaration as inadmissible misdirected the jury by placing before them certain portions thereof relating to the names of the accused. Now the dying declaration could not as such be admitted in evidence. The method of proving such a statement, and the method, which so far as my experience goes as usually adopted, is to examine the person who recorded the statement as to what the deceased said, or to examine some person or persons who were present at the time and heard the statement being made. In this view of the matter the learned Sessions Judge erred in my opinion in admitting portions of the statement in evidence. It appears that those portions were exhibited, as the order of 10th January 1929 shows. In my judgment too the statement itself as recorded must either go in as a whole or not at all. If it is inadmissible, no portion of it should be allowed to go in evidence.

At the same time the learned Judge in my opinion was in error in holding that the deposition of the Police Sub-Inspector, which was recorded in the committing Court, could not be admitted in evidence, the ground given by him for so holding being that specific opportunity had not been given to the defence to cross-examine the witness. S. 33, Evidence Act, provides inter alia that the adverse party must have had the right and opportunity to cross-examine. There can be no doubt that the defence had that right under S. 208 (2), Criminal P. C., and I do not see how it can be said that they had not the opportunity. If they wished to exercise their right, it seems to me that it was incumbent upon them to claim it. The fact that they did not do so can only give rise to the inference that they did not wish to cross-examine in that Court, and that they reserved the cross-examination for the Sessions Court. The adoption of that course necessarily involves some risk, though it is not a risk which would ordinarily be deemed to be a serious one.

In my judgment it is a case for the application of the maxim "omnia prae-sumuntur rite esse acta." It can fairly be assumed that there was opportunity to cross-examine the witness if the accused had chosen to exercise their right. The assumption it seems to me is that it existed and not the contrary. Now if the deposition had been admitted, as I hold it should have been, it is clear that it would have been to the disadvantage of the accused, because in that case the whole statement would have gone in instead of only a portion. To that extent the advantage is with the accused. But it is objected in this connexion that, if the whole deposition had been admitted, the defence would have been able to cross-examine some of the witnesses, who have deposed concerning it, with a view to showing what really took place and discrediting the statement as recorded, as for example by proving that leading questions were put by the Sub-Inspector. We find, however, that as the result of the admission of a part of the dying declaration some of the witnesses were in fact cross-examined with the above object in view, and, that being so, there does not seem to be much substance in this objection, or in the objections generally with regard to the dying declaration.

The next point which was argued on behalf of the appellants was that the learned Judge misdirected the jury in telling them that they were to discard the evidence of certain prosecution witnesses as their story was inconsistent with the prosecution version, and the Public Prosecutor had thought fit to declare them hostile; whereas he ought to have made it clear to the jury that, although the prosecution was not entitled to rely on any part of the testimony of those witnesses, it was open to the jury to rely on their evidence in so far as it contradicted, or was inconsistent with the prosecution case and supported the defence version. If this ground and especially the first part of it had been substantiated, we should undoubtedly hold that there had been misdirection. The learned Judge does not, however, appear to have given any such direction. He certainly has not put it in the form in which it has been stated in ground 2 of the memorandum of appeal. The only passage in the charge which appears to support the contention on this point is at p. 10 thereof where this passage occurs:

"This witness (the Judge is here referring to P. W. 2 Kafiluddin) should be wholly disbelieved for in the lower Court he did not give such a version."

That direction was apparently meant to be in favour of the defence, for it seems to amount to this that the Judge told the jury that this witness having given two different versions ought not to be believed. In substance that appears to be a proper direction. It is complained, however, that the Judge omitted to tell the jury that it was open to them to believe the evidence which this witness had given in the committing Court. The deposition of this witness was, however, put in by the defence under S. 288, Criminal P. C., and it was, therefore, evidence in the case and it was open to the jury to believe that evidence if they so wished.

The next ground of objection, is that the learned Judge omitted to draw the attention of the jury to the delay in lodging the first information. The facts in this connexion are that the occurrence took place at 11 o'clock at night and the information was lodged at the thana one mile distant at 5 a. m., the following morning. It cannot be said that there was any inordinate delay so as to impose on the Judge the duty of drawing the particular attention of the jury to it.

It was next argued that the Judge should have drawn the attention of the jury to certain facts referred to in ground 4 of the petition of appeal. This relates to details and it is obviously not possible for a Judge to refer to every fact in this charge. We do not think that the omission to refer to the particular matters mentioned in this ground can be held to amount to misdirection.

Grounds 6, 7 and 8 in the memorandum of appeal were not pressed by the learned advocate for the appellants in view of the explanation which has been submitted by the Sessions Judge, and we think that the learned advocate in the circumstances very properly adopted this course. At the same time the legal advisers of the appellants cannot be altogether excused for making these somewhat reckless allegations, in particular the allegation contained in ground 6, which is to the effect that the Judge misdirected the jury in telling them that, if there had been any reasonable doubt about the guilt of the accused, they would not have been committed to the Court of Sessions. It is not in the least likely that the learned Judge would have given any such direction in his charge, and he has categorically denied that he did so, and we accept his statement. The importance of the matter is this that appeals are sometimes admitted on such statements in the grounds of appeal, and grounds of appeal ought to be carefully drawn up and with a due sense of responsibility.

Grounds 19, 21 and 22 were also briefly referred to, but were not seriously pressed, and we do not think that there is anything in them which would amount to misdirection.

In the result all the grounds which have been urged fail, the appeal is dismissed and the convictions and sentences are confirmed.

Emperor—Opposite Party.

Criminal Revn. No. 375 of 1929 and Criminal Revn. Petn. No. 339 of 1929 Decided on 30th October 1929.

Penal Code, S. 171 (f)—Mens rea is necessary ingredient in offence under S. 171 (f).

Mens rea is an ingredient in the offence under S. 171 (f) and where the corrupt intention is absent, the offence of personation cannot be committed: The Stepaney Case, 4 O. M. & H. 34, Foll. [P 200 C 1]

Nugent Grant, V. Satyanarayan—for Petitioner.

K. N. Ganapathi—for the Crown.

Beasley, C. J.—The petitioner was convicted by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Rajahmundry and sentenced under S. 171 (f), I. P. C., to a fine of Rs. 50 and in default to suffer simple imprisonment for a month.

The offence of which he was convicted was that of personation at an election. Briefly, the facts of the case are that on 16th April 1928 there was an election to fill vacancies of the Peddapur Taluq Board. There were two vacant seats for Peddapur firka and eight candidates and eight polling stations. The petitioner's name was by mistake on the roll of two different villages, namely Geddanapalli and Bhupalapatam. The petitioner voted once in the morning in the polling station for Geddanapalli and in the afternoon for a second time in the polling station for Bhupalapatam.

The offence of personation at elections is defined in S. 171-D., I. P. C., as follows :

"Whoever at an election applies for a voting paper or votes in the name of any other person whether living or dead, or in a fictitious name or who having voted once at such election applies at the same election for a voting paper in his own name ; and whoever abets, procures or attempts to procure the voting by any person in any such way commits the offence of personation at an election."

In the Sub-Divisional Magistrate's Court evidence was given in support of the complaint against the petitioner by certain witnesses proving that the accused voted twice which is not disputed by the petitioner and that he did so although this conduct was objected to by P. Ws. 1 and 2. The petitioner filed a written statement denying the offence. He, however, admitted that he voted a second time but stated that he had done so in the bona fide belief that he could do so as his name was included in two lists. He also disputed the evidence of the prosecution witnesses as to the objection raised by them at the time of his second voting. Two witnesses were called by the petitioner who were the Polling Officers and they deposed that no objection, oral or in writing, was raised at any time to the petitioner voting on the second occasion. On behalf of the petitioner three contentions were raised, namely: (1) that the accused did not specifically apply for the ballot paper and that the second voting was not an offence in the strict letter of the section (2) that the accused had a right to vote a second time as his name appeared twice in two polling areas in the voters' list and (3) that mens rea is an ingredient in this offence and no mens rea was proved. The Sub-Divisional Magistrate decided all the three points against the petitioner and, since, no argument was addressed to us by Mr. Grant on behalf of the petitioner that his findings on the first two points are wrong we have only to consider his finding on the third point, namely, whether mens rea is an essential ingredient in this offence. The Sub-Divisional Magistrate thought that all that it was necessary to prove was the fact that the petitioner had voted twice and that his motive for doing so, whether corrupt or otherwise, was immaterial. He, therefore, did not come to any finding as to the petitioner's motive or guilty knowledge. He thinks that however genuine the belief of a person may be that he is entitled to vote twice if his name appears twice upon the electoral roll, he none the less commits an offence under S. 171-D, I. P. C. We have been referred by Mr Grant to the corresponding S. 171-D, I. P. C. in the English Act, namely the Ballot Act (35 and 36 Vic. Ch. 33). S. 24, of that Act is S. 171-D, I. P. C. We have compared the two sections and they are clearly the same. That being so, we were referred to an English decision on that section reported in the Stepney case (1). There, in discussing the offence of personation, Deman, J., stated on p. 46 as follows :

"It is thoroughly understood election law that, unless there be corruption, and a bad mind and intention in personating, it is not an offence. If it is done under an honest belief that the man is properly there for the purpose of voting, it is held in these cases and in other cases analogous that no offence has been committed. . . . They are enactments which can be really only applicable to an intentionally bad act, because if a man is guilty at all he is guilty of felony, and may be imprisoned as a felon for a considerable time. To suppose that the legislature ever intended to enact that a man, who with perfect honesty but from a mere blunder as to his rights gives a vote, and then (believing that he has a right to do so), gives a second vote, he being on the register, on the same day, is to be deemed guilty of felony, is to impute an intention to the legislature which is absurd though if it had said so in absolutely plain words, we must have carried it out. I do not think that that is the intention of the Act ; I think there is still to be added to the offence of personation a corrupt intention, and where the corrupt intention is absent, the offence of personation cannot have been committed."

The facts in that case were that a man's name had been wrongly included in the register of two divisions. He voted twice and it was admitted that he was ignorant of the law and had acted conscientiously by mistake, that he had no corrupt intention and that he had not been corruptly influenced.

It was argued by the Public Prosecutor that there is no such thing as mens rea in India, that, unless an accused person can bring himself within any of the exceptions in the Indian Penal Code, the offence is committed as soon as the acts set out in the section in the code which defines the offence have been committed that it is not stated in S. 171-D that the personation must be with a corrupt or any other intention and that therefore intention is immaterial. It was contended that the petitioner's plea amounts to nothing more than the plea that he was ignorant of the law which plea could be of no avail to him. But we find ourselves quite unable to agree with that argument. It does not follow that the petitioner's plea was merely one that he was ignorant of the law. His plea apparently is that as his name was twice upon the electoral roll, he believed by a mistake of fact, that he was on that account entitled to vote twice. His plea is not that he thought that a voter could vote more than once at an election. We have no doubt whatever that the Sub-Divisional Magistrate was wrong in not applying his mind to that aspect of the case. He should have seen, whether, upon the evidence, the petitioner was able to bring himself within any of the exceptions in the Indian Penal Code. This he has not done. Quite apart from this, we are unable to say that the intention of an offender in the commission of this crime is any different in India to what it is in England.

There can be no question whatever that the legislature in introducing the new chapter, Ch. 9 (a), into the code exactly copied the English statute law with regard to offences relating to elections and we see no reason for saying that, whereas in England the corrupt intention of the voter is to be considered here it is immaterial. We, therefore, set aside the conviction of the petitioner, order the fine inflicted upon him to be refunded and direct that this complaint be reheard by the District Magistrate, Rajahmundry or some other Magistrate whom he may direct other than this Sub-Divisional Magistrate. We ourselves are not prepared to decide this matter on the evidence and we think it is essential that the case should be decided by the Court before which the evidence is presented.

Qutub Din—Respondent.

Criminal Revn. No. 1066 of 1929, Decided on 18th October 1929, reported by Sess. Judge, Rawalpindi, on 24th June 1929.

Criminal P. C., S. 488—Civil litigation is no bar to giving effect to order awarding maintenance.

The bare fact that civil litigation is pending between the parties is no reason for not giving effect to an order awarding maintenance under S. 488 so long as it is in force. [P 201 C 1]

Ghulam Mohyuddin—for Respondent.

Facts.—The Magistrate refused to carry out execution for arrears of maintenance on the ground that the maintenance had been fixed by compromise. From the file it appears that there was never any compromise. The respondent Mirza Qutab Din put in a statement dated 31st May 1923, in which he stated that he was prepared to pay maintenance of his daughter, and left the amount to be settled by the Court. On 6th June 1923, apparently some discussion took place before the Magistrate, who wrote, "respondent's counsel has put in statement by respondent, who states that he is willing to pay maintenance for the child. Both parties agree to pay Rs. 22-8-0 per month."

Reference.—Respondent to pay 22-8-0 per month to Mt. Nur Jahan, mother of the infant, from 1st June 1923 in advance." This is clearly no compromise, and the Magistrate, First Class was undoubtedly wrong in refusing to execute the warrant. Counsel states that civil litigation is pending, but that is no reason whatever for not giving effect to the order awarding maintenance which is still in force. I therefore forward the case to the High Court with a recommendation that the order be quashed.

Order.—For the reasons recorded by learned Sessions Judge I quash the order of the Magistrate and direct him to enforce the order granting maintenance to Mt. Mahbub Sultan.

Criminal Revn. No. 23-B of 1929, Decided on 12th June 1929, against decision of Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Basim, in Criminal Appeal No. 61 of 1928.

Criminal P. C., S. 12 — Honorary Magistrate appointed for term of years—No order cancelling appointment—His powers do not cease even after expiry of term.

Where an Honorary Magistrate has been appointed in the Central Provinces for a term of years his jurisdiction to decide cases must be considered to continue unless there is an order cancelling such appointment. [P 202 C 1]

V. N. Herlekar—for Applicant.

S. S. Deshpande and G. P. Dick — for Opposite Party.

Order.—In a trial held by a Bench of Honorary Magistrates, Basim, the applicant Tukaram was ordered, under S. 22, Cattle Trespass Act, to pay to the complainant Dagdu Rs. 15 as compensation by way of fine and Rs. 8-8-0 by way of expenses for illegal seizure of six head of cattle belonging to the complainant and impounding the same in the cattle pound. The Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Basim to whom an appeal was preferred upheld the above order of the Bench of Magistrates and dismissed the appeal. The applicant has therefore filed an application for revision to this Court on several grounds the first of which is reproduced below :

"That Mr. S. K. Rahim was appointed an Honorary Magistrate by virtue of notification No. 1653-889V appearing in the C. P. Gazette dated 4th August 1923 on p. 937 for five years only and the Quarterly Civil List for 1st July 1924 also shows the date of expiry of the term of his office as 29th July 1928. Thus he had ceased to be a Magistrate on 6th October 1928 when the judgment was delivered by the Bench. It is thus illegal and passed without jurisdiction."

In reply to the rule calling upon the District Magistrate to show cause against the application that learned officer referring to the above ground merely stated that the judgment of the trying Magistrates was not vitiated because :

"The Honorary Magistrates under standing orders continue to exercise powers so long as they are not cancelled or withdrawn."

Since the learned District Magistrate had not in his reply given any reference to the standing orders I had to call upon the Government Advocate to appear, and support the view of the District Magistrate.

The learned Government Advocate has accordingly appeared today and placed upon the record a copy of the Circular letter No. 2062/1774-V issued by the Chief Secretary to Government, Central Provinces, to all District Magistrates, Central Provinces and Berar, which makes it perfectly clear that the practice of appointing Honorary Magistrates under S. 12, Criminal P. C., for a term of five years was wrong because the said section like S. 14 ibid makes no provision of any time limit. The letter therefore states that :

"Government has accordingly been advised that the five years term imposed in accordance with recent practice is ultra vires and should be regarded merely as an expression of the intention of the Local Government to withdraw the Magistrate's powers after the expiry of five years, unless in the meanwhile it determines to continue them."

In para. 2 the letter goes on to state that :

"I am accordingly to say that in all cases in which a Magistrate has been appointed for a term of years, his jurisdiction must be considered to continue even after that term has expired."

Even in the Quarterly Civil Lists for October 1928 and January and April 1929 the name of Mr. S. K. Rahim appears among the list of existing Honorary Magistrates and therefore it is evident that his appointment had not ceased on the day that he signed the judgment of the Bench with his other colleagues. There is thus no force in the first ground of the application. Neither is there any force in the other grounds which merely attack the concurrent findings of the two lower Courts with which I agree. The result is that this application for revision fails and is dismissed.

P.N./R.K. Revision dismissed.

v.

Emperor—Opposite Party.

Criminal Revn. No. 635 of 1929, Decided on 6th December 1929, from a Decision of Sess. Judge, Patna, D/- 3rd October 1929.

Criminal P. C., S. 239—Capture of one of four thieves uprooting crops in field by owners—Owners assailed by mob of about 20 with deadly weapons—Joint trial of some of offence of theft and some of offence of rioting and use of deadly weapons is bad in absence of evidence that rescuers were in collusion with thieves to establish connexion between two sets of offences to form them one and same transaction.

Where owners of field finding that some 4 persons are uprooting crops in their field, capture one of the thieves and after they walked a short distance are attacked and assaulted by a mob of 20 persons with deadly weapons, the joint trial of some of the offence of theft and some of the offence of rioting and use of deadly weapons is bad unless there is evidence that the rescuers had been in collusion with the thieves committing the theft and had stood by with the object of effecting a rescue to establish a connexion between the two sets of offences so as to make one and the same transaction. [P 203 C 1, 2]

Jyotirmoy Chatterji and G. Sharma—for Petitioners.

Asst. Government Advocate or the Crown.

Courtney-Terrell, C. J.—This is an application for the revision of an order by the Sessions Judge of Patna affirming on appeal the convictions of the ten petitioners some of whom were charged with rioting, some of whom were charged both with rioting and with theft and one of whom was charged with theft only. The trial took place before the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Barh. The circumstances alleged by the prosecution may be very briefly stated as follows: The accused persons belong to a village called Bhatgawan. Three quarter of a mile from that village there is a field which is owned by some persons who reside at another village called Akbarpur. On the day in question the owners of the field went half an hour before sunset to inspect the crops growing there. They there saw four persons who are the petitioners Nos. 1, 2, 9 and 10 in this case engaged in uprooting the crops. They are said to have captured one of the thieves, that is to say, petitioner 10, and were in the act of taking him to their own village in order that they might charge him with theft. When they had gone a short distance from their field they were set upon by a mob of 20 or 25 people including the petitioners whom I have mentioned, that is to say, Nos. 1, 2 and 9 and the other petitioners and they were there assaulted by these people with deadly weapons.

The petitioners were placed on trial, Nos. 1, 2, 9 and 10 were charged with theft, No. 10 being charged with theft alone under S. 379, Nos. 1 and 2 were charged with an offence under S. 326 and under S. 148 with rioting with deadly weapons. No. 9 was charged with theft and also charged with rioting under S. 147. Nos. 3 to 6 inclusive were charged under S. 326 and S. 148, Nos. 7 and 8 were charged under S. 147 and therefore a trial took place in which some of the petitioners were accused of theft, and some were accused of the offence connected with rioting although they were not charged with or tried under the accusation of theft. It is said that the riot and the attack upon the complainants was with the object of rescuing the petitioner No. 10 who had been caught in the act of stealing the crops and was in the custody of the complainants.

The objection taken by Mr. Jyotirmoy Chatterji on behalf of the petitioners is in substance that the trial was had under S. 239, Criminal P. C. He says that the offences of rioting and the use of deadly weapons upon the complainants were not part of the same transaction as the offence of theft with which some of the petitioners have been charged. In my opinion that contention is sound. The learned Sessions Judge has stated his view that the offences were in the course of the same transaction because they are in the relation of cause and effect but that would be true of any case of violence effected in the rescue of a person from custody. The rescue and the violence would not have taken place had not petitioner 10 been taken into custody for the offence. It does not necessarily follow that the rescuers of a person in custody have been in collusion with him in the commission of the offence for which he is in custody. We have been unable to find any trace in the judgment of any finding that the persons charged with rioting and the use of deadly weapons were directly or indirectly concerned with the theft. Had there been evidence that the rescuers had been in collusion with the thieves committing the theft and had stood by with the object of effecting a rescue then there would have been such a connexion between the two sets of offences as to make them one and the same transaction, and that would have justified the trial of the two sets of offences together; but in this case there is no trace of any such connexion. It therefore follows that the joint trial was bad. Petitioner 10 was only charged with theft and sentenced to one month's rigorous imprisonment and has already served his sentence. Petitioner 9 has been sentenced to six months rigorous imprisonment in respect of the theft but that is probably a mistake on the record because as far as we can see there is nothing to make his case worse than that of the other persons accused of theft who have all been sentenced to one month's rigorous imprisonment in respect of the theft. We see no reason to send the case back for retrial in respect of those who are accused of theft only, nor indeed of any further investigation of the crime of theft but it is necessary in the interests of justice that petitioners 1 to 9 inclusive be retried on the charges for which they were originally tried excluding the offence of theft under S. 379. The convictions and sentences will therefore be set aside and the case in this respect will go back to the Magistrate for fresh trial. These petitioners will be on bail to the satisfaction of the District Magistrate to appear this day fortnight before the Magistrate.

(a) Criminal P. C., Ss. 366 and 367—Omission to write judgment before passing sentence should not vitiate trial unless it occasions failure of justice—Criminal P. C., S. 537.

Though it is desirable that Magistrates should obey the express provisions of the law, yet the omission to write a judgment before pronouncing a sentence should not necessarily vitiates the trial, unless such omission has in fact occasioned a failure of justice: 14 All. 242 and 27 Mad. 237, not foll. 23 Cal. 502, Rel. on. [P 204 C 2]

(b) Criminal P. C., S 367—Omission to sign judgment is mere irregularity curable by Criminal P. C., S. 537.

Where a Magistrate prepares a judgment but does not sign it, such omission to sign the judgment amounts to a mere irregularity curable by S. 537: A. I. R. 1925 All. 299, Rel. on. [P 204 C 2]

^a Rauf—for Appellant.

Judgment.—Appellant aged 64 appeals from a sentence of four years' rigorous imprisonment on three charges of cheating in the last case tried by the late U Po Nu as Additional District Magistrate, Rangoon. The first legal objection taken is that the sentence is illegal as there is no judgment signed by the learned Magistrate. On the record there is a judgment prepared by the late U Po Nu. From the affidavits of his two clerks, Maung Tha Tun and Maung Ba Sein, it would appear that that judgment consists of 12 paragraphs out of which paras 1 to 3 were written by Tha Tun at U Po Nu's dictation, paras 4, 5, 6 and 7 were typed by U Po Nu himself, and the remaining 5 paras were written by Maung Ba Sein at U Po Nu's dictation; that the corrections in the judgment were by U Po Nu himself; that that judgment was pronounced in open Court and the accused sentenced to four years' rigorous imprisonment on the evening of 22nd December 1928; that U Po Nu then handed that judgment to his Bench Clerk Maung Tha Tun to be fair typed; and that unfortunately U Po Nu died before he could sign the fair copy.

The appellant's learned advocate relied upon the case of Queen-Empress v. Hargobind Singh (1). In that case Hargobind and two others were tried for murder, found guilty and sentenced to death. The sentence was passed first and the judgment written afterwards. The sentence was held to be illegal, and the learned Judges observe:

"The requirements of Ss. 366 and 367 are no mere matters of form. The provisions of those sections are based upon good and substantial grounds of public policy and whether they are or not, Sessions Judges must obey them and not be a law to themselves. Any Judge at the conclusion of the evidence in a case, some of which may be not quite distinct in his mind owing to the length of the trial, might pass sentence on a prisoner and find it impossible afterwards honestly to put on paper good reasons for having convicted him, or, on the other hand, might direct that the accused be set at liberty and find it impossible afterwards honestly to put on paper good reasons for the acquittal. The law wisely requires that the reasons for the decision shall accompany the decision, and shall not be left to be subsequently inserted or recorded."

This decision was approved by a Bench of the Madras High Court in the case of Bandanu Atchayya v. Emperor (2). There too the Sessions Judge passed sentences on the accused persons and wrote the judgment some days afterwards. The learned Judges held that this was a violation of Ss. 366 and 367, Criminal P. C., and was more than an irregularity, and that it was a defect which vitiated the convictions and sentences. But a Bench of the Calcutta High Court in Tilak Chandra Sarkar v. Baisagomoff (3), held a contrary view. The learned Judges held that the omission of the Magistrate in recording a judgment before pronouncing his sentence was an omission or irregularity which fell within the purview of S. 537 of the Code, and so the sentence itself, by reason of this irregularity, was not an illegal sentence so as to render the trial nugatory.

Sub-S. (4) of S. 366 reads:

"Nothing in this section shall be construed to limit in any way the extent of the provisions of S. 537."

I am inclined to think that, though it is desirable that Magistrates should obey the express provisions of the law, yet the omission to write a judgment before pronouncing a sentence should not necessarily vitiate the trial, unless such omission has in fact occasioned a failure of justice. In the present case it cannot be said that there was no written judgment at all. The learned Magistrate might have signed the judgment already prepared, though it looked untidy and might append a fair copy of it later. It is true that S. 367 says that a judgment shall be dated and signed by the presiding officer in open Court at the time of pronouncing it. In my opinion the omission to sign the judgment amounts to a mere irregularity curable by S. 537. In Emperor v. Ram Sukh (4), Mukerji, J. held such a view. There a Magistrate wrote a judgment with his own hand

2) [1904] 27 Mad. 237.

3) [1895] 23 Cal. 502.

(1) [1892] 14 All. 242=(1892) A. W. N. 88.

(4) A. I. R. 1925 All. 299=47 All. 284.

but forgot to sign and date it, and it was held that this did not amount to more than an irregularity, such as would be cured by S. 537.

I now come to the second legal objection with regard to the jurisdiction of the Court. Three charges were framed against the appellant; firstly that he cheated Dudumia at Mudon in the Amherst District by dishonestly inducing him to deliver Rs. 143, secondly that he cheated Maung Tun Gyaw at Taloktaw in the Hanthawaddy District by dishonestly inducing him to deliver Rs. 11; and thirdly that he cheated Hakim Khan at Thanatpin in the Pegu District by dishonestly inducing him to deliver Rs. 10-10-0. S. 177 lays down that every offence shall ordinarily be inquired into and tried by a Court within the local limits of whose jurisdiction it was committed. In the present case the alleged cheating was committed in the Pegu, Hanthawaddy and Amherst Districts and the trial took place in Rangoon. The question is whether the irregularity has vitiated the trial. S. 531 provides that no finding, sentence or order of any Criminal Court shall be set aside merely on the ground that the inquiry, trial or other proceeding in the course of which it was arrived at or passed, took place in a wrong Sessions division, district, sub-division or other local area, unless it appears that such error has in fact occasioned a failure of justice. In my opinion there has been no failure of justice by this error relating to territorial jurisdiction. (Then his Lordship considered the facts and the evidence in respect of the charges of which the appellant was convicted and concluded as follows.) In my opinion the conviction of cheating cannot be sustained. The appeal is allowed, the convictions and sentences are set aside and the appellant is acquitted.

(Privy Council)

(From Allahabad)

13th December 1929.

LORD TOMLIN, SIR LANCELOT SANDERSON AND SIR BINOD MITTER.

A, a Pleader of Agra—Appellant.

v.

Judges of the High Court of Judicature, Allahabad—Respondents.

Privy Council Appeal No. 99 of 1928.

 Legal Practitioners Act, S. 14—Pleader exclusively retained by a client accepting brief against that client in another suit by opponent, is guilty of professional misconduct.

The appellant, a pleader, was standing counsel for a company on certain terms. On 20th May 1926, certain debenture-holders and other shareholders of the company filed a suit against the company and a number of firms, companies and individuals who had acted or were acting as managing agents of the company or as directors or agents of such managing agents claiming, for the benefit of the company against the defendants other than the company large sums alleged to have been fraudulently misappropriated by such defendants or some of them. In this suit G, the person, who directed the affairs of the company, declared that the company has always been treated as a co-plaintiff and would continue in future to accept the status of co-plaintiffs.

On 21st March 1927, the company received a notice, dated 17th March 1927, from the debenture-holders of their intention to enforce their debentures. On 13th May 1927, the appellant informed G of his intention to act for the debenture-holders and about the same time he accepted a brief for such debenture-holders. On 14th May 1927, the plaintiff in the debenture-holders' suit was filed by one B, who admittedly was the appellants' junior, acting under his directions. On 25th May 1927, G cancelled the appellant's vakalatnama, and applied to the Court in the suit of 1926, to remove his name from the record as the company's pleader, and on the following day his name was removed on the ground that his vakalatnama had been cancelled. On 27th May 1927, the appellant filed a vakalatnama in the suit of 1926 on behalf of one of the plaintiffs.

Held: that the appellant, in making himself responsible for the filing of the plaint in the debenture-holders' suit filed on 14th May 1927 and in accepting a brief from the plaintiffs in that suit at a time when his exclusive retainer in favour of the company was still running, acted in violation not only of the principles which govern the conduct of a legal adviser, but of the ordinary principles of good faith as between man and man. Such a course would not have been justified even if the retainer had been first determined. The conduct of the appellant was irregular in form and improper in substance, and was "grossly improper conduct in the discharge of his professional duty" within the meaning of the Act. [P 208 C 1, 2]

Held further: that the appellant's acting for a plaintiff in the suit of 1926 after his retainer for the company was determined, though unwise and to be regretted, does not amount to "grossly improper conduct in the discharge of his professional duty." [P 208 C 1, 2]

A. M. Dunne and W. Wallach—for Appellants.

L. De Gruyther and E. B. Raikes—for Respondents.

Lord Tomlin—This an appeal from an order dated 23rd January 1928, of the High Court of Judicature, Allahabad whereby the appellant, a pleader practising at Agra, was suspended from practice for four years from the date of the order on the ground that he was guilty of professional misconduct in respect of three out of six matters charged against him.

The order was made after enquiry and report by the District Judge of Agra under S. 14, Legal Practitioners Act (18 of 1879). This jurisdiction of the High Court to suspend or otherwise punish a pleader practising in any subordinate Court arises after report by the presiding officer of such subordinate Court that the pleader has been guilty of any of the offences mentioned in S. 13 of the Act. These offences include fraudulent or grossly improper conduct in the discharge of his professional duty.

Of the six charges made against the appellant, the three upon which the High Court found him guilty were as follows :

"(1) That having been standing counsel of the Agra United Mills, Limited, employed by Kunwar Ganesh Sinha since 25th April 1925, on 27th May 1927, you filed a vakalatnama on behalf of Major A. U. John, a plaintiff in Suit No. 126 of 1926 in the Court of the Additional Subordinate Judge, Agra, against Kunwar Ganesh Sinha, the Agra United Mills Limited, and other defendants.

"(2) That having been standing counsel of the Agra United Mills, Limited, for over six years under an agreement not to give advice or to conduct case against the Mills, and having obtained an increment to your retainer on the express undertaking that you would not appear for Messrs. John against the Mills, you advised Messrs. John in preparing their Case No. 84 of 1927, against the Mills, and you got your junior, Mr. Baboo Lal, to file the plaint.

"(6) That in Suit No. 126 of 1926, in the Court of the Additional Subordinate Judge, Agra, you made an unfair use of your position as legal adviser of the Agra United Mills, Limited, and forced the Mills to agree to give you a fee of Rs. 12,000. That you did nothing for the Mills except to file your vakalatnama."

At the end of the hearing before their Lordships' Board, their Lordships being of opinion that the first and sixth charges had not been made out, but that the second charge was established, intimated that they would humbly advise His Majesty that the suspension should cease as from 22nd November 1929.

It is now necessary for their Lordships to give the reasons which led them to this conclusion.

For this purpose a statement of the relevant facts is required.

In 1920, Messrs. John Bros., the owners of a mill at Agra sold the mill to the Agra United Mills Company, Limited. The sum of Rs. 50,000, the purchase price or part of the purchase price, was satisfied by the issue to the vendors of debentures of the company. There was a debenture trust deed, of which Messrs. John Bros., were the trustees.

In January 1921, the appellant was appointed standing counsel of the company. He also from time to time acted on behalf of Messrs. John Bros. Their Lordships are satisfied that both the company and Messrs. John Bros., were fully aware of the appellant's position and that neither of them raised any objection to it.

On 31st January 1924, the appellant wrote to the company a letter setting out what he described as "the terms we settled the other day about my fees, etc., for Court cases." The letter was not answered, but their Lordships are satisfied that in subsequent transactions fees were paid by the company to the appellant upon the basis of the terms set out in the letter.

In 1924 a suit was launched by or in the name of the company against the debenture holders, attacking the validity of the debentures. The suit was dismissed by consent on 28th May 1925. It does not appear that the appellant had any part on either side in this suit, but it may have brought to his mind the possibility of conflict between the respective interests of the company and Messrs. John Bros.

At any rate, on 25th September 1925, the appellant wrote to the company a letter in which he referred to the possibility of a conflict of interests between his two clients, and stated that he had decided to give up Messrs. John Bros. and act only for the company.

Thereafter he ruled himself by the terms of that letter, and their Lordships do not accept his story that, notwithstanding the letter, he was to be free to advise Messrs. John Bros. in respect of their debentures in the company.

On 20th May 1926 Messrs. John Bros. and other shareholders of the company filed a suit in the Court of the Subordinate Judge at Agra against the company and a number of firms, companies and individuals who had acted or were acting as managing agents of the company or as directors or agents of such managing agents claiming for the benefit of the company against the defendants other than the company large sums alleged to have been fraudulently misappropriated by such defendants or some of them.

The defendants other than the company held a majority of the shares in the company and controlled the company. The appellant as pleader for the company received his instructions from Ganesh Sinha, one of such defendants—Ganesh Sinha was managing director of the Darbhanga Trust, Limited, the managing agents of the company, and as such directed the affairs of the company. On 4th August 1926, the appellant under instructions from Ganesh Sinha, made a statement to the Court to the effect that as the suit was for the benefit of the company, it was unnecessary for the company to file any written statement.

Later on in August 1926, a suit committee was set up by the majority shareholders, which apparently desired to get rid of the appellant as pleader on the record for the company and on 24th January 1927, an application was made to substitute on the record as pleader for the company one Din Dayal in place of the appellant. The application failed, the Judge saying :

"that though figuring as a defendant, the Mills are virtually plaintiffs in the case."

In the meantime the appellant had made a claim to Ganesh Sinha to be paid Rs. 15,000 as his fee as pleader for the company in the suit, calculated in accordance with the terms of the letter of 31st January 1924.

Ultimately the claim was settled on 17th March 1927, by payment to the appellant of Rs. 12,000. It is this payment which is the subject of the sixth charge. On 21st March 1927, the company received a notice dated 17th March 1927, from the debenture-holders of their intention to enforce their debentures.

On 25th March 1927, an answer to this notice was sent to the debenture-holders. The answer was signed by Swarup, pleader for Ganesh Sinha. It is said to have been drafted by the appellant. This the appellant denies, but his denial was not accepted by the District Judge or the High Court. The matter is in their Lordships' opinion, of little importance. In their Lordships' opinion the appellant at this time or shortly afterwards made up his mind that in the debenture-holders' suit which was then being threatened, he would act for the plaintiffs against the company. At the same time their Lordships are satisfied (and in this respect they differ from the High Court) that the appellant never intended to give up his position as pleader for the company in the suit of 1926.

On 13th May 1927, the appellant informed Ganesh Sinha of his intention to act for the debenture-holders, and about the same time he accepted a brief for such debenture-holders.

On 14th May 1927, the plaint in the debenture-holders' suit was filed by one Babu Lal, who admittedly was the appellants' junior, acting under his directions.

On 17th May 1927, Ganesh Sinha wrote to the appellant, protesting against the appellant's action and pointing out in effect that the appellant had while acting for the company, received information which would necessarily embarrass him if he acted for the debenture-holders. The appellant's answer on 21st May 1927 was a long and violent letter in the course of which he said :

"Please therefore note that I sever my connexion with you absolutely from this date except that I insist on representing the unfortunate defendant company, the Agra United Mills, Limited, in suit No. 126 of 1926, because I cannot resist the conclusion that if I am eliminated therefrom you will do your utmost to sacrifice it. Any effort to supplant me in order to serve your own dishonest ends will be resisted by all the force and energy I can command."

On 25th May 1927 Ganesh Sinha cancelled the appellant's vakalatnama and applied to the Court in the suit of 1926 to remove his name from the record as the company's pleader, and on the following day his name was removed on the ground that his vakalatnama had been cancelled. In the course of the hearing of this application Ganesh Sinha made a declaration to the effect that the company had always been treated as a co-plaintiff and would continue in future to accept the status of co-plaintiffs.

On the day on which the last-mentioned application was made the appellant applied by petition to the District Judge for advice as to whether he could properly appear for the plaintiffs in the debenture suit. This petition was forwarded to the High Court by the District Judge and on 31st May 1927, the High Court told the District Judge that the appellant must decide this matter for himself.

On 26th May 1927, the company, acting through Ganesh Sinha, petitioned the District Judge under the Legal Practitioners Act to take action against the appellant on the ground that he had been guilty of professional misconduct. The charges were further expanded in a second petition on the 28th May.

On 27th May 1927, the appellant filed a vakalatnama in the suit of 1926 on behalf of one of the plaintiffs. The company, through Ganesh Sinha, at once applied to the Court to prevent the appellant from doing so. The Subordinate Judge refused to interfere saying—

"I do not think there is anything to preclude him from doing so, as the Mills Company has been and is being treated virtually as a co-plaintiff, the suit being for its benefit."

Subsequently the defendants in the suit of 1926 raised upon the pleadings an issue as to the validity of the debentures, and this apparently led the Additional Subordinate Judge to take the view that the appellant could not continue to act for one of the plaintiffs in that suit.

Out of this confused welter of happenings one thing only emerges clearly, that the appellant had no true appreciation of the principles which should govern the conduct of a professional legal adviser. This is the more apparent because, in regard to the matters the subject of the first and second charges, he affected no concealment in what he did, but openly asserted his right to pursue the course he had marked out for himself.

Their Lordships are of opinion that the appellant, in making himself responsible for the filing of the plaint in the debenture-holders' suit and in accepting a brief from the plaintiffs in that suit at a time when his exclusive retainer in favour of the company was still running, acted in violation not only of the principles which govern the conduct of a legal adviser, but of the ordinary principles of good faith as between man and man. Their Lordships do not think that such a course would have been justified in the circumstances of the present case even if the retainer had been first determined. In their Lordships' judgment, the conduct of the appellant was irregular in form and improper in substance, and was "grossly improper conduct in the discharge of his professional duty" within the meaning of the Act. Their Lordships therefore think that the second charge was made out.

With regard to the first charge, based upon the appellant having acted for a plaintiff in the suit 1926 after his retainer for the company was determined, their Lordships are impressed by the contemporaneous facts that the Subordinate Judge approved the course pursued by the appellant, and that Ganesh Sinha had declared to the Court that there was no conflict of interest in the suit of 1926 between the company and the plaintiffs. The view taken by the learned Subordinate Judge does not commend itself to their Lordships, but they do not think that in the circumstances which have been indicated the conduct of the appellant in this matter, though unwise and to be regretted, amounted to "grossly improper conduct in the discharge of his professional duty."

The sixth charge is of a different character. It is in the nature of a criminal charge. It is one which demands precision in statement and strictness in proof. It was in fact framed in vague terms, giving no indication of the real gravamen of the charge, and in their Lordships' opinion the evidence adduced was insufficient to establish it.

The appellant has been suspended from practice since 23rd January 1928. Their Lordships are of opinion that the appellant will have been adequately punished if the suspension ceases as from 22nd November 1929, and that the order of the High Court should be varied accordingly, but without any variation in that order so far as it relates to costs. Their Lordships therefore humbly advise His Majesty accordingly. There will be no costs of this appeal.

Judgment.—The appellant Prafulla Kumar Bose has been convicted by the Sessions Judge of Sylhet under S. 366, I. P. C., and has been sentenced to undergo rigorous imprisonment for 18 months and to pay a fine of Rs. 1,200, or in default to undergo rigorous imprisonment for 18 months more. The fine has been ordered to be paid as compensation to the father of the girl in respect of whom the offence has been found to have been committed. The trial was held with the aid of a jury on charges under Ss. 366, 368 and 376, I. P. C. The jury were unanimous in their verdict. They found the appellant not guilty under S. 376, I. P. C. They held that he was guilty under S. 366, I. P. C., finding that the girl had been kidnapped, the seduction having taken place before the girl left her father's place. They held that in the circumstances the offence under S. 368, I. P. C., did not arise.

The story needs no recounting. It is set out in all its harrowing details in the voluminous charge which the learned Judge delivered and which purports to deal with every point in controversy with all the evidence bearing on it and from all conceivable view points. Put in a nutshell, the story is that the appellant who was an Assistant Surgeon at Sunamgunge in the District of Sylhet, taking advantage of his position as the next door neighbour, and abusing the confidence that was reposed on him as the medical attendant of the girl who was placed under his treatment and which enabled him to have almost free access into the house wherein the girl lived, kidnapped or abducted the girl on or about 20th August 1920, and removed her from place to place keeping her concealed to avoid detection till the girl was recovered at a place called Khalsini, near Chandranagore on 23rd March 1923. The story is that in the meantime the girl gave birth to a child, which however died. Information of the girl having left her father's house was given to the police almost simultaneously with her disappearance. The appellant remained at Sunamgunge till April 1921, presumably to keep up appearances. Subsequently, some time in 1922, the father on receipt of some information against the appellant applied for and obtained warrant for his arrest and search warrant for the production of the girl. After the girl was recovered on 23rd March 1923, as already stated, the usual investigation by the police followed, and a charge sheet was submitted against the appellant on 10th

June 1924. The appellant, however, could not be arrested then. He eventually surrendered on 21st December 1927.

In this appeal which the appellant has filed to this Court from his conviction and sentence, various grounds have been taken which we propose to deal with one by one.

It has been urged in the first place that the learned Judge has not correctly explained the offence punishable under S. 366, I. P. C. It has been argued that the expression "in order that she may be forced or seduced to illicit intercourse" has been wrongfully explained. The contention is that the learned Judge wrongly explained the two words 'forced' and 'seduced.' As regards the word 'forced' the learned Judge said as follows :

"Force implies not merely physical force but also the force of circumstances. For instance, a girl who has been kidnapped from her father's house may be placed in such circumstances that she has no option but to submit to illicit intercourse. For instance, if she was entirely in the power of her kidnappers or abductors, her consent might be nothing more than a mere submission to their will."

It is contended that this explanation of the word 'forced' goes far beyond the definition given in S. 349, I. P. C. This argument overlooks that the definition that is given is not the meaning of the verb 'force' but of the expression 'to use force.' In our opinion there is no reason to suppose that the word 'forced' as used in S. 366, I.P.C., was not used in its ordinary dictionary sense which would include forced by stress of circumstances. Assuming, however, that the learned Judge was not right in the meaning he gave to the word, the error, even if there was any, did not matter, because the learned Judge made it plain to the jury that the question they had to consider was:

"whether or not the doctor's main motive in kidnapping or abducting the girl was that she should be seduced to illicit intercourse with himself."

It is 'seduction' that the jury had to deal with and not 'force,' and the verdict shows that the jury rightly understood the point. As regards the word 'seduced' the learned Judge told the jury by reference to some decided cases that though the word 'seduction' is sometimes used to mean to induce a girl to part with her virtue for the first time, the word as used in the section should not be taken to have that narrow meaning, but that even, though a girl may have by the first act of seduction surrendered her chastity, subsequent seduction for further acts of illicit intercourse was also meant to be included. It has been urged that this view is wrong and as authority in support of this contention Rex v. Moon (1) has been cited, though that case, amongst others, has been relied upon by the learned Judge and in support of the view he took. We are of opinion that the view taken by the learned Judge is correct. It is the view taken in several reported decisions on the section, and is amply supported by what Channel, J. as well as the Court of appeal says in the case of Rex v. Moon (1) as regards the meaning of the word. The Court of appeal in that case only held that the wider meaning should not be given to the word 'seduction' as used in the particular section of the Childrens' Act, in view of the words "or prostitution" that stood next to it.

The second ground urged is that the learned Judge mixed up the two offences of kidnapping and abduction and did not keep the elements of those offences separate before the jury. As indicating this confusion, reliance has been placed upon the following passage in the summing up:

"I should also be glad if you would come to a further finding of fact whether you think that the girl had been kidnapped or abducted or kidnapped and abducted."

This contention in our opinion has no substance inasmuch as one of the questions in dispute in the case was that relating to the age of the girl. If the girl was 16 or over, she could only be abducted and not kidnapped, but if she was under 16 she could be kidnapped as well as abducted if the taking was by force or the taking or enticing was by deceitful means.

Thirdly it has been contended that the charge under S. 366, I. P. C., should have been split up into two, one relating to kidnapping and the other to abduction, and it has been said on the authority of the case of Isu Sheikh v. Emperor (2), that it was illegal to frame one count of charge setting out both the offences in the alternative. We are not prepared to say that a charge of latter character contravenes the requirements of the law, far less that there was the least prejudice caused to the appellant thereby.

The next ground of objection relates to the admission of oral evidence from the girl as regards certain letters which she said she had received from the accused and which she returned either to a man of the accused named Ram Charan, or to the accused himself. This ground has been pressed with considerable force. What happened was that no exception was taken to the reception of this evidence when it was given but several days after the deposition was over, an application was made objecting to it on the ground that the notice contemplated by S. 66, Evidence Act, had not been given. The learned Judge then passed an order that as the accused denied having got the letters in his possession this was a case in which he would dispense with the notice. It has been urged that the fact that objection was not made at the time did not matter and that the subsequent dispensing with of the notice would not make the evidence admissible that was inadmissible at the time it was given. The first of these propositions need not be disputed: Kameshwar Pershad v. Amanutulla (3), and the second one is obviously just. But there are several answers to the appellant's contention. One is that the learned Judge might have expunged the evidence that had already been given and after dispensing with the notice, allowed the same evidence to be given over again this technical defect of procedure that there was, in not adopting this course can well be condoned. Another is that the case can hardly be regarded as one in which the originals are "shown or appear to be in the possession or power" of the accused,—it not having been stated by the girl that that was so, and it not having been the case of the accused that he had the letters. It was therefore not a case under S. 65, Cl. (a), but rather under Cl. (c) of that section. If so, it was only a question of sufficiency of the search that should have been made for justifying the reception of secondary evidence. In such a case, as the Judicial Committee has pointed out:

"whether or not there was evidence of such an amount of search for the originals as would justify the Court in admitting secondary evidence of it was a point which was proper to be decided by the Judge of first instance, and was to be treated as one depending very much on his discretion, and the conclusion should not be overruled except in a very clear case of miscarriage of justice: Harripriya Debi v. Rukmani (4)"

(3) [1898] 26 Cal. 53=2 C.W.N. 649.

Anent this ground it has been also urged that sufficient directions were not, given by the learned Judge to point out to the jury the improbability of the girl remembering the contents of the letters for such a length of time, but we do not think that there is anything in this objection.

The fifth ground is a complaint against the procedure adopted by the learned Judge in interposing too frequently in the midst of the examination and the cross-examination of the girl by putting questions to her. We have examined the evidence that was elicited in that way, and we think that the only object of the learned Judge was to clear up matters involved in obscurity, and that except as regards one or two points, what was said in answer to the question put as aforesaid, was in favour of the accused. Of course if the learned Judge hampered the prosecution or the defence by taking the case out of their hands that would be a different matter; but no complaint of that character was made at the time, and there is nothing on which such a complaint can reasonably be made now.

The sixth ground is to the effect that the learned Judge did not give sufficient or proper directions as regards the non-examination of witnesses. What he did was to tell the jury:

"It has also been pointed out that a number of persons whose names transpired in the evidence, have not been examined as witnesses and during the course of the arguments the learned defence pleader produced a list of 26 persons who are according to his contention should have been examined by the prosecution."

Having said this the learned Judge proceeded to deal specially with one of these witnesses, namely the husband of the girl. Then he said generally:

"If such witnesses are not produced and examined, you may draw an inference that their testimony would not have supported the prosecution case."

He then briefly discussed the information on the record regarding the said 26 witnesses in order to explain to the jury to what extent the said witnesses could have given material evidence and placed the whole list before the jury in that way.

We do not think there was anything left unsaid that should have been said on the question of non-examination of material witnesses. Amongst these witnesses were the astrologer and the mother, for whose non-examination a good deal of argument has been advanced before us. Hemangini also is mentioned in that list.

It has been contended as the seventh and eighth grounds that the learned Judge should have told the jury that if the charge of rape failed the evidence of the girl and of the other witnesses should be regarded as very much discredited. The ninth ground is to the effect that on the question of omission on the part of the girl to state before the Committing Magistrate matters that she spoke to in the Court of Sessions the Judge's remarks had the effect of minimizing the importance of the omission. We do not feel pressed by any of these grounds.

The tenth and last ground is a complaint as regards the examination made of the appellant by the learned Judge. The contention is that after the appellant had declined to make a statement the learned Judge should not have put questions to him in the way that he did. Objection is also taken to the form of the questions, their range and their number and it is also said that the questions were of an incriminating character and were in the nature of cross-examination. Now the first question that the learned Judge put and the answer that the appellant gave to it were as follows:

"Q. Do you wish to make a statement? You are not bound to do so but if you do so your answers may be taken into consideration at the trial and put in evidence for or against you.

"A. I am not guilty. I do not wish to make any statement. What I have got to say my lawyers will say in the argument."

After this the learned Judge put to the appellant a very large number of questions covering almost every single point which formed the main allegations in the case for the prosecution. It is true that if an accused prefers to be reticent the Court should not hold an inquisitorial proceeding; but what was done in this case was something entirely different. The fact that the appellant declined to make a statement would not necessarily indicate to the Judge that the appellant would not like to answer specific questions put to him. The appellant did answer all the questions without demur. The questions were not inquisitorial or of a cross-examining character, and were not intended to fill up the gaps, if any, in the prosecution case. They were clearly put with the object of knowing what portion, if any, of the prosecution case was also the case for the defence, so that the learned Judge might be better able to place the case properly before the jury. They were also put to give the appellant a proper opportunity of explaining, if he would the circumstances appearing against him in the evidence. No advantage has been taken of any slips that the appellant may have made in his answers. The questions may have been somewhat inconvenient for the appellant, but there is nothing therein of which he can legitimately complain.

We are unable to hold in appellant's favour upon any of the ten points on which the appeal has been pressed.

The appeal is accordingly dismissed.

RANKIN, C. J. AND C. C. GHOSE, SUHRAWARDY, PEARSON AND PAGE, JJ.
Emperor
v.

Ermanali and others—Accused.

Full Bench Ref. No. 2 of 1929 in Jury Reference No. 41 of 1929, Decided on 9th January 1930.

* * (a) Criminal P. C., Ss. 274 and 326 (1)—Number of persons summoned for trial of offence under Penal Code, S. 302—Summoning less than 18 does not vitiate trial—38 C. W. N. 1054, Overruled.

In a murder case where the number of jurors summoned is 14, nine of whom appear and are chosen by lot, the trial is not bad by reason of the fact that only 14 jurors have been summoned in contravention of the provisions of Ss. 274 and 276: A.I.R. 1927 P.C. 44, Appr. 25 Mad. 61 (P.C.), Dist.; 33 C. W. N. 1054 Overruled; A.I.R. 1930 Cal. 60 (2) and 33 C. W. N. 1053, impliedly overruled.

(b) Criminal P. C., S. 326 (1)—Large area of selection in persons attending is not the underlying intention of S. 326 (1).

Per Rankin, C. J.—It is no part of the intention of the legislature to have a large area of selection in the persons attending upon the summons on the theory that the larger the number of effective names in the ballot box, the greater the chance, the persons chosen will make good jurors. [P 215 C 1]

(c) Criminal Trial — Court should look to substance rather than to form — Criminal P. C., S. 537.

Per Page, J. — When the decision of a criminal Court in substance appears to be correct an appeal Court should endeavour to uphold the decision even in cases where the rules of procedure by which the trial is to be regulated have been transgressed; except where the breach of the proscribed rules is of so grave a nature, where the form of trial was substantially different from that provided by law for the offence charged, or where, although the violation of the rules was not so profound as to radically alter the mode of trial, it is proved that thereby in the event a failure of justice has in fact been occasioned. [P 217 C 1]

(d) Criminal Trial — Decision just and reasonable on merits should not be disturbed.

Per Page, J. — Rules and Regulations are intended to be the handmaid and not the mistress of the law; in criminal proceedings it is of the utmost importance that a decision just and reasonable on the merits should not be disturbed because in the course of the proceedings some flaw can be detected that is not fundamental and which is not proved to have worked injustice to the accused, although it may constitute a breach of the rules of criminal procedure: R. v. Justices of the County of London, (1898) 2 Q. B. 491, Rel. on. [P 217 C 2]

(e) Criminal P. C., S. 537—Scope.

Per Page, J. — Whether a particular breach of the procedure prescribed in the Code vitiates the proceedings or not must depend upon the gravity of the breach and the consequences that are presumed or proved to have flowed from it: Allen v. Flood, (1901) A.C. 506, Rel. on. [P 218 C 1]

Rankin, C. J.—In this case there were nine accused persons. One of them was charged with murder under S. 302 and the remaining eight with an offence under S. 302 read with S. 149, I. P. C. They were tried by the Sessions Judge of Bakarganj with a jury of nine persons chosen by lot from among 14 persons who had been summoned to serve as jurors under the provisions of S. 326, Criminal P. C. The learned Judge, disagreeing with the verdict of the jury, referred the case to the High Court under S. 307, Criminal P. C.

At the hearing of the reference it was objected by the learned advocate for the accused that the jury had not been constituted in accordance with law and that accordingly the proceedings before the trial Judge should be set aside altogether. The objection taken is not that the number of persons who served on the jury, namely nine, was not the correct number under S. 274, but that under S. 326 the number of persons to be summoned was not less than 18 whereas summonses were sent to 14 persons and no more.

By S. 326, it is provided :

"326 (1) The Sessions Judge shall ordinarily, seven days at least before the day which he may from time to time fix for holding the Sessions, send a letter to the District Magistrate requesting him to summon as many persons named in the said revised list or the said special list as seem to the Sessions Judge to be needed for trials by jury and trials with the aid of assessors at the said Sessions, the number to be summoned not being less than double the number required for any such trial."

Upon this subsection, the first thing to notice is that it purports to prescribe something that is "ordinarily" to be done by the Sessions Judge. He is to request the District Magistrate to summon as many persons as seem to the Sessions judge to be needed for trials by Jury. The subsection envisages him as having fixed time for holding the Sessions and the number referred to is the number not for any particular trial but for the trials by jury which are to take place at the Sessions. The minimum number to which the subsection refers is not less than double the number required for any such trial, i.e., for any one of the trials to take place at the Sessions.

It has been found convenient in Bengal and is a practice generally adopted, to fix dates for each particular case to be tried before the Sessions Judge and to summon a certain number of persons to attend on the date fixed in order to provide a jury for that particular case. This practice is authorized by S. 327, and in the present case it has been followed.

Under S. 274, Criminal P. C., it is provided that where an accused person is charged with an offence punishable with death, the jury shall consist of not less than seven persons, and if practicable of nine persons.

Now, in dealing with these matters this Court has by its decisions from time to time laid down four things. The first is that although a jury is summoned for a particular case, the number to be summoned should always be double the number required for the trial. If the summoning of persons to act as jurymen for the whole of a Sessions as contemplated by S. 326 is not to be carried out, nevertheless the direction "not less than double the number required for any such trial" can and should be carried out by adopting that minimum in each individual case. The standard set by the subsection should not be lowered by reason that the services of the persons summoned are in practice to be utilized for one case only : Serajul Islam v. Emperor (1).

The second thing which this Court has laid down is that if by reason of a failure to observe this standard, it results, whether from non-attendance of jurymen or otherwise, that a jury of nine persons cannot be empanelled for the trial of an accused charged with an offence which is punishable with death, this fact will not entitle the Sessions Judge to proceed to trial in such a case with a jury of seven, in other words that it cannot be said that it was impracticable to have a jury of nine merely because an insufficient number of persons have been summoned from the jury list : Serajul Islam v. Emperor (1).

The third thing which has become matter of decision is that in applying this standard to such a case it is not correct to regard seven as "the number required for any such trial" in the absence of circumstances which make it impracticable to have nine. Hence 18 persons and not 14 persons only should be summoned : Durika Malo v. Emperor (2) and Amir Khan v. Emperor (3).

The fourth thing which this Court has determined is that the persons who are actually to serve as jurors must be chosen in strict compliance with the provisions of Ss. 276 to 278, Criminal P. C. and that if these provisions are not strictly observed the proceedings will be treated as altogether bad : Kedar Nath Mahato v. Emperor (4).

Upon this reference we are asked by the learned advocate for the accused to hold that notwithstanding that the number of persons empanelled on the jury was the correct number, and notwithstanding that they have all been chosen from among persons summoned to act as jurors in strict accordance with the provisions of Ss. 276 and 278, the proceedings have been altogether illegal and must be quashed because summonses were not issued to at least 18 persons. He contends in view of S. 326 that if any less number of persons be summoned, there is a breach of a mandatory provision of the law which affects the constitution of the tribunal and renders void the proceedings. For this contention there is the authority of Emperor v. Tamizuddin (5), which is directly in point. The learned Judges of the Division Bench who dealt with the present case disagreed with that decision and they have referred to us the following questions :

(1) In a murder case where the number of jurors summoned is fourteen, nine of whom appear and are chosen by lot, is the trial bad by reason of the fact that only fourteen jurors have been summoned in contravention of the provisions of Ss. 274 and 326, Criminal P. C. ?

(2) Was the case of Emperor v. Tamizuddin Ahmed (5), rightly decided ?

In my opinion these questions should be answered in the negative and the case should be remanded to be dealt with on the merits.

The persons who are summoned to attend are chosen by lot (sub-S. 2, S. 326) and in addition, the accused persons have the right of challenge given to them by S. 277. Mr. Taluqdar for the accused contends that the requirement that the number to be summoned shall not be less than double the number required for any trial finds place in the Code not merely for the purpose of ensuring that a sufficient number of persons whose names are on the jury list shall attend at the hearing and be found competent to be jurors and unobjectionable, but in order that an additional element of chance may exist in the interest of the accused person who is, therefore, prejudiced if the area of selection by lot under S. 276 is more limited than S. 326 contemplates. In Kedar Nath Mahato v. Emperor (4). I find in the order of reference the following observations :

"If the accused cannot successfully challenge him, any one of the persons summoned can be a juror to try the case. On this view the object of a second choice being made by lot is to eliminate arbitrary or biased choice as between one person summoned and another."

(4) A. I. R. 1928 Cal. 88=55 Cal. 871 (F.B.).

(5) [1929] 83 C. W. N. 1054.

In the judgment of Buckland, J., in which the Full Court agreed, it was said:

"In the course of the argument it was suggested that the ballot required by S. 326 (2) as to the persons to be summoned, and that required by S. 276 were intended to benefit the prisoner by ensuring as far as possible an unbiassed and impartial jury, chosen haphazard and that this furnishes an additional reason for requiring that even when the proviso is to be invoked, there shall nevertheless be a ballot. With this, in some measure, I agree, but inasmuch as the prisoner has a right to challenge conferred by S. 278, I should be disposed to think that the object of the several ballots was as much to ensure a fair and impartial incidence of the duty of service upon juries upon those who are liable to it."

This passage, it is clear, in no way conflicts with the other. The contention before us that if in a murder case 18 persons are summoned, 9 attend upon summons and 9 are chosen to serve without objection, the trial will be good; but that if 17 persons are summoned 17 attend and 9 are chosen without objection, the trial will be bad. In my judgment very clear reason must be shown for any such contention.

In the interests alike of the jury and of the prisoner, it is desirable that the persons who are in fact to serve as jurymen should not be selected by the conscious choice of any one, whether it be the District Magistrate, the Judge or any other person. It is necessary in practice to summon a greater number of persons than is required to serve and for this reason some method of elimination is required. This method must be free of the dangers attendant upon a voluntary choice. It is no part, so far as I can see, of the intention of the Legislature to have a large area of selection in the persons attending upon summons on the theory that the larger the number of effective names in the ballot box the greater the chance that the persons chosen will make good jurors. This aspect of the matter is dealt with by the ballot under S. 326 (2) which directs that all the names on the jury list (with certain exceptions) are to be entered for that ballot. There is much sense in saying that the jurors are to be chosen haphazard from the whole of the jury list but this having been done there would indeed be little point in another lottery but for the considerations I have mentioned. Since mistake, sickness or accident may diminish the number of persons attending upon summons and challenges may diminish their number still further, it is reasonably clear that the provision as to the number to be summoned is not motivated by any idea that a certain superfluity of jurors is required to provide an additional element of chance. It is required to meet these very contingencies and the element of chance is required as a consequence of the superfluity.

It is said that the requirement as to the number to be summoned is "mandatory". This word is used in various senses but I understand it to be used as the equivalent of "imperative" as distinct from "advisory" "directory" or "facultative". Now if we look carefully at the wording of S. 326 we will find it to be expressed somewhat loosely. There are two clauses which may be compared. Immediately after the word "ordinarily" comes the phrase:

"seven days at least before the day which he may from time to time fix for holding the sessions."

This fixes a minimum in spite of the word "ordinarily" but the minimum fixed is governed by the word "ordinarily". The requirement as to the number to be summoned is also a minimum and in strictness of form it too is part of a statement of what the Sessions Judge shall "ordinarily" do. The whole practice of summoning jurors for special cases is a departure from the strict terms of the section and is a departure which can be justified under the word "Ordinarily" and by S. 327. If one is summoning a number of people from whom juries have to be chosen for the trial of several cases, the legislature thinks that the number to be summoned should never fall below double the number required for any single case. The legislature has not dealt expressly with the question whether for the purpose of a single case the minimum might be reduced. But the word "ordinarily" can be explained by S. 327 which refers to "other periods than the period mentioned in S. 226" and unless it is so explained a very important provision which ensures that jurors are to be taken from the jury list by means of a ballot becomes optional as under the word "ordinarily" a Judge could in a particular case ignore the section altogether. This he certainly cannot do Brojendra Lal Sircar v. Emperor (6); Rahamat (6) [1902] 7 C. W. N. 188.

Sheik v. Emperor (7). Hence in such cases as Serajul Islam v. Emperor (1), this Court has held that the standard set by the section for the case contemplated therein is in all cases to be complied with.

When the circumstances which call for certain action are in character and number such as can be fully stated or clearly implied the Code constantly uses the word "shall" or other imperative words. The Code is a long list of such imperatives some of which have reference to matters which are in no way vital and many of such are directed to minor incidents of procedure. But for S. 537 there would be grave disadvantages in a Code which makes statutory so many and so various requirements. That section obviates the difficulty which would arise by reason of all irregularities bearing the character of transgressions of a Statute.

The Judicial Committee pointed out in Subrahmanya Iyer v. Emperor (8), that though in a sense the merest irregularity may be illegal, it does not follow that all illegalities are within the scope of S. 537. They did not say or suggest that nothing could be cured under the section if it was illegal and as the Division Bench has pointed out we now have in Abdul Rahman v. Emperor (9), an express decision to the contrary. Both decisions are really a condemnation of the view that all illegalities are as such in the same category for the present purpose. In the former case it was idle to suggest that there was no prejudice. The accused had suffered in an aggravated form the very prejudice from which the Code intends to save him. In Abdul Rahman v. Emperor (9), the test applied was whether there was ground for any probable suggestion of any failure of justice. The Judicial Committee in view of difference of opinion in India and of the fact that no case had come before them since Subrahmanya Iyer v. Emperor (8), carefully explained and applied S. 537 "for the guidance of the Courts" and this decision must now govern the interpretation of the section unless and until the legislature shall see fit to amend the section.

(7) A. I. R. 1927 Cal. 593=54 Cal 1026.

(8) [1902] 25 Mad. 61=28 I.A. 257=11 M.L.J. 233=8 Sar. 160 (P.C.).

(9) A. I. R. 1927 P. C. 44=5 Rang. 53=54 I.A. 96 (P.C.).

In my judgment the test there laid down cannot be evaded by saying that the omission here is an omission to do what is required by a "mandatory" provision of the Code. Nor by saying on the one hand that the summoning of jurors is not even a "proceeding before or during the trial" and on the other hand that it is such a matter that a defect therein will vitiate the trial.

I do not understand what was meant when it was said in Emperor v. Tamizuddin Ahmad (5):

"By summoning less than 18 you initially reduce the chances of selection by lot and make it more possible to pack the jury."

Nor, save on the footing that one illegality is the same as another, can I agree that the summoning of less than 18 persons is on a par with trying a murder case with a jury of five. The present case has no analogy to the error in the "mode of trial" referred to in Subrahmanya Iyer v. Emperor (8). The fact that the legislature has expressly provided in S. 537 that in the absence of prejudice to the accused an omission even to revise the list of jurors shall not render a trial void an irregularity which would prima facie entitle the accused to "challenge the array" in no way inclines me to think that the present case is beyond the scope of S. 537.

In the course of the argument before us the case was put of some jurors having to be chosen from among "persons present in Court" whose names were not on the jury list and of the need for this course having been occasioned by reason that the number of persons summoned was insufficient. I desire to express no opinion as to the effect upon the validity of a trial of such events as these.

Moreover as I have had occasion to refer to previous decisions upon S. 537 and as we are sitting as a Full Bench, I think it well to add that in view of Abdul Rahman's case some of the previous decisions of this Court may require to be revised. This case does not require us to consider that aspect of the matter and it should be left for discussion when the need arises, and when specific questions can be considered.

In my opinion, the view taken by the learned Judges who have referred this matter to the Full Bench is correct and the questions which they have propounded for our decision should be answered in the negative. *

The case should be remanded to a Division Bench for disposal on the merits of the other questions which arise.

C. C. Ghose, J.—I agree,

Suhrawardy, J.—I agree.

Pearson, J.—I agree.

Page, J.—I agree and I desire to add some observations on the general question raised, which I regard as of prime importance.

The maintenance of law and order in India, as in other countries, depends mainly upon criminal law and procedure being so plain and sensible that ordinary persons are not mystified by its intricacies, and recognize that thereby substantial justice is done between the Crown and the accused. No one doubts that the utmost precaution should be taken to ensure that an innocent person is not convicted, but the extent to which the administration of the criminal law suffers when an obviously guilty person succeeds in evading conviction is not so fully appreciated. In truth, a miscarriage of justice of either description bewilders the public, and tends to shake the faith that is reposed in the stability and good sense of the Courts that administer justice in criminal cases. For this reason I am strongly of opinion that when the decisions of a criminal Court in substance appear to be correct an appeal Court should endeavour to uphold the decision even in cases where the rules of procedure by which the trial is to be regulated have been transgressed; except where the breach of the prescribed rules is of so grave a nature that the form of trial was substantially different from that provided by law for the offence charged, or where, although the violation of the rules was not so profound as radically to alter the mode of trial, it is proved that thereby in the event a failure of justice has in fact been occasioned.

The test to be applied, in cases where the prescribed rules of procedure have not been followed, to ascertain whether there has been a mis-trial is always essentially the same, namely, whether there has been a miscarriage of justice for if the appeal Court is satisfied in point of fact that the accused has materially been prejudiced by the breach of procedure clearly a failure of justice has occurred; while if by reason of the breach of procedure there has in effect been substituted another mode of trial for that prescribed by the legislature as affording the best means of obtaining a fair trial, it is presumed that a fair trial has not been accorded the accused, and that in that case also there has been a failure of justice. In either case, therefore, the proceedings pro tanto will be set aside upon the ground that by reason of the breach of the rules of procedure a miscarriage of justice has been occasioned. On the other hand, if the appeal Court is not satisfied that the breach of procedure falls within one or other of those categories, in my opinion it ought not to hold that the proceedings have become vitiated merely because there has been a transgression of the prescribed rules by which such proceedings are to be regulated. It is ever to be borne in mind that rules and regulations are intended to be the handmaid and not the mistress of the law, and that in criminal proceedings it is of the utmost importance that a decision just and reasonable on the merits should not be disturbed because in the course of the proceedings some flaw can be detected that is not fundamental and which is not proved to have worked injustice to the accused, although it may constitute a breach of the rules of criminal procedure. Now, in 1901 Subramania Ayyar v. Emperor (8), was decided by the Privy Council. It was a plain case in which there had been a flagrant violation of a rule of procedure enacted to prevent the prejudice that an accused person inevitably will suffer if he is called upon to answer in one trial a multiplicity of charges. In that case the failure to conform to the procedure laid down in the Code of Criminal Procedure clearly went to the root of the trial, and vitiated it. Lord Halsbury (Lord Chancellor) however, in the course of delivering the judgment of the Board took occasion to animadvert upon the view expressed by Maclean, C. J., in Abdur Rahman v. Keramat (10):

"that because all irregularities are illegal, as he says in a sense, and this trial was illegal, that therefore all things that may in his view be called illegal are, therefore, by that one adjective applied to them, become equal in importance, and are susceptible of being treated alike Subramania Ayyar v. Emperor (8)."

That, no doubt, was a sound criticism of the proposition enunciated by Maclean, C. J., and I apprehend that it would equally be incorrect to assert that every violation of the Code of Criminal Procedure is curable as that every failure to conform to the rules of procedure ipso facto vitiates the proceedings. There is no magic in the use of the imperative in this connexion, and it cannot reasonably be contended that each and every transgression of the mandatory rules of procedure set out in the code are "equal in importance" or "are susceptible of being treated alike." I respectfully agree with the observations of Brown, L. J., in R v. Justice of the County of London (11):

"that there is no such exact division of sections in Acts of Parliament into those that are directory and those that are imperative as is ordinarily assumed to be a categorical division which exhausts every possible class of section. You must look at each Act of Parliament and each section to see exactly what it means. No other rule of construction of Acts of Parliament that I know of is of much use, except to try and find out as best you can what the Act of Parliament means, and that is not a rule of construction at all."

Whether a particular breach of the procedure prescribed in the Code vitiates the proceedings or not, in my opinion must depend upon the gravity of the breach and the consequences that are presumed or proved to have flowed from it and I am satisfied that Lord Halsbury, whose judgments were permeated with sturdy common sense, and who in Allen v. Flood (12), laid down:

"that every judgment must be read as applicable to the particular facts proved or assumed to be proved, since the generality of the expressions which may be found therein are not intended to be expositions of the whole law, but governed and qualified by the particular facts of the case in which such expressions are to be found"

did not intend to encourage in any way a tendency to exaggerate the importance of breaches of procedure that did not materially affect the due course of justice.

I discern, however, in the numerous decisions which purport to be founded upon Subramania Ayyar v. Emperor (8) a tendency to regard the judgment in that case as indicating that, in the opinion of the Judicial Committee, where there has been a departure from the strict letter of the Code of Criminal Procedure indeed, according to some of the decisions as I venture to think with all due deference even in matters of mere triviality and where it cannot reasonably be suggested that the accused has suffered any prejudice—the appeal Court ought to hold that a mistrial has taken place. The result has been that the path of a Judge exercising criminal jurisdiction is beset with pitfalls and obstructions, and his attention must needs be diverted unduly from the substance to the form of the proceedings, lest perchance if he fails in any particular to conform to the provisions of the Code the proceedings may be set aside. Of course, a Judge who deliberately or through inadvertence does not follow the procedure laid down in the Code fails in the performance of his duty, but the effect of non-compliance with the statutory rules of procedure, in my opinion, must vary according to the gravity and effect of the breach, and the test in each case is whether the proceedings have resulted in a miscarriage of justice. In Allen v. Flood (12) Lord Halsbury added:

"that a case is only an authority for what it actually decides. I entirely deny that it can be quoted for a proposition that may seem to follow logically from it. Such a mode of reasoning assumes that the law is necessarily a logical Code, whereas every lawyer must acknowledge that the law is not always logical at all."

and in, my opinion, no sanction or warrant can be found in Subramania Ayyar's case (8) for a method of construction that tends to magnify the importance of technical defects to the detriment of the substance and the merits of a case. In my opinion the objection raised to the validity of the trial in the present case is misconceived. The accused was tried by the statutory number of jurors, who were chosen by lot without objection or challenge from the accused. It is not proved that the accused was prejudiced in making his defence or in any other way by reason of the course that the proceedings took. In these circumstances an argument that the trial was a nullity merely because only 14 instead of 18 persons were summoned as jurors is one that with all due deference, in my opinion, ought not to be countenanced, and I agree that a negative answer should be given to the questions that have been propounded. The case of Abdur Rahman v. Emperor (9), decided in 1926 marked the turning of the tide, and the decision of the Full Bench on this reference will, I trust, have the salutary effect in criminal matters of discouraging objections that are merely technical, and broadening the outlook of those whose duty it is to administer justice according to law.

Emperor—Opposite Party.

Criminal Revn. No. 1076 of 1928, Decided on 8th February 1929, against order of Sess. Judge, Chittagong, D/-27th August 1928.

 Criminal P. C., S. 342—Accused cannot claim to be examined when he enters upon defence after prosecution has closed its case and he has once been examined.

The word "examination" in S. 342 includes cross-examination and re-examination and "examined" means completely examined.

When the accused enters upon his defence the stage at which he must be examined under S. 342 passes. After the prosecution has closed its case by examining its witness in chief and submitting them to cross examination and re-examination, the accused cannot re-open the prosecution case by applying for an indulgence from the Court for further cross-examination and then claim the right that he should be examined over again: A. I. R. 1923 Cal. 196 and A. I. R. 1923 Cal. 927, Ref. [P 220 C 1]

Anilchandra Ray Chaudhuri—for Petitioner.

Suhrawardy, J.—This rule has been issued upon two grounds. Ground 1 is that the provisions of S. 342, Criminal P. C., were not complied with and, therefore, the conviction is bad in law. The facts, in so far as they are relevant for our present purposes are that, on 16th May 1928, six prosecution witnesses were examined in chief and the accused was also examined. The charge was, thereafter, framed under S. 354, I. P. C., and the prosecution wanted to examine some witnesses. On 31st May 1928, the next hearing day, the prosecution examined one more witness and all the witnesses for the prosecution, eight in number, were cross-examined by the accused. Then the accused was examined, presumably under S. 342 and the Magistrate's order runs thus:

"Defence wants to examine six prosecution witnesses after this. Of them, the Sub-Inspector is to be resummoned. Others to come on personal recognizance. Accused as before. Defence will pay costs of all but the Sub-Inspector. Defence will bring in witnesses on next date."

On the next date, 14th June 1928, seven prosecution witnesses were cross-examined and the accused was again examined. Only one witness (the Sub-Inspector) was not in attendance, and, therefore, could not be cross-examined. He was examined on the next day of hearing, but no further examination of the accused was held. It is argued that the accused should have been examined under S. 342, after the examination of the Sub-Inspector and as he was not so examined, his conviction must be held to be illegal.

Section 342, Criminal P. C., has been interpreted by this Court in several cases and, in my opinion, has been too liberally construed. I do not think it will be profitable to discuss it any further. S. 342 says that, for the purpose of enabling the accused to explain any circumstances appearing in the evidence against him, the Court may at any stage of any enquiry or trial, without previously warning the accused, put such questions to him as the Court considers necessary and shall question him generally on the case after the witnesses for the prosecution have been examined and before he is called on for his defence.

As has been held in Mozahur Ali v. Emperor (1) and Dilakanta Chatterjee v. Emperor (2), the word "examination" in that section includes cross-examination and re-examination, that is the witnesses have been completely examined. Now in the present case, the witnesses were completely examined on 31st May 1928. The order recorded by the Magistrate on that day does not expressly say so, but it shows that, after the examination of the witnesses was closed and the accused examined, he was asked to examine his witnesses or he was called upon to enter upon his defence. The accused, however, applied to the Court for permission to recall some of the prosecution witnesses for further cross-examination. That was apparently done under S. 257 of the Code, which says that if the accused, after he has entered upon his defence, applies to the Magistrate, etc. This must be so, as the order recorded by the Magistrate on that date shows that the application to further examine some prosecution witnesses was made after the examination of the accused; and further, that the accused was ordered to pay the costs of the prosecution witnesses for their attendance. This order could only be passed under S. 257. It, therefore, appears that the accused had already entered upon his defence and the stage at which he must be examined under S. 342 had passed. I do not think it proper to hold that after the prosecution has closed its case by examining its witnesses in chief and submitting them to cross-examination and re-examination, the accused can well re-open the prosecution case by applying for an indulgence from the Court for further cross-examination and then claim the right that he should be examined over again. In my opinion, there has been sufficient compliance with the directory provision of the section and this ground must be overruled.

Ground 2 upon which this rule has been issued is that two of the witnesses, whom the trial Magistrate regarded as corroborating the complainant did not really corroborate her. The Magistrate, in his judgment, says that these two witnesses corroborate the story given by the girl. One of the witnesses says that,

"the girl told him that the accused had thrown away her pitcher and was pulling to take her away and thereby violated her modesty."

The other witness said that:

"she said that Obedar had thrown her pitcher and was pulling her to take her to the school hut."

He also said that he had heard her cries and saw the accused run away from the tank. This evidence corroborates the story of the girl, at any rate under S. 157, Evidence Act. I do not think that there is any substance in this ground.

The rule is, accordingly, discharged.

The accused must surrender to his bail and serve out the remainder of the sentence.

Graham, J.—I agree that the rule should be discharged. With regard to the first point, it seems to me that the entire argument on behalf of the petitioner is one of technicality, rather than of substance. I am further of opinion that, having regard to the facts and circumstances of this particular case, there was a proper compliance with the provisions of S. 342, Criminal P. C. As regards ground 2, on which the rule was granted, it may be observed, in the first place, that on reference to the judgment of the appellate Court it does not appear that the learned Sessions Judge has said anything about the evidence of Khalilur Rahaman and Chand Mia corroborating the story of the girl. This ground, therefore, was not correctly worded. The judgment of the trial Court does, however, refer to there being such corroboration, and when the evidence of these two witnesses is referred to, it is clear that they do in fact corroborate the story told by the girl. There is, therefore, no substance in this ground.

Rule discharged.

Satya Ranjan Bakhshi and another—Accused—Appellants.

v.

Emperor—Opposite Party.

Criminal Appeal No. 714 of 1928, Decided on 5th February 1929, from order of Chief Presy. Magistrate, Calcutta, D/- 3rd September 1928.

Penal Code, S. 124-A—It is not necessary that rebellion of any form should be advocated in article — Government may be brought into hatred and contempt by abuse of officials.

It is not necessary for the purposes of S. 124-A that the article should advocate any form of rebellion. So also it is quite possible by abuse of Government officials as officials to make an endeavour to bring into hatred or contempt the Government established by law in British India: 22 Bom. 112 and A. I. R. 1929 Cal. 309, Ref. [P 222 C 1]

B. C. Chatterji, Mrityunjoy Chatterji, Suresh Chandra Talukdar, Jyotishchandra Guha, Bholanath Ray and Binodelal Ghosh—for Appellants.

N. N. Sircar—for the Crown.

Rankin, C. J.—In this case the appellants have been convicted on a charge of sedition under S. 124-A, I. P. C., in connexion with an article which appeared in the issue of 20th May 1928, of a Calcutta daily newspaper published in Bengali and called the "Banglar Katha." The translation of the article is before us and it is headed "Barbarism in the Garb of Gentlemanliness." We have to read the article solely from the point of view of seeing whether we are satisfied by the internal evidence of the article itself that as a fact the writing or publication of the article was a successful or unsuccessful attempt to bring into hatred or contempt or to excite disaffection towards the Government established by law in British India. It does seem to me that, for the purpose of the present question, from the words used by the writer it is necessary to go into an analysis of the phrase :

"The Government established by law in British India."

Since the case of Queen Empress v. Bal Gangadhar Tilak (1) was decided, various changes in form and, to some extent, in principle, have been introduced into the constitution which obtains in British India. But we have, in this case, to see whether the article is an endeavour to express disapprobation against certain measures of Government without exciting or attempting to excite hatred, contempt or disaffection or whether in one guise or another an attempt to excite hatred, contempt or disaffection towards the Government established by law in British India is a part of the purpose of the writer. The article begins by a reference to State prisoners and persons who have been in prison under certain legislation without trial by the ordinary tribunals. It makes a reference to "living burials" taking place every month in the plains of Siberia under the Czar of Russia. It goes on to say that incidents of a far-away land are taking place daily at our own doors and that, while there is no Czar in a physical form in our country, the administrative system which is going on in place of the Czar is still more terrible than the Czar. I do not think there can be any doubt that "the administrative system which is going on" is a reference to the Government established by law in British India. It is not a reference specifically to any legislation or to the exercise of any legislative function, but the Government is not the same thing as the legislature and the administrative system in India as obtaining at the present time is clearly the object of animadversion in the article. It goes on to say that barbarity is going on under the name of civilization and all its diabolic cruelty is dancing under the mark of law ; and after that it says that more terrible even than the rule of the Czar of Russia is the administration of the bureaucracy in India :

"This is the acme at once of barbarism and of deceitfulness."

Apart from certain exaggerated expressions about a jail being as hot as fire and a reference to self-interested lying spies, we come to certain sentences which show the standpoint of the article for our present purpose. It says that even if the State prisoners had been convicted after an open trial, the writer would not have approved of the sentences. The reason given is that :

"no country has the right to fetter another country to satisfy the thirst for pillage."

Here we get a reference, a direct reference, to British rule at large :

"If the children of an enchained country do even take up arms for the deliverance of the land of their birth, even then no foreign oppressors can have the right to inflict punishment on them."

It goes further to talk about the inhuman oppression of foreign rule and about people having no power to liberate certain persons from the array of the bayonets of a handful of foreigners, and it speaks of weapons, namely, the weapon of boycott of British goods and that if it would be possible to break the "fangs of Lancashire" by boycotting cloths made in foreign countries :

"the edifice of foreign rule would have in a trice tumbled down to the dust of ruin like a house of cards."

My only purpose in making any citation from this article is to show why I think that the article (which is certainly full of hatred and bitterness) is clearly directed against the Government established by law in British India. It is doing exactly what Strachey, J., in the case cited [Queen Empress v. Bal Gangadhar Tilak (1)] said must not be done :

"But if he goes on beyond that, and, whether in the course of comments upon measures or not, holds up the Government itself to the hatred or contempt of his readers,—as for instance, by attributing to it every sort of evil and misfortune suffered by the people, or dwelling adversely on its foreign origin and character, or imputing to it base motives, or accusing it of hostility or indifference to the welfare of the people,—then he is guilty under the section, and the explanation will not save him."

Mr. Chatterji has pointed out to us that, while the article advocates the boycott of cloth, it does not in any way advocate any form of rebellion. I quite appreciate that, but that is not the charge. It is quite clear from the section itself that this is not a necessary element in an offence under S. 124-A. It has been pressed upon us that there are expressions which are to be attributed to a spirit of exaggeration and which may be regarded as excrescences upon this article. That, in fact, is true up to a point, but I must point out that there are exaggerations in this article which are of themselves clear evidence of the desire to bring the Government into hatred or contempt.

We have been treated to an argument on the strength of the Government of India Act of 1919 and on the fact that the legislative power in this country is no longer in the hands of Government officials; and Mr. Chatterji has argued that by the legislation of 1919, the law of sedition underwent a complete transformation. His idea is that "officialdom," to use the word which he tells us, no doubt quite correctly, would be a better translation of the Bengali word than the word "bureaucracy"—that officialdom are the servants of the people and, therefore, abuse of officialdom cannot possibly be an attempt to bring into hatred or contempt the Government established by law in British India. I can only say that in that argument, Mr. Chatterji is gravely wrong. It is quite possible, by the abuse of Government officials as officials, to make an endeavour to bring into hatred or contempt the Government established by law in British India. There is no necessary equivalence between mere legislative power and the :
"Government established by law in British India."

That is a concrete phrase which applies to such Government, whatever form that Government takes, and is just as much applicable to it after the legislation of 1919 as when it was enacted years ago.

We really, in this case, have to see whether, after making all reasonable allowances, we think it possible to hold that this is an article whose criticism, however unreasonable, is still legitimate; or whether it is really an attempt to bring into hatred or contempt the Government established by law in British India. Upon that question, I can entertain no doubt whatsoever that this article is not only on the wrong side of the line, but it is a very long way off the line.

In my judgment, the sentences which have been inflicted are very moderate and this appeal should be dismissed.

C. C. Ghose, J.—I agree. On a previous occasion, I attempted to indicate within what limits S. 124-A is to be worked and also endeavoured to make it clear that criticisms of measures of Government, however strongly worded, provided that criticism itself does not come within the mischief of S. 124-A, will leave the critic unscathed. In my opinion, this article taken as a whole, and after making all allowances for the enthusiasm of the writer goes very much beyond the limits indicated in my previous judgment in the case of the Emperor v. Satya Ranjan Bakshi (2). I am, therefore, of opinion that the learned Chief Presidency Magistrate is right in coming to the conclusion that this case does come within the mischief of S. 124-A and I agree also with the learned Chief Justice that the sentences inflicted are moderate and that this appeal should stand dismissed.

Ram Gopal Goenka—Petitioner.

v.

Corporation of Calcutta—Opposito Party.

Criminal Revn. Nos. 793 and 794 of 1929, Decided on 8th August 1929.

(a) Calcutta Municipal Act (3 of 1923), S. 363 (2)—Onus of proving that work was done more than five years previously is on owner.

Under S. 363 (2) the question before the Magistrate is not whether the Corporation has shown the date of the work being done or that the date was within five years of the institution of the proceedings but whether the owner has established to his satisfaction that the work has been done more than five years previously. (P 223 C 2)

(b) Criminal P. C., S. 200—Complaint for demolition of structure by building-surveyor of Calcutta Corporation is complaint by public servant and he need not be examined.

Under the Calcutta Municipal Act any Municipal officer is a public servant and apart altogether from any express provisions, a complaint for demolition of structure made by a buildings-surveyor of the Corporation is a complaint by a public servant in the discharge of his official duty and he need not be examined as to the complaint when lodging it.

(c) Calcutta Municipal Act (3 of 1923), S. 557-A (4)—Effect and Scope enunciated.

The effect of Cl. (4), S. 557-A is this that between August 1926 and August 1927, in a proceeding for demolition of structure under S. 363 even although five years may have expired, a legal proceeding would have been competent because the clause was intended as an extension of limit in view of the fact that legal proceedings had not been possible effectively for some considerable period prior to the amending Act. The clause does not say and it does not mean that no legal proceeding under S. 557-A is ever to be taken after the expiry of one year from August 1926. What it says is that if in the Act or any other law a legal proceeding between August 1926 and August 1927 would have been barred it is not to be barred until August 1927. Such a clause at no time was of any use to anyone except to the Corporation, and that in a case in which it was desired to get in extension of some restrictive period of limitation imposed by some other section of the Act or some other law.

K. N. Chaudhuri, Suresh Chandra Taluqdar and Kanaidhan Dutt — for Petitioner.

D. N. Bagchi and Gopendra Krishna Banerji—for Opposite Party.

Rankin, C. J.—In my opinion, this R. 793, should be discharged. The order complained of is an order directing demolition of certain structures mentioned in the order under the headings (a), (b), (c) and (d). The contention before us is, first, that so far as (d) is concerned the rule is not pressed. So far as (c) is concerned, it is conceded that there is some evidence before the Magistrate to show that the structures were raised within five years from the date of the present proceedings. So far as (a) and (b) are concerned, the contention of the learned counsel on behalf of the applicant is that there is no specific evidence on the part of the Corporation to show that these structures were erected within five years of the present proceedings and that the Magistrate should have been satisfied with certain evidence called by the owner to the effect that the structures were erected more than five years from the date of the proceedings. Another ground is taken to the effect that the whole proceedings before the Magistrate were bad because they were instituted upon a complaint made by Mr. C. K. Chatterji and that under S. 200, Criminal P. C., it was necessary that Mr. Chatterji should be examined, and on this point reference has been made to a decision of this Court in the case of Ambica Prosad v. Corporation of Calcutta (1).

As regards the question of the age of the structures the provision of the Calcutta Municipal Act is clear. Sub-S. (2), S. 363 is as follows :

"Notwithstanding anything contained in sub-S. (1), no proceeding shall be instituted thereunder in respect of any work which has been done more than five years before the institution of such proceedings, provided that the onus of proving that the work was done more than five years previously shall lie on the owner."

Under this provision it is claimed that the question before the Magistrate was not whether the Corporation had shown the date of the work being done or that the date was within five years of the institution of the proceedings but whether the owner had established to his satisfaction that the work had been done more than five years previously. The Magistrate had dealt in a most painstaking fashion with this question and he has given very good reason, as it seems to me, for refusing to be satisfied with the evidence of the owner to the effect that the work was done more than five years from the date of the proceeding. In my judgment, there were materials before him which entirely justified him in finding, as he has in fact found, that the structures in question were newly made in 1923-24 and, therefore, are within the period of five years prescribed by the section which I have just referred to.

On the question whether the proceedings are bad by reason that the complainant was not examined under S. 200, Criminal P. C., the Magistrate contends in his explanation, first, that the Magistrate in a case of this sort is not acting with a complaint under the Criminal Procedure Code at all. Whether that view be right or wrong I do not require now to consider. What the Magistrate says is that even if this be taken to be a complaint under the amended Criminal Procedure Code there is no need any longer to have the complainant examined when a complaint is filed by a public servant acting in the discharge of his official duties. Under the Calcutta Municipal Act any Municipal officer is a public servant ; but, apart altogether from any express provision, it appears to me plain that if the document referred to is to be treated as a complaint it is a complaint by the Building Surveyor of the Corporation acting as a public servant in the discharge of his official duties.

For these reasons, it appears to me that this rule must be discharged.

This R. 794 has been obtained at the instance of certain occupiers of the premises referred to in the previous rule and the only additional ground which requires to be considered is this : It appears that these occupiers were made parties to the Magistrate's proceedings on 17th January 1928. The contention is that under the amending Act 5 (B. C.) of 1926, Cl. (4), S. 557-A, Municipal Act, puts a limit of one year from the date of the commencement of the Act to the time within which proceedings may be taken in such a case as this against a party. When one comes to examine Cl. (4), S. 557-A, one finds that its real meaning is as follows : When the Calcutta Municipal Act of 1923 was first passed it contained, as afterwards appeared, insufficient provision for a case in which prior thereto an authorized structure had been erected and certain proceedings taken before the General Committee of the Corporation. The new Act applied very well to cases which arose after it was passed but there was no provision which enabled cases which had occurred and been in part dealt with prior to the passing of the new Act to be dealt with under the machinery of the new Act. The object of Act 3 (B. C.) of 1926 was to enable the new machinery to be applied to cases which had arisen prior to the passing of the Act of 1923. But between the date in 1923 when the Calcutta Municipal Act was passed and the date in 1926 which this amendment was made there was no valid or effective process for taking action with reference to cases of work done prior to 1923. The law being out of action for a certain period it was provided by Cl. (4), S. 557-A as follows :

"Notwithstanding anything contained in this Act or in any other law, a suit or legal proceeding under this section may be instituted at any time within one year from the commencement of the Calcutta Municipal (Amendment) Act, 1926."

We are dealing with a limit of five years. The present applicants were made parties to the proceedings on 17th January 1928, and unless they show that these structures were erected before 17th January 1923 they do not show that they are protected by any time limit imposed by the Act. The effect of Cl. (4) to which I have referred is this that between August 1926 and August 1927, in a case such as this, even although five years had expired, a legal proceeding would have been competent because the clause was intended as an extension of limit in view of the fact that legal proceedings had not been possible effectively for some considerable period prior to the Amending Act. The clause does not say and it does not mean that no legal proceeding under S. 557-A is ever to be taken after the expiry of one year from August 1926. What it says is that if in the Act or any other law a legal proceeding between August 1926 and August 1927 would have been barred, it is not to be barred until August 1927. Such a clause at no time was of any use to anyone except to the Corporation, and that in a case in which it was desired to get an extension of some restrictive period of limitation imposed by some other section of the Act or some other law. In this view of the meaning of the section, it is unnecessary for me to examine further into the objection taken in this case.

The Magistrate has in his explanation contended that :

"the Corporation does not proceed against the tenants. It is only the Magistrate who has to hear the tenants under Act 3 (B. C.) of 1923 as well as Act 3 (B. C.) of 1889. The notice on the tenants can be issued at any time before the disposal of the case."

He goes on to cite a ruling of this Court to the effect that the law does not require specifically that a notice should be served on the occupier and that it is for the occupier to move the Magistrate. Whether there is anything in this contention or not, the ground upon which this rule was granted is not made out. The ground was that the order was barred by limitation under S. 557-A. In my opinion, therefore, this rule must be discharged.

THE CRIMINAL CASES JOURNAL SECTION

S. 27, Evidence Act, and A. I R. 1929 Lahore 344 (F.B.).

BY MR. F. C. WIDGE, Advocate, High Court Karachi.

"Now it will be observed from the opening words of the section that it is really an exception to the sections immediately preceding it and which prohibit the use by the prosecution against the accused person of a confession made by the latter under certain specified circumstances. In its inception, therefore, this section is intended to enable the prosecution to prove against the accused a confession made by him, provided the conditions laid down therein have been complied with. The conditions are (a): that in consequence of the information given by the accused person some "fact" is discovered, some fact or course which is relevant to the issue involved in the case, and (b) that only so much of the information given by the accused is provable as relates distinctly to the "fact" thereby discovered. Within these limitations the prosecution is entitled to prove against the accused a confession made by him to a police officer or while in police custody. The reason for this exception to the general rule is that there exists in such a case an independent circumstance which provides a reliable test of the genuineness of the confession that is to say, the discovery of a relevant fact. We are, however, on the present occasion concerned with the extent of the second limitation mentioned above. The question is, how much of the information given by the accused in this case relates distinctly to the fact thereby discovered such fact being the disposal or possession of stolen property by the prisoner. In my opinion the prosecution is entitled to prove the whole of the information which relates to the fact discovered; in other words, the entire statement made by the accused which enabled the police to discover the fact and to connect or identify the same with the crime, is admissible against the accused."

Section 27 is, however, not intended to let in a confession generally but only such particular part of it as set the person, to whom it was made, in motion and led to his ascertaining the fact or facts of which he gives evidence: Empress v. Babu Lal (1), Per Straight, Off. C. J., cited and adopted by Norris, J., in Adu Shikdar v. Queen Empress (17). As the discovery intended by this section is:

"The physical act of finding upon search or inquiry some thing or material fact, the existence or the exact locality of which was unknown till then: vide Woodroffe and Ameer Ali's Evidence Act, p. 278, 7th Ed."

(17) [1885] 11 Cal. 685.

1930 Cr. C. J 1b/4 & 2a/4

the finding of the thing proves that the information is true and not fabricated. And this correctness of the accused's statement is the ground of its admission which is an exception to the general rule. The statements admitted by the section are statements preceding finding upon such inquiry, for the fact must be discovered in consequence of the information disclosed in the confession, but whether discovered by the recipient of the confession or by someone else is immaterial. There may be cases in which a fact is discovered, partly on information furnished by the accused and partly by his conduct, but when the discovery is wholly due to his conduct, proof of that conduct alone would appear to be relevant, and not proof of his confession: see Principles of the Law as to Admissions and Confessions by H. A. Rose, I. C. S., p. 35.

The exposition of the law in Harnam Singh v. Emperor (8), was not accepted as correct by another Bench of the High Court (Harrison and Dalip Singh, JJ.) in Karam Din v. Emperor (18) and so when the question again cropped up before their Lordships of the Lahore High Court (Tek Chand and Agha Haidar, JJ.), their Lordships referred the following question to the Full Bench:

"A is being tried under S. 302, I. P. C., for having committed the murder of B, who is proved to have suddenly disappeared from his house and whose dead body was recovered from a well two days later. At the time of his disappearance B was wearing certain ornaments, but these ornaments were not found on his body at the time of its recovery from the well. During the investigation A is alleged to have made a statement to the police in these terms: "I had removed the karas, had pushed the boy into the well, and had pledged the karas with Allah Din." and in consequence of the information so received the karas were recovered from Allah Din, which were identified as those worn by B at the time of his disappearance. The whole or any part of that statement admissible against A."

dence Act, and if the latter, how much?"

And the Full Bench held and answered the reference by saying:

"that the statement that the accused had pledged with Allah Din, the karas subsequently recovered from the latter is admissible under S. 27, Evidence Act, but that the rest of the incriminating statement cannot be received in evidence."

(Fforde and Jai Lal, JJ., who had decided Harnam Singh v. Emperor (8), dissenting and holding that the information "I had removed the karas and had pledged the karas with Allah Din" may be proved while the statement "had pushed the boy into the well" is not admissible).

Thus, so far as His Majesty's High Court of Judicature at Lahore is concerned the matter has been settled that the statement made by the accused cannot be proved in its entirety but only to the extent of the irreducible minimum in consequence of which some fact or tangible thing is discovered or recovered. Vide opinion of his Lordship, Sir Shadi Lal, C. J., adopted by the Full Bench.

The fact that something is discovered in consequence of the information elicited in the confession, however induced and under whatever circumstances made is some guarantee of its truth and the important point is not so much what information the accused gave, but what fact was discovered in consequence of it. Indeed this confession is partially admitted on the principle of S. 9, Evidence Act, as "necessary to explain or introduce a relevant fact" viz., the discovery. The discovery does not guarantee the truth of the confession as a whole, it only gives a certain guarantee that the part of the confession which distinctly relates to it, is true. As remarked above the section was not intended to let in a confession generally but only such particular part of it as set the person to whom it was made, in motion, and led to his ascertaining the fact or facts of which he gives evidence; the discovery also must be the result of the information and the test of the admissibility of the information has been held to be: "Was the fact discovered by reason of the information, and how much of the information was the immediate cause of the fact discovered?" Whether the information was the immediate cause must depend on the circumstances of each case. There appears to be no authority for saying that it must be the direct cause of the discovery.

Their Lordships of the Bombay High Court (Faycett, C. J. and Madgavkar, J.) in Court

Shivabhai Bepharbhai v. Emperor (15), held that a statement made by an accused person while in the custody of the police to the effect that he had burnt the deceased's clothes, and would point out where he had done so, is admissible in evidence under S. 27, Evidence Act, on the discovery of the clothes in the place pointed out.

The High Court of Patna (Mullick, C. J., and Wort. J.) in Patna High Court in Lalji Dusadh v. Emperor (16), held that where, in answer to the investigating police officer, the accused stated that he threw the weapon with which he assaulted the deceased at a certain place, and the weapon was discovered as the result of that disclosure, the statement consisting of the assertion that the weapon had been thrown at a particular place and that it was the weapon with which the offence was committed was admissible in evidence under S. 27,

In Sogaimuthu Padayachi v. Emperor (14), the whole of the Madras view. prisoner's statement "properties stolen from the mutt were buried by me and others in the Cauvery-Bank" was held to be admissible in evidence against him. Wallace, J., observed:

"The essence of the section is that the statement made by the accused must be a confession i. e., an admission or statement suggesting an inference of guilt is to be excluded and only words, which directly disclose where the property is, are admissible, then the section has no application. It is clear that the Court is not entitled to separate up the actual words used by the accused, which led to the discovery of the property, strike out some words here and admit some words there. So much of the statement, as was the immediate cause of the discovery, is admissible. In this case, if the property was discovered in a particular place, because the accused said, "I buried it there." that statement is certainly admissible."

Spencer, Offg. C.J., was of the opinion;

"But if the accused did use the words, then they are parts of the sentence in which he gave information which led to the discovery of the stolen property and parts of sentences cannot be excluded so as to have the effect of making the whole statement incomplete and less intelligible."

Devadoss, J., was also of the view that:

"the whole of the statement made by the prisoner was admissible under S. 27, Evidence Act."

These decisions of the Bombay, Patna and Madras High Courts purport to proceed upon an interpretation of the section to which its wording naturally, on a wide construction of its terms leads. As Cecil Fforde, J. remarked in Harnam Singh v. The Crown:

"The Indian Evidence Act in express terms puts the law on the subject on a wider basis, than does the common law in England."

This is also after the American practice, for;

"In America the tendency of the Courts appears to be to admit the whole confessional statement, once it has been proved that some relevant fact has been brought to light in consequence thereof": see Wigmore on Evidence."

There is no recent English authority on the subject "probably due to the fact that in England the question now very rarely arises." And as his Lordship, Sukhan v. Emperor (19), the Chief Justice of the Lahore High Court (Sir Shadi Lal) observed:

"In determining the question referred to us we cannot derive much assistance from the English Law. There is no statutory provision in England dealing with the subject of confessions and the common law does not prohibit the reception in evidence of a confession made by an accused to a police officer or whilst he is in the custody of police. A confession by inducement, threat or promise is, however, inadmissible, unless it is confirmed by the discovery of property. The rule as laid down in R. v. Warickshall (5), to the effect that only the fact discovered could be given in evidence, but the incriminating statement improperly obtained was wholly inadmissible, even though the fact was discovered in consequence of that statement. But in subsequent cases this rule has been relaxed in favour of the prosecution. In R. v. Gould (7), in which a lantern was recovered in consequence of information improperly obtained from the prisoner, Tindal, C. J., admitted the statement that the prisoner had thrown a lantern into the pond, on the ground that the words used with reference to the thing found ought to be given in evidence but he excluded the rest of the confession."

The learned Chief Justice proceeded to remark:

"The judgments of the English Courts are not easy to reconcile, but the rule followed in the later authorities appears to be that so much of the inadmissible confession as relates strictly to the fact discovered in consequence thereof may be given in evidence, but independent statements, though made at the same time, must be rejected."

"Nor do the judgments of the High Courts in India, to which our attention has been invited by the learned counsel on both sides, disclose a complete unanimity as to the extent of the information admissible in evidence under S. 27. The consensus of judicial opinion is, however, in favour of the view that the section allows only so much of the information as leads directly and immediately to the discovery of a fact, but the portion of the information which merely explains the material thing discovered, cannot be proved. This rule is not only warranted by the language of the section, which embodying as it does, an exception to the general rule against the admissibility of confessions, must receive a strict construction but also conforms to the principle upon which the exception is founded."

"The real difficulty arises in applying the test to the facts of a particular case. To illustrate this difficulty I may mention a case in which the admissible portion of a confession is so mixed up with the inadmissible one that these two cannot be separated without modifying the language in which the confession was made by the accused. In cases of this description, which have led to a divergence of judicial opinion it has been laid down in some judgments that the whole of the statement can be given in evidence, and that it is not competent to the Court to split up the language used by the accused in conveying the information, to strike out some words which are objectionable and to admit only those which relate strictly to the discovery."

"There is considerable force in this argument, but I do not see why the protection thrown round an accused person by Ss. 24, 25 and 26, Evidence Act, would be dependent upon the ingenuity of the police officer or the folly of the prisoner in composing the sentence which conveys the information. Suppose a prisoner on being asked about the weapon of offence says: "I buried a hatchet in my field. I killed A with it." Now, it is indisputable that the recovery of a hatchet from the field renders only the first part of the statement admissible, and that the second part cannot be given in evidence. But, if the police officer converts the two sentences into one and repeats to the accused as saying "the hatchet, with which I killed A, I buried in my field," then, according to those judgments, the whole of the above statement would be admissible."

"The admissibility or otherwise of the information must depend upon its intrinsic character, and not upon the manner in which the sentence conveying the information is framed by the police officer or the prisoner. It would be unreasonable to suggest that a statement, which could not be received under S. 27, if it were placed before the Court in a separate sentence, should be let in as soon as it is amalgamated with the admissible statement. In determining the extent of the statement, which should be provable on the ground of its being the proximate cause of the discovery, the Courts must have regard not to the composition of the sentences in which the statement is couched but to its substance."

Thus the salutary rule deducible from the above statement of the law is that the intrinsic character and the substance of the statement made by the prisoner with reference to the discovery are alone to be looked to, and judicial opinion in the Highest Courts in India will naturally keep constantly veering round in all probability as near as may be to this view; such will be the case, however, so long as there are no legislative changes of substance or principle effected in the language of the section which, as it at present stands, though in the words of Straight, Offg. C. J., in Empress v. Babulal (1) "with the deepest respect for the learned authors responsible for the shape given to the section" is not as happily drawn as it might have been yet is not very easy to improve upon. And there are not going to be made any drastic changes of substance or principle in the section at the hands of the legislature in India so long as the rules of evidence in the juristic system of civilized and enlightened states remain what they have been so far and which have sprung into existence as the outcome and result of long standing experience, strenuous labour, close thought and penetrating legal insight and undivided attention and application on the part of eminent Judges and Jurists brought to bear on the subject.

Canon Law and a Registrar Marriage

BY

A. PHILIPPE FONSECA.

Recently in the case of *Saldanha v. Saldanha Blackwell and Kemp, JJ., of the High Court of Bombay decided an important point of law with regard to Catholics, and incidentally all those who are bound by personal law, viz., Hindus, Mahomedans, etc. They had to consider S. 88, Christian Marriage Act, 15 of 1872, which reads as follows :

"Nothing in this Act shall be deemed to validate any marriage which the personal law applicable to either of the parties forbids him or her to enter into."

They held that the Code of Canon law is the personal law of the Catholics but as the section uses the word, "forbids," and as there is no canon in the code that pointedly prohibits a civil marriage Catholics are not prevented from marrying before a marriage registrar, if they so choose. For non-Catholics this ruling is important in this way. The Act in S. 4 refers to "one or both of whom is or are a Christian." Thus S. 88 of the Act applies to Hindus and Mahomedans. According to the Judges the Courts will recognize Hindu and Mahomedan Law as their personal law as far as the essentials of a contract of marriage are concerned. But if it is provided therein that a religious ceremony is essential to the validity of a marriage, such a rule will not be enforced as it relates to a mere matter of form. Consequently, a Hindu or Mahomedan can marry before a marriage registrar, and be legally bound by it, unless there is a direct, express and clear prohibition of such a marriage which is doubtful. Thus, this decision has to be carefully considered by all.

This case really raises an interesting and intriguing question of law, and I propose to deal with it as shortly as possible. I take the liberty of doing so with the greatest respect to the learned Judges. All the parties in this case are Roman Catholics and Goans or Indian Christians. The facts are as follows : Mr. A married Miss. B before the marriage registrar secretly, and did not go through any religious ceremony as mentioned in the Canon law. They did not thereafter live as man and wife. Then Mr. A got engaged to Miss. C, who was probably unaware of a previous marriage, and married her before a person who had received Episcopal Ordination, a Catholic priest as required by Canon Law. Thereafter, they lived as man and wife. A was prosecuted and tried for bigamy, but was acquitted by the Sessions Judge. B also filed a suit against A and C for declaration and restitution of conjugal rights. This suit was decreed by Kemp, J., (now Sir N. W.). Government appealed against the acquittal, and the defendants against the decree. In appeal the respondent was found guilty and the decree of the lower Court was confirmed.

As I am not concerned with the criminal appeal particularly, I will restrict myself to a few words. Taking Canon Law to be a foreign (or special) law, proved as a fact by an expert and exhibited probably under S. 88, Evidence Act, it can be argued that if it is a question of fact, no offence has been committed because under S. 79, I. P. C., a "mistake of fact" is condoned. On the other hand if it is argued that it is a matter of law, then the Canon Law as the personal law of the Catholics may be said to be incorporated in the Act by S. 88, thus, it is law, and the accused is "justified by law." Apart from "the no trace of good faith," on the interpretation general, previous to the judgment, Catholics bona fide believed the law to be as stated by Rev. Fr. Fortuny S. J. and acted on it. Therefore, the accused might have been given the benefit of the doubt, as the case was practically one prima facie impressionis. But the judges appear to have rejected the latter argument.

I now come to the civil appeal. Though Blackwell, J., has expressed himself very guardedly, in his judgment yet indubitably he appears to have held: (a) that Canon Law is the personal law of the Catholics, (b) that the lex domicilli does not arise (otherwise it would have been useful), (c) that S. 88 applies to the essentials of a marriage contract, (d) that the marriage is not valid by Canon Law, (e) that the Act refers to forms, and (f) that part 6 alone of the Act does not apply to Catholics. Kemp. J., agrees with him, but the following remarks by him are worth noting: (a) "I think it was probably the intention of both to go through a religious ceremony" (b) no need to discuss Canon Law prior to 1918, and (c) "I think the abidance before us supports this contention" an entire nullity." Further, the Sessions Judge has not been overruled on the following points expressly: (a) that "it is impossible to split up the law of marriage", (b) that "the law that governs prohibited degrees governs also the validity" and (c) that "Canon Law defines valid marriages." Keeping the above in mind I proceed to consider the questions whether Canon Law forbids a civil marriage, whether S. 88 applies to forms, whether the other parts apply to Catholics, whether the English decisions are relevant, and whether "invalid" is as good as "forbidden."

The learned Judges have based their decision on the apparently subtle distinction between "invalid" and "forbids" this is the sole point. The judgment is in accordance with Anglo Saxon jurisprudence which has turned away from the continental juristic thought. Canon Law is a product of the continent of Europe. In this case instead of interpreting the Code as a Latin jurist would, we have a continental system of law interpreted according to English notions and school of thought. Therefore, I may be permitted to say that this important case discloses not only a point of "Conflict of Laws" but also a point of "Conflict of Thought." Rightly or wrongly, the impression left on one is that the Judges grant a great deal of the premises, but fight shy of the conclusion on account of the system of law they represent. That according to me is the one and only explanation of judgments, otherwise brilliant and lucid.

All the English decisions cited are distinguishable and in my humble opinion do not support the findings arrived at, if viewed as stated above. On the contrary the foreign Court decrees, adverted to therein, express the law correctly as applicable to India: vide para. 3 supra. I distinguish them on the following grounds: (a) the marriages were generally celebrated in England; (b) the English principle emphatically was that the lex loci contractus was binding on the parties; (c) one party or both were English or were residing in England at that time or had expressly come there to marry; (d) the decisions were according to the common law of England, whether statute or case law; (e) in none of the cases, and this is the main point, did the "personal law" applicable and binding on the parties as declared by the Act in India, come up for discussion; (f) in all those cases it was only an academic point of foreign law, not binding on the Judges, as the Canon Law, but as an acceptable or non-acceptable rule of jus gentium; (g) in some the facts also differed. Since the Reformation, the Judges and the law of England had designedly drifted away from the Codes followed all over Europe and therefore it is, that the rulings are quite off the point because here, so to say, the Canon Law is engrafted on the Indian System of Law. I might summarise the English view as expressed in Chitty v. Chitty (1), English Jurisprudence is not against its own nationality, it overrides every rule of foreign law, and overlooks a disability or invalidity and its consequence, mentioned in a foreign system of law.

I will next refer to the Christian Marriage Act.—only so far as the sections apply to Catholics. In Part 1, S. 5(1) refers to a person who has received episcopal ordination marrying persons in accordance with his ceremonies, and S. 4 declares that a marriage solemnized in contravention of S. 4 is void. The rest of the part does not apply to Catholics, as it refers to licensing of ministers and marriages. Part 2, time and place does not govern a Catholic priest in terms of the proviso. Part 3 again will not apply to Catholics. It is worth noting that it refers to a minister licensed under the Act, not episcopally ordained: vide S. (5) (a) minister licensed. Even otherwise, a Catholic priest with reference to this part is exempted from the penalties (cf. S. 73) and consequently its observance. Part 4, registration, a Catholic priest by S. 20 has to follow the form prescribed by his Bishop. The "shall" is mandatory. The rest of the part does not apply. I leave part 5 for discussion last. Part 6, Native Christians, does not apply to Catholics (vide. S. 65) except as to the keeping of a register book, extracts, and allowing searches and copies of entries. Here the exemption is express but elsewhere the same effect can be gathered from the sections, mentioned. It is unnecessary to refer to part 7 penalties, except that S. 66 refers to the oath as required by a Church. Part 8, miscellaneous, contains the last and notorious S. 88. I will consider part 5 now. In this part, Marriage Registrar, S. 44 refers to S. 19, but for Catholics this will be according to the Canon Law, (Vide part 3 supra.) Supposing a Goan is a Native Christian, under S. 59 registration must be in accordance with S. 37, which does not apply to Catholics. (Vide part 4 supra.) S. 65 declares that "nothing herein contained shall invalidate any marriage celebrated between Roman Catholics under the provisions of part 5 of Act 25 of 1864 previous to 23rd February 1865." I speak subject to correction re: Act, 25—these words refer to marriages without priests and specifically to marriages before 23rd, February 1865. If part 5 of Act 15 of 1872, applied thereafter this was unnecessary because by S. 2 of Act 15 of 1872, the previous Acts were repealed "so as not to invalidate any solemnised marriage, and all licenses granted and things duly done shall be deemed to be done under this Act." This taken in connexion with the frequent repetition of the words in the Act "rules, rites, ceremonies and customs of a Church" not as the judgment might show only the essentials of a contract of marriage but even a mere matter of form is recognised by the Act. Why should it not support the conclusion that part 5 does not apply to Catholics, when the Latin Code provides for the priest as an essential: vide infra. According to me, therefore; the Code of Canon Law supersedes the Act.,

It is admitted that the Act governs forms and forms only. If that is so, how can S. 88 refer to an essential and be an exception to the Act, when it is not expressly said so. S. 88 must consequently refer to forms. According to para 10 below and Canon Law, form is an assential, but, even otherwise the Act will not validate what Canon Law says is invalid. The preamble supports the finding as to form. The distinction is wrong on another ground. S. 88 reads as follows. "nothing in this Act shall be deemed to validate any marriage." This can mean only the form of marriage. To say "essential to marriage" does not make sense and requires an additional clause. As the Sessions Judge puts it so neatly "it is impossible to split up the law as to marriage." In England this splitting up is done by the Common Law. It is not so in India. In the Canon Law there is no splitting up, and that is the Law. In Hindu and Mahomedan Law, form is a part of their personal law and is binding on them. The Courts enforce it as such. Why this distinction with Catholics? The "which" in the section relates to "marriage." It can only mean "which form of marriage," and not "which essential or substantial requisite of a marriage." To supply a casus omissus, like the former, is permissible as the act relates to forms. The section ends with the words "to enter into." It refers to a contract of marriage, "which form of marriage," and not "an essential requisite of a marriage." This ought to be the proper construction of the section, and it is consistent with the preamble of the act.

It is the obiter dicta in the English cases that are important when considering this case, and show the true solution of the problem. In Chitty v. Chitty a case of mere disability cited by the respondents, Sir Gorell Barnes P. says at p. 82 :

"Moreover, there is likely to be some confusion if this is not borne in mind that where the judgment speaks of essentials and forms, those who decided those cases were looking at it from the English standpoint; but it may be observed that what may be regarded as form in this country might in a foreign country be regarded as an essential."

In my poor opinion S. 88 refers both to forms and essentials, but according to this remark of a great Judge, in Canon Law the presence of an ordained priest will be an essential and not a mere matter of form. The same Judge in Ogden v. Ogden (2) at p. 59 says :

"there are certain exceptions, as, for instance, when the lex celebrationis violates the precepts of religion," but afterwards he narrows down the principle. Lord Stowell in Herbert v. Herbert (3) at p. 63 states that :

"this is according to the jus gentium; whatever the regulations may be . . . if they are what the canonical law of the foreign country supports, the canonical law of this country must enforce it."

This was the principle to follow and give effect to in India on the strength of the Canon Law. If the law with regard to Catholics is the Canon Law then as James, Bagallay, and Cotton, L. J., in Sottomayor v. De Barros (4) at p. 5 said: "the law of a country 'Canon Law' where a marriage is solemnised must alone decide all questions relating to the validity 'vide Canon Law' of the ceremony by which the marriage is alleged to have been constituted."

The law of marriage should not be split up, as the Sessions Judge says, "the same rule was recognized. . . nor is their reasoning weakened by the fact that certain exceptions out of the rule have been generally recognised, viz., where marriages are contrary to the law of religion. . . and the settled policy of the nation."

Simonin v. Mellae (5) lays down at p. 102 :

This case is restricted to certain facts, but the rule remains. The policy of the Indian Legislature, as Lopez v. Lopez (6) shows, was to recognize the Canon Law, and the civil marriage must be held contrary to it.

The Indian decisions are more to the point on the principle that is applicable than the English cases which have preferably been followed. In Lopez v. Lopez (6) at p. 717, Garth, C. J. and Wilson, J. said :

"the members of the Roman Catholic religion are, subject to the Ecclesiastical Law which regulates the marriage of Roman Catholics."

In Lucas v. Lucas (7) at p. 191, Pratt, J., notes :

"what is prescribed by the Holy Catholic Church for the validity of mixed marriages," and at p. 194 quoting an eminent writer, Rattigan :

"if both parties are subject to the same personal law the marriage will be invalid if forbidden, valid if allowed by that law."

This will be more clear when I touch upon the words "invalid" and "forbidden." In Kolandaivelu, In re (8) a strong Full Bench refer : "to the general law of the church, which regarded marriage as a sacrament as well as a contract."

The above leads one to the conclusion that the Canon Law alone applies to Roman Catholics.

It is not definitely decided whether the lex loci contractus in Indian or Canon Law. It appears that both are the leges loci, though more is said of Indian Law. But this does not appear to be sound according to the English cases. The law of England is that the lex loci contractus is the only law applicable to the parties, and validity is governed by that law. In India henceforth the essentials will be governed by Canon Law and the form by Indian Law a very undesirable state. But what effect have these words in S. 4 of the Act "applicable to either of the parties" and "one or both of whom is or are a Christian." This is not the law in England (see the cases cited). Suppose a Catholic marries a Hindu, and the Hindu personal law is against such a marriage and the form itself, i. e., forbids, the Hindu law will be enforced but not the Canon Law in a similar case. The old English Law is correct as far as Catholics go, when the validity depended on solemnisation by ordained clergyman. Reg. v. Mills is good law for Catholics. Rayden on Divorce 2, Edn. 1926 in relation to forms and ceremonies says at page 36 : "the validity of a marriage almost entirely depends on the observance of statutory provisions."

In this case it will be the Canon Law. Brown and Watts state at p. 93, Divorce 9th Edn. 1921 : "if the formal requisites are known to both sides, the validity will depend on that."

It appears from Kemp, J's. judgment that the concerned were waiting for a religious ceremony to be performed. The validity must depend on Canon Law, if they were aware of its provisions.

What is the effect of "forbids" and "invalid?" I will try to be reasonable. The learned Judges refer to valid and binding as against invalid and not binding i. e. null and void. Canon Law uses the one word invalid. The meaning in English will be not only invalid, but also null and void or illegal. The judgments appear to show that the word has been interpreted to mean voidable which is translated in Latin by another word not "invalidus." How has invalid been interpreted in India before? In Lopez v. Lopez: (6) the evidence at p. 716 reads as follows (Rev Fr. Harford) "marriage with a deceased's wife's sister is perfectly invalid unless a dispensation.. Cunningham, J., at p. 714 interprets this "thus by the rules of the Church they were void." Garth, C. J., Willson, J. at p. 732, Pratt and Mitra in Lucas v. Lucas (7) Brooke v. Brooke Eversley on "Domestic Relations and other authorities use invalid" to mean "null and void." S. 65 of the Act uses the words "shall invalidate any marriage" as meaning "null and void" If it is void it is against law, it is illegal. Now gambling contracts and contracts against public policy are void under the Contract Act. It is nowhere said that they are forbidden. But what is the meaning of that "voidness." It means it is forbidden. It is not that because they are void and not forbidden the Court will enforce such contracts. "Invalid" is used in the Code in such a sense. This sense or meaning amounts to nothing less than a prohibition. In the Penal Code the section only says if you murder you will be hanged it does not forbid one expressly from murdering. Therefore I wonder if one can murder with impunity. The other words used along with "invalid" e. g., "bound" "must", etc., in the Canon law make it clear that the Code means to forbid nothing less.

The Act recognizes custom and the custom based on Canon Law could be easily proved that since the Tamesti decree Catholics must marry before a priest and the prohibition is more clearly stated there as shown by Blackwell, J's judgment. This statement on the strength of Canon Law is accepted by Kemp, J., vide his remark "an entire nullity." It is also admitted that the Code codifies all the Catholic Law in force prior to 1918. Therefore, the Canon Law must be taken to prohibit in terms of the Tamesti decree. That is how it has to be interpreted or custom forbids it S. 112, Government of India Act, is instructive on the point arising in this case :

"The High Court... shall... in matters of contract and dealing between party and party when both parties are subject to the same personal law or custom... decide according to that personal law or custom..."

The Letters Patent (Bombay) also, I think, support the Warren Hastings rule. re personal law and custom.

v.

Dukari Chandra Karmakar—Accused.

Jury Ref. No. 24 of 1929, Decided on 24th June 1929, made by Sess. Judge, Birbhum, D/- 16th March 1929.

* Criminal P. C., S. 367 (5)—Court must consider question of sentence with reference to circumstances and not by S. 367 alone—Accused young and of good character—Provocation at unsympathetic treatment from his murdered wife's relation—Transportation held to be sufficient.

Apparently the provision in S. 367 (5) contemplates that death sentence is to be passed as a matter of course unless there is sufficient reason to the contrary. But the Court must consider the question of sentence with reference to the circumstances and if these circumstances justify the passing of a sentence other than the sentence of death, the Court must pass that sentence. Therefore, in fixing the measure of punishment one is to be guided not by S. 367, but by various other matters, for instance, the enormity or otherwise of the offence and the particular circumstances under which the accused committed it. [P 290 C 1]

D, a mere lad of twenty, went to retire with his wife and shut himself in the upper room. In the morning the door was found open and the girl was found murdered. D was found absconding and remained hiding for some six weeks :

Held : that on consideration of his age, good character, the provocation at the unsympathetic treatment he had been getting over since his marriage from his wife's relations, a sentence of transportation for life instead of death, would meet the ends of justice.

[P 290 C 1, 2]

A. K. Dhar—for Accused.

Khundkar, Anil Chandra Roy-Chowdhry and Nirmal Kumar Sen—for the Crown.

Cuming, J.—This is a case of one Dukari Chandra Karmakar whose case has been referred to us by the learned Sessions Judge of Birbhum under the provisions of S. 307, Criminal P. C. The accused Dukari was tried before the Sessions Judge sitting with a jury on a charge of murdering his wife Sakti Kumari. Five of the jury found the accused not guilty. The remaining four of the jury found him guilty under S. 302, I. P. C. The learned Sessions Judge apparently agreeing with the minority has referred the case to this Court under S. 307, Criminal P. C.

I would draw the attention of the learned Sessions Judge to the provisions of S. 307, Criminal P. C., and point out to him that it is necessary for him to state clearly what offence, in his opinion, the accused is guilty of. It is not correct for him to state that he is "inclined to agree with them."

The facts of the case are briefly these : The accused Dukari was married to the deceased Sakti Kumari a girl at present some 15 or 16 years of age some 6 or 7 years ago. It would seem that there was an arrangement at the time of the marriage that Dukari should reside in his father-in-law's house as a ghar jamai, and apparently he so remained for one and a half months. His father-in-law lives in the village of Panchpara. Apparently, however, this arrangement did not satisfy Dukari and he wanted to go away to his house which he did. The girl remained with her family while the accused went away to the village of Bamnigram some 6 or 7 miles away. It would seem that from time to time the girl did go to her husband's house. But the relation between Dukari and his father-in-law and the girl's aunt Rohit Kumari did not seem to have been very cordial. Rohit Kumari brought up Sakti the deceased and gave Sakti her own ornaments at the time of the marriage and she refused to allow Dukari to take away his wife without giving ornaments to her; the girl on her part would seem to be unwilling to go to her husband's house without ornaments. There was at one time a criminal case between the parties and a petition was lodged by Dukari under S. 552, Criminal P. C., to the District Magistrate of Birbhum. This matter appears to have been settled. The girl went to live with her husband for some time and then again returned home. On 26th Jaistha 1335 corresponding to 9th June 1928 the accused Dukari came to his father-in-law's house. He stayed in the house that day and he also remained on 27th Jaistha the 10th June. He went out in the evening and returned at about one prahar at night, took his meal with his father-in-law and then retired to rest in an upper room where his wife Shakti Kumari, the deceased, shortly joined him and the door was bolted. The next morning the aunt Rohit Kumari seeing that the girl Shakti did not come down went upstairs to call her. On pushing the door she found it open and on going inside she found the girl lying dead with a number of wounds on her body in a pool of blood. The accused Dukari was not there. Information was at once given to the thana and the usual enquiry was set on foot. The accused Dukari was not to be found at his home. Nor was he found on search by the police. A proclamation was issued and his property was attached on 15th August and on 30th August he surrendered himself in Court. After usual enquiry by the Magistrate he was committed to Sessions on a charge of murder and was tried with the result that I have already noted.

The accused has contended himself with the plea of not guilty. He stated before the Sessions Judge that he was innocent and he used to love his wife deeply and she also loved him in return and, therefore, it was impossible for him to murder her. He does not give any explanation why he was absconding from home up to 30th August. Nor, as far as I can see, has any explanation been attempted to be given by his counsel. On his behalf it seems to have been urged in the Sessions Court that either he was not at the house of his father-in-law or if he was there he did not murder the girl. Suggestion also seems to have been thrown out entirely unsupported by any evidence that the girl was of a bad character and that the young men of the village used to frequent the hut. I may say that there is not a scrap of evidence to support this suggestion and to my mind it is extremely improper to make a serious allegation of this sort against the character of a dead person without any single scrap of evidence of any sort to support it.

The case against the accused Dukari rests on the evidence of persons who saw him in the village on 26th and 27th Jaistha and of his relations who saw him go to the upper room with his wife in the evening and who found her body there early in the morning. If this evidence is believed, and I shall discuss the evidence later on, there can I think be no doubt that it was the accused Dukari who killed the girl Shakti when in addition we find that he was absconding for nearly six weeks immediately after the murder.

On the question of his presence in his father-in-law's house on 26th and 27th Jaistha and of his going to sleep with his wife in the upper room there are the evidence of Manindra, Rohit Kumari, Aghore, Kamini and Nikunja who are his relations and who saw him retire to rest with his wife. The neighbours Suresh, Mohendra and Sashi Bhusan saw him in the village on 26th and 27th Jaistha. I have carefully considered the evidence of the witnesses and I can see no reason whatever to disbelieve them or to think that they are telling a false story. Their evidence is given, as far as can be seen in a simple and straightforward manner and nothing has been brought out in their cross-examination to shake them. Only two points really remain to be considered; one of them arises from the evidence of Rohit Kumari, the aunt of the deceased girl. Rohit Kumari was one of those who saw the girl go up to the room and bolt the door. She would seem to state that the girl did not take any meal that night, while the evidence of the doctor was that the girl's stomach contained undigested meal of rice. None of the other witnesses, however, was examined on the question as to whether or not the girl did eat anything that evening. It is quite possible that she did eat something unknown to Rohit Kumari. The learned advocate who has appeared for the accused has asked us to hold from this fact that Rohit Kumari was not observing what the girl was doing. Even if that were correct there still remains the evidence of the other witnesses who deposed to the events of that night.

The next point which has been urged on behalf of the accused is the evidence of one Radha Gobinda Mandal. This witness was tendered for the prosecution and was cross-examined by the defence. His statement was that on 27th Jaistha at about 1 or 1½ prahar of the night he saw Dukari passing by the side of his house with a shirt on and an umbrella with him. On being questioned by him, Dukari replied that he went to Panchpara and was now returning from there. No doubt if the witness was deposing to the truth this would be a fact strongly in favour of the accused person, because Bamnigram is at some distance from Panchpara and if the accused was at Bamnigram at the time of the occurrence he could not be at Panchpara on that night at about 1 or 1½ prahar. It is, however, very probable that this witness in deposing to this fact was not certain of the time at which he actually saw Dukari or he altered the time in order to give evidence in Dukari's favour. I am not prepared to rely upon this witness in the face of a number of other witnesses who positively state as to the presence of the accused at the house of Manindra on the night of the occurrence.

The evidence, therefore, comes to this: that Dukari went to retire with his wife on the night of 27th Jaistha and shut himself in the upper-room. In the morning the door was found open and the girl was found murdered and Dukari was found absconding, and remained hiding for some six weeks. It is no doubt true that the mere fact of absconding does not necessarily prove the guilt, but it is a factor to be taken into consideration. It can no doubt in some cases be explained. In the present case no explanation whatever has been attempted to be given. I have no hesitation in coming to the finding that it was the present accused Dukari who had killed the girl Shakti Kumari. What was his motive or reason for killing the girl is known to him and him alone. It may be that he was annoyed because she did not come to the house. It is always a matter of speculation as to the motive with which any human being does any particular act but when the facts are clear, the motive is immaterial. The medical evidence shows that the girl had some four wounds, three on the head and one on the shoulder. They were apparently caused by a large sacrificial knife which was found covered with blood close to the body. This knife was used by Manindra and also by the accused himself to perform certain sacrifices. The nature and severity of the wounds can leave no doubt whatever that it was the intention of the assailant to kill the girl. The first wound was an incised gaping horizontal wound on the right side of the head 3" long going right through the sculp and skull and reaching the brain; the second was an incised gaping wound parallel to the first 4" long and ½" wide below the first going through the sculp and reaching and fracturing the skull; the third wound was an incised gaping wound extending from outer angle of right eye to below the right ear, 5" long and 2" wide reaching bone and going through the bone at outer angle of right eye. Whoever struck these blows must obviously have intended one thing, namely, to kill the victim. I have no hesitation in finding that Dukari the present accused is guilty of murder S. 302, I. P. C. In coming to this finding I have taken into consideration the opinions of the Sessions Judge and also of the jury so far: as regards the opinion of the jury five of them were of opinion that the accused was not guilty and the four found him guilty. Therefore the difference is not very much. The learned Sessions Judge who heard the evidence and had the opportunity of observing the demeanour of the witnesses was of opinion that the accused was guilty.

I now come to the question of sentence. I have given the case my careful consideration and I am of opinion that it was a cruel and brutal murder perpetrated apparently without any adequate motive on a defenceless girl apparently in her sleep. There is no adequate reason given to me why the sentence of death should not be passed on the accused. S. 367, Cl. 5, Criminal P. C. provides that:

"if an accused is convicted of an offence punishable with death, and the Court sentences him to any punishment other than death the Court shall in its judgment state the reason why sentence of death was not passed."

Where an accused person is found guilty of murder therefore it is clear that the sentence of death has been considered as the normal sentence and the sentence of transportation for life as the abnormal sentence for which reasons are required to be given by the Judge why the sentence of death is not passed. This was not a murder committed in the heat of passion and as far as can be seen was done deliberately. The wounds show that the girl was attacked either in her sleep or certainly without any warning. It is clear that she was attacked while lying down, and there is nothing whatever to show that they were quarrelling at the time. Obviously it is for the accused who alone knew the exact circumstances under which he killed his wife to show the extenuating circumstances for it is a fact peculiarly within his knowledge. It is not for the Court to presume such circumstances. It may be that the accused was at the time labouring under a grievance, viz., that his wife would not come back or was not allowed to come back to his house. To hold that such a grievance or imaginary grievance is sufficient to justify a Court in passing the lesser sentence is clearly to hold that murdering a wife is not a capital offence. He is a young man of 20 or 21 and obviously not a child who cannot understand what he was doing. Ordinarily I should be reluctant to disagree on a question of sentence. But it seems to me that the present case involves a question of principle. As my learned brother is of opinion for reasons which he would give in his judgment that the lesser penalty is the appropriate one. The case must be laid before a third Judge under S. 429, Criminal P. C.

S. K. Ghose, J.—I agree with my learned brother that the accused should be convicted under S. 302, I. P. C. but with great respect I am unable to agree that it is a fit case for the death penalty.

I shall therefore confine myself to the question of sentence only. The facts which are material to that question are these: The accused Dukari Chandra Karmakar is a young man of 21. His wife Sakti Kumari, the deceased in the case, was aged about 15 at the time of her death. They had been married for about 7 years and there were no children. The parties belong to different villages. Ever since his marriage the accused had been in trouble about getting his wife to live with him. Her relations were putting all sorts of obstacles in his way and the girl herself was not sympathetic. At the time of the marriage there was a talk that Dukari should remain as ghar jamai. This was tried for some time but the accused did not find it suitable. His father-in-law Manindra was living with his family in the house of his niece Rohit Kumari P. W. 2. Rohit Kumari made certain demands from the accused and the accused on his part also demanded that some lands should be given to him, but this was refused. On this the accused refused to stay and Rohit Kumari said 'that unless the accused gave ornaments to his wife the latter would not be allowed to go to him. Some time later the accused filed a petition under S. 552, Criminal P. C., before the Magistrate alleging that his wife's people had kept her in their house with an evil motive. The matter was made up and the girl was left in her husband's house by Manindra. But this also was for a short time. In Assin the girl came back to her father's house but was again taken away by her husband for a short time. Then followed some visits on the part of the accused but each time he failed to make his wife go with him. In the month of Jaistha a Bagdi woman was sent by the accused to take his wife to his house, but she was unwilling to go without ornaments. On the following day the accused himself came but he went away the next day without his wife. Ultimately on 26th Jaistha (9th June) the accused came to Manindra's house with the object of taking away his wife with him. But, as Manindra says in the first information, he kept his son-in-law in his house telling him that his daughter would be sent on 5th or 6th Assar. The night of 27th Jaistha (10th June) was going to be the last night which the accused was going to spend on that occasion at his father-in-law's. That night the accused and his wife went to sleep in a bedroom upstairs. The accused had taken his meal as usual. In the bedroom there was a big sacrificial knife belonging to Manindra and the evidence is that it was kept there for safety as there were children in the house. Manindra is a professional sacrificer and had been using this knife for the purpose of sacrifice, but the accused had also acted as his proxy on some occasions. There is no eyewitness as to what happened that night. But early in the morning Rohit Kumari was the first to go upstairs and she discovered that the girl was lying, murdered on the bed. The sacrificial knife was lying blood-stained 'close by. According to the medical evidence there were four gaping incised wounds; two were on the head, the skull being fractured, the third was on the right side of the face, and the fourth was on the right shoulder.

The medical evidence also is that very little movement was possible after the head blow which went right through the brain. The conclusion is irresistible that the girl was murdered as she was lying in bed and the weapon used was the sacrificial knife. The accused was not seen after the occurrence. The police could not find him out and processes were issued. P. W. 19 a resident of mouza Itanda which is about 10 to 16 miles from the village of the accused deposes that he saw the accused in the month of Ashar at the house of Sakti Thakur, the spiritual guide of the accused. The accused surrendered in Court on 30th August 1928.

Before going any further into the facts, I would like to make a few remarks on the principle on which the Court has to make its choice of sentence in the case of an offence carrying with it the death penalty. S. 367, Cl. (5), Criminal P. C., provides :

"If the accused is convicted of an offence punishable with death and the Court sentences him to any punishment other than death, the Court shall in its judgment state the reason why sentence of death was not passed. Provided that in trials by jury the Court need not write a judgment, but the Court of Session shall record the heads of charge to the jury."

It may be said that apparently this provision in the Code of Criminal Procedure contemplates that death sentence is to be passed as a matter of course, unless there is sufficient reason to the contrary. But to proceed upon such a construction would be to make the alternative punishment the exception in murder cases. This, to my mind, is against the accepted view as found in the reported decisions and actual practice. In my judgment such procedure would also not be warranted by the words of the section. It occurs in Chap. 26 which deals with the form of the judgment. The section contains a variety of clauses dealing with the language and the contents of the judgment and so forth. Cl. (5) itself contains a proviso which is applicable to trials by jury. In my opinion it is wrong to construe this section as referring to such a matter as the measure of punishment which goes beyond mere form. For certain offences, like murder and treason, the Penal Code provides the death penalty, as also an alternative form of punishment, namely transportation for life.

In such cases, the Court must consider the question of sentence with reference to the circumstances, and if these circumstances justify the passing of a sentence other than the sentence of death, the Court must pass that sentence. All that the first part of Cl. (5), S. 367, lays down is that in such cases reasons must be stated in the judgment. This is a matter of procedure. By way of analogy I may refer to a rule of this Court, namely, R. 72, Chap. 1, p. 27 High Court's General Rules and Circular Orders, Appellate Side, Criminal. It was there provided that in the column of remarks in the form of Sessions Statement which a Sessions Judge has to furnish he must state the grounds on which any person punishable with death has been sentenced to punishment other than death (S. 374, Criminal P. C.) This rule has since been cancelled. In S. 367, Criminal P. C., the legislature has not thought it necessary to provide that reasons must be given in the judgment for passing a sentence of death as well. But these reasons must exist in the mind of the Judge. It is unthinkable that a Judge will pass a sentence of death in preference to the alternative sentence without good and sufficient reasons. Only, as a matter of procedure, such reasons need not be recorded in the case of a death sentence. In the nature of things the judicial mind must be reluctant to pass the extreme penalty and to enact that reasons must be stated in the case if a death sentence might have the undesirable effect of encouraging the Courts to shirk what is after all an unpleasant duty. But the Penal Code simply provides alternative punishments and there is nothing which takes away from the Court the duty to see that in a particular case the punishment fits the crime. That I consider to be the true measure. Once you admit this, the position that by S. 367, Cl. (5), Criminal P. C., death penalty must be the rule becomes untenable. As regards the death sentence, far from making it the ordinary penalty for the relevant offences, the draftsman of the Code stated that it ought to be sparingly inflicted. Experience shows that in practice this has been done, which once more proves that S. 367, Criminal P. C., does not touch the essence of the matter at all. Therefore, in fixing the measure of punishment one is to be guided, not by S. 367, Criminal P. C., but by various other matters, for instance, the enormity or otherwise of the offence and the particular circumstances under which the accused committed it. They all go back to the facts of the case. But in the case of the death penalty the Courts have gone so far as to consider matters which are not relevant to the crime, e.g. mere delay in passing judgment a circumstance bringing into play humanitarian grounds. I may add that I make these remarks without prejudice, as in the course of a long experience as Sessions Judge it has been my lot, perhaps an ordinary one, to send more than one person to his doom.

Whatever view may be taken of S. 367, Criminal P. C., it presents no difficulty in the present case, for I am satisfied that good and sufficient reasons do exist as to why the death penalty should not be imposed in this case. There is no direct evidence as to what happened immediately before the murder. But it is very probable that the accused having failed again to take his wife, and this being his last night with her, they had a difference before going to sleep. Everything points to the conclusion that the murder was not deliberately planned. I do not overlook the fact that a lethal weapon was used and that more than one blow was struck. But the evidence shows that the weapon was not taken there by the accused. It just happened to be there. I consider that the motive in this case is not an aggravating factor. The motive was a fit of desperate resentment which, in the circumstances, was not unnatural and for which the accused himself was not entirely to be blamed. We cannot overlook the consideration with regard to age. After all the accused is a mere lad. There is positive evidence that he has borne a uniformly good character, that he was a good boy, respectful towards his wife's relations, and not outwardly quarrelsome in relation to his wife, and this in spite of the unsympathetic treatment that he had been getting ever since his marriage. His last visit was one of many that ended in failure. This must have preyed on his mind. In the circumstances, with the utmost respect to my learned brother, I do not think that the case is a fit one for capital sentence. I think a sentence of transportation for life would meet the ends of justice. (On difference between the two Judges the case was referred to a third Judge who delivered the following judgment).

C. C. Ghose, J.—This matter comes before me as third Judge under S. 429, Criminal P. C., owing to a difference of opinion between my learned brothers Cuming, J., and S. K. Ghose, J. Both the learned Judges are agreed that the accused should be convicted under S. 302, I. P. C. Cuming, J., was of opinion that there was no adequate reason why the sentence of death should not be passed on the accused, while S. K. Ghose, J., was of opinion that on the facts appearing in this case and set out in his judgment this was not a fit case for a death penalty. During the week end after this matter had been referred to me as third Judge I had an opportunity of examining the entire record and of perusing the opinions of the differing Judges. It is unnecessary for me to set out the facts once again; they will be found set out at sufficient length in the judgments of my two learned brothers. Now it was laid in this Court many years ago by Woodroffe, J. that if in any case of murder under S. 302, I. P. C. one finds that two learned Judges of this Court are in disagreement over the question of sentence one favouring the death penalty and the other recommending that the transportation for life would meet the ends of justice, that in itself is a sufficient ground for holding that the death penalty should not be inflicted. Sometime ago I had occasion to refer to this opinion of Woodroffe, J., and I have always acted on that opinion. But it is not to be understood from what I have just said that the rule enunciated by Woodroffe is an inflexible rule or that the third judge to whom the matter is referred on a difference of opinion on the question of sentence is not required to go into the case for himself and to judge for himself whether the case before him is or is not a fit one for the infliction of the death penalty. I have, therefore, as I have just said gone into the case myself. In my opinion, the circumstances present on the record are of such a nature that I feel abundantly justified in taking the view that a sentence of transportation for life would meet the ends of justice in this case. I feel no doubt whatsoever that the accused was labouring under a serious grievance which was not unnatural in the circumstances disclosed on the record and that he committed the murder in question in a fit of desperate resentment. It is quite true he is not a child but it is equally true that he is a mere lad of 20. His visits to his father-in-law's place for the purpose of taking his wife to whom he had been married for about 7 years, to his house had always ended in failure and there are substantial reasons for coming to the conclusion that the treatment which he had received since his marriage at the hands of his wife's relations had been consistently unsympathetic. These are circumstances which must be taken into consideration. The question of appraising the sentence to be passed on a prisoner is at all times a difficult one. But I think in this case it would not be straining the language of S. 367, Criminal P. C., if I were to hold that the prisoner should be sentenced to transportation for life. I agree with S. K. Ghose, J., and I direct that the prisoner be convicted under S. 302, I. P. C., and be sentenced to transportation for life.

If a husband discovers his wife in the act of adultery and thereupon kills her he is guilty of man-slaughter only and not of murder

But that rule has no application where the relationship between the parties is not that of husband and wife: Rex v. Palmer (1913), 2 K. B 29. [P 236 C 2]

There must exist such an amount of provocation as would be excited by the circumstances in the mind of a reasonable man, so as to lead the jury to ascribe the act to the influence of that passion: *Rex v. Hiralal Ganguli—for Accused.

D. N. Bhattacharya—for the Crown.

Mitter, J.—This is an appeal by Dinbandhu Uriya who has been convicted of murder under S. 302, I. P. C. by the Additional Sessions Judge of the 24 Parganas in agreement with the unanimous verdict of nine gentlemen of the jury for causing the death of a Brahmin youth named Kartik Chunder Mukerjee, aged about 25/26 years. He has also been convicted under S. 326, I. P. C. of causing grievous hurt by a sharp cutting weapon on one Rajabala a woman of the suburbs of Behala. The learned Additional Sessions Judge has passed the sentence of death on him on the charge under S. 302. He has further sentenced him to rigorous imprisonment for a period of four years under S. 326 which is to be operative until the sentence of death passed by him is confirmed by this Court. The matter has also come before us by way of reference by the Additional Sessions Judge under S. 374, Criminal P. C.

On behalf of the prisoner it does not appear that any very serious criticism has been made of the summing up by the learned Sessions Judge. The only criticism which is made is that the learned Judge should have put to the jury the fact that during the course of the investigation by one of the police officers it was disclosed that the accused was at the shop of one Sindhu Pashi at Barisa during the day on the date of the occurrence before coming to the place where he was arrested and it is said that the learned Sessions Judge ought to have directed the jury to draw an unfavourable inference against the case for the Crown from this very important circumstance. It seems to me that it was not the duty of the Crown to put this witness before the Court seeing that the witness could really have proved the alibi of the accused. It was really for the accused person to call him as a witness for the defence in support of plea of any alibi which he might have taken but has not taken. It seems to me after considering and reading the summing up by the Sessions Judge, that the summing up was a most careful one. Every point was put before the jury with great lucidity and there was really ample evidence upon which the jury could come to the conclusion at which they arrived with reference to the two defences which were suggested during the course of the argument before the lower Court. One theory put forward was that the deceased Kartic Mukherjee himself cut a sindh and effected an entrance into Rajabala's ghar and eventually engaged himself in a scuffle with her and that these two persons managed to fight with a cutting weapon and cut each other and in the course of the fight Kartic got the worse of it and met with his death. It must be said, in fairness to the learned advocate for the appellant, that he has not put forward or pressed this theory before this Court.

The other theory put forward by the defence in the course of cross-examination of the prosecution witnesses was that there was no light in Rajabala's ghar at or about the time of the occurrence and that it was probable that while Kartic, the deceased, and Rajabala engaged themselves in sexual intercourse the light might have been put out and eventually they might have fallen asleep and that while they were so asleep some unknown enemy might have effected an entrance into the room through the sindh and injured both the man and the woman. It is said that the woman Rajabala having failed to recognise the actual assailant who escaped on her cries took it into her head to mention the name of the accused out of sheer grudge. It is further suggested that the name of Dinabandhu occurred to Rajabala not immediately after the time of the occurrence but after she had held a consultation with the other unfortunate woman living in the same house and other persons friendly to her in the locality. No evidence has been put forward in support of this defence and the learned Judge did mention to the jury this possible defence which was suggested in the cross-examination of the prosecution witnesses and I shall show presently from the examination of the evidence that this defence is baseless.

Although the matter has come before us as an appeal from the unanimous verdict of the jury and from a judgment accepting that verdict, as the sentence in this case is one of death, it has always been the practice in this and in the other High Courts in India to deal with the case as a whole, that is, to look into the evidence and consider whether the verdict has been rightly arrived at. It becomes necessary, therefore, to examine the evidence in this case and to determine whether the verdict of the jury can be sustained on such evidence.

The short story, so far as it is necessary to state, is that the woman Rajabala, who is an unfortunate woman in the suburbs of Behala was in terms on her own showing, of great intimacy with the accused for about a year or a year and a half, and it was this woman, who out of affection for the accused, enabled him to make his living by starting at her own expense a chat shop in the locality. The accused used to live at night with this woman and the evidence discloses that he used to come at about 10 p. m. in the night and after that ordinarily no other visitor was allowed access into the room of this woman. It seems that the chat shop was carried on under circumstances which left very little profit of late to the accused person and the accused accordingly stopped the small sum of Rs. 8 or Rs. 9 which he used to pay for the food which he would take at the place of the woman. This sort of strained relationship continued indeed for a very short time when it appears that on 18th May last the day immediately preceding the date of the occurrence the woman was found with another person in her room at a late hour of the night. At that time the prisoner came. Evidently he resented the intrusion of the stranger. He entered into the room of Rajabala, assaulted the stranger and took away his cloth and the coat which he was wearing. This resulted in a quarrel between Rajabala and the prisoner. Rajabala had to appeal to some of the neighbours to induce the prisoner to give the clothes back to the stranger who had come to pay her a visit. As a matter of fact, evidence is given by one of the witnesses who happens to be the carter of a neighbour of the name of Mohim Chandra Pramanik that he did actually beat the prisoner in order to induce him to deliver the clothes to the stranger. It is said that while the accused returned the clothes he uttered threats to the effect that if he was a man he would teach a lesson to the woman. The exact statement which was made is differently stated by different witnesses, but this much is clear that the prisoner did hold out a threat of teaching the woman a lesson or of taking his revenge on her. This was on 8th May.

On the 9th, which is the date of the occurrence, at about 10 p. m. the deceased paid a visit to this woman and the evidence is that after the preliminary settlement of the fee she would charge for entertaining this visitor they entered into Rajabala's room and it is said that while this unfortunate young man was in the act of sexual intercourse with the woman the prisoner came from the direction in which Rajabala was lying with her head and inflicted wounds on the deceased while he was in this act. On the first blow being struck it is said that the deceased and Rajabala rose from the floor where they were lying when another blow is said to have been struck which had the effect of causing this young man to fall on a wooden bedstead or takhtaposh which was lying nearby. After this it is said the prisoner inflicted injuries on Rajabala, Rajabala is said to have snatched the weapon which is said either to be a hasua or a katari or dao from the hand of the prisoner but it was again snatched back by the accused and several wounds were inflicted on the woman. The woman managed to open the door of the room in which the murdered man lay and she cried that it was Dinabandhu, the prisoner, who had committed the murder. This apparently attracted the attention of another unfortunate woman Giribala who was living in the next room and was at that time taking her night meal. The occupant of the next room Hari Dasi another unfortunate woman was also roused from sleep and to her also it was stated that it was the prisoner who had committed the murder. The prisoner in the meantime, after the door of the room had been opened, escaped into the land and garden towards the west by an opening or sindh which had been cut in the western matwall. A sketch map of the huts of Rajabala and the other women has been made an exhibit in this case and is to be found at the end of the paper book. From that it appears quite likely that the prisoner made his escape through the sindh in the western wall. A short time after the occurrence, the case for the Crown is, a neighbour who had a tea shop which these women frequented, namely, Atul Krishna Das, was called. He heard a report of the occurrence from Rajabala, Giribala and others and immediately went to the thana to lodge the first information report. That information is to be found at p. 5 of the paper book and it is necessary to reproduce portions of it in order to show that the first information report agrees in its broad details with the case now made for the Crown. Atul Krishna said that at about 10 O'clock in the night of 9th May he, Nani Babu and Bhutnath Shaha were working in his shop at the Gholsapur Bazar when a woman of Gholsapur, whom he would be able to recognize if seen, cried out exclaiming "being killed" at which he responded saying what the matter was and she said that the paramour of Rajabala Peshakar had cut her with a katari and murdered another and that the accused who was said to have cut the woman was an Uriya Baman called Dinabandhu. Then the first information proceeds as follows:

"Then I ran up to Rajabala Peshakar and found her lying on her verandah and saw serious bleeding cut wounds on her back and hands and her whole body was soiled with blood. Before I came here I did not notice whether she had any other wounds. At that time a person, whose name I do not know, said that a man was lying murdered inside the room. I have heard from wounded Rajabala that the paramour Uriya Baman Dinabandhu entered the room by cutting sindh and wounded her with a katari, and murdered a man who came to her room. Before coming here, I have not enquired to know why he had been murdered, nor have I heard, what persons have seen the occurrence. I did not see accused Dinabandhu Uriya there, nor before coming here have I enquired at what part of the ghar the sindh had been cut. This is my ejahar.

In respect of the actual occurrence the whole case for the prosecution really rests on the testimony of the woman Rajabala because she is the only eye witness to the occurrence. (His Lordship after considering the evidence on merits, concluded). As I have stated at the outset, the case made for the Crown and the evidence given by Rajabala in Court tally in main particulars with that was stated in the first information report.

Some argument has been advanced in this Court that Rajabala's evidence must be discredited because the medical evidence shows that her statement that the deceased fell on receiving the first blow or another blow after that is inconsistent with the medical evidence which shows a number of injuries on the person of the deceased. It is difficult to gather in what condition Rajabala was at the time when she found a man with a sharp weapon inflicting wounds on a person who was visiting her at the time and who was having sexual intercourse with her. The attack indeed was very very sudden so far as they were concerned and no wonder that in that confusion Rajabala would not have a clear impression of what actually happened in the room, namely, as to whether there was one injury or several injuries on the person of the deceased. Having regard to the circumstances in which the injuries were inflicted, not much importance can be attached to the medical evidence as to the number of the injuries.

In connexion with Rajabala's evidence it has to be remembered that both the Judge and the nine gentlemen of the jury had an opportunity of observing the demeanour of that witness. That is an advantage which the Judge and the jury in the Court below had over the Court of appeal and, as has been said on the highest authority, a Court of appeal would not be justified in disturbing the finding of a Judge or of a jury on a simple issue of fact unless the verdict arrived at seems to be opposed to the entire weight of evidence. I think, therefore, that the occurrence took place in the manner alleged by Rajabala and that the wounds which caused the death of Kartic were inflicted by the prisoner in the manner in which she deposes.

It has next been argued that there are discrepancies with regard to the occurrence of 8th May and that if the incidents had not taken place in the manner alleged, there would be no motive in the prisoner in committing the crime on the 9th. We have listened to the learned advocate for the appellant on this part of the case at great length and I do not consider that the discrepancies are such as would entitle us to hold that the incidents of the 8th did not take place in the manner in which most of the witnesses state. The learned Judge did put before the jury the slight discrepancies between the different witnesses. It appears, however, from the evidence of Mohim Chandra Pramanik, one of the principal shop-keepers of the locality who took an active part in the incidents of the 8th, that he called the prisoner and that on his orders his cartman Dabiraddi Sheik (P. W. 12) appeared and slapped Dinabandu and snatched the clothes from him. The cartman corroborates his master in the main details. As I have already stated, the evidence leaves no doubt that a threat was held out by the prisoner to Rajabala that he would teach her a lesson. The question as to whether he actually used the words that if he was to give her up he would cut her to pieces rests on the testimony of the carter Dabiraddi. Be that as it may, the entire evidence supports the threat. There may be some discrepancies with regard to the actual words used.

It has next been argued on behalf of the prisoner that it seems singular that if he was the man who committed this crime there would be no trace of blood on his clothes when he was arrested in the shop at about one O'clock in the morning of the 10th. It seems to me that a possible explanation of this is that as it was a premeditated plan the accused person might have thought beforehand of the means of removing all traces of the crime from his person, he might have thrown the hasua or the katari either in some tank or in some out of the way place, he might have removed either the gurensey or the coat or the jama which he was wearing, and after removing all traces of the crime he might have gone to the shop where he used to work and rested there at that time of the night. It is a very significant circumstance that at 1-30 in the morning when he was arrested by the Sub-Inspector he seemed not to be asleep but was rather awake, and it is quite possible that he had been to that shop shortly before the time when he was arrested. This interval between the actual commission of the murder and the time when he went to the shop might have been utilized for the purpose of removing all traces of the crime. This of course seems to me to be a possible explanation. It is also said that there was no trace of blood in his hands. Of course the evidence of the Sub-Inspector is that he could not, with his naked eyes, discover any blood, but scrapplings of the finger nails were taken several days after the occurrence and the result of the chemical examination shows existence of human blood in the finger nails of the accused. I do not lay much stress on this circumstance. This is after all a very weak evidence.

Considering therefore all the circumstances, I think that the jury arrived at a correct verdict and that their verdict is justified on the evidence.

It remains now to consider the question as to whether the extreme penalty of the law should be inflicted on the prisoner. The rule which is generally followed in this case is that unless there are extenuating circumstances the person who is found to be guilty of murder should receive the extreme penalty of the law. I do not find any extenuating circumstance in this case to induce me to inflict the less severer punishment of transportation for life. The attack seems to be a deliberately planned one. The sindh must have been cut at sometime of the night by the accused who was secretly there, possibly in the closed verandah, watching for an opportunity to wreak his vengeance either on Rajabala or on the person whom she might entertain at that time of the night. There was a considerable amount of pre-meditation and it cannot be said in this case, as has been sought to be argued by the learned advocate for the appellant, that there was a sufficient provocation which would justify us in not passing the extreme penalty of the law. The learned advocate for the appellant has sought to put this case, if not on the same footing, on a somewhat analogous footing as in the case of a husband murdering his wife caught in the act of adultery or murdering the adulterer. The two cases can bear no possible analogy. It is well established law that if a husband discovers his wife in the act of adultery and thereupon kills her he is guilty of man-slaughter only and not of murder. But that rule has no application where the relationship between the parties is not that of husband and wife. There can be no question in this case that the relationship between the prisoner and Rajabala was that of husband and wife, nor can it be regarded as a case of two unmarried persons living together as husband and wife. The evidence clearly establishes that Rajabala was a public woman and that all persons willing to visit her at any rate before 10 O'clock at night were entitled to be entertained by her. This rule as has been pointed out in a recent case which applies to the case of a husband discovering his wife in the act of adultery, cannot even be extended to the case of a person who kills one with whom he has been engaged to marry. I may just refer in this connexion to the case of the Rex v. Palmer (1), where Channel, J., points out :

"It is well established law that if a husband discovers his wife in the act of adultery and thereupon kills her he is guilty of manslaughter only and not of murder. That has been extended in Reg. v. Rothwell (2) and Rex v. Jones (3) to a sudden confession by a wife of past adultery, an extension which no doubt creates an exception to the general rule that provocation by words is not enough. The reason for that exception is that a sudden confession is treated as equivalent to a discovery of the act itself. But here the relation between the parties was not that of husband and wife, nor was it a case of unmarried persons living together as husband and wife. They were simply persons who were in position of being engaged to be married. Under those circumstances if the effect of the summing up was to leave the jury under the impression that they could not properly find a verdict of man-slaughter we think that it was right."

It has next been sought to be argued on behalf of the prisoner in connexion with the mitigation of sentence that if the prisoner was an illiterate man, a man with a defective mental balance what we have to consider is whether the provocation was not sufficient in the case of such a person to deprive him of his self control ; and, if this was so, it is argued that there is an extenuating circumstance and the extreme penalty of the law should not be passed upon him. The answer to this argument is furnished in a very instructive judgment of Lord Reading C. J., in the case of the Rex v. Leebini (4), where the question arose whether the conviction should be altered from one of murder to one of man-slaughter and the sentence consequently altered. It is useful in the present controversy to quote in extenso what was said by the Lord Chief Justice with regard to an argument of this kind—

"It is now said before us that we as a Court of appeal might come to the conclusion that the tests laid down in the well known authorities as to the provocation necessary to constitute a defence of man-slaughter are too narrow and that we could extend it, and if we come to the conclusion that that it ought to be extended we could enter a verdict of man-slaughter and alter the sentence. It is sufficient to say that we see no reason to dissent from what was said by Darling J, in giving judgment in Rex v. Alexander (4). A similar argument was placed before the Court in that case. It substantially amounts to this, that the Court ought to take into account different degree of mental ability in the prisoners who come before it, and if one man's mental ability is less than another's it ought to be taken as a sufficient defence if the provocation given to that person in fact causes him to lose his self control, although, it would not otherwise be a sufficient defence because it would not be provocation which ought to affect the mind of a reasonable man. We agree with the judgment of Darling J., in Rex v. Alexander (4), and with the principles enunciated in Rex v. Welsh (5), where it is said that "there must exist such an amount of provocation as would be excited by the circumstances in the mind of a reasonable man, and so as to lead the jury to ascribe the act to the influence of that passion." "We see no reason, therefore, to dissent in any way from the principle of law on which this case was tried. On the contrary we think it is perfectly right. This Court is certainly not inclined to go in a direction of weakening in any degree the law that a person who is not insane is responsible in law for the ordinary consequences of his acts."

Applying this test to the present case it appears to me that the act of the accused was one which is shocking to the ordinary sense of humanity. This Brahmin youth Mookerjee in a moment of weakness was led to the vicious atmosphere of a brothel and while he was in the act of sexual intercourse he was attacked with almost dramatic suddenness by the accused with a weapon which caused his death. In my opinion, this is a case where the extreme penalty of the law should be passed upon him. I would accordingly confirm the sentence of death passed on the prisoner by the Additional Sessions Judge and dismiss the appeal.

S. K. Ghose, J.—The accused was tried on charges under Ss. 302 and 326, I. P. C., before the learned Additional Sessions Judge of Alipore sitting with a jury of nine persons. The jury unanimously found the accused guilty on both the charges. The learned Judge agreeing with the jury has convicted the accused on both the charges. On the charge under S. 302 he has sentenced the accused to death and under S. 374, Criminal P. C., he has referred the case to this Court for confirmation of the death sentence. The prisoner has also appealed to this Court. So the case is open to us both on facts and law. (His Lordship after stating facts and considering the evidence in support of it and objections thereto, concluded). It comes to this then that Rajabala actually recognised the accused as the person who assaulted her and the deceased. At the time of the assault she cried out mentioning the name of the accused and this is deposed to by the neighbours who came immediately afterwards. There is evidence as to circumstances going to show that the accused had a strong motive to commit the assault. In fact, on the previous day he had assaulted another person who was being entertained by Rajabala and he had gone away threatening to do further harm. At the time of the occurrence there was no chance of making a mistake, as there was a lamp burning in the room. The evidence is of witnesses who bear no special grudge against the accused.

The learned Judge in his charge to the jury pointed out that, according to the doctor, the injuries inflicted on Kartik were "not necessarily of immediate dangerousness" and he went on to say:

"The question is whether the jury will find that the act was done with the intention of causing the death of Kartic Mukherji. In this connection jury will notice the nature of the injuries on Rajabala on whom fatal injuries were not inflicted."

It seems to me that in saying this the learned Judge put the matter as much in favour of the accused as was possible.

It has been argued by the learned advocate for the appellant that the learned Judge should not have drawn the attention of the Jury merely to the first part of S. 304, I. P. C. but that he should have gone on and drawn their attention to the second part of that section. But the jury did not even accept the view that the offence would come under the first part of S. 304, I. P. C.; evidently they took the common sense view that the intention of the accused was to cause death. The learned advocate for the appellant has also argued that there was room for provocation. But this argument is futile in view of the fact that the assailant had already entered the room by cutting a sindh and being armed with a cutting weapon. He was evidently lying in ambush, waiting for an opportunity, and he did enter at the psychological moment when the woman and the other man were engaged in sexual intercourse. It seems to me, therefore, that the plea of provocation cannot possibly be sustained.

(5) [1871] 11 Cox C. C. 336.

The case is a quite simple one and the facts are clear. The learned Judge has delivered an admirable charge in the course of which he has drawn the attention of the jury to all the salient features of the case. The charge is a fair one and the learned Judge has laid due stress on the points that are in favour of the prisoner. The evidence, is, however, sufficient and convincing. Upon this evidence the Judge and the jury could come to no other conclusion than that the accused is guilty under S. 302, I. P. C. in respect of the injuries caused on the deceased and under S. 326, I. P. C. in respect of the injuries caused to Rajabala. In passing sentence the learned Judge has carefully considered the question as to whether there is any extenuating circumstance. He has found none, and I agree with him. The appeal of the prisoner must, therefore, be dismissed and the reference must be accepted. The conviction under S. 302, I. P. C. and the sentence of death passed thereunder must be confirmed. I therefore agree with my learned brother in the order that he has made.

(a) Factories Act (12 of 1921), S. 26—Men working outside time fixed for employment—Owner is guilty under S. 26.

Where men work during a time which is admittedly outside the time fixed for employment of each person employed in the factory, the owner of the factory is guilty under S. 26.

Interruption must be taken in connexion with each individual employed and not confined to the general cessation of work and it is more reasonable to interpret the section as meaning actual work and not merely residence in the factory for a certain number of hours.

[P 238 C 1, 2]

K. N. Katju and R. K. Malaviya—for Applicant.

M. Waliullah—for the Crown.

Judgment.—Mr. Kamlapat, owner of a factory in Cawnpore, has been convicted under S. 41 (a), Factories Act. The charge is divided into two heads with respect to four workmen Puran, Gopal Singh, Badri and Bhagwat. The first charge is under S. 26, Factories Act, that the manager employed these four men during hours beyond the time fixed for the employment of each person employed in the factory. The second charge is that three of the men Puran, Gopal Singh and Badri were employed in the same factory for more than eleven hours on the particular day about which a report was made by the Chief Inspector of Factories and Boilers.

The argument here was that these four men were pieceworkers and not regularly employed and that therefore the provisions of the Act did not apply to them. No ruling was quoted on this subject, so that matter has to be decided on the ordinary interpretation of words in S. 2 (2) (d) :

“A person who works in a factory, whether for wages or not, in cleaning or oiling any part of the machinery, or any other kind of work whatsoever, incidental to, or connected with, the manufacturing process or handicraft, or connected with the article made or otherwise the subject of the manufacturing process of handicraft therein, shall be deemed to be employed therein.”

There can be no denying that these four men were winding yarn which was performing a process of handicraft connected with the manufacturing process carried out in the factory and whether they were regular workers per day or according to the work turned out by them they were employed in the factory. The hours of work in the factory as fixed by Mr. Kamlapat were 7 a. m. to noon with a break of one hour and after that from 1 p. m. to 6 p. m. The Chief Inspector found the four men working at 8 minutes past 7 when he went to the factory and presumably because of the astonishing ignorance of law of the men in charge of the factory the work went on till 7-53 p. m. in spite of the presence of the Chief Inspector on the premises. The four men admittedly worked from 6 p. m. to 7-53 p. m., that is during a time which was outside the time fixed by Mr. Kamlapat for the employment of each person employed in his factory. He was guilty under S. 26, with respect to all the four cases.

The consideration of S. 28 is rendered difficult by both the subordinate Courts overlooking the provisions of S. 52 of the Act. I have already held that the three men Puran, Gopal Singh and Badri were employed in the factory, but the term of eleven hours is subject to a rider that in computing the hours referred to in S. 28 any interval by which work is interrupted for half an hour or more shall be excluded. The learned Assistant Government Advocate argued that the interruption would connote the cessation of work of all the workers such as by the break-down of the machinery. In this case also no ruling was quoted and one is left to interpret the words of the two Ss. 28 and 52 without any indication as to how they have been interpreted in similar cases in any large city where there may be factories. S. 28 describes individual employment and is not worded like S. 26 for general employment. For that reason I am of opinion that the interruption must be taken in connexion with each individual employed and not confined to the general cessation of work as for the interval between noon and 1 p. m. It will be noticed from the statement of Puran that he did not take the general interval for rest between noon and 1 p. m. but went on working till 2-30 p. m. as he had work in hand between noon and 1 p. m. In that particular case, therefore, there was no interruption even though there was interruption of work for the entire factory. It seems more reasonable to interpret the section as meaning actual work and not merely residence in the factory for a certain number of hours. The analogy given by the learned Sessions Judge is misleading because if that analogy were applied the employment of every factory hand it would extend for twenty four hours as in general terms a factory-hand would be stated to be employed in the factory just as a gardener is employed for the garden of a house. This analogy does not clear up the doubt as to the interpretation of the word "interrupted" in S. 52. It is quite true that it would not be an interruption if a worker rests for a minute or two. That is why the period of interruption fixed is half an hour or more. In the three cases it has been accepted that every one of them did not do any work for two and half or three hours. If that period is deducted they had not been employed in the factory having regard to the provisions of S. 52 for more than eleven hours.

For these reasons I uphold the conviction in all the four cases under S. 26 and set aside the conviction and sentence under S. 28. It was pleaded that a fine of Rs. 200 was excessive. Personally I think that a very severe fine is necessary where the proprietor of a factory employs for superintending purposes men, who are entirely ignorant of the provisions of the Factories Act. Possibly an expense of Rs. 800 by way of fine, together with payment of counsel in various Courts, will induce Mr. Kamlapat to purchase vernacular copies of the Factories Act for the guidance of the superintendents of his factory. The days of doing everything by rule of thumb without bothering one's head with the written word have long passed. The fine, if any recovered in excess, shall be refunded.

Criminal P. C., S. 195 (c)—Court in which documents had been produced can only file complaint and not Prosecuting Inspector.

The intention of the legislature in framing S. 195 (c) is to give authority only to the Court in which the proceeding was pending to file a complaint in respect of documents which were produced or given in evidence before it. A prosecution, therefore, cannot proceed on a complaint filed by a Prosecuting Inspector. It is necessary for such a complaint to be lodged by the Court in which the documents had been produced: 1925 Bom. 433, Rel. on. [P 233 C 2]

Report.—The facts of this case are as follows:

The petitioners Keshab Chander and Diwan Chand were proceeded against under Ss. 419 and 465, I. P. C. the original allegation being that they had cheated one Gurcharan Lal, Headmaster of the Sanatan Dharam High School, Rawalpindi, into giving a certificate for admission to the University Examination in favour of Saligram and, that Keshab Chander had sat in the examination, and written the answer books posing as Saligram, and when challenged by the invigilator, Diwan Chand had attested the fact that he (Keshab Chander) was really Saligram. This prosecution was instituted in the Court of Lala Wazir Chand, Additional District Magistrate, and when the stage of framing a charge had reached, the Magistrate apparently came to the conclusion that there were really two distinct charges which could not be dealt with in one trial. The Magistrate in his judgment remarked:

"The investigating officer was not, however, clear about the nature of the offence committed. His entire efforts were spent on trying to establish that Keshab Chander accused sat in the Examination Hall in place of Saligram, and this was the main evidence led by the prosecution before me. At the time, however, when the stage came for framing the charge, it was discovered that the offence of sitting in the Examination Hall by Keshab Chander accused in place of Saligram did not fall under S. 419, I. P. C. and that the offence which Keshab Chander accused did commit, if any by doing so, fell under S. 465, I. P. C. inasmuch as he forged certain examination papers in the name of a person (Saligram) by whom they were not actually written out.

He accordingly proceeded to frame a charge under S. 419, I. P. C. and eventually convicted both accused. Keshab Chander was acquitted on appeal by the Sessions Judge, and Diwan Chand has now been acquitted on revision by the High Court. The Magistrate left it to the prosecution to take separate proceedings regarding the charge under S. 465, I. P. C. which relates to the answer books written by Keshab Chander in the examination. Accordingly on 26th October 1928, the Prosecuting Inspector filed a complaint, and the Additional District Magistrate proceeded with this complaint, and framed a charge. He then, however, on 8th February 1929, came to the conclusion that as he had already expressed an opinion in the case, having decided the other case by his order of that date, the case should be transferred and accordingly on 9th February it was transferred by the District Magistrate to the Court of Sardar Hardial Singh. The Magistrate recorded the statements of the accused, asking whether they wished to recall the prosecution witnesses. Apparently they were not asked whether they wished to have a de novo trial which procedure seems to have been irregular.

The proceedings are forwarded for revision on the following grounds.

Sardar Hardial Singh in the order of which revision is now sought holds that the trial can proceed. The objections raised to the present trial twofold. In the first place it is contended that the prosecution cannot proceed on the complaint filed by the Prosecuting Inspector as under S. 195 (c), Criminal P. C., it is necessary for such a complaint to be lodged by the Court in which the documents had been produced. It is clear that in the present case the documents were produced and exhibited before Lala Wazir Chand. Reference has been made to Bhau Venkatesh Chakorker, in re (1) (at p. 614 of 49 Bom.), which seems to show conclusively that this contention has force. The learned Public Prosecutor has attempted to argue that where documents are filed as the basis of a prosecution, it is unnecessary to have a complaint by the Court. But this position does not arise in the present case as these documents were filed in the Court of Lala Wazir Chand, and not in the Court of the Magistrate now dealing with the case. Had Lala Wazir Chand himself split the case into two in the first instance and dealt with it as if there were two separate cases in the first instance, then this contention might have had some force, but as it is, in my opinion, the contention of the applicants is sound, and must be sustained. I am therefore of opinion that the present prosecution cannot proceed.

The second point, which is mentioned in the grounds of revision, is that practically speaking the accused are being tried a second time for an offence of which they have already been acquitted, but this has not been argued before me and clearly has no force. The offence for which they have been acquitted was of cheating the Headmaster in Rawalpindi into giving a certificate for admission, whereas the present case deals with the use and forgery of the documents in the examination hall.

In view of my finding on the first point as a charge apparently has already been framed, I forward the papers to the High Court with a recommendation that the present proceedings be quashed and it be left to the Additional District Magistrate, if he thinks fit, to file a proper complaint.

Order.—For reasons recorded by the learned Sessions Judge in his report dated 13th July 1929 I hold that the present prosecution cannot proceed. I, therefore, accept his recommendation and quash the proceedings.

At this stage, I do not think it necessary to express any opinion on the second point mentioned by the learned Sessions Judge.

It is much to be regretted that the prosecuting agency have mishandled this case from the very beginning and the accused persons have had to be before criminal Courts for more than two years in connexion with proceedings which were wholly misconceived. In these circumstances, it is a matter for the serious consideration of the Additional District Magistrate whether he should now lodge a complaint against the petitioners.

Indar Singh and another—Petitioners.
v.

Emperor—Opposite Party.

Criminal Revn. Petn. No. 1146 of 1929,
Decided on 19th November 1929.

Criminal P. C., Ss. 109, 110 and 121—
Commission of offence punishable with imprisonment amounts to breach of bond given under S. 109 or S. 110.

According to S. 121, the commission or attempt to commit or abetment of any offence punishable with imprisonment wherever it may be committed is a breach of bond taken under S. 109 or S. 110 for good behaviour. When therefore a person is convicted of an offence under S. 452, Penal Code, and sentenced to imprisonment, a breach of bond does take place and it is liable to forfeiture: 15 P. R. 1913 Cr. Dist.

A. R. Kapur—for Petitioners.

Judgment.—The learned counsel for the petitioners propounds the proposition that a bond under S. 109 or S. 110, Criminal P. C., to be of good behaviour is not liable to forfeiture if the obligor is convicted of an offence against the person of an individual and not against his property and he cites Ugham Singh v. Emperor (1) in support of it. I consider that the learned Judge responsible for the judgment cited did not lay down so broad a proposition contrary to the provisions of S. 121, Criminal P. C. According to that section, the commission, or attempt to commit, or the abetment of any offence punishable with imprisonment wherever it may be committed is a breach of the bond. In the present case the petitioner was convicted of an offence under S. 452, I.P.C. and sentenced to imprisonment. Thus a breach of the bond did take place and it was rightly forfeited.

In the last paragraph of his judgment the learned District Magistrate has correctly stated what the order of the Magistrate should have been, but he could revise that order himself instead of sending the case back to the Magistrate for that purpose.

Further, I am of opinion that the amount of the security bond is excessive, and I reduce it to Rs. 500 and alter the order of the Magistrate in the terms stated in para. 5 of the judgment of the learned District Magistrate.

Emperor

Criminal Revn. No. 100-B of 1929, Decided on 5th August 1929, against order of Sub-Divisional Magistrate. Amarapura, in Criminal Trial No. 14 of 1929.

(a) Burma Excise Act (5 of 1917), Ss. 53, 54, 55, 56—Excise Officer is not police officer and admission to him is admissible—Evidence Act S. 25.

Although under Burma Excise Act 5 of 1917 an Excise Officer has power of arrest, search and granting bail he is not a police officer and an admission made to him is admissible in evidence: (1907-9) U. B. R. 1, Held no longer good law. [P 222 C 1]

(b) Opium Act (1 of 1878), Ss. 14, 15 and 16—Ss. 14, 15 and 16 make provisions of Criminal P.C. as regards search applicable to searches and not seizures.

Under Ss. 14, 15, and 16 it is only search that has to be carried out in accordance with the rules for searches under Criminal P.C., and the rules have no bearing on seizures.

(c) Criminal Trial—Although search be illegal, conviction for possession of object constituting offence is not illegal.

Although a search made in person's house may be illegal rendering the person who made the search liable to be sued for damages, still if some property is found, possession of which is an offence the person in unlawful possession is liable to be convicted: 4 L. B. R. 121, Rf; A. I. R. 1925 Rang. 205, Diss. from. [P 242 C 2]

Judgment.—The applicant has been convicted under S. 9 (c), Opium Act, by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Amarapura, and his appeal having been dismissed by the Additional Sessions Judge, Mandalay, he now comes to this Court in revision. The case against him is that certain Excise Officers having received information that he had opium to dispose of, arranged by means of emissaries to buy the opium from him through a dummy purchaser. The first attempt to arrange a meeting between the accused and the dummy purchaser proved abortive. The next night the dummy purchaser was sent out in a car to wait near the Myitnge railway bridge, Excise Officers remained in hiding close by, and it was arranged that as soon as events proceeded far enough to warrant a rush, the lights of the car were to be switched on. The two emissaries were sent off to bring the accused to the spot with the opium. After waiting for some time one of these men came to the car with the accused, and purchaser asked whether he had a sample of the opium with him. This was produced and the purchaser said he would pay and told the driver to switch on his lights. On the lights being switched on the two Excise Inspectors who were in hiding close by rushed up, a Sub-Inspector of Excise who had been standing close to the car disclosed himself, and the accused was arrested. On asking him where the opium was he stated that it was in a boat in the river close by; so the Inspectors went down to the boat. As they arrived a man who was in the boat threw four tins overboard and followed them into the river himself and got away. The tins were recovered from the water and found to contain opium. In the boat were found a gun and a cartridge-belt belonging to the accused; and it is said that when arrested the accused said that he had brought evil on himself as he had intended it to others, having intended to sell the opium first and then arrest the purchaser.

The evidence in support of the case, as I have pointed out above, consists of the statement of the two Excise Inspectors, of the statements of the ward headman whom they took with them as a witness, the statements of the two emissaries who were sent out to bring the accused with the opium to the spot, and the statement of Maung Su, the taxi owner. (His Lordships after discussing the evidence of the Crown and the defence continued as follows): It has been argued that an admission made to an Excise Officer is not admissible: for this there is direct authority in V. R. Venkataraman v. Emperor (1). This ruling was quoted to the trying Magistrate, but as against that he referred to two Indian cases, viz., Crown v. Wazir Singh (2) and Ah Foon v. Emperor (3). Had the trying Magistrate looked into the Acts a little more closely he would have seen that Excise Officers are now appointed under the Burma Excise Act 5 of 1917. The judgment in Venkataraman's case (1) was delivered in 1898 and then the present Act was not in force. In those days all Excise Officers were sworn in as police officers because the old Act did not give them the necessary powers of arrest, search, granting bail and so on. The Act of 1917 gives all these powers direct to the Excise Officer as Excise Officer, and they are no longer police officers. Their position appears to have been assimilated to the position of Excise Officers of Bengal. Therefore, Venkataraman's case (1) must be regarded as out of date and no longer binding.

Another point which has been argued is that the search did not comply with the provisions of S. 103, Criminal P. C. and therefore, the accused must be acquitted. This argument is really entirely beside the point. S. 16, Opium Act, says that all searches under S. 14 or S. 15 shall be in accordance with the provisions of the Criminal Procedure Code. S. 14 refers to searches in a building, vessel or enclosed place. I do not regard a dug out as a vessel from this point of view, and it is quite clear that these things when searched are intended to be regarded as more or less for the time being fixtures. If they have no locale, it is impossible to get witnesses from the locality. S. 15 has two clauses: the first refers to seizures in any open place or in transit; second refers to searches of persons. There was no search in the present case. It is true that the form applicable to searches was utilized; but according to the facts as given by the prosecution it was a case of a seizure of opium in transit, and S. 16, Opium Act does not say that seizures of opium in transit must be made in accordance with the rules for searches under the Criminal Procedure Code. Witness 1, Mr. Lynam, Excise Inspector, answered his question in cross-examination more or less correctly; he says that S. 103 in his opinion would only apply to searches made inside houses and dwelling places. His senior officer, Mr. Paul, is not quite so correct. It is, however, quite manifest that when the article to be seized is on the move and has no locale it may be impossible to get witnesses of the locality to witness its seizure.

It is not necessary for the decision of this case, therefore, to decide whether a person can be convicted on the result of a search which did not comply with S. 103, Criminal P. C. There are divergent rulings on the point. In Mi Hawk

v. Emperor (4), it was held by Hartnoll, J. (following Queen-Emperor v. Maw Aung—P. L. J. B. 367), that persons who make a search illegally render themselves liable to be sued for damages for this illegal action, but that this illegal action does not affect the question whether the person whose house was illegally searched has committed an offence if property is actually found during the search whose possession constitutes an offence. On the other hand, there is an unofficially reported ruling of the High Court Ma Htway v. Emperor (5) in which Young, J. (who argued in Mi Hawk's case (4) for the Crown before Hartnoll, J.), held that because a search did not comply with the provisions of S. 103, Criminal P. C. the conviction must be set aside. It must be noted, however, that in this case there was no appearance on behalf of the Crown and the judgment itself is an exceedingly short one. My own opinion is that Hartnoll, J.'s ruling is correct. There seems to be no officially reported ruling of this High Court on the point.

I hold that the seizure of the opium was regular, and that the admission by the accused when arrested was admissible.

There is another point to which I would call the attention of the trying Magistrate. The accused when called on his defence devoted a good deal of time to discrediting the two excise spies, Maung Pyant and Ba San. Several witnesses were called to depose to the bad character of these two men; some said that they do not work and some say they eat opium, keep prostitutes and so on. All this evidence is entirely irrelevant and should never have been allowed by the trying Magistrate. If he will refer to the Evidence Act, Ss. 146 to 153, he will see how witnesses are allowed to be tested for their veracity. S. 146 relates to cross-examination: it is permissible under instructions to cross-examine a witness as to his lack of work, his habits of consuming opium or his livings on the profits of a brothel; but when those questions have been put, the examining counsel has got to take the answers, and the examination of further witnesses to disprove his answers is not allowed, save as shown in S. 153. The credit of witnesses may be impeached also under S. 155, but S. 155 does not allow evidence of 'a witness' general bad character to be brought in. An attempt was also made to discredit some of the other witnesses, by filing on 23rd May the evidence given by these witnesses in another case. The last witness for the defence had his evidence recorded on 30th April and it is quite contrary to the Evidence Act to try to impeach a witness by means of contradictory statements made unless the contradictory statement is put to him in cross-examination, and these copies of depositions should not have been accepted by the Magistrate, but I find them filed as exhibits.

I would also note one other point. As I have stated, the main defence of the accused is that the excise party went to arrest somebody else and having allowed that person to escape they turned round and accused him of being the owner of the opium. Mr. Lynam stated that, whereas the actual seizure was made on 21st February, he had his information on 5th January and had duly reported his action in connexion with that information in his official diaries, and he offered to produce his diaries. At this point the Magistrate makes a note:

"U Ko Ko Gyi (accused's advocate) objected to the admission of the diary extracts in evidence as irrelevant and that is all that is on the record about the diaries."

The Magistrate should either have definitely admitted them or rejected them and not have left the matter undecided, merely noting that the defence objected. No grounds are given why these extracts from the diaries should have been irrelevant, and of course, it is impossible to say without seeing them whether they were or were not; but the defence is that the case was got up against the accused on 18th February and it would certainly appear in the highest degree relevant to show that the excise department were working the case up against this particular man for more than a month previously.

I see no reason to interfere in revision and therefore dismiss this application.

Narinjan Dass—Appellant.

v.

Emperor—Opposite Party.

Criminal Appeal No. 1210 of 1929, Decided on 4th December 1929, against order of Sixth Addl. Magistrate, Rangoon, D/- 21st August 1929.

(a) Criminal P. C., S. 190 — Complaint charging two people in alternative cannot be accepted—Sanction to prosecute such people is wrong—Burma Ghee Adulteration Act (6 of 1927), S. 11.

It is wrong that any Court should accept a complaint which charges two people in the alternative and it is also wrong that an order sanctioning such a prosecution in the alternative should be passed. [P 244 C 1]

(b) Burma Ghee Adulteration Act (6 of 1927), S. 10 (5)—Whether ghee is to be deemed adulterated or not is question of law—Chemical Examiner is simply to submit result of his analysis and Court is to draw inference therefrom.

Whether the ghee is to be deemed adulterated or not is question of law and it is not a matter on which the chemical examiner should be required to express an opinion. What he has to do is to state the results of his analysis and leave the Court to determine whether on those results the offence charged is proved or not. [P 245 C 1]

O'de Glanville and Tun Aung Hlaw—for Appellant.

S. N. Sen—for the Crown.

Order. The appellant Narinjan Das has been convicted under S. 12, Burma Ghee Adulteration Act (Burma Act 6 of 1927) of importing into Burma adulterated ghee in contravention of the provisions of S. 3 (i) of the same Act and has been fined Rs. 100. In his appeal three main points have been raised. The first contention is that the appellant was not the importer of the ghee in question. This question I do not think it necessary to discuss for reasons which will appear later. The second claim is that there was no valid order of the District Magistrate authorizing the institution of the prosecution. On this point I think that remarks are called for.

Section 11 of the Act provides that:

"no prosecution shall be instituted under the Act without the written order of the District Magistrate."

Why the prosecution in a matter concerning public health should be vested in a judicial officer I do not know. But if that power is so vested I think it is incumbent on the officer concerned to exercise it in a judicial manner, after due consideration of the facts of the case. From the records in this case, it would seem that there was in fact no consideration of the facts and that the order has been passed as a matter of course. The Health Officer of the Rangoon Corporation filed a complaint in a printed form against "B. Ram Lal, contractor or his agent Narinjan Das." This bears an endorsement as follows signed by the District Magistrate of Rangoon:

"I sanction the prosecution of B. Ram Lal or Narinjan Das under Ss. 3 and 12, Burma Ghee Adulteration Act, and forwarded this complaint to the Sixth Additional Magistrate, Rangoon, for disposal."

It seems to me to be entirely wrong that any Court should accept a complaint which charges two people in the alternative, and to my mind it is equally wrong that an order sanctioning such a prosecution in the alternative should be passed. As a matter of fact, the Magistrate concerned summoned both the persons named and at the first hearing, objection was taken on the ground that Narinjan Das should not be prosecuted as the agent of accused 1 when B. Ram Lal himself was present. The municipal prosecutor then stated that he was prosecuting both the accused as consignor and consignee of the ghee in question and asked to be allowed to change the heading of the plaint into "Ram Lal and Narinjan Das." This request was granted and the heading of the plaint was altered by the substitution of the word "and" for the words "for his agent." Nobody concerned at the time seems to have noticed that there was a discrepancy between the complaint as amended and the District Magistrate's order sanctioning the prosecution. However, I do not propose to go further into this matter, or to decide what is the effect of the defects mentioned in the complaint and the sanction, for, I think, that on the next objection to be considered the prosecution case must necessarily fail.

Coming to the third objection, the Act in question nowhere defines "ghee" but S. 3 (1) prohibits the sale or importation etc., of "any ghee which contains any substance which is not derived exclusively from milk." This by implication the Act provides that ghee is a substance derived exclusively from milk, but it does not define the kind of milk from which ghee may be derived. The Act confers no power on the Local Government to frame rules or to fix the standard which saleable ghee must attain; but S. 133 (3), Rangoon Municipal Act (Burma Act 6 of 1922), does empower the Local Government to fix with reference to any article of food or drink a standard of quality, specific gravity or percentage of constituent parts, failure to conform with which shall for the purposes of the Act, raise a presumption until the contrary is proved, that the food or drink is adulterated. And under this section, the Local Government has fixed a standard of quality for ghee in Municipal Departmental Notification No. 39 dated 28th March 1928, published at p. 299 of Part 1 of the Burma Gazette for 1928. This notification reads as follows:

"In exercise of the powers conferred by S. 133, sub-S. (3), City of Rangoon Municipal Act 1922, the Government of Burma (Ministry of Forests) fixes with reference to ghee, the following standard of quality, failure to conform with which shall, for the purposes of this Act, raise the presumption unless the contrary is proved that the ghee is adulterated:

Standard of Quality

Ghee means the pure clarified milk fat of the cow or buffalo, shall have a butyro-refractometer reading of not less than 4p, and not more than 12.5 at 40°C, a saponification value of not less than 220, a Reichert-Woolney value of not less than 24 and a melting point not less than 33°C or more than 37°C."

It may be noted here that this notification defines ghee as meaning the pure clarified milk fat of the cow or buffalo, and, therefore, under that notification anything produced from any other kind of milk would not be ghee.

Returning to the Burma Ghee Adulteration Act, S. 10 provides for obtaining samples of ghee and for the forwarding of such samples to the Chemical Examiner to Government for analysis. sub-S (5) reads:

"A report signed by the Chemical Examiner to Government shall be sufficient evidence of the result of such analysis."

Coming now to the facts of the case samples were taken of the ghee in question and were sent to the Chemical Examiner whose reports are filed as Exs. B and C. There is only a very slight difference between these reports as to the values mentioned and it will suffice to quote only the report Ex. B which reads as follows:

Melting point ...	37.5°C.
Reichert value ...	21.8.
Saponification value ...	218.7.
Butyro-refractometer	gure at
40°C ...	44.4.

"The sample ghee is not of the standard laid down by Government and under the Burma Ghee Adulteration Act the ghee is deemed to be adulterated."

There is no evidence other than this report to prove that the ghee was in fact, adulterated, and Mr. De'Glanville's contention for the appellant is that this report does not suffice to prove adulteration for the purposes of the Burma Ghee Adulteration Act, under which the appellant has been prosecuted and convicted. He refers to S. 2 of the Act which lays down the cases in which ghee shall be deemed to be adulterated and says that the Chemical Examiner's report does not prove any fact set out in the section.

This objection, I think, must be upheld. There has evidently been some confusion between the provisions of the Act and the notification above mentioned under the Municipal Act. The report is in itself sufficient to show that the ghee does not conform to the standard prescribed in the notification. But that is not the same thing as proving that the ghee is adulterated withing the meaning of S. 2, Ghee Adulteration Act, which in this case it was incumbent on the prosecution to prove.

Mr. Sen for the Corporation relies on the statement in the report that under the Burma Ghee Adulteration Act, the ghee is deemed to be adulterated. I am very clearly of opinion that this is not a matter on which the Chemical Examiner should be required to express an opinion. It is a question of law. What he has to do is to state the results of his analysis and leave the Court to determine whether on those results the offence charged is proved or not. S. 10 (5) only makes the Chemical Examiner's report evidence of the result of the analysis, and in my opinion, the question whether the ghee falls within the mischief of the Act or not is not comprised within the term "the result of the analysis." Whether if the Chemical Examiner had more fully stated the results of his examination, his report might have been sufficient to prove the charge is a question which I do not propose to discuss now. But at any rate, it would have been open to the prosecution in this case to call expert evidence to show that the results obtained on analysis were sufficient to prove the facts bringing the case within the terms of S. 2 of the Act. This has not been done, and in the absence of any such evidence, it seems to me quite clear that the fact the ghee was adulterated has not been proved. I, therefore, allow this appeal, set aside the conviction and sentence of the appellant and direct that the fine paid be refunded to him.

The appellant asks that the ghee be returned to him and I think that on this finding he is entitled to its return. Of course, if he should sell it or otherwise deal with it in Burma, in such a manner as to bring himself within the prohibitions contained in either the Rangoon Municipal Act or the Ghee Adulteration Act, he may be liable to further prosecution. But Mr. De'Glanville says that he intends to send it back to India and I do not think that there is any reason for refusing to return the ghee to him. I set aside, therefore, also the order directing the destruction of the ghee in question and direct that the ghee be returned to the appellant.

Criminal Appeals Nos. 607 and 622 of 1929, Decided on 22nd July 1929, against order of Sess. Judge, Shwebo, in Sessions Trial No. 11 of 1929, D/- 9th May 1929.

Criminal P. C., Ss. 164 and 533—Statement of accused recorded under S. 164 but not in strict conformity with it—If error not injurious to case of accused on merit, it can be cured by S. 533.

Even if a statement be not recorded strictly in conformity with S. 164 so long as the Magistrate purports to have recorded it under that section, and even after the statement has been received in evidence, S. 533 can be resorted to and evidence taken that an accused person duly made the statement recorded. S. 533 plainly provides that notwithstanding anything contained in S. 91, Evidence Act, such statement shall be admitted, if the error has not injured the accused as to his defence on the merits : 18 Cal. 549 ; 21 Bom. 498, and

R. G. Aiyanger and L. C. Robertson— for Appellants 1 and 2.

Maung Ba, J.—Ba Kin aged 18/19 and Ba Yin aged 25, have been convicted of the murder of Thein Maung, a boy of 15, at Shwebo, and sentenced to death.

Ba Kin made a confession, but the Magistrate, who recorded the confession, forgot to take his signature. He noticed the omission on the following day and sent his 2nd Clerk to the jail to obtain Ba Kin's signature. Ba Kin refused to append his signature. At the trial the learned Sessions Judge examined the Magistrate. The Magistrate stated that before he recorded the confession he satisfied himself that Ba Kin wanted to confess voluntarily. Then the Magistrate deposed to what had been stated to him by Ba Kin. The Magistrate finally stated:

"I wrote out all that Ba Kin said and then my clerk Ba Din read it out to him in my presence. I asked him whether what had been read out to him was correct. Ba Kin said that it was correct. . . . I took down the statement of the accused in my Criminal Miscellaneous No. 32 of 1928. This record contains a full and true statement of what the accused Ba Kin told me."

The Magistrate's Bench Clerk, Ba Din, was also examined in the Sessions Court. He states that he was present when Ba Kin made his confession and that he read his statement over to him and Ba Kin acknowledged it to be correct. He further states that the statement recorded in Criminal Miscellaneous No. 32 is the confession made by Ba Kin on that occasion.

On behalf of the two appellants it has been urged that the confession is not admissible in evidence. The learned counsel in support of that contention quoted three cases. The first case is Queen Empress v. Viran (1). In that case a Deputy Magistrate recorded a statement in the nature of a confession made by V. The statement, which was made in Malayalam, was recorded in English and signed by the Magistrate only. Shortly afterwards the Magistrate examined V as to this statement and V admitted that he had made it voluntarily. V retracted the statement later. Parker J. held that the provisions of S. 164, Criminal P. C. are imperative, and S. 533 will not render a confession admissible where no attempt has been made to conform to the provisions of the former section. He further held that inasmuch as the record of the statement of V was not admissible, secondary evidence thereof could not be given. The next case cited is Jai Narayan Rai v. Queen Empress (2). There the accused, when in custody, made a confession to a Deputy Magistrate. The confession was recorded by the Deputy Magistrate in English, though made in Hindi, which the Deputy Magistrate perfectly well understood and could write. It purported to have been recorded under the provisions of S. 164 and was in reply to one question which was set out. The record bore the signature of the accused and of the Deputy Magistrate, as well as the certificate required by the section. It was held that the provisions of S. 164 read with S. 364 are imperative as to the language in which a confession is to be recorded and that S. 533 does not contemplate or provide for any non-compliance with the law in this respect, and that therefore as it was not impracticable to record the confession in Hindi, the Sessions Judge was right in refusing to admit the document in evidence. It was further held that the Sessions Judge erred in admitting the oral evidence of the Deputy Magistrate as to what accused told him, as, seeing that he was acting under the provisions of S. 164, Criminal P. C., the confession was matter which was required by law to be reduced to the form of a document, and, therefore, under S. 91, Evidence Act, no evidence could be given in proof of such matter except the document.

The third case cited is Sadananda Pal v. Emperor (3). The accused made a certain statement before a Magistrate who recorded and took his thumb mark. The accused retracted that statement later. The learned Judge held that a thumb mark is not a signature within the meaning of S. 3, Cl. 52, General Clauses Act, or S. 164, Criminal P. C. They, however, returned the record to the Sessions Judge with a direction to take evidence as to whether the accused duly made the statement recorded.

The last case will not support the argument. The learned Judges who decided the case were of the opinion that the defect could be remedied by taking evidence that the statement recorded was duly made by the accused. In the present case also the learned Sessions Judge of Shwabo has adopted that remedy. The view of the law taken in Jai Narayan Rai's case (2), was doubted in Lalchand v. Queen Empress (4). In considering Jai Narayan Rai's case (2), the learned Judges observed:

"It is unnecessary for us in the present case to do more than say that, as at present advised, we are unable to agree in the view of the law which formed the grounds of that judgment."

Jai Narayan Rai's case (2), was dissented from in Queen Empress v. Visram Babaji (5). The accused's statement was made in Marathi and recorded in English. The learned Judge held that, assuming that it was practicable to record the statement in Marathi, and that consequently it was irregular, with reference to section S. 361 of the Code, to record it in English, the statement was nevertheless admissible in evidence under S. 533, the irregularity not having injured the accused as to his defence on the merits. Viran's case (1), was decided in 1886. The learned Judge, who decided the case, in holding that S. 533 could not be invoked, was no doubt influenced by the fact that no attempt had been made to conform to the provisions of S. 164. It appears from the judgment that prisoner No. 1 made three separate statements before the Deputy Magistrate on 9th May, a fourth on 19th May and a fifth on 31st May; but none of these statements were recorded under Ss. 164 or 364. The questions put and answers given were not written down: they were not taken down in the language in which they were made but in English; they were not signed by the prisoner or certified by the Magistrate. In these circumstances S. 533 could not be invoked. Since the decision of that case some verbal alterations have been made in S. 533. After the word "recorded" the words "or purporting to be recorded" have been inserted. After the words "tendered in evidence" the words "or has been received in evidence" have been inserted. The alterations imply that, even if a statement be not recorded strictly in conformity with S. 164, but so long as the Magistrate purports to have recorded it under that section, and even after the statement has been received in evidence, S. 533 can be resorted to and evidence taken that an accused person duly made the statement recorded. S. 533 plainly provides that notwithstanding anything contained in S. 91, Evidence Act, such statement shall be admitted, if the error has not injured the accused as to his defence on the merits. In the present case the confession was recorded under S. 164, and the Magistrate who recorded it complied with the provisions of that section, except that through an oversight he did not take the signature of the confessor. The learned Magistrate has been examined and from his evidence it appears that Ba Kin did make that confession and that he did so voluntarily.

I, therefore, have not the slightest doubt that the confession can be admitted in evidence. When the Magistrate's Second Clerk, Po Yan visited Ba Kin in the jail to obtain his signature, Ba Kin refused to sign, saying that he had confessed on the previous day because the police had asked him to do so; but when he was examined by the committing Magistrate on 11th January 1929, Ba Kin denied that he ever made a confession. He added that when the Court clerk came to him for signature he refused to sign, because he had not made any confession. Had it been true that the confession was made under inducement he would certainly have said so to the Committing Magistrate. In my opinion the confession was quite genuine and it can be used against Ba Kin under the provisions of S. 21, Evidence Act, and it can be considered against the co-accused Nga Ba Yin under the provisions of S. 30 of the said Act. But as against Ba Yin corroboration by independent testimony is essential. (His Lordship then considered the confession in detail and summed up as follows): To sum up, as against Ba Kin there is his own confession which has been sufficiently corroborated. He gave his age as 16, but the Civil Surgeon who examined him, fixed it between 18 and 19. As against Ba Yin he is implicated by Ba Kin's confession. There is also the evidence of witnesses who saw him going along with Ba Kin and the deceased, and the evidence of Ma Suleman who actually saw him striking the deceased boy with stones. His defence was a denial. Both Ba Kin and Ba Yin tried to establish alibis. I am of opinion that the plea of alibi has not been established. I am satisfied that the guilt of this dastardly and brutal crime has been brought home to both the appellants. For such a crime the sentence passed appears to be the only suitable sentence that could have been passed.

I would, therefore, dismiss both the appeals and confirm the death sentence.

Brown, J.—I have had the advantage of reading the judgment of my learned brother Maung Ba, and I agree with him that the confession in this case was admissible in evidence and that the failure of the Magistrate to secure the signature of the confessing accused has been cured under the provisions of S. 533, Criminal P. C. The record made by the Magistrate who recorded the confession shows that before recording the confession, he asked Ba Kin a number of questions as to the reasons which led him to confess. He asked him whether he knew that the confession might be used as evidence against him, and to this Ba Kin replied in the affirmative. He also asked other questions to satisfy himself of the voluntary nature of the confession. In none of these questions does the Magistrate explain that Ba Kin was not bound to make a confession, but when examined in Court the Magistrate says that he warned the accused that he had nothing to gain by his confession and that it might be used against him, and the Magistrate appended to the foot of the confession the certificate required by S. 164, Criminal P. C., to the effect that he had explained to Maung Ba Kin that he was not bound to make a confession and that if he did so any confession he might make might be used as evidence against him. I am satisfied in the circumstances that there was a substantial compliance with the provisions of S. 164, and S. 364, Criminal P. C., and that any defect in thi respect has been cured under the provisions of S. 533.

I agree also that there is sufficient corroboration of the confession to leave no room for reasonable doubt as to the guilt of either of the accused. The confession does not entirely agree with the evidence of the prosecution witness, Maung Ba Lay, as in the confession Ba Kin says that it was Ba Yin who originally called the deceased, saying that he would get compensation for damages to the bicycle, whereas Ba Lay mentioned Ba Kin only. Ba Kin in his confession does not deal with this point at length, and it is possible that he did not speak the truth here as he wished to minimise his part in the assault. I can see no reason, however, for supposing that the confession was not a voluntary one and so far as the case of Ba Yin is concerned, strong corroboration is afforded by the evidence of U Hmu, Maung Pau and Ma Suleman. I see no good reason for doubting the bona fides at any rate of U Hmu and Ma Suleman.

It has been suggested that the confession cannot be used as against Ba Yin, because Ba Yin is assigned the leading part in the crime in the confession. It seems to me clear, however, that the confession does implicate Ba Kin himself in the murder and, therefore, can be considered as against Ba Yin also. The murder was of the most brutal kind and in spite of the youth of the appellant Ba Kin, I do not consider there is any reason for not passing the death sentence on both the appellants.

I agree that both appeals must be dismissed and the sentence of death confirmed in each case.

Criminal Revn. Petn. No. 535 of 1929, Decided on 22nd May 1929, from order of Sess. Judge, Gujranwala, D/- 19th December 1928.

Penal Code, S. 498—Person cannot be convicted under S. 498 on mere presumption of marriage.

In dealing with offences under S. 498, marriage must be strictly proved. There may arise a presumption that by cohabitation for a period of 13 years marriage took place, but persons cannot be convicted on a presumption of that kind. [P 249 C 2]

Abdul Aziz—for Petitioner.

Des. Raj Sawhney — for the Crown.

Manohar Lal—for Complainant.

Judgment.—This judgment will dispose of Criminal Revisions Nos. 535 and 536 of 1929, which are admitted to hearing by Addison, J. The petitioner, Vir Singh, was convicted under S. 498, I.P.C. for enticing away in 1921, the other petitioner Mt. Ishar Kuar, and since Mt. Ishar Kuar, at the time of the alleged enticement was said to have taken with her two daughters born in 1912 and 1914; he was further convicted under S. 363 read with S. 109, I. P. C., while Mt. Ishar Kuar was convicted under the substantive offence of S. 363, Penal Code.

The case for the prosecution was that Sundar, the complainant married Mt. Ishar Kuar by chadarandazi in 1908 and that they lived together thereafter until 1921, when Mt. Ishar Kuar disappeared, taking with her the two daughters one of whom is now married. It was alleged by the prosecution that one Milkha Singh had sold Mt. Ishar Kuar to Vir Singh for Rs. 450 and although Milkha Singh denied that allegation, the Courts below have not believed his denial on the ground that he and Vir Singh were both convicted in another case under S. 363, I. P. C.

The real point in the case is whether there is an adequate proof of the alleged marriage between Mt. Ishar Kuar and Sundar in 1908. The prosecution evidence on the point is admittedly full of discrepancies with regard to all material particulars of the chadarandazi ceremony. They have been brushed aside on the ground that the affair happened about 20 years ago, but the evidence does not, in my opinion, establish that any such ceremony took place. Some witnesses say that Gobiud Brahmin performed the ceremony, but he has not been called as a witness, and there is nothing to show that he is dead. The withholding of that evidence must be reckoned against the prosecution.

There can be no doubt that in dealing with offences under S. 498, I. P. C., marriage must be strictly proved, and it is obvious that in the present case strict proof is lacking. There may arise a presumption that, by cohabitation for a period of 13 years marriage took place, but persons cannot be convicted on presumption of that kind. Moreover, Mt. Ishar Kuar has been living with Vir Singh for seven years and it might equally well be urged that a presumption of marriage between them also arises. The learned counsel for the Crown has frankly admitted that the case against Vir Singh is, for those reasons extremely weak and I have no hesitation in endorsing that opinion. Counsel for the complainant had little to urge on behalf of his client.

So far as Mt. Ishar Kuar is concerned, I am of opinion that the second exception to S. 361, I. P. C. is applicable. The two girls were in 1921, only nine and seven years old and she may well have thought that she was then entitled to their custody.

I accept both petitions for revision, set aside the convictions and sentences and discharge the petitioners from their bail. The fines, if paid, will be refunded.

Emperor—Opposite Party.

Criminal Appeal No. 256 of 1929, Decided on 21st August 1929, against the order of Second Addl. Sess. Judge, Lucknow, D/- 25th April 1929.

 (a) Evidence Act, S. 24 — Confession not full—Court can reject portions that are false and deduce guilt.

Where the confession is anything but a full confession the Court is at liberty to use the confession as it stands and derive a deduction of the guilt of the man who made it even while rejecting portions of it which are false.

(b) Penal Code, S. 201—Removing corpse of murdered man is causing disappearance of evidence of offence.

The ordinary inference to be drawn from the conduct of persons who have been concerned in a murder in a house, and who have removed the body to another place, is that they do so with the intention of causing, at any rate, the true evidence about the locality, in which the murder took place, to disappear. Whether such evidence was caused to disappear with the intention of screening the offender from legal punishment is a question to be decided from the circumstances of the case: 47 All. 306, Rel. on. [P 255 C 2; P 256 C 1]

Three men were sleeping close to the deceased man. Some one came in the night and struck the man with a violent blow severing the neck from body. Subsequently these persons removed the corpse to another room, broke bars of the windows and obliterated blood marks in original place, thereby causing evidence of locality of murder to disappear and putting police on wrong scent as to murderer.

Held: that the fact that none of them was disturbed was improbable and it must be held that those persons must have had an intention of screening the murderer or murderers

* (c) Criminal P. C., S. 237—Person tried for offence known and believed to have been committed by him—No evidence to prove his having taken part—Conviction under S. 201 is not illegal.

Conviction of an accused under S. 201 as accessory to an offence known and believed to have been committed by him, although evidence does not sufficiently or definitely prove that he was present at and had taken part in the offence is not illegal: 22 Cal. 628; 8 All. 252; 2 All. 713 and 6 Cal. 729; *Dec. from, A. H. N. Misra—for Appellant.

G. H. Thomas and J. N. Mulla—for the Crown.

Judgment.—Debi Dayal and Sheonandan Singh have been convicted by the learned Second Additional Sessions Judge of Lucknow, sitting at Unao of an offence of murder under S. 302, I. P. C. and sentenced to transportation for life. In the same trial the same two persons Debi Dayal and Sheonandan Singh and Salik Ram and Mata Din were sentenced under the provisions of S. 201, I. P. C. for causing the evidence of the same murder to disappear with the intention of screening the offender from legal punishment and sentenced to three years rigorous imprisonment each. All these four persons appeal. The Government Advocate has on behalf of the Local Government filed a revision that the sentence on Debi Dayal and Sheonandan Singh should be enhanced to sentences of death. At the town of Bihar in the Unao District there is a Fort belonging to Raja Sham Sundar Nath Kaul, a Kashmiri Brahman, Taluqdar of Bithar, The Raja (P. W. 15) resides in Lucknow. His agent Pandit Bishambhar Nath deceased, also a Kashmiri Brahman, resided in the Fort at Bithar and managed the business of the estate there. On the night of 4th September 1928, or the early morning of 5th September Pandit Bishambhar Nath received injuries while in the Fort which caused his death. The first information which was received as to his death was contained in a report made at the police station at Achalganj two miles distant from Bithar at 7 a. m. on 5th September 1928. This report was made by Salik Ram appellant. Salik Ram was an agent of the estate who worked under Pandit Bishambhar Nath. Sheonandan Singh appellant accompanied Salik Ram. The report was recorded by Sub-Inspector Raghunandan Prasad who was then officer-in-charge of the Achalganj police station. The report is as follows:

"Pandit Bishambhar Nath, the general agent of Pandit Sham Sundar Nath Kaul, the zamindar of Bithar, used to reside at Bithar in the Fort. He used to sleep at night in the Court room of the Fort. Last night too, having taken his meal as usual, went to Mt. Keola Bhatin's place. She lives at the door of the Fort. It is not known at what time he returned in the night. This morning when I and others awoke from sleep Sheonandan Sipahi told me that Panditji was lying dead. I saw that Pandit Bishambhar Nath was lying on the charpoy with his throat and face cut. His dhoti was unfastened and a little blood also lay on the charpoy. Two or three wooden bars of the window which is to the west on the back of the Court room, are also broken, from which it appears that someone having come from that very side has killed him. At night, upto 12 o'clock, the sipahis had remained awake in the Fort. It is thought that this event happened after that hour. I have not at all questioned the sipahis and gorais and have at once come away to make the report. The rest, whatever it may be, will be told by these people."

Mt. Keola Bhatin (P.W.10) is a widow who was the mistress of the deceased man. The "Sheonandan Sipahi" mentioned is Sheonandan Singh appellant who accompanied Salik Ram. Sub-Inspector Raghunandan Prasad (P. W. 26) had to proceed that day to Unao which is nine miles distant from Achalganj to attend a sessions case. As he was unable to proceed himself to Bithar he deputed Sub-Inspector Sheo Parkash (P. W. 25) to Bithar. Sub-Inspector Sheo Parkash reached Bithar at 9 a. m.

He at once proceeded to the Fort where he found on a charpoy in the outer room of the kachehri (Court room) the dead body of Bishambhar Nath. He held an inquest upon the body the result of which was recorded in the inquest report Ex. 7. From this report it appears that the body was lying face upwards on two daris which were placed on a charpoy. Two pillows were at the head of the corpse. The whole of the corpse was covered with a white sheet. At the portion of the sheet over the neck of the deceased there was a large cut. The sheet was soaked with blood. The upper dari and the pillows were also soaked with blood. The post-mortem examination of the corpse disclosed that death had been caused by a cut from a cutting instrument which had cut through the whole of the throat and had cut through the branches of the carotid artery. There were no other injuries except a slight bruising on the right arm and a slight bruising on the left temple. From the injuries and the circumstances attending the discovery of the corpse the conclusion can be drawn that the deceased met his death by receiving a blow with a sharp edged heavy weapon delivered through the cloth which was covering his face. The blow must have been delivered with great force. There must have been a large amount of blood shed. A portion of the blood had remained on the sheet, the pillows and the top dari, but it would have been easy for a considerable amount more to have fallen on the ground and to have splashed over surrounding objects. Sub-Inspector Sheo Parkash appears to have done little investigation. He appears to have satisfied himself with conducting the inquest and despatching the corpse to headquarters. He was clearly waiting for the arrival of his superior officer Sub-Inspector Raghunandan Prasad.

Raja Sham Sundar Nath Kaul (P. W. 15) had been in Unao on 4th September 1928, and had seen the deceased there. On 5th September 1928, he received a telegram to the following effect:

"Pandit Bishambhar Nath killed last night come immediately. Salik Ram."

The telegram has been lost but a copy Ex. 6 has been filed which shows that the telegram was despatched on 5th September 1928, from the railway telegraph office at the Achalganj railway station. It was sent urgent a fee of Rs. 2 being prepaid. The Court has been unable to discover with certainty from the copy the time when it was despatched but it apparently was despatched at 9 a. m. and it would appear to have been despatched by Salik Ram from Achalganj after he had made the first report. There is no evidence as to the exact time when the Raja received this telegram. As soon as he received it he obtained a motor car and motored at once to Bithar. He had first motored to Unao which is over 30 miles from Lucknow and then 11 miles on to Bithar. Three miles from Unao he met the dead body being brought in. Near Achalganj he passed Sub-Inspector Raghunandan Prasad who was riding in. They both arrived at Bithar at about 5 p. m. the Raja getting in before the Sub-Inspector. We thus have it that at 5 p. m. on 5th September 1928, Sub-Inspector Raghunandan Prasad and the Raja had arrived at Bithar. The Fort at Bithar contains a large collection of scattered buildings. The prosecution has prepared a plan of the Fort (Ex. 1) drawn to scale. The Fort covers a large area. It is enclosed with walls six to seven feet high. The walls can in many places be climbed. There is an outer gate which is secured at night. The suggestion for the prosecution is that on the night when the deceased met his death the following persons were in the fort.

(1) Bishambhar Nath deceased manager of the Raj; (2) Salik Ram appellant, under-manager; (3) Mata Din appellant, a superior chaprasi, who also did work of a clerical nature; (4) Sheonandan Singh appellant, a sepoy; (5) Debi Dayal appellant, also a sepoy; (6) Fateh Singh sepoy P. W. 12; (7) Kalka Gorait (P. W. 23); (8) Manewa Gorait (P. W. 20); (9) Nanhua Gorait, who has not been called as a witness. These are all the persons who according to the prosecution were on the premises that night. The time was near the end of the rains and according to the prosecution all these persons were sleeping out of doors. According to the prosecution the deceased was sleeping in a space between the kachehri or office and a building called the zenana which had formerly been occupied by women, and round him were sleeping on charpoys the appellants Sheonandan, Debi Dayal and Mata Din. It has been noted that the dead body of the deceased was found inside the Court room. But the case for the prosecution is that he was actually sleeping outside, that he was murdered outside and that the body was then carried inside the Court room. According to the prosecution Salik Ram, Fateh Singh and Kalka were sleeping near the gate. Manewa was sleeping to the north of the Court room and Nanhua was sleeping on the zenana premises. The first report, as has been seen, refers to the breaking of the bars of a window of the Court room on the west. The prosecution case is that no one had entered though that window, and that the bars had been broken with the intention of leading the police to believe that the murderer of the deceased had obtained ingress by breaking through that window. There was a broken lamp also in the Court room. It is suggested that this lamp was broken accidentally, as the body was being carried in.

The evidence as to the conduct of the inquiry raises questions to which no answer has been given. It would have seemed necessary, considering the facts that the deceased was the manager of the estate and that there were only eight other persons who were residing in the Fort with him on the night of his death, to have examined closely and in detail every one of those persons, in order to discover where each person was, and whether he had heard or had seen anything. It was further necessary to obtain some information as to when it was first discovered that the deceased was dead. But the record does not show that a close investigation took place on these lines. It may have taken place on those lines, but there is no evidence upon the point. The woman Keola was sent for and was examined. The case was considered of great importance and on the evening of 5th September 1928, both the Deputy Commissioner and the Superintendent of Police arrived on the spot and stayed there for about two hours.

On 6th September 1928, Mata Din and Salik Ram are said to have made disclosures to the Raja (P. W. 15). Their Lordships then considered the evidence of Raja (P. W. 15) and Sheonandan Shukul (P. W. 14) and disclosures made to them in extenso and proceeded.) We can now come to the actual trial. In this Suraj Narain, Madho and Hari Shankar were acquitted. The evidence of Kashi Ahir and Borey Lodh was disbelieved, against them. As there is no appeal against their acquittal, it is not necessary for us to go at length into the evidence against them. This much we may say that we agree with the learned Sessions Judge that the evidence of Kashi and Borey is completely unreliable. We shall deal later with the evidence of Fateh Singh. The evidence produced by Suraj Narain to establish that at the time of the murder he was in the Central Provinces working as a labourer on railway construction was believed by the learned Sessions Judge and we see no reason to disbelieve it. The evidence of Fateh Singh was disbelieved by the learned Sessions Judge. He has given excellent reasons for disbelieving it. Apart from anything else the evidence of this man to the effect that Suraj Narain was the man who actually struck the blow that severed the neck of the deceased must be absolutely inaccurate, if Suraj Narain was at that time in the Central Provinces. There are, however, many other reasons for discrediting the evidence of Fateh Singh.

The case in support of the convictions of Sheonandan Singh and Debi Dayal for abetment of murder therefore rests entirely as against Sheonandan Singh himself upon the statement which he is said to have made to Sheonandan Shukul on 7th September. There is one portion of the statement which is palpably inaccurate on the finding that Suraj Narain was in the Central Provinces at the time that the murder was committed. This is not, however, the only point to which criticism can be directed. It is very noticeable that according to Sheonandan Shukul, Sheonandan Singh insisted that Mata Din, Debi Dayal, Salik Ram, and himself had had nothing to do with the murder. Thus the confession was anything but a full confession. The learned Sessions Judge is, however, correct in his view that the Court is at liberty to use the confession as it stands, and derive a deduction of the guilt of the man who made it even while rejecting portions of the confession which are false. The learned Judge regarded the confession in this manner. He found that Sheonandan Singh was in the Fort at the time of the murder. He found that Sheonandan Singh admitted that he was standing near the bed of the deceased man while the deceased man was murdered. Although Sheonandan Singh had clearly indicated as the actual murderer a man who was at that time in the Central Provinces, he considered that this statement was sufficient to show that Sheonandan Singh was present at the time of the murder and he was unable to draw any other inference from his presence other than that he was an active abettor of the murder. Such a conclusion is a legal conclusion. But we are unable to accept the statement of Sheonandan Shukul as of sufficient value to justify a conviction. There are many peculiar points about the evidence of Sheonandan Shukul. He had been engaged on 5th September 1928, as officiating manager of the estate. There was no reason established why Sheonandan Singh should wish to confide in him. We have it from the evidence of the Raja that on 6th January 1928, Sheonandan Singh had told him that he knew nothing about the murder, that he had been sleeping close to the charpoy on which deceased was lying, but that he had heard and seen nothing. That is the only implication that is to be drawn from the story that he told. He continued that next morning being afraid that suspicion might fall upon him he had joined Salik Ram and others in removing the bed to another place. He had been privy to the removal of the body to another place and the breaking of the bars of the window.

It is thus clear that on 6th September 1928, he had no apparent intention of admitting that he had seen the murder committed. There is no apparent reason, why Sheonandan Shukul should have gained the confidence of Sheonandan Singh. The former had taken charge only on 5th September 1928. Yet we have it from Sheonandan Shukul that on the morning of 7th at 8 a.m. Sheonandan Singh came and sat by him and Sheonandan Shukul pressed him again asking what did he know about the murder. Everybody knew that Sheonandan Singh had stated that he knew nothing about the murder, but Sheonandan Shukul returned to the subject, and pressed him saying that as he was sleeping close by he must have known something about it. Then according to the witness Sheonandan Singh made this incriminating statement.

It is quite clear that the police officials in charge and the Raja were very anxious to obtain evidence as to the murder. They had according to their account been unable to obtain any information of any value but where they had failed it is said that Sheonandan Shukul succeeded. This story is not convincing. If otherwise, Sheonandan Shukul would have been of importance. Yet we find that in the police charge sheet of 21st September 1928 the name of Sheonandan Shukul is not entered as a witness. His name was not mentioned until a subsequent date. When the Sub-Inspector Raghunandan Prasad was asked in cross-examination why he had not put up the name of Sheonandan Shukul at the beginning he replied that he only learnt late in the proceedings that a statement made by an accused person before people other than police men could be proved in Court. This, however, is hardly a sufficient explanation, for the Raja is put up in the police charge sheet as a witness who can give evidence as to the statements made to him by Mata Din and Salik Ram and Ram Kishen Tewari who was never called as a witness, was put up to give evidence as to statements made to him by Debi Dayal and Salik Ram.

It is true that the Sub-Inspector said in his deposition that proceedings under S. 201, I. P. C., had never occurred to him as possible during the investigation. But if those proceedings did not strike him as possible during the investigation it is difficult to see why he mentioned the Raja as a person who would give evidence as to the statements made by Mata Din and Salik Ram. After giving close consideration to the evidence of Sheonandan Shukul we are of opinion that we are not justified in accepting that evidence as establishing that Sheonandan Singh had been standing near the bed of the deceased at the time of the murder. Upon that finding his conviction of abetment of murder cannot stand. The case as against Debi Dayal in reference to abetment of murder is based by the learned Sessions Judge upon the following findings. He finds that Debi Dayal was in the Fort at the time that the murder was committed. This in itself establishes little. Salik Ram, Mata Din, Fateh Singh, Manewa, Nanhua and Kalka were also in the Fort at the time of the murder. To connect Debi Dayal with the murder the learned Judge relies upon the evidence connected with the dhoti. This much is clear. In the house which Debi Dayal occupied, in Bithar a dhoti was found hanging up to dry. There were nearly obliterated stains upon it and those stains have been found by the Imperial Serologist to be stains of human blood. Debi Dayal has stated from the beginning that the dhoti was a dhoti worn by one of his women folk, and explained the stains as being the stains of blood passed in the monthly courses. The learned Judge was under the impression that he had said that the dhoti was worn by his wife. He did not say that. He said it was worn by one of his women folk. As his wife was at the time pregnant, if he had said that the dhoti was worn by his wife, there would have been force in the criticism. But he did not say so.

There is a witness Puran Pasi (P. W. 11) who deposed that at first in the morning on 5th September 1928, he was on his way in the fields when he saw Debi Dayal washing a dhoti in a river. There would be nothing necessarily to connect the dhoti which Debi Dayal was then washing with the dhoti which was found in his house on 6th September. But apart from that we find the evidence of Puran Pasi valueless. We do not agree with the learned Judge that the explanation given by Debi Dayal is incompatible with the stains on the dhoti and we see no reason necessarily to suppose that the witness Rup Rani (D.W. 2) is not telling the truth. We find that the evidence afforded by the discovery of the blood stains on the dhoti is quite insufficient to bring the charge of abetment of murder home to Debi Dayal. We accept the appeals of Debi Dayal and Sheonandan Singh against their convictions of abetment of murder and set their convictions and sentences on that charge aside. In these circumstances the applications for enhancement of sentence fail automatically.

We now come to the second part of the case.

Have the four appellants been convicted rightly on a charge under S. 201? We see no reason to doubt the evidence of Raja Sham Sundar Nath Kaul (P.W. 15) when he deposed that on 6th September 1928, Mata Din, Salik Ram, Debi Dayal and Sheonandan Singh all admitted to him that the charpoy, on which was the dead body of the deceased, was carried from the place where it lay between the zenana and the Court room and placed in the Court room, in order to create the impression that the murder had been committed in the Court room and not in the space outside and that the bars of the window had been broken to create the impression that the murderer of the deceased had obtained ingress by breaking those bars. There is further evidence that on 6th September 1928 it was noted that in the space between the Court room and the zenana there were obliterated marks of blood. Sub-Inspector Raghunandan Prasad has deposed as follows:

"I then examined the open space carefully and noticed obliterated marks of blood. The attempt was made by throwing dry earth on the blood and then rubbing it off."

The evidence that marks of blood in this case had been removed has been criticised strongly by the learned counsel for the appellants. They suggest that the evidence is untrue and that the idea was an afterthought. They say that if this had been the case the attempt to remove the marks of blood would certainly have been discovered on 5th September. We, however, accept the evidence that marks of blood were effected in the place in question. We are satisfied that the deceased was murdered in the open space between the Court room and the zenana and not inside the Court room itself, and we are partly drawn to this conclusion by the fact that there were no signs of blood on the floor in the Court room. Considering the fact that the deceased must have bled profusely from a cut which severed the branches of the carotid artery it would in our opinion have been surprising if there were no marks of blood upon the floor of the Court room, if the murder had been committed in the Court room. There is evidence further that marks of blood were found on certain other charpoys, those charpoys being charpoys upon which other persons were sleeping near the charpoy of the deceased. The fact that blood was found on those other charpoys does not go to prove that the occupants of the charpoys were the murderers. But it goes far to show that blood must have fallen on the ground and in addition upon other places. Thus we consider that the evidence that the ground was found to have been scraped in the place in question is corroborated by the circumstances of the murder. It is not surprising in our opinion, if this fact was not discovered on 5th September. As we have already shown, Sub-Inspector Sheo Prakash did little or nothing towards investigation and waited till Sub-Inspector Raghunandan Prasad arrived late in the afternoon. It does not appear that the police officers discovered at first that the murder had not been committed in the Court room. They discovered this fact after Mata Din and Debi Dayal and the two other men had made their statements to the Raja.

The facts then stand that Salik Ram in his first report made what we find to be a deliberately misleading statement that the deceased had been killed inside the kothri and that he referred therein to the breaking of the bars of the window and suggested that the murderer had entered through the widow. Upon the evidence of the Raja we are satisfied that all the four appellants admitted that they had taken part in the removal of the body from one place to the other and to the breaking of the bars. There is further evidence that the ground had been scraped to remove blood marks and there is also the evidence of the old Gorait Kalka who was in the Fort on the night of the murder. It is true that this old man has very bad eyesight but there was much moon light that night the occurrence having taken place three nights after the full moon. This witness may not be correct as to the men who were carrying the charpoy from one place to another, but we see no reason to distrust his evidence as showing that some of the occupants of the Fort were removing the body from one place to another. This is our finding of fact.

Can it be found on this that all these persons or any of them knowing or having reason to believe that an offence had been committed caused any evidence of the commission of that offence to disappear with the intention of screening the offender from legal punishment? It is argued on behalf of the appellants in the first place that on the facts no evidence of the commission of the offence disappeared. Their case is that evidence was created with the intention of putting the investigating officers on a false scent. They further argued that there was no intention of screening the offenders from legal punishment but the intention was rather to safeguard other persons from undeserved suspicion. The final argument which was based on the decision of certain Courts was that unless it could be shown affirmatively that the murderers were persons other than the appellants they could not be convicted under S 201. We are of opinion that the removal of a corpse of a murdered man from one place to another place does cause evidence of the commission of the murder to disappear. It was decided by a Bench of the Allahabad High Court in Emperor v. Autar (1), at p. 308 (of 47 All.) :

"The ordinary inference to be drawn from the conduct of persons who have been concerned in a murder in a house, and who have removed the body to another place, is that they do so with the intention of causing at any rate the true evidence about the locality in which the murder took place to disappear."

By removing the body from the open space to the Court room a portion of the evidence which would have been afforded by the discovery of the body in the place where the man had been killed did disappear. It is true that in this case additional evidence has since been discovered to establish the scene of the murder. But undoubtedly certain evidence has disappeared. It can also be argued that, if the bars of the window had remained intact, the fact that they remained intact afforded evidence that the murderer had not entered through the window. The breaking of the bars destroyed that evidence by suggesting that the murderer had entered through the window. But apart from that we have the evidence which we have accepted that the portion of the ground had been interfered with in order to oblterate blood stains. We consider that there is no doubt that it is sufficiently established that evidence of the commission of the murder was caused to disappear. But it is necessary to go further. Can it be found that it was caused to disappear with the intention of screening the offender from legal punishment? Here we have to look at the circumstances of the case. It is not sufficient for the counsel for the appellants to say:

"They are innocent men. They did not know who committed the murder. They had no suspicion who had committed the murder. They did not intend to save the murderer from the consequences of his act. They only wished to save themselves from undeserved suspicion."

Having found, as we have found, that they were privy to removing the body, breaking down the bars and obliterating the blood stains, can we accept the reply that they did these acts only to shield themselves, and should we not find on the facts that they did these acts partly with the intention of shielding themselves and partly with the intention of screening the murderers. We have to look at the facts. We find that three of these men were sleeping close to the deceased man. Some one came in the night and struck him a blow which severed his neck. The blow was necessarily a violent blow. That in these circumstances not one of these three men was disturbed, and that not one of them was in some position to form a surmise as to the perpetrator is a conclusion which we cannot accept. We consider that when in those circumstances those men deliberately caused evidence to disappear they must be considered to have had an intention of screening the murderer or murderers. Their main intention may have been to save themselves. But there was also in our opinion an intention to shield the murderer or murderers and that is sufficient to justify the convictions. So much for the appellants Mata Din, Dobi Dayal and Sheonandan Singh. In the case of Salik Ram, who was not present we have it that he was consulted by the other three. It was from his brain that the plan was formed. He must be considered to have had the same intentions as the others. We find therefore that the intention is made out sufficiently. In respect to the last argument the views enunciated by a Bench of the Calcutta High Court in Empress v. Behala

"We think that S. 201, I. P. C., was not intended to apply to such a case. A case, that is, in which the person, who is the possible or probable offender, makes statements exculpating himself by inculcating another," by a single Judge of the Allahabad High Court in Empress of India v. Kishna (3) :

"Now S. 201, I. P. C., has been held to refer to persons other than the actual offenders," by a single Judge of the same Court in Queen Empress v. Dungar (4) and by the Bench decision of the Calcutta High Court in Torap Ali v. Queen Empress (5) cannot now be considered as effective. These views were dissented from in the recent Allahabad decisions Emperor v. Autar (1) and Emperor v. Harpiari (6). We do not propose to discuss these decisions in view of the fact that the law on the subject appears to us now to be settled by the decision of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in Begu v. Emperor (7). In that case their Lordships found on the facts that five men had set on a sixth. The sixth man was killed. His dead body was placed on a horse and taken away by the five men. The Indian Courts had found that two of those men were actually guilty of the murder, that there was not sufficient evidence to convict the remaining three men of murder, but that it was established that those three men had assisted in making away with the body. Their Lordships refused to interfere with the convictions of the first two men under S. 302 and the remaining three men under S. 201, I. P. C. Those three men had been charged with murder. Their Lordships say at p. 195 (of 52 I. A.) :

"The three men who were sentenced to rigorous imprisonment were convicted of making away with the evidence of the crime by assisting in taking away the body. They were not charged with that formally, but they were tried on evidence which brings the case under S. 237."

There the appeal was mainly as to whether the conviction was justifiable as they had not been charged originally under S. 201. But the whole case was before their Lordships. Their Lordships followed their usual practice in criminal cases. As Lord Haldane said (p. 195):

"The tribunal is not a Court of criminal appeal. When there has been evidence before the Court below and the Court below has come to a conclusion upon that evidence, their Lordships will not disturb that conclusion, they will only interfere in such circumstances as are referred to in the well known case of In re, Dillet (8) where there has been a gross miscarriage of justice or a gross abuse of the forms of legal process."

But it is to be noted that if the views taken in the previous decisions of the Indian Court had been accepted there would have been in that case a gross miscarriage of justice. If the opinion accepted in the Indian decisions to the effect that the conviction of accused, as accessories to an offence, known or believed to have been committed by themselves is illegal: Torap Ali v. Queen Empress (5), the three men in question should not have been convicted under S. 201. They had been charged with murder. According to the assessors two of them had taken part in the assault although they were not found guilty of murder. According to the Judge the evidence did not sufficiently or definitely prove that they were present at, and had taken part in the murder. They were found by their Lordships to have been rightly convicted under S. 201. The facts here are not dissimilar. Here the four appellants were charged with murder. Two of them were convicted of murder by the trial Judge. They have been acquitted here on that charge. The other two were not found to have taken part in the murder. Here as there, it can be said that the evidence does not sufficiently or definitely prove that they were present at and had taken part in the murder. They can here as there be convicted under S. 201. After a close examination of the case in all aspects we find that the convictions under S. 201 are correct. We see no reason to reduce the sentences. The result of these appeals then is as follows. The appeals of Mata Din and Salik Ram are dismissed. The appeals of Debi Dayal and Sheonandan Singh are partly allowed. Their convictions for abetment of murder and the sentences of transportation for life passed upon them are set aside. But their convictions under S. 201,

I. P. C., and the sentences of three years' rigorous imprisonment passed upon them are upheld. The Government revision is dismissed.

Nihal Chand and others—Appellants.

v.

Jai Ram and others—Respondents.

Criminal Ref. No. 51 of 1929, Decided on 24th October 1929, made by 2nd Addl. Sess. Judge, Lucknow.

Criminal P. C., S. 145 (1) (2) (8)—Molasses form produce of land and being subject to decay can be ordered to be sold.

Molasses can be treated as the produce of the factory within the meaning of S. 145 (8) where the land about which there is dispute consists of factory building including vats. A sugar mill produces molasses. The word "produce" is not necessarily confined to what is grown on the ground. It refers also to a finished article or semi-finished article made from raw material. [P 258 C 1]

Where, therefore, the produce is subject to speedy and natural decay, the Magistrate's order for its sale is justified and the Magistrate has jurisdiction to pass such order. The sale proceeds should be made over to persons in possession of molasses only if they give reasonable security. Security need not be in cash. Recognized Government securities as War Bonds are sufficient. [P 258 C 2]

St. George Jackson—for Appellants.

G. H. Thomas and R. P. Verma—for Respondents.

Judgment.—The facts are stated in the order of reference. I need only summarise them. The proceedings were under S. 145, Criminal P. C. Nihal Chand and Jagannath were the lessees of certain factory buildings. Jai Ram Das was the lessor. The lessor's case was that certain vats containing molasses were not included in the lease. The lessee's case was that these vats were included in the lease. At a certain period it was alleged that there was an apprehension of a breach of the peace. The Superintendent of Police posted a guard to prevent a breach of the peace. Proceedings then took place under S. 145 and finally orders were passed which are the subject of this reference. All apprehension of a breach of the peace has now ended, for the lease has come to an end and the lessees have given up possession over every portion of the premises. But what has happened in the meanwhile has been this. Action had to be taken in respect of the molasses in the vats. The Magistrate, treating these molasses as property subject to speedy and natural decay, sold the molasses. The sale proceeds are about Rs. 25,000 which at the present moment are in the hands of the receiver. The Magistrate went on to order that the sale proceeds should be handed over to Nihal Chand and Jagannath provided they deposited cash security or bank receipts. This order has been attacked on the ground that the Magistrate had no jurisdiction to pass it. I consider that the Magistrate had jurisdiction to pass it.

He was dealing with a dispute in respect of land within the meaning of S 145 (1) and 145 (2). The land in question consisted of the factory buildings including the vats. I can only treat the molasses as the produce of the factory within the meaning of S. 145 (8). I do not think I am straining the meaning of the words. A sugar mill produces molasses and the molasses can be fairly called the produce of the mill. In the same way a flour mill produces flour and I should consider flour to be the produce of a flour mill. The word "produce" is not necessarily confined to what is grown from the ground. It refers also in my opinion to a finished article or a semi-finished article made from raw material. In these circumstances the Magistrate's order was justified. The produce was subject to speedy and natural decay, so he made an order for its sale. The molasses having been sold, it is now to be seen what disposal is to be made of the sale proceeds. As Nihal Chand and Jagannath have been found to have been in possession of the molasses the sale proceeds should ordinarily be made over to them. But the Magistrate has rightly decided that the sale proceeds are only to be made over to them if they give reasonable security. He was dealing with possession only. I know nothing as to the title to the molasses and I have been careful to hear nothing on the subject as that question will have to be decided elsewhere. But it is obvious that if the sale proceeds are handed over to Nihal Chand and Jagannath some security should be taken from them in event of the title to the molasses being found eventually to be with Jai Ram Das. So security must be taken.

I do not, however, consider it proper to take security in cash. In fact such an order has no meaning. Nihal Chand and Jagannath would then take out the amount in cash and pay the amount back in cash. Fixed deposit receipts would be better. But it appears to me that it will be sufficient if Nihal Chand and Jagannath deposit any recognized Government securities such as War bonds. They inform me that they are ready to deposit War bonds and I direct that they may take out the sale proceeds if they deposit War bonds of the same value and that they shall be permitted to draw interest on these War bonds as it falls due. I next come to the question of the time during which this deposit should be retained. I am informed by the learned counsel for Jai Ram Das that he claims a balance against Nihal Chand and Jagannath. He will not require more than a year for the purpose of filing a suit to recover this balance; of course he can file a suit whenever he likes within the period of limitation, but I fix this limit for withdrawal of security. I direct that after a year Nihal Chand and Jagannath may withdraw their security. If the suit has been filed before the year has expired it will be for Jai Ram Das to obtain the orders of the Court for further security. It will of course be open to the trial Court to pass such orders. I order that the papers be returned with these directions.

Anand Kishore Jha—Opposite Party.

Criminal Revn. No. 128 of 1928, Decided on 12th March 1928, from order of Dist. Magistrate, Darbhanga, D/- 10th February 1928.

(a) Criminal P. C., S. 144—Unless facts are quite clear, proceedings should be drawn under S. 145.

Ordinarily unless the facts are on the face of them quite clear, a proceeding should be drawn up under S. 145 for the purpose of investigating the question of actual possession to land.

(b) Criminal P. C., S. 145—Suit for recovery of possession decreed—For purposes of S. 145 presumption is that decree-holder entered in possession on date of decree unless possession is proved to have been disturbed by judgment-debtor.

Where in a suit for recovery of possession, possession is decreed, although the decree may be ex parte, as between judgment-debtor and decree-holder for purposes of S. 145, the presumption is that the decree-holder entered into possession on the date of the decree and continued till his possession was disturbed by the judgment-debtor, and the onus is on the judgment-debtor to prove his entry subsequent to date of decree. [P 260 C 1]

Ganesh Sharma—for Petitioners.

Muhammad Hasan Jan—for Opposite Party.

Judgment.—The learned Sub-Divisional Magistrate's proceedings were irregular from the outset.

We have not got the order of 19th December 1927 which is referred to in his order dated 17th January 1928. S. 144, Criminal P. C. provides that in certain contingencies the Magistrate may direct a person not to do any act which causes obstruction, annoyance or injury or risk of obstruction to any person lawfully employed or a disturbance of the public tranquillity. The Magistrate may make this order ex parte or he may make it after issuing notice to the person concerned and hearing the cause shown by him. But sometimes a Magistrate makes the order straightway ex parte and at the same time orders the party affected to show cause. This does not seem to be quite regular because Cl. (4), S. 144, provides that the party affected may show cause after the order has been made and then the Magistrate may either rescind the order or modify it.

However, in the present case it would seem from the order of 17th January 1928, that an order absolute was made ex parte in the first instance against the opposite party and therefore the two months' time provided by S. 144 runs from 19th December and the order has spent itself.

The petitioners dissatisfied with the Magistrate's order of 17th January in which he confirmed his ex parte order, made an application to the District Magistrate, who on 10th February 1928, declined to interfere. Then there was an application to refer the case to the High Court made to the Sessions Judge who on 15th February rejected the application.

The present application is made by the petitioners in revision under S. 439, Criminal P. C.

Having regard to the fact that the order of 19th December 1927, has spent itself no further proceeding with a view to setting aside that order will be effective; but I desire to bring to the learned Sub-Divisional Magistrate's notice that it has been repeatedly held that ordinarily unless the facts are on the face of them quite clear a proceeding should be drawn up under S. 145 for the purpose of investigating the question of actual possession to land. The learned Sub-Divisional Magistrate appears to have made the ex parte order of 19th December without any investigation and the order of 17th January 1928 did not improve matters because it was passed upon an inspection of the records without examining witnesses as to actual possession. If then there is still any further apprehension of a breach of the peace, the proper course will be to take proceedings under S. 145, Criminal P. C.

I desire at the same time to observe that on 30th August 1923, Mahanth Bishambar Das obtained a decree on compromise against Bhagbat Das and Shivanandan Thakur and an ex parte decree against Anand Kishore Jha, the opposite party in the proceeding now before me. In that decree Bishambar Das obtained an order for recovery of possession of certain lands belonging to the muth in Kaitya. The defendants Bhagbat Das and Shivanandan Thakur were the persons concerned in resisting his possession in respect of those lands. Against Anand Kishore Jha there was a prayer for recovery of possession in respect of those lands. Against Anand Kishore Jha there was a prayer for recovery of possession in respect of the lands in mauza Kanigaon. These lands were covered by Sch. 2 in the suit, and the petitioners before me Kishori Jha and Aklu Jha have obtained a lease of the interest of Bishambar Das in respect of them. The petitioners, therefore, stand in the shoes of Bishambar Das and Anand Kishore Jha cannot be heard to say that he was in possession of the lands on 30th August 1923. Although the decree was passed ex parte against him, it must be assumed that notice of the suit was served upon him and the possession of Bishambar Das on 30th August 1923, cannot be challenged now.

It is urged that Bishambar Das acted fraudulently in obtaining the ex parte decree and also that while he was asking for recovery of possession the Court had no jurisdiction to give him a decree for confirmation of possession. In my opinion the charge of fraud cannot be examined in the present case, it is open to Anand Kishore Jha to take such steps as he considers necessary to get the civil Courts' decree set aside; and as regards jurisdiction it is obvious that the Court had jurisdiction to pass a decree for confirmation of possession even though recovery of possession had been asked and the Court's order cannot be challenged on the ground that it was a nullity. It is, however, urged before me on behalf of the opposite party Anand Kishore Jha that even though it be admitted that Bishambar Das was in possession on 30th August 1923, it does not follow that he was in possession on 19th December 1927. Now, that is a matter which I do not propose to investigate. All I desire to observe is that if a proceeding under S. 145 is instituted, the Court will assume that on 30th August 1923 Bishambar Das was in possession and that his possession has continued until the opposite party Anand Kishore Jha disturbed that possession, if at all. So far as onus is concerned, it is upon Anand Kishore Jha, the judgment-debtor in the previous suit, now to establish that he was entered into possession by some means or other since 1923.

With these remarks the application is dismissed.

Sheo Barhi and another—Accused—Appellants.

v.

Emperor—Opposite Party.

Death Ref. No. 25 and Criminal Appeal No. 163 of 1929, Decided on 6th December 1929, from decision of Sess. Judge, Shahabad, D/- 31st August 1929.

(a) Evidence Act, S. 133—Evidence of approver must be corroborated in material particulars connecting accused with crime.

The evidence of an approver must be corroborated in material particulars, and those material particulars should connect the accused persons with the crime. [P 262 C 1]

In a charge for theft and murder the approver in "no way sought to exculpate himself so far as the conspiracy to commit theft and the theft itself was concerned, nor so far as regards conspiring to commit murder, though he exculpated himself so far as the actual murder was concerned. The story of the approver so far as a conspiracy to commit theft and the actual theft was corroborated, and the circumstances showed that the persons who committed theft were the same who committed the murder,

Held: that the corroboration connected the accused with the crime of murder. [P 262 C 1, 2]

(b) Evidence Act, S. 133—Approver's evidence discarded—Even defence cannot base arguments on it—Criminal Trial.

If the evidence of an approver is discarded, it must be discarded as a whole and the defence cannot base arguments on it any more than the prosecution. [P 263 C 2]

(c) Penal Code, S. 302—Whether fatal blow was delivered by either of two accused or approver not known—Accused held guilty of abetment of murder—Penal Code, S. 109.

It was found that two accused and the approver conspired to commit theft and in pursuance of that conspiracy to kill H in order to enable them to commit theft but there was no direct evidence as to who dealt the fatal blow,

Held: that the accused are guilty of abetment of murder under S. 302 read with S. 109. [P 264 C 1]

*K. N. Lal and H. L. Nandkeolyar—*for Appellants.

*Asst. Govt. Advocate—*for the Crown.

Judgment.—In a trial with the aid of assessors, the appellant Sheo Barhi has been found guilty of murder under S. 302 and the appellant Rajnarain Lal of abetment of murder under S. 302 read with S. 109 and both have been sentenced to death by the Sessions Judge at Arrah, who has referred the sentence for confirmation by this Court. The two appellants were also by the unanimous verdict of a jury found guilty, the former of theft under S. 379 and of abducting in order to murder under S. 364, I. P. C. and the latter of abetment of these two offences, but no separate sentences were passed under those sections.

On an appeal to this Court there was agreement between the two learned Judges composing the Bench that the convictions under S. 364 and 364 read with S. 109 must be set aside, but a disagreement with regard to the convictions of the two appellants on the charges of murder and abetment of murder respectively. There having been a disagreement the appeal has come before me for decision.

I may say at the outset that with regard to the charges of theft and abduction and the abetment of the same, the two learned Judges of this Court being agreed that the convictions under S. 379 and S. 379/109 must be upheld and those under S. 364 and S. 364/109 must be set aside. I have no hesitation in accepting their decision on these charges, since the evidence to support the charges of theft is absolutely clear while there are possible misdirections in the charge to the jury with regard to the extent to which an approver's evidence may be relied on. The convictions under Ss. 379 and 379/109 are upheld and those under Ss. 364 and 364/109 set aside.

The case as put forward by the prosecution has been detailed in the judgment of the learned Sessions Judge. Shortly stated it is as follows. Ramjanam and Jogendra were mail peons at the Dehri post office while Sheobasant Garari was telegraph messenger there. The appellant Sheo Barhi, a carpenter who had nothing to do with the post office used to visit the mail peons' quarters and suggest to Ramjanam, Jogendra and Sheobasant that they should steal the money from the post office mail bags. He held out to them as a reward that he would get them work in Bengal. Ramjanam gave up his post on May 3rd and was succeeded as mail peon by Raj Narain, whom Sheo Barhi approached with his proposal to rob the mail bags. The mail bags were taken every evening from the Dehri post office at about 6-30 p. m. by the mail peons whose duty it was to hand the bags over to the mail sorter of the train which arrived at Dehri railway station at 8-16 p. m. The mail peon would receive from the mail sorter in exchange the mail bags for Dehri post office, which he would place in the station mail box and lock them up for the night, taking them out and delivering them at the post office next morning. If the mail peon brought the Dehri post office bags to the station too late to catch the 8-16 train he locked them up in the station mail box to await the next day's train.

Sheo Barhi, Sheo Basant and Raj Narain made a plan that Jogendra, when taking the mail bags should miss the train and that after he had put the bags in the station mail box they should by means of a duplicate key, unlock the box, take out the bags and divide their contents. Raj Narain obtained the key and Sheo Barhi got it copied.

On May 15th, Jogendra was dismissed and the deceased Harsulal was appointed in his place as mail peon. Though Sheo Barhi visited Harsulal he did not get him to miss the train. Failing to prevail upon Harsulal, Sheo Barhi, Raj Narain and Sheo Basant agreed to decoy him away and kill him and then take the mail bags and their contents.

On 28th May last the mail to be despatched from the Dehri post office was a particularly valuable one, the registered and insured parcels and letters contained Rs. 4,310 and they were fastened up in four mail bags. These bags were handed over to Harsulal to take to the railway station at 6-30 p. m. and he set out. Raj Narain left the post office a little later, and Sheobasant after getting two telegrams at 7-15 to deliver to the addresses also left the office. Harsulal did not meet the train at 8-16 p. m. nor were the mail bags found in the mail box in the station. Next morning as Harsulal did not appear and no mail bags had been delivered, report was made to the police and to the Inspector of Post Offices. At 10 a. m. on 29th Mahesh Dusadh and Sunder Ahir, (P. Ws. 23 and 24) found two bags stuck to a bamboocraft in the canal. These were taken to the post office and were found to be bags which had contained the mail but which had been broken open. Next morning at about 9 a. m. Harsulal's dead body was found floating in the canal further north from the place where the bags were found. An incised gaping wound was found on the back of the upper part of the neck stretching from the left ear across the back of the neck; the cervical vertebrae, the pharynx and the spinal cord were cut.

Investigation was going on when, on 31st constable Ramparekha Ram received certain information which led to the discovery, in the house of a prostitute, of money and articles which had been contained in the mail bags, and to the arrest of Sheo Barhi. Sheo Barhi was thereafter used as a decoy with the result that Rajnarain disclosed where he had hidden in the ground his share of the contents of the mail bags and Sheo Basant gave information which led to the production of his share of the booty namely Rs. 820.

There can be no doubt that, as has already been found, Sheo Basant, Sheo Barhi and Raj Narain committed theft of the mail bags. The question is whether they murdered or abetted the murder of Harsu Lal in order to commit the theft. Sheo Basant has been granted a pardon and has given evidence as an approver. Were his story to be accepted as true there could be no doubt about the complicity of the appellants in the murder. But the evidence of an approver must be corroborated in material particulars and those materials particulars should connect the accused persons with the crime. We have to see firstly whether under these conditions Sheo Basant's evidence can be admitted and secondly if not whether there is sufficient evidence, discarding that of the approver to bring home the guilt of murder to the appellants.

Now the finding that has been arrived at without any reference to the approver's evidence that the appellants committed theft of the mail bags is strongly corroborative of the story told by Sheo Basant in the witness box, so far as it relates to a conspiracy between Sheo Barhi, Rajnarain and Sheo Basant to commit theft of the mail bags. The theft can hardly have happened without a preliminary arrangement between those who took part in it. In addition we have the independent evidence of Jogendra supported by that of his father that Sheo Barhi approached him with a suggestion to steal the contents of the mail bags. Sheo Basant has in no way sought to exculpate himself so far as the conspiracy to commit theft and the theft itself is concerned. He does not exculpate himself either so far as regards conspiring to commit murder, though he exculpates himself so far as the actual murder is concerned.

Sheo Basant's account of how he received two telegrams for delivery at 7 p. m. and delivered them at 9'45 p. m. and 10'30 p. m. is amply corroborated and though this evidence does not implicate the accused it tends to show the truth of the story told by the approver in its details. The evidence of Guru Halwai (P. W. 33), Ramdas Paneri (P. W. 34), Muhammad Ismail (P. W. 35) and Satdeo Sahu (P. W. 36) if it is believed corroborates the story of Sheo Basant, that Sheo Barhi, Sheo Basant and Rajnarain were together with Harsulal at the Halwai's and Paneri's shop that evening and this evidence may be said to affect the appellants by tending to connect them with the crime, since the association was shortly before the theft was committed. It is objected that these witnesses should not be believed to be stating the true facts because they did not come forward to tell what they had seen until a few days after the murder and because there are discrepancies as to who bought the sweets and as to who was carrying the mail bags. The witnesses are independent men who have no reason to concoct a story against the appellants and the discrepancies are not of much importance.

It has been further suggested that Sheo Basant's story should not be believed because he has failed satisfactorily to explain how Harsulal was so detained as to miss the train the distance to the railway station being so short and how it was that he did not deliver the telegrams till so late. It is true that the explanation of the delay is meagre and wanting in detail but we know for certain that Harsulal started with the mail bags at 6-30 p. m. and that he did in fact miss the mail. We know from independent evidence, that Harsu with the appellants spent some of the time at the Halwai's and the pan seller's shops. Whether the mail bags ever reached the station and were locked up in the mail-box and then taken out we cannot know for certain. It may be that Sheo Basant took a more active part in the theft and in luring Harsu to his doom than he likes to confess. It has been suggested that the story of getting a duplicate key for the lock must be untrue because the postal authorities whenever a key is missing have to send the lock to Patna. It is obvious that this does not mean that it is impossible to copy the key, but that just because it is possible to copy a key, it is found safer to send to Patna for a new lock with a different key so that if there has been theft of the key with the purpose of copying it, the duplicate key cannot be of any use.

The position is that the story of the approver so far as a conspiracy to commit theft and the actual theft of the contents of the mail bags is concerned is corroborated by the evidence circumstantial and direct which has led to the finding that the appellants actually did commit theft of the mail bags and as I have said before there must have been some conspiracy or arrangement to commit the crime. Jogendra and his father support the story that Sheo Barhi was instigating the mail peons to commit theft, there is evidence to show that before the theft the three men were as stated by the approver with Harsulal and that Harsulal then had the mail bags in his possession. In my opinion there is enough material evidence tending to implicate the two appellants with regard to a conspiracy to commit theft and the actual theft to corroborate the approver's story and to show that it can be relied on so far as the charge of theft is concerned. That being so, there seems to me to be insufficient ground for discarding that part of the story of the approver which concerns a conspiracy to murder and the events leading up to the murder. If the approver's story is believed there can be no doubt that the two appellants were rightly convicted of murder. •

The two learned Judges, however, who first heard the appeal have agreed in discarding the approver's evidence and it is necessary to determine whether apart from that evidence there is sufficient evidence to satisfy the Court that the appellants brought about the death of Harsulal. •

The circumstantial evidence in this case is such as would ordinarily lead a reasonable man to believe that the appellants were responsible for the death of Harsulal. We know that Harsulal on the evening of 28th left the post office at 6-30 p. m. with the mail bags in his possession; we know that the bags were found floating in the canal next day, having been opened and their contents extracted, and that the dead body was later found floating in the canal with a murderous wound on the neck and lastly we know that the greater part of the money which had been contained in the bags was found in the possession of the appellants. Furthermore Rajnarain produced the money he had obtained as his share from a hole dug in the bank of the canal in which the bags and dead body were found floating. As I have said, any reasonable man would conclude from the above circumstances that the men who committed the theft from the mail bags carried by Harsulal were the men who killed Harsulal in order to abstract the contents from the mail bags.

It has been urged before me that the circumstances suggest that Harsulal was a fellow conspirator with the appellants in the theft and that he also received a share of the contents of the mail bags, and that, if that is so, it is unlikely that his fellow conspirators murdered him, and the possibility is that someone else killed him in order to rob him of the share he had received. The grounds on which, learned counsel based this suggestion are, the statement by the approver that Sheo Barhi told his fellow conspirators that Harsulal would be easier to draw into the conspiracy than Jogendra, because he had been at the school of Sheo Barhi's grandfather, and the statement that Sheo Barhi began to visit the quarters of Harsu, but more especially the statement of the approver that the booty was divided into four shares, Sheo Barhi taking two as being the ringleader and the person who by killing Harsu had enabled the theft to be committed. It is contended that the division into four shares would point to the fact that there were four men who shared the spoils and that Harsulal was the fourth man. Now all these grounds are based on statements made by the approver in his evidence before the Court, if that evidence is discarded no notice can be taken of the statements. If the evidence is discarded it must be discarded as a whole and the defence cannot base arguments on it any more than the prosecution.

It is further argued that unless Harsulal had joined the conspiracy he could not have missed the train since he had so much time within which to reach the station. If the approver's evidence is discarded we have nothing to show when exactly Harsulal met his death except the evidence that he was seen with the appellants and Sheo Basant at about 7-30 or 7-45 p. m. that night. It may be that he was taken to the canal and killed soon after that, and thus the mail bags never reached the station or it may be, as is the case of the prosecution, that he was persuaded by some inducement to miss the train, put the bags in the station mail box, and then go with the appellants to the canal bank. The facts remain that he had the mail bags, missed the train and was killed that night. There is no evidence at all that Harsulal joined in the theft of the mail bags. Nor is there any evidence that any one else than the appellants and Sheo Basant knew anything about the conspiracy or could be aware that Harsu had received a share of the money and was worth robbing. The strong circumstantial evidence provided by the finding of the stolen property in the hands of the appellants is further strengthened by the evidence of the witnesses who depose to having seen Harsu with the mail bags in the company of the appellants and Sheo Basant at 7-30 or 7-45 p. m. in the evening of the murder. I have already stated that I can see no good reason to distrust the evidence of these witnesses. Their evidence was not shaken in cross-examination, and the discrepancies in it were not such as would induce me to believe that the witnesses were telling a concocted story.

In my opinion the circumstantial evidence is so strong to show that it was the appellants who brought about the death of Harsulal that there could not be formed in the mind of any reasonable man any reasonable hypothesis to the contrary. I find that both of the appellants must be held liable for the murder of Harsulal.

The evidence of the approver being discarded there is no direct evidence to show who actually struck the blow which killed Harsu. That the two appellants conspired with Sheo Basant to commit theft and in pursuance of that conspiracy to kill Harsulal in order to enable them to commit theft I have no doubt and I find both appellants guilty of abetment of murder under S. 302 read with S. 109. There are no extenuating circumstances, the murder had been thought out and premeditated and was a particularly cold blooded one. The appellants are liable to and deserve the punishment inflicted in cases of murder.

In the case of Sheo Barhi, I find no reason for not inflicting the extreme penalty. He had nothing to do with the post office and it is clear from the evidence of Jogendra that he was the prime mover in the conspiracy. I uphold the sentence of death passed upon him by the Sessions Judge. In the case of Rajnarain who is a youth of 18 years of age, the probability is that he was tempted and led on by Sheo Barhi and Sheo Basant. For the above reason I substitute for the sentence of death passed upon him a sentence of transportation for life.

Order accordingly.

ADAMI AND CHATTERJI, JJ.

Judagi Mallah—Accused.

v.

Emperor

Death Reference No. 8 of 1929 and Criminal Appeal No. 59 of 1929, Decided on 12th April 1929, made by Sess. Judge, Muzaffarpur, on 12th March 1929.

(a) Penal Code, S. 300—Man striking another with knife in throat—Knowledge that blow is sufficient in ordinary course to cause death must be imputed to him.

A man who strikes another man with a knife in the throat must know that the blow is as imminently dangerous that it must in all probability cause death and the injury intended to be inflicted is sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause death. [P 267 C 2]

(b) Penal Code, S. 86—Drunkenness not sufficient to incapacitate accused from forming intent necessary to constitute crime—Accused is liable for criminal act.

Evidence of drunkenness falling short of proved incapacity in the accused to form the intent necessary to constitute the crime and merely establishing that his mind was affected by drink so that he more readily gave way to some violent passion, does not rebut the presumption that a man intends the natural consequences of his acts. Director of Public Prosecutions v. Beard, (1920) A. C. 479, Ref.

[P 268 C 2]

(c) Penal Code, S. 86—Ordinary drunkenness makes no difference to knowledge with which man is credited.

Ordinary drunkenness makes no difference to the knowledge with which a man is credited and if an accused knew what the natural consequences of his act were, he must be presumed to have intended to cause them: 38 Mad. 473, Poll. [P 268 C 2]

(d) Penal Code, Ss. 302 and 86—Brawl between accused and deceased, both drunk—Accused was struck first—Accused striking deceased in throat by knife and running about saying he had committed crime for which he was going to be hanged—Deceased bigger man than accused—Extreme penalty held not called for.

In the course of drunken brawl accused was struck by the deceased and knocked down, whereupon the accused struck the deceased with a knife in the throat, which resulted in killing the deceased. After committing the crime the accused ran about saying that he had killed the deceased and was going to be hanged. Of the two, the deceased was the bigger man.

Held: that the accused had knowledge and intention which would make him liable under S. 302 and was guilty of murder, but the case was one in which extreme penalty was not called for. [P 269 C 1]

A. D. Patel—for Accused.

Government Advocate—for the Crown.

Adami, J.—Judagi Mallah has been found guilty by the Sessions Judge of Muzaffarpur of the offence of murder and has been sentenced to death. That sentence comes before us for confirmation.

The appellant Judagi Mallah and Deonarain the deceased were cousins living at a village called Chimanpur. They were both boatmen and had been working in Calcutta up to a week before 12th December. Early on the morning of 12th December, one Hira came to Deonarain's house to realize a debt owing to him. It appears that Hira, Judagi and Deonarain had a meal together in the morning at which they drank toddy and then went into the bazar and afterwards Deonarain proceeded to the ghat with Hira while Judagi came back. Deonarain accompanied Hira across the river and then came back. At sunset that evening Dasrath, also a relation, met Deonarain at the ghat and asked him where he had been and what he was doing and then accompanied him towards his home. On the way they first went to one grog shop and drank toddy and then proceeded to another shop belonging to Kanhai at a bandh not far from the house of Deonarain. There Kanhai brought them toddy to drink. Meanwhile Deonarain's wife became disturbed at the failure of Deonarain to return and went to Judagi's house which was close to her own and asked Judagi what had become of her husband. Judagi said he did not know but probably her husband would be returning. She went back and again after sunset went to Judagi's house and again made inquiries and then Judagi promised to go and see if Deonarain happened to be at the toddy shop. He set out and the next we hear is that, while Deonarain and Dasrath were drinking toddy from the pot which Kanhai had brought them, Judagi came up and took hold of the pot from which Deonarain was going to drink. Deonarain became angry at this action of Judagi and abused Judagi. Judagi seems to have returned the abuse and then a quarrel arose in the course of which Deonarain knocked Judagi down. Dasrath at the time tried to interfere and to separate the two men and then went off a few paces away to ease himself. While he was doing this he saw Judagi strike Deonarain with a knife in the throat. Deonarain fell down dead. Thereupon, according to Dasrath and other witnesses, Dasrath began to shout that Judagi had killed Deonarain, whilst also, according to the witnesses, Judagi ran about saying that he had killed Deonarain and was going to hang for it. Dasrath went off and met Niranjana and with him visited Domi, who is the leading man of the village and a panch as also a Municipal Commissioner. They were telling Domi what had happened when Judagi and his mother Mt. Kumri came along and stated to Domi that Judagi had committed the offence and they asked his forgiveness; in fact these two, according to the prosecution, confessed Judagi's offence and asked Domi to save Judagi. Domi, however, told Dasrath and Niranjana that they must go off to the police station. These two went off, and, on the way, visited a man called Kashi Tewari, who also told them to go to the police station. The two men went to the outpost which, according to the Head Constable's diary, they reached at midnight and told the Head Constable that Deonarain had been killed. The Head Constable, according to his own evidence and the station diary, deputed a constable Rajmahal to the police station which was half a mile away and the Head Constable and other constables started at midnight in search of the accused. According to the same diary at 12-30 the Head Constable with a constable set out for the police station together with Judagi the accused. Meanwhile just after Deonarain had been killed there had been the outcry which I have mentioned in the village which attracted several women to the spot where Deonarain was lying. One Lala Pasi (P. W. 11) said that he could not come because he was a leper, nor did his wife go there, prosecution witness 12. Dasrath had told Mt. Debia (P.W. 15) and she with Mt. Jamuni (P.W. 14) came up to the spot where Deonarain was lying. The aunt of Judagi, Mt. Dumri, had come up as also the mother of Deonarain. Water was sent for and a lota was brought from Judagi's house and an attempt was made to give water to Deonarain. He, however, was dead. Then Mt. Sundari, Judagi and Kumri carried the body to the house of Mt. Sundari, the wife of Deonarain. At 1 a. m. the party composed of constables Rajmahal, Mohamad Sadique, Dasrath, Niranjan, Kumri, Judagi and others reached the police station and there Mt. Sundari laid an information which was recorded by the Sub-Inspector. In that information she told how her husband had failed to return before sunset and Judagi had said he was going to look for him, and then an hour afterwards after she had gone to sleep she heard a cry from Mt. Debia calling her to run to the spot, and found her husband lying wounded and dead. She told how they carried the body to her house and how Judagi after carrying the body to the house had gone back to his own home. The information then stated that Judagi was dead drunk. Then the information proceeds as follows:

"Now I have learnt from Dasrath Sahai that at a pahar after sunset he was going along the bandh to his house when he saw a struggle going on between my husband and Judagi on the bandh, full particulars regarding which will be stated by Dasrath himself. Therefore I think that Judagi has killed my husband."

The information then tells of some quarrel which Judagi had with Deonarain. Judagi was arrested, but the Sub-Inspector tells us that until 1 p. m. the next day he was not in a fit state to give any statement owing to his drunkenness. He had been arrested and he and his aunt Mt. Kumri were charged but the case was not prosecuted against Mt. Kumri.

The learned Sessions Judge agreeing with three of the four assessors has found the appellant guilty of the offence of murder. He has believed the witnesses who had given evidence to the effect that they heard Dasrath directly after the murder saying that it was the appellant who had killed Deonarain and other witnesses who say that Judagi himself went about confessing his guilt. The learned Judge also relied on the evidence of Domi before whom a confession was made. The learned Sessions Judge has considered the point that in the saneha as recorded at first in the police outpost the name of the person who had killed Deonarain was not given.

He has come to the conclusion that though the Head Constable committed a very serious offence by interpolating the name of Judagi in the entry in the police diary, still, in his opinion, the omission of the name was merely due to carelessness. He believed that the name of Judagi was in fact given to the Head Constable at the outpost. It is really difficult to understand the entry in the station diary which purported to have been made at midnight. It is quite plain that the Head Constable was incompetent and one can see from his evidence that this view ought to be taken of his capabilities.

Mr. Patel, learned counsel on behalf of the appellant, argues that up to 1 a.m. it had not been decided that the death of Deonarain was to be attributed to Judagi and that it was only when Sundari was in the course of giving her first information that it was suggested to her that Judagi was the man who had killed Deonarain. I have quoted above the passage from the first information relating to her knowledge which she acquired from Dasrath. In her evidence Mt. Sundari adheres to the statement that it was during the time that she was giving her information that she learnt from Dasrath how he had been going along the bandh when he saw a struggle which ended in the death of Deonarain. Mr. Agarwala the Assistant Government Advocate explains this as meaning that though she knew that it was Judagi who had killed her husband, she did not know until she was giving her information any details of the manner in which her husband met his death.

Now it may be that Sundari did not know who the actual murderer of her husband was; she would naturally be in a distressed state of mind, as she herself says, and paid little attention to what was being shouted or what was being said. As a matter of fact Dasrath himself says that he did not tell her and he went off with Niranjan to Domi's house; it is quite possible that Sundari did not realize what was said about Judagi for Dasrath had gone off and also Judagi had gone away and was no longer telling people that he had committed the murder. However that may be, we have the statement in the first information that it was Judagi who killed Deonarain and we have also the evidence which the learned Sessions Judge and the assessors in the Court below believed, that Judagi admitted that he had killed Deonarain and that directly after the killing of Deonarain Dasrath told the various witnesses that it was the appellant who had caused his death. There is no reason to disbelieve the story of Domi and the other witnesses. Domi is a man of some position and it is not shown that he is in any way interested except for the fact that he signed one of the kabalas which is said to have caused some trouble between Judagi and Deonarain. As a matter of fact that dispute between Judagi and Deonarain had been compromised the day before. Nor does the fact that a man attests a document signify that that man must have a bias in favour of the person who executed the document. There is also no reason to disbelieve the witnesses who are not related to or of the same caste as Deonarain. There are witnesses of various castes and Lala who is a Pasi admits that he heard Dasrath calling out that Judagi had killed Deonarain with a knife. I see no reason to disbelieve either Lala or his wife Mt. Chulhia. Several witnesses were tendered by the prosecution but the defence did not cross-examine them. Kanhai, it is true, denies that he supplied Deonarain and Judagi with toddy but it is easy to see that it would be unsafe to admit that he did supply it since by supplying it at night and out of his house he would be breaking his license and would be liable to get into trouble.

A good deal has been made of the delay in lodging the first information. The occurrence was supposed to have taken place at 9 p. m. while the first information was not lodged till 1 a. m. Dasrath and Niranjani have explained how a great part of the time was taken up, but beyond this the probability is that there having been a drunken brawl the villagers were not anxious to make any report at first to the police, and it was for this reason that they went to Domi who was the leading man in the village. Even when Domi told them to go to the police station they went off to Kashi Tewari who is the next most important man there. He also told them to go to the police station and it seems that it was after this further instruction that they went off to the outpost.

Mr. Patel has said everything that could be said on behalf of the appellant and has made the most of the palpable fault in the station diary of the outpost, but I cannot see that this trouble with regard to the station diary really can affect the case considering the reliable evidence we have of the guilt of the appellant. It is quite clear from the evidence that both Deonarain and Judagi had been spending the day in drinking. We know that Deonarain had visited at least two toddy shops in addition to the drinking of toddy at his own house. Judagi we do not know so much about in regard to his movements during the day, but we do know that when he came to the police station he was quite drunk, so much so that he was not fit to make a statement till 1 p. m. next day.

On the evidence we are quite convinced that it was true that the appellant caused the death of Deonarain. A knife with which the murder is alleged to have been committed was found by the Sub-Inspector in the house of Judagi in the room occupied by Judagi's aunt Mt. Kumri. There was a mark on the handle which the Sub-Inspector thought to be blood but the Chemical Examiner has declared that it was not a mark of human blood. Whether this knife was used in the murder or it was another knife, it is clear from the medical evidence that sharp cutting knife was used and the carotid artery was cut causing death.

The first question which arises is whether the offence is the offence of murder or culpable homicide not amounting to murder. The evidence of Dasrath which has been believed is that a knife was used by the appellant. A man using a knife and stabbing another man in the throat with that knife must be taken to have known and intended that the blow should be fatal. Mr. Patel argues that there was no intention of causing death because these two men were friends. Now even friends in a drunken brawl may cause each other's death. Apart from the question of drunkenness, however, I should hold that the man who strikes another man with a knife in the throat must know that the blow is so imminently dangerous that it must in all probability cause death and the in-injury intended to be inflicted is sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause death.

The question then arises whether the fact that the appellant was drunk and also the fact that according to the evidence he had been knocked down by the deceased before he struck the blow can have the effect of reducing the offence.

We have been referred to various cases on the question of the effect of drunkenness in the gravity of an offence. These cases have been discussed in the case of Director of Public Prosecutions v. Beard (1). The conclusions which were drawn in that case by their Lordships were stated under three heads. The first head was :

"that insanity, whether produced by drunkenness or otherwise is a defence to the crime charged. The distinction between the defence of insanity in the true sense caused by excessive drinking, and the defence of drunkenness which produces a condition such that the drunken man's mind becomes incapable of forming a specific intention, has been preserved throughout the cases. The insane person cannot be convicted of a crime; Folstead v. The King (2) but, upon a verdict of insanity is ordered to be detained during His Majesty's pleasure. The law takes no note of the cause of the insanity. If actual insanity in fact supervenes, as the result of alcoholic excess, it furnishes as complete an answer to a criminal charge as insanity, induced by any other cause. In the early cases of Burrow (3), and Rennie (4), Holroyd, J., refused to regard drunkenness as an excuse unless it had induced a continuing and lasting condition of insanity. But in Reg. v. Davis (5) where the prisoner was charged with wounding with intent to murder, Stephen, J., thought (and I agree with him) that insanity even though temporary was an answer. The defence was that the prisoner was of unsound mind at the time of the commission of the act, and the evidence established that he was suffering from delirium tremens resulting from over-indulgence in drink."

Stephen, J., said :

"But drunkenness is one thing and the diseases to which drunkenness leads are different things and if a man by drunkenness brings on a state of disease which causes such a degree of madness even for a time which would have relieved him from responsibility if it had been caused in any other way then he would not be criminally responsible. In my opinion in such a case the man is a madman, and is to be treated as such, although his madness is only temporary If you think there was a distinct disease caused by drinking but differing from drunkenness and that by reason thereof he did not know that the act was wrong you will find a verdict of not guilty on the ground of insanity."

"To the same effect is a decision of Day, J., in Regina v. Baines (Taylor's Medical Jurisprudence). The defence was that the prisoner was insane when the murder was committed. The evidence proved that the prisoner had on several occasions been under treatment for delirium tremens. He had one attack a week before, and another two days after committing the crime. Day, J., held that it was immaterial whether the insanity was permanent or temporary. The question was whether there was insanity or not, and the learned Judge ruled that if a man were in such a state of intoxication that he did not know the nature of his act or that his act was wrongful, his act would be excusable on the ground of insanity."

The second conclusion is :

"that evidence of drunkenness which renders the accused incapable of forming the specific intent essential to constitute the crime should be taken into consideration with the other facts proved in order to determine whether or not he had this intent."

The third conclusion is :

"That evidence of drunkenness falling short of a proved incapacity in the accused to form the intent necessary to constitute the crime, and merely establishing that his mind was affected by drink so that he more readily gave way to some violent passion, does not rebut the presumption that a man intends the natural consequences of his acts."

In my opinion the present case comes under the purview of this third conclusion. We have nothing to show that the accused was incapable by reason of drunkenness to form the intent necessary to constitute the crime. The fact is according to the evidence, that after he committed the crime he ran about saying that he had killed this man and was going to be hanged. He said that he had done a wrongful act.

In the case of Mandru Gadaba (6), it was held by Ayling, J., that ordinary drunkenness makes no difference to the knowledge with which a man is credited and if an accused knew what the natural consequences of his act were he must be presumed to have intended to cause them.

We are satisfied that in the present case the appellant had the knowledge and the intention which would make him liable under S. 302 and therefore therefore he is guilty of murder.

The last question is whether in the circumstances the extreme penalty should be imposed. In my opinion this is a case in which the extreme penalty is not called for. The death of the deceased was caused in the course of a drunken brawl and, though, it is true that Judagi may have started the quarrel by trying to take the pot of toddy from Deonarain, we find from the evidence that Deonarain knocked him down and beat him and that Deonarain was the bigger man of the two. Taking all the circumstances together I would reduce the sentence from a sentence of death to a sentence of transportation for life.

Chatterji, J.—I agree. The first thing to consider is whether it was the accused who killed the deceased. The evidence of Dasrath is that there was a quarrel between the accused and the deceased over a pot of toddy and the latter threw down the former on the ground and fisted him, and the accused, after having been separated by the witness, inflicted the fatal blow with a pointed knife into his throat. There is no suggestion of any enmity between this witness and the accused. It is said by learned counsel for the appellant that the witness is himself the murderer and that he implicated the accused in order to save himself. But why should he kill the deceased, the feelings between the two having been cordial. In the next place, if really he was the murderer why would the neighbours of the accused Judagi support him in his statement, that he at once shouted that the accused had killed Deonarain, especially when the witness Dasrath was a stranger to this place. I see no reason why the testimony of this man who has been believed by the learned Sessions Judge and three of the assessors, should be distrusted. In the next place his evidence as I have indicated is corroborated by neighbours who heard the shouting of the witness that the accused had killed the deceased. The depositions of Niranjani, Domi and Kashi fully corroborate this part of the case, besides some of the neighbouring females. Domi Choudhury is a Municipal Commissioner of Lalganj and a person of some position and influence in the locality. The accused approached this Domi and said "I have done some wrong but I may be excused." This statement of the accused in fact indicates an acknowledgment of the commission of the crime imputed to him. Lastly a knife which showed some signs of being washed off but had some marks of blood in the corner was found in an unusual place in the house of the accused.

The three points which are urged against the prosecution case are: (1) that there was a delay of about three hours in the lodging of information before the police; (2) that there was an omission of the name of the accused in the sanaha by Dasrath and (3) that the widow of the deceased did not hear the name of the assailant till 1 a. m. when the first information report was lodged. All these points have been fully discussed by the learned Sessions Judge and carefully dealt with by him, and I am in complete agreement with the reasons given by him.

The only eyewitness, Dasrath, was not a resident of this village, and it is natural to expect that he would approach the residents of this place before going to the outpost or thana. Then when the matter was the result of a drunken brawl people would naturally hesitate whether it should be reported to the police, and it has further to be remembered that the young widow had to be looked after. The delay is not so serious as to throw any suspicion on the case for the eyewitness gave out the name of the assailant to independent persons some of whom admittedly hold responsible and respectable position in society.

The Head Constable, who entered the sanaha at 12 midnight explains that he omitted the name of the accused by mistake. This explanation would seem to receive support from the subsequent entries of 12 a. m. and 12-30 p. m. In the former it is stated that the Head Constable started in search of the accused and in the latter that Judagi the accused was marched off to the thana. These entries clearly show that the name of the accused had been given to the Head Constable. It is, however, unfortunate that this man tried to make a false entry in the original entry in order to cover up his foolish mistake. Judagi's name was mentioned at 1 a. m. when the first information was lodged at the thana and I fail to see why his name should not have been given an hour earlier. As to the third point, one must take into account the feeling of a young Hindu widow when confronted with the suddenness of the crime and the corpse of her deceased husband and it would be natural for her not to make any inquiry or be able to talk to others or to pay attention to what they were saying. The Sub-Inspector's deposition shows that she was much distressed and found it difficult to make a statement when lodging her first information. I am satisfied on a careful consideration of the entire evidence that the deceased came by his death by the blow of the accused.

The crucial question in the case is whether the accused is guilty of murder under S. 302 or of culpable homicide not amounting to murder under S. 304. As laid down in S. 86, I. P. C., voluntary drunkenness by itself is no excuse for the commission of an offence. Though the accused may have been drunk at the time of the commission of the offence, the position will have to be considered from the aspect that he was a sober man. The nature of the wound inflicted in the present case and the character of the weapon used are such that a sober man would know that the act is so imminently dangerous that it must in all probability cause death. The offence, therefore, comes, in my opinion, within the substantive portion (Cl. 4), S. 300, I.P.C. But there are some extenuating circumstances in the present case which ought to be taken into account in considering whether the extreme penalty of the law should be imposed. The evidence of Dasrath is that Deonarain the deceased hit the accused Judagi first and threw him down. Then it must also be borne in mind that Judagi had no motive in causing Deonarain's death. Both had gone to Calcutta together and returned from that place at the same time only a week before the occurrence. On that day both ate and drank together as friends, and if really Judagi intended to cause the death of Deonarain he would have waited a few minutes and inflicted the blow after the departure of Dasrath, who did not belong to that village and would have left him afterwards. The evidence of the Sub-Inspector shows that the accused was drunk when the accused was brought to him. He tried to record the statement of the accused but he was too drunk to answer. The act appears to have been committed without premeditation in a sudden fight in the heat of passion upon a sudden quarrel while the accused was in a state of intoxication. Although drunkenness by itself does not excuse the commission of an offence, this along with other circumstances may well be taken into account in considering the nature of the penalty to be inflicted. In view of all the circumstances of the case, I agree with my learned brother that this is a fit case in which the accused should be sentenced to transportation for life.

Lal Mohammad—Accused.

Criminal Ref. No. 11 of 1929, Decided on 19th September 1929.

(a) Criminal P. C., S. 307—Verdict of jury such as would not be come to by reasonable man—Reference is competent.

It is not in every case if the verdict of the jury does not commend itself to the Sessions Judge that he is entitled to refer the case to the High Court. The principle is that where the verdict is a verdict which would not be come to by a reasonable man then a reference would be competent: 13 Mad. 343 and A. I. R. 1929 Pat. 313, Ref. [P 271 C 1]

*(b) Criminal P. C., S. 307—Sole prosecution witness unreliable from point of view of Judge—Jury considering his evidence and giving different verdict from Judge—Reference held competent.

Where Sessions Judge is of opinion from the demeanour and the evidence of the witness that the witness is unreliable and the witness is the only witness on which prosecution relies and on whose evidence jury have based their verdict, it is not incompetent to make reference to High Court. Such a case is quite distinguishable from the case where the Sessions Judge takes a view of the evidence quite different from one which jury have taken. [P 272 C 2]

Judgment.—This is a reference under S. 307, Criminal P. C., by the learned Sessions Judge of Shahabad.

A preliminary objection is taken by the learned Government Pleader on the ground that the reference is not competent for the reason that, as the letter of reference indicates, the learned Judge was merely of a different opinion on the evidence from that of the jury who tried the case. It is argued that the mere fact that the Judge disagrees with the view taken by the jury of the evidence does not make it a matter for a reference under S. 307 of the Code. It is unnecessary perhaps for me to state the principles which have been discussed in many cases, and it will be sufficient for me to say that it is not in every case in which the verdict of the jury is one which does not commend itself to the Sessions Judge, that he is entitled to refer the case to the High Court. The cases of the different High Courts perhaps do not agree in every detail in their decisions, but substantially the principle applicable in cases under S. 307 is that where the verdict is a verdict which would not be come to by a reasonable man then a reference under S. 307 is competent. Perhaps I have stated the extreme principle, but there is abundant authority for the proposition which I have stated. *

However, in cases where, as in this case, the jury has convicted and the learned Sessions Judge is of the opinion that the accused should be acquitted, it is perhaps easier to apply the principles than in a case where the jury have acquitted and the Sessions Judge would convict the accused. It is quite clear in the first place that where there is no evidence against the accused person, then it is the manifest duty of the trial Judge to refer the matter to the High Court. That, of course, is perhaps an extreme case and as I have stated one in which there is no difficulty in applying the true principle.

Now the facts of this case in that connexion are those that there is substantially only one witness of the prosecution in this case, that is to say, if that witness is disbelieved then the prosecution must inevitably fail. If she is to be believed, then the verdict of the jury in this case convicting the accused is justified. I ought to mention perhaps at this stage that there was a jury of five of whom four were Hindus and one was a Mahomedan. There was a verdict of the jury which was not unanimous, four being in favour of conviction and one of acquittal. Exactly which of these jurors held those views does not appear. The accused person is a Mahomedan.

Now, the learned Sessions Judge in his letter of reference states the reasons why the evidence of Mt. Chandan Kuer, who was the victim of the crime if such was committed and who is the only witness for the prosecution on the main part of the case, should not be believed. Now, in the first place it appears that she made a statement on oath to Mr. Gomes. That statement is wholly inconsistent with the evidence which she gave in Court. Her explanation of it is that she was induced, if not threatened, by the accused and thus she came to make the statement which she did before Mr. Gomes which if true would show that the accused was quite innocent of the offence of abduction with which he is charged in this case. The statement by her before the Court, as I have stated, is wholly inconsistent with her former statement. In Court she alleges that the accused Lal Mohammad induced her on 11th March of this year to leave Arrah and go with him on the representation that he was about to take her to her daughter who was living at Amritsar. For the purpose of this judgment it is unnecessary for me to state in detail the facts of the case, but what did in fact happen was that she left Arrah with the accused: that fact cannot be denied. She eventually arrived at Patna City where she stayed for some weeks. She also stayed under the protection of the accused person at Buxar. In her evidence she claims to have protested on leaving Arrah and in fact on the journey to Patna she complained to the accused person that whereas she thought she was going to Amritsar, that is, in westerly direction, she was in fact travelling in easterly direction. She stated that the accused explained to her that the better way to get to Amritsar was through Patna by the Punjab Mail.

Now, I mention those facts in connexion with the statement by the learned Judge in the letter of reference that the witness was not to be believed. He comes to the conclusion that the evidence is inconsistent for the reasons stated in his letter of reference, with the suggestion of an intrigue between the accused person and Mt. Chandan Kuer. Now of that quite clearly there is no evidence. There may be suspicion of it and it seems to me that one of the grounds, the most substantial for that suspicion, is the fact which I think must be admitted on all hands that Mt. Chandan Kuer left Arrah with the accused person admittedly after a conversation which lasted only a few minutes and incidentally a conversation which was the first that Mt. Chandan Kuer had ever had with the accused in the course of her life. This was a circumstance which led the learned Judge to believe that the story which she told before the Sessions Judge and the jury is not to be believed.

I come back to the point at which I started, namely, whether having regard to these circumstances the argument put forward by the Crown that this reference is not sustainable is good or not. What is the position when, as in this case, there is in the opinion of the Judge no evidence upon which the accused can be convicted? The learned Judge not only from the evidence but I should suppose from the demeanour of the witness herself in the box holds that she is a woman who is not to be believed. It is true that in his summing up to the jury he has pointed out in a very emphatic manner that in his opinion this woman is not a witness of truth, and in fact in spite of that direction the jury have convicted the accused person by a majority as I have already stated. Now one case has been referred to in this connexion: Queen-Empress v. Gururadu (1). In that case the jury had found the prisoners guilty of theft. The learned Acting Sessions Judge in that case was of the opinion that although he did not think the evidence justified the conviction it was not incumbent upon him to refer the case to the High Court as there may be more probably an appeal. The learned Judges who decided that case stated that under S. 307 discretion is left to the Judge to refer the case to the High Court, for it is only when he disagrees with the verdict of the jury:

"so completely that he considers it necessary for the ends of justice to submit the case to the High Court," that he should do so. The Court adds:

"This discretion should, however, always be exercised when the Judge thinks that the verdict is not supported by the evidence. It is the only way in which the miscarriage of justice by a perverse verdict of a jury, which is of too frequent occurrence, can be remedied by the High Court."

I have quoted that case having regard to the statement made regarding it in the case of Ramdas Rai v. Emperor (2). I very respectfully disagree with the learned Judge who decided this case in making the observation which he made in the judgment beyond the necessity of case. The principle which was laid down (and this part of the judgment is not quoted in the case of Ramdas Rai)

by the Madras High Court was that where the Judge disagrees with the verdict of the jury:

he should do so. The point, therefore, is: at what state of the evidence is the Judge justified in saying that in the interest of justice the matter should be referred to the High Court? It is open to this Court to say that the reference is competent when the Sessions Judge, as in this case, states that the only witness upon which the prosecution must rely in order to succeed is not a witness to be relied upon. In my judgment it is impossible to say that in a case of this kind, where the learned Judge has the advantage, which this Court has not, namely, of observing the demeanour of the witness and at the same time hearing her evidence and comes to the conclusion that it is not to be believed, a reference in those circumstances is incompetent. I repeat that in circumstances of that kind it is impossible to uphold that view. The view which I have expressed indicates that this case is quite different from a case where the learned Judge merely takes a view of the evidence as a whole different from the view which the jury are supposed to have taken in the matter. It is, in my judgment, almost impossible where, as in this case, the sole witness has made two conflicting statements to come to a conclusion whether the first statement or the second statement is a true one. Where there is a conviction in those circumstances, in my judgment, the verdict of the jury is one which can hardly be sustained.

Having regard to my view as to the competency of this reference it seems unnecessary for me to add anything as regards the opinion of the jury and the evidence in the case. I have already expressed my view of the opinion stated by the learned Judge. I will satisfy myself by stating that this case when once it is found that the reference is competent is to be dealt with by the Court in the same manner as an appeal and that I must state that the evidence upon which the prosecution relied in this case did not justify the conviction which has been recorded by the jury.

In these circumstances the reference is accepted, and the accused is acquitted

Thangammal Ayyar—Respondent.

Criminal Revn. No. 273 of 1929 and Criminal Revn. Petn. No. 243 of 1929, Decided on 11th October 1929, against order of Addl. Dist. Mag. Tanjore, D/-23rd February 1929.

 Criminal P. C., S. 144—High Court can revise order under S. 144 provided revisional jurisdiction is exercised within 2 months of order.

The effect of the omission of Cl. (3), S. 435 is that now under the present Code High Court has power to revise orders under S. 144, and in order that the High Court may revise the order the revisional jurisdiction must be exercised within 2 months of the passing of the order. Public Prosecutor—for the Crown.

Order.—This Criminal Revision Petition has been posted before us for a decision upon two preliminary points.

The facts are that the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Pattukottai in exercise of his powers under S. 144, Criminal P. C., directed the petitioners to vacate the Nagaram palace building forthwith on the ground that the occupation caused annoyance and obstruction to the zamindari and was likely to cause an immediate disturbance of the public tranquillity and a riot. In accordance with this order that palace was vacated and an application was subsequently made under sub-S. 4, S. 144, Criminal P. C., to the Additional District Magistrate of Tanjore to rescind the order of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Pattukottai. This application he rejected. The original order was dated 23rd January 1929, and the order rejecting the petition was on 23rd February. The petitioners then presented this revision petition. When it came on for hearing before Reilly, J. in view of the question raised, namely, whether the High Court has power to interfere in revision with orders under S. 144, Criminal P. C., and the importance of that question he directed that the petition should be heard by a Bench of two Judges. Another question raised before him was whether the petition is out of time because orders under S. 144, Criminal P. C., are in force only for two months. This question also has been left for this Bench to decide.

Dealing with the latter question first, on the assumption that the Sub-Divisional Magistrate acted within his jurisdiction in passing the order, it cannot be questioned that, as the two months have now elapsed since the order was passed, the High Court has nothing to revise. The question as to whether or not the Sub-Divisional Magistrate had jurisdiction to make the order is one of the matters raised in the petition but we are not disposing of that question here as that is not one of the preliminary questions we have to decide. In view of the fact that the High Court has now no order to revise the determination of the larger and more important question as to whether such orders are revisable would be unnecessary but for the fact that two petitions which came on recently for hearing before Ananta-krishna Ayyar, J., were ordered to stand over pending the decision by us of this point and we accordingly allowed the matter to be argued.

It is necessary, first of all, to trace the history of Ss. 144 and 435, Criminal P. C. In the Code of 1864 S. 62 corresponds to the present S. 144 and S. 404 corresponds to S. 435. S. 404 reads as follows.

"The Sudder Court may, on the report of a Court of Session or of a Magistrate, or whenever it thinks fit, call for the record of any criminal trial or the record of any judicial proceeding of a criminal Court, other than a criminal trial, in any Court within its jurisdiction, in which it shall appear to it that there has been error in the decision on a point of law, or that a point of law should be considered by the Sudder Court and may determine any point of law arising out of the case, and thereupon pass such orders as the Sudder Court shall seem right."

The earliest decision upon the point we had to decide was under the Code of 1861 and that was Abbas Ali Choudhury v. Illim Meach (1). That was a decision of a Full Bench, of the Calcutta High Court which decided, Phear, J., dissenting, that an order passed by a Magistrate under S. 62, Criminal P. C. is not of the nature of a judicial proceeding and therefore cannot be interfered with by the High Court under S. 404 of that Code. Couch, C. J., in his judgment on p. 51 in referring to S. 62 says :

"The language of it seems to point out that it was intended to give the Magistrate a power to be exercised with the utmost promptitude ; and, if he should make an order which he had no authority to make, and the party on whom that order is made should not obey it, and be convicted, its legality may then be tried. That is the ground upon which I have always been of the opinion that this is not a judicial proceeding."

In the Code of 1872 S. 518 corresponds to S. 144 of the present Code and S. 520 states that orders made under S. 518 are not judicial proceedings. This latter section was obviously the result of the decision of the Full Bench of the Calcutta High Court already referred to. Under the Code of 1872 we have two decisions upon this point, namely, E. V. Ramanuja Jeeyarswami v. Ramanuja Jeeyar (2), a decision of Innes and Muthuswami Iyer, JJ., in which it was held that proceedings under S. 518 of that Code are not revisable by the Courts as such orders were expressly declared in that Code to be not judicial proceedings and Sundaram v. Queen (3), where at p. 222 Sir Charles Turner stated:

"It should always be borne in mind that orders under S. 518, Criminal P. C., of 1872 are not judicial proceedings, and if the High Court has power to correct them otherwise than indirectly which is doubtful, that power can rarely be exercised in time to prevent hardship. The law in sanctioning this imperfectly controlled power is careful to provide it shall be committed only to Magistrates whose discretion is presumably guaranteed by their responsible position or by selection."

The next decision is one under the Code of 1882 and it is a decision strongly relied upon by Mr. Jayarama Ayyar in support of his argument that proceedings under S. 144 of the Code are judicial proceedings. That is Queen Empress v. Tirunarasimhachari (4) in which it was held by Sir Arthur Collins, C. J., and Parker, J., that a Magistrate making an enquiry before issue of an order under S. 144 of the Code is acting in a stage of a judicial proceeding and has, therefore, jurisdiction to direct the prosecution of witness for giving false evidence before him at such enquiry. Under the Code of 1882, differing from the Code of 1872, proceedings under S. 144 were stated to be not proceedings. In that case Sir Arthur Collins stated :

"The difficulty arises from the variation in language between S. 297 of the old Code and S. 485 of the present Code. Under the old Code powers of revision were granted to the High Court in judicial proceedings only, and the enacting of S. 520 would seem to imply that, but for that section orders under S. 518 would be "Judicial proceedings."

Section 485 of the present Code enables the High Court to call for the record of "any proceeding before any inferior criminal Court" and, therefore, orders under S. 144 would certainly be subject to revision, were it not for the proviso in Cl. 3 of the section. Under S. 4 of the present Code "Judicial proceedings" is defined to be "any proceeding in the course of which evidence is or may be legally taken."

It seems to us impossible to deny that a Magistrate acting under S. 144 may legally take evidence before issuing an order From this it would appear that both under the old Code and under the present Code these urgent orders were regarded as in their nature "judicial proceedings." the only difference being that, whereas under the Old Code, S. 520 somewhat inaccurately declared them not to be judicial proceedings for the purpose of ousting the High Court's powers of revision under S. 297 of the present Code equally bars the High Court's jurisdiction without making an illogical declaration.

Sir Arthur Collins therefore took the view that when in the Code of 1872 proceedings under S. 518 were declared not to be judicial proceedings it was not because they were not judicial proceedings but because it was intended to prevent these orders made upon sudden emergencies from being the subject of revision and the Code of 1882 by stating that they were not proceedings more accurately described them. The next Code to be considered is that of 1898 and it is similar to the Code of 1882 in that by sub-S. (3), S. 435, orders made under S. 144 are not proceedings within the meaning of S. 435. On the 1898 Code there is a decision in Arunachalam Pillai v. Ponnusami Pillai (5) of Sadasiva Iyer and Napier, JJ. which is strongly relied upon by Mr. Jayarama Ayyar in support of his argument. In that case it was held that the High Court has no appellate or revisional

Power to interfere with the orders of a Public servant except in so far as they are orders passed by the public servant in his capacity of a Court subordinate to the High Court and that an order passed by a Sub-Magistrate under S. 144, Criminal P. C., is an order made by him in his capacity as a Court and he is also acting as a Court when he grants or refuses sanction for a prosecution for the disobedience of such order. In that case the order passed under S. 144 of the Code had been disobeyed but the Stationary Sub-Magistrate passed an order refusing sanction to prosecute the person who had disobeyed the order and Napier, J., on p. 424, says:

"We are clear that the Stationary Sub-Magistrate in passing this order refusing sanction was acting judicially, for the original order which it was alleged was disobeyed was an order passed under S. 144, Criminal P. C. These orders have always been treated as judicial orders and we cannot separate the authority issuing the order from the authority granting sanction for disobedience of it."

When Napier, J., stated that these orders have always been treated as judicial orders he was referring to the numerous cases to which our attention has been drawn where the High Court has interfered with orders passed under S. 144 of the Code on the ground that the Magistrate had no jurisdiction to pass such orders. The High Court obviously could not in the face of the Code revise those orders but interfered on the question of want of jurisdiction alone under S. 15, Charter Act and S. 107, Government of India Act. As he points out in his judgment the High Court could have no appellate or revisional power if the Magistrate acts administratively and it is only where he acts judicially that the High Court can possibly interfere under the Charter Act or the Government of India Act. We have therefore this position that the High Court has always been acting under its inherent powers and interfering with Magistrates who have acted under S. 144 without jurisdiction but has been expressly prevented from revising the orders of these Magistrates under S. 435. It is argued from this by Mr. Jayarama Ayyar that it was not because such orders were not in the nature of judicial proceedings that the power of the High Court to revise them was ousted but because it was undesirable that the discretion of Magistrates acting very often on a sudden emergency should be revised by the High Court and that whereas in 1872 such "proceedings were said not to be judicial proceedings" in 1882 they were said not to be proceedings within the provisions of S. 435 and the same under the Code of 1898, that bar to the High Court has now been removed by the Code of 1923 where sub-S. (3), S. 435, has been omitted.

We now come to the Code of 1923. But before doing so there is another case to which reference has been made which, although it was decided in 1923, was before the Code of that year came into force. That is Nataraja Pillai v. Rangasami Pillai (6), a decision of Ayl- ing and Ramesam, JJ. The facts in that case were that a Sub-Divisional Magistrate passed an order under S. 144, Criminal P. C., prohibiting certain persons from interfering with a religious ceremony. On disobedience of that order he sanctioned their prosecution for an offence under S. 188, I. P. C., and it was held that the Magistrate was not, when passing the order under S. 144, Criminal P. C., acting as a Court within the meaning of Cl. (7), S. 195, Criminal P. C., but was only acting as a public servant and hence the proper appellate authority to revoke the sanction was not the Sessions Court, but the District Magistrate as provided by Cl. (6), S. 195. The decision of Sadasiva Iyer and Napier, JJ. in Arunachalam Pillai v. Ponnusami Pillai (5) was not followed. The Court followed the Calcutta Full Bench case and also relied on Sundaram v. Queen (3). But that was a decision under the Code of 1872 which expressly stated that proceedings under the corresponding section to S. 144 were not judicial proceedings and the Full Bench in that case could not possibly therefore have held the proceedings were judicial proceedings. Moreover the judgment in Nataraja Pillai v. Rangasami Pillai (6) does not deal with the other aspect of the case presented by Napier, J., namely that such orders must be judicial orders and not administrative for otherwise the High Court could not interfere in those cases where the Magistrate has acted without jurisdiction whereas the High Court has invariably done so under the Charter Act and the Government of India Act. No doubt most of the orders passed by a Magistrate do not in the least seem to be judicial proceedings, and Ayling, J., gives such an instance on p. 59. Then came the Code of 1923 and there sub-S. (3) to S. 435 is omitted and one question to be considered by us is what is the effect of that omission? There have been two decisions with regard to this question under that Code: Vedappan Servai v. Periannam Servai (7) and S. Alaga Thevar v. G. A. Baker (8). The former decision is one of Ramesam, J., and the latter is one of Reilly, J., following Nataraja Pillai v. Rangaswami Pillai (6) already referred to. In Vedappan Servai v. Periannam Servai (7), Ramesam, J., held that no revision lies to the High Court against an order passed under S. 144, Criminal P. C., as the Magistrate acting under that section is not a Court and the amendment of S. 435, Criminal P. C., by the omission of Cl. (3) from that section has not the effect of permitting a revision to the High Court from such an order, though it has the effect of permitting a revision from an order under S. 145. On p. 623, Ramesam, J., states:

"it seems to me that as to S. 144, Cl. (3), S. 436 was somewhat redundant and only made matters clear. Even without it, it is doubtful whether S. 435 applies. There is nothing in S. 144 to indicate that the Magistrate acting under that section is a Court as in the case of S. 145."

He was referred to a decision of the Privy Council in Clarke v. Brojendra Kishore Roy (9) but in his opinion that case did not help the petitioner because it only showed that in some parts of the Code the words "Courts" and "Magistrates" are used interchangeably and that under S. 96 a Magistrate issuing search warrants was acting as a Court but this did not conclude the matter as to S. 144. The Privy Council case is reported in Clarke v. Brojendra Kishore (9), and, in our view, it is a decision strongly in support of Mr. Jayaram Ayyar's contention. There the District Magistrate issued a search warrant in connexion with the investigation of some offence. A suit for trespass against him was instituted but it was held by the Privy Council that by S. 36, Sch. 3 and S. 96, Criminal P. C., the power of issuing a search warrant was among the "ordinary powers" of the District Magistrate and therefore under S. 105 he had power to direct a search to be made in his presence if he thought it advisable to do so. Lord Macnaughten in delivering the judgment of the Judicial Committee referred to S. 36, Cr. P. C., which is as follows:

"All District Magistrates, Sub-Divisional Magistrates and Magistrates of the first, second and third classes have the powers hereinafter respectively conferred upon them and specified in the Sch. 3. Such powers are called their "ordinary powers."

Section 36 is in Chap. 3 which is headed "Powers of Courts." When Sch. 3 is referred to it will be seen that under part 4 of that schedule which is headed "ordinary powers of a Sub-Divisional Magistrate" Cl. (6) is power to make orders under S. 144. On p. 966, Lord Macnaughten states:

"For the sake of brevity the Code uses the terms "Court" and "Magistrate" generally if not always, as convertible terms."

It is impossible to avoid the conclusion that this case decides that every act done by a Magistrate in pursuance of the powers given to him by S. 36 and Sch. 3 is done by him as a Court particularly when it is remembered that the chapter is headed "Powers of Courts." The present Code like the Code of 1898 and that of 1882 merely speaks of "proceedings" and not "judicial proceedings" so that it is not necessary really to consider anything more than the power of the High Court to revise a "proceeding before an inferior criminal Court." Although judicial proceedings are defined in the Code as including "any proceeding in the course of which evidence is or may be legally taken on oath" it was admitted in argument before us that it may sometimes be necessary for the Magistrate before issuing an order under S. 144 to take evidence on oath so that even if that test is applied, it would appear that these proceedings may be judicial proceedings. It is quite true that in the Calcutta Full Bench case such proceedings were held not to be judicial proceedings but that decision was not unanimous and it was undoubtedly in consequence of it that the Code of 1872 described such proceedings as not judicial. The decision of the Full Bench of this Court in Sundaram v. Queeni (3), could not have been otherwise than it was as we have already stated, because the Code of 1872 stated that such proceedings were not judicial proceedings. There is also the other description to be applied namely "proceedings of an inferior Criminal Court." The Privy Council case, in our view, makes such proceedings, proceedings of a Court, so that that description is also applicable. If this is so, then we are bound to take a different view to that of Ramesam, J., in the case in Vedappan Servai v. Periannan Servai (7), where he says that Cl. (3), S. 435 was redundant. What is the effect of the omission of that clause in the present Code? We cannot say that that omission was unintentional. We have to take the Code as it is. Up to the present Code, from 1872 until 1923, a ban was placed upon the High Court's power of revision with regard to proceedings under S. 144. Now that ban has been removed. It may have been unintentionally removed but we are not concerned with that. We must hold that the effect of that omission is that the ban is removed and that the High Court has now power to revise such orders. We are aware that, if this decision is right, it may lead to most unfortunate consequences. It is obvious that the Magistrate has most frequently to act in an emergency and that it will be a disaster, if, when he does make an order, a criminal revision petition is at once presented to the High Court and a stay order applied for. We come to the decision we have with great regret and only say that, if Cl. (3), S. 435 was omitted by mistake we hope that legislature will as soon as possible restore it at any rate as far as S. 144, Criminal P. C., is concerned. Petition is dismissed as the order expired before the petition was presented.

(7) A. I. R. 1928 Mad. 1108=52 Mad. 69.

(8) [1228] 55 M. L. J. N.

v.

Ram Narain Sahu—Opposite Party.

Criminal Revn. No. 477 of 1929, Decided on 20th September 1929.

(a) Criminal Trial—Stay — Pending civil litigation on same matter criminal prosecution should not invariably be stayed.

There is no invariable rule that a criminal proceeding should be stayed pending the result of civil litigation which deals with the same matter. It must be assumed that each Court must be allowed to proceed with the business on its file without any intervention of this kind.

(b) Criminal P. C., S. 476—Parties to prosecute matter contemplated by S. 476 is reprehensible—Court alone should in such matter take action.

Although criminal procedure allows it, it is very reprehensible course for the parties in a litigation to prosecute a criminal matter of the kind contemplated by S. 476. If it is obvious to Subordinate Judge that a criminal offence had been committed, then undoubtedly it is his duty to proceed in bringing the culprit to justice. [P 278 C 1]

(c) Criminal Trial—Prosecution under S. 476—Fact that appeal is preferred against civil case which may reverse finding does not stay prosecution.

Where a civil Court finds a document to be forged and criminal prosecution is started against the party with reference to the forged document, the mere fact that an appeal has been preferred in the civil case which may possibly reverse the finding of the trial Court, is no ground for staying prosecution.

B. P. Jumar—for Petitioner.S. P. Verma—for Opposite Party.

Judgment.—This rule was issued to show cause why the proceedings taken against the applicant based on an allegation of forgery should not be quashed. At the present moment it has reached the stage when notices have been issued to the applicant to show cause why he should not be prosecuted. The principle which governs a matter of this kind has been laid down in a number of cases, some of which are referred in the judgment in Hriday Narain Singh v. Emperor (1) and it only need be stated that the principle is that there is no invariable rule that a criminal proceeding should be stayed pending the result of civil litigation which deals with the same matter. In this case the applicant produced certain documents before the Subordinate Judge and although he got a modified decree before the learned Judge the Court came to the conclusion that these documents were forged, that there were interpolations by the accused. It is stated that there is an appeal pending before this Court which may result in the finding of the learned Subordinate Judge being reversed. That, however, is not a ground for staying the proceeding as has been stated in the case.

(1) A. I. R. 1929 Pat. 500.

I have quoted in the criminal revision case to which I have referred. It must be assumed that each Court will do justice and also each Court must be allowed to proceed with the business on its file without any intervention of this kind. In any event in my judgment the stage at which these proceedings have reached is not a stage at which I can interfere.

I would like to express a very strong opinion that, although the Criminal Procedure Code allows it, it is a very reprehensible course for the parties in a litigation to prosecute a criminal matter of this kind. If it had been obvious to the learned Subordinate Judge that a criminal offence had been committed, then undoubtedly it was his duty to proceed as the law allows him to proceed in bringing the culprit to justice. The Court in this case has allowed one of the parties to the civil litigation to move in the matter, the course which, in my judgment, is not to be encouraged. With these observations I must discharge the rule.

COURTNEY-TERRELL, C. J. AND CHATTERJI, J.

Banslochan Lal—Accused.

v.

Emperor—Opposite Party.

Criminal Revn. No. 246 of 1929, Decided on 2nd August 1929.

(a) Police Act (1861), S. 29—Police Manual Part 1, R. 278—Court officer must keep diaries in his possession and should refuse request of the accused for them.

The meaning of R. 278 is that the Court officer is to keep the diaries in his own possession and that if the accused or his agent call for the diary in any circumstances other than those mentioned in the earlier part of para. (b) of the rule the Court officer should refuse to comply with the request. [P 280 C 2]

(b) Police Act (1861), S. 29—Construction—"Rules and Regulations," refer to those framed by competent authorities—"Lawful order," refers to any order lawfully given by any officer—Offences under S. 29 include any "violation of duty."

Section 29 is to be construed quite widely. The words "rules and regulations" refer to such rules and regulations as are properly framed by competent authorities, that is, to say by the Inspector General. So also the words "lawful order" refer to any order which any officer may lawfully give to any individual or specific body of individuals under his command. Offences under S. 29 are not limited to the wilful breaches or neglect of a rule or regulation or a lawful order but include any "violation of duty": 2nd Cr. L. J. 465, Rel. on. [P 280 C 2]

(c) Police Act (1861), S. 29—Police Manual Part 1, R. 803—Police diaries are included in "document or information."

The words "document or information" used in R. 803 are comprehensive enough to include the police diaries, although they have been specifically dealt with under R. 278. [P 280 C 2] (d) Police Act (1861), S. 29—Police Manual Part 1, R. 261-A—Rule is enabling one.

Rule 261-A is merely an enabling rule except that in the case of a Magistrate who institutes a prosecution he must be the Magistrate of the District: 1 W. R. 5 CrL. and 9 W. R. 86 CrL. Dist. [P 281 C 1]

(e) Police Act (1861), S. 29—Offence of police officer continues till diary remains in mukhtar's hands—Mukhtar is, therefore, liable as abettor under S. 29.

A mukhtar who is allowed to have possession of the diary by the Police Officer is guilty of the abetment of the offence under S. 29, Police Act, as the offence continues so long as the diary is in mukhtar's hand. [P 281 C 2]

(f) Criminal Trial—Sentence—Allegation of entire concoction of the prosecution story—No evidence elucidated in cross-examination—Advocate raising contention on clients instructions—It is a good ground for aggravation of sentence—Legal practitioner raising contention without reasonable cause is guilty of grossest professional misconduct (Obiter)—Legal Practitioner's Act, S. 13.

Per Courtney-Terrell, C. J.—In a clear case where an advocate on the direct instructions of his client argues that the prosecution story is an entire concoction on the part of the police and no evidence whatever elucidated in cross-examination or offered by examination-in-chief is ever produced in support of this argument the Court should take this into account as a circumstance of aggravation in awarding the sentence. Where such suggestion is made by the legal practitioner without reasonable cause the legal practitioner is guilty of grossest professional misconduct. [P 282 C 1]

(g) Practice—Criminal Trial—Advocate beginning attack in cross-examination upon prosecution involving dishonourable conduct—Court should ask assurance as to his grounds—Assurance, if refused cross-examination as to the point should be stopped—Assurance, if given but subsequently found false advocate's conduct should be brought to High Court's notice (Obiter).

Per Courtney-Terrell, C. J.—It is the duty of the tribunal if it has any suspicion when an advocate begins an attack upon a prosecutor or witness by way of so called "suggestions" involving dishonourable conduct to demand from the advocate an assurance that he has good grounds for making the suggestion. If the assurance is not received the cross-examination on those lines should be stopped promptly. If the assurance is given and if it should appear at the termination of the trial that no such ground has existed the tribunal should bring the conduct of the advocate to the notice of the High Court. [P 282 G 1, 2]

A. Imam, H. L. Nandkeolyar and B. P. Sinha—for Petitioner.

C. M. Agarwala—for the Crown.

Courtney-Terrell, C. J.—This is a petition for the revision of a decision of the Sessions Judge of Shahabad, convicting the petitioners Banslochan Lal a mukhtar practising at Bhabhua, and Barmeshwar Nath Varma, a Court Sub-Inspector employed at the same place. The facts are as follows: At Bhabhua there were two factions which I will term A and B respectively of the Moslem community. Between these factions litigation and criminal cases had taken place. One Khurshed Mian a member of faction A had lodged a first information accusing one Sher Muhammad and several others of faction B of rioting. The matter was investigated by the police, a charge-sheet was prepared and the charge-sheet together with the case diaries were sent to the petitioner Barmeshwar Nath Varma. The Sub-Divisional Officer fixed 5th June 1928, for the hearing. The petitioner Banslochan Lal was employed to defend the accused. On 4th June, the Inspector Zeaur Rahman acting on information received at the thana went accompanied by two Sub-Inspectors and a constable to the house of the Court Sub-Inspector. There he found the petitioner mukhtar together with another mukhtar. The petitioner Banslochan had in his hands the case diary and was taking notes from it. The Court Sub-Inspector was away in another part of the house but he appeared after a few moments, and explained that in his absence the mukhtar had taken the case diary. It is clear, however, that he had without permission from superior authority and on his own responsibility allowed the mukhtar to see the case diary and take the notes. The other mukhtar has since been acquitted. The Court Sub-Inspector and the two mukhtars were taken before the Sub-Divisional Officer of Arrah and a charge-sheet was prepared by the police. This charge-sheet contained amongst other things charges under S. 29, Police Act, 1861. The Magistrate, however, charged the Sub-Inspector under Ss. 409 and 217, I. P. C., and the petitioner Banslochan Lal was charged with abetment under Ss. 409 and 114; also under Ss. 217, 114 and 379, I. P. C. The trial Court convicted the accused under all these sections. The petitioners were ordered to be detained until the rising of the Court. The petitioner Banslochan Lal was sentenced to pay a fine of Rs. 300 and the petitioner Barmeshwar Nath Varma to pay a fine of Rs. 250.

On appeal to the Court of Sessions the Judge held on the facts that there could be no conviction under Ss. 409, 217 or 379, I. P. C. But he himself framed a charge under S. 29, Police Act, as against the Court Sub-Inspector and as against the mukhtar under S. 29, read with S. 114, I. P. C. He convicted the petitioners under these sections, and he reduced the sentences to fines of Rs. 150 in respect of each of the accused. He found that there had been a breach of Rr. 278 and 803, Police Manual, Part 1.

Section 29, Police Act is as follows:

"Every police officer who shall be guilty of any violation of duty or wilful breach or neglect of any rule or regulation or lawful order made by competent authority, or who shall withdraw from the duties of his office without permission, or without having given previous notice for the period of two months, or who being absent on leave, shall fail, without reasonable cause, to report himself for duty on the expiration of such leave or who shall engage without authority in any employment other than his police duty, or who shall be guilty of cowardice, or who shall offer any unwarrantable personal violence, to any person in his custody, shall be liable on conviction before a Magistrate, to a penalty not exceeding three months pay, or to imprisonment, with or without hard labour, for a period not exceeding three months, or to both."

The first point taken on behalf of the petitioners is that Rr. 278 and 803, held to have been broken are not statutory rules or regulations and that the meaning of the words "made by competent authority" implies that the rules referred to in S. 29 must be such only as have such statutory authority. Now under S. 12 of the same Act it is enacted as follows:

"The Inspector-General of Police may from time to time, subject to the approval of the Local Government, frame such orders and rules as he shall deem expedient relative to the organization, classification and distribution of the police force, the places at which the members of the force shall reside, and the particular services to be performed by them; their inspection, the description of arms, accoutrements and other necessities to be furnished to them; the collecting and communicating by them of intelligence and information; and all such other orders and rules relative to the police force as the Inspector-General shall, from time to time, deem expedient for preventing abuse or neglect of duty, and for rendering such force efficient in the discharge of its duties."

If such rules have received the approval of the Local Government it is clear that they are rules to which S. 29 applies. At the head of the volume of rules contained in the Police Manual (among which Rr. 278 and 803 are to be found) there appears a preface signed by the Officiating Chief Secretary to the Government of Bihar and Orissa. It is as follows:

"The Lieutenant-Governor in Council has, in exercise of the powers conferred by the sections mentioned on the margin of the paragraphs or sub-paragraphs of this manual which are marked with an asterisk, or a single or double dagger, made or approved the orders and rules contained in those paragraphs or sub-paragraphs in supersession of all orders and rules heretofore made under those sections.

2. The remaining paragraphs of the manual, though not having statutory force, are binding on all police officers, as well as on all other officers of Government to whom they refer.

3. Only those rules or orders have been framed as statutory rules or orders to which it seemed necessary or desirable to give legal effect; but there are many others contained in the manual which might have been issued as statutory rules or orders had it been deemed necessary to issue them in that form."

In the margin of Rr. 278 and 803, there is no "asterisk or single or double dagger." It is difficult to understand why the preface was framed in this way and no explanation of it is forthcoming. All that was required was the approval by the Government and para. 2 of the preface clearly indicates that whether or not it was the intention of the Government to give to any particular rules and regulations the status of statutory rules it is very obvious that all the rules have received the approval of the Government and are intended by the Government to be binding upon all police officers. R. 278 is divided into three paragraphs and the first two only are material. R. 278, para. (a) is as follows: "The original file of case diaries is attached to the charge-sheet: see R. 177 (a). The diaries shall remain in the personal custody of the Court Officer, but he shall make them over to the prosecuting officer, who shall make his notes on the margin and keep the diaries with him for guidance. At the conclusion of the case, the Court officers shall return the original diaries to the police station from which they were sent up."

Paragraph (b) starts with a summary of the law relating to the use of case diaries in a criminal Court and concludes with the sentence:

"The accused and his agent are not entitled to call for or use the diary in any other circumstances."

It is said that there is here a mere statement of law without any express prohibition upon a police officer from shewing the case diary to the legal adviser of the accused. In my opinion this view is quite unsound. The meaning of the rule is that the Court officer is to keep the diaries in his own possession and that if the accused or his agent call for the diary in any circumstances other than those mentioned in the earlier part of para. (b) the Court officer is to refuse the request. There has therefore been a distinct breach of this rule by the Court Sub-Inspector. R. 803 is as follows:

"A police officer may not, unless generally or specially empowered by the Local Government in this behalf communicate directly or indirectly to Government servants belonging to other departments or to non-official persons, or to the press, any document or information which has come into his possession in the course of his public duties or has been prepared or collected by him in the course of these duties, whether from official sources or otherwise."

It is urged that the custody of the case diaries having been specifically dealt with under R. 278 the words "document or information" in R. 803 do not include the case diaries. In my opinion this argument is untenable. The words "document or information" are quite comprehensive.

In my opinion S. 29 of the Act is to be construed quite widely. The words "rules and regulations" it is true clearly refer to such rules and regulations as are properly framed by a competent authority that is to say, by the Inspector-General. The words "lawful order" refer to any order which any officer may lawfully give to any individual or specific body of individuals under his command and I agree with the judgment of Adami, J., in the case Mohamed Yusuf v. Emperor (1). I would further point out that offences under S. 29 are not limited to the wilful breaches or neglect of a rule or a regulation or a lawful order but include any "violation of duty." A consideration of the statute as a whole indicates that as opposed to the constitution of a military force which provides for punishment to be inflicted by military officers for violation of duty or breach of orders the constitution of the police force under the Act is such that punishment by imprisonment or or fine is to be inflicted by the civil Magistrate before whom the offender is to be brought ; and provided that the rule or regulation has been properly framed and approved by the Local Government or, on the other hand, that the order if it be an order was lawful a breach is an offence under the section and furthermore any violation of duty is similarly punishable. It may well be that in any particular case the offence may be so trifling that the Magistrate may say that it should not have been brought before him but should have been dealt with departmentally. The offence, however, committed by the petitioner Barmeswar was a serious offence.

The second point taken by the petitioners was that the conviction not being by the Magistrate but by the Sessions Judge it cannot stand because of the words in S. 29.

"shall be liable on conviction before a Magistrate."

Reference is also made to R. 261 (a) of the Police Manual which is as follows :

"Superintendents and the Principals of the Police Training College and Constables of Training Schools are empowered to order the prosecution of police officers under S. 29, Act 5 of 1861, but no Magistrate except the Magistrate of the district, may exercise the power of instituting prosecutions under this section."

It is not denied and we are satisfied that the prosecution in this case was ordered by a Superintendent. The rule is merely an enabling rule except that in the case of a Magistrate who institutes a prosecution he must be the Magistrate of the district ; and an appellate Court has all the powers of the Court from which the appeal lies.

Two cases were relied upon to support the contention of the petitioners. The first is the case of Indrobeer Thaba (2) where the accused under S. 29 of the Act was committed straight to the Court of Sessions on the charge and it was held that Sessions Judge had no power to try such cases. In the case of Bhaobun Singh (3) the person charged under S. 29 was also committed direct to the Sessions and a similar decision was arrived at. In this case, however, the accused were tried on the facts before the Magistrate and a charge sheet was submitted which included charges under S. 29. He merely failed to convict the accused under the proper section. In my opinion the cases cited have no application.

It was contended on behalf of the mukhtar that the whole of the offence of the Court Sub-Inspector, if any, was committed before the mukhtar began noting from the diary and that there cannot be an abetting of an offence after it has been committed. In my opinion a complete answer to this contention is to be found in the fact that the Court Sub-Inspector by allowing the mukhtar to have possession of the diary was committing an offence which continued so long as the diary was in the mukhtar's hands.

I would therefore decline to interfere with the convictions.

A rule was issued against the petitioners to show cause why the sentences should not be enhanced. We have carefully examined this aspect of the matter. The police officer has been under suspension for a considerable period with all the disadvantages appertaining to that position and it is possible that he may receive further departmental punishment. The mukhtar on the other hand, has not yet been dealt with under the Legal Practitioners Act and it will be for the Sessions Judge to consider the matter and to decide whether or not to make a formal reference to the High Court. In the particular circumstances of this case the punishments inflicted by the Sessions Judge appear to us to be adequate.

There remains another aspect of this matter involving a very important point of principle to which I desire to call the attention of criminal tribunals and legal practitioners for their guidance, and it received illustration in this case. After the submission of the points of law on behalf of the petitioners, the junior advocate on their behalf proposed to enter into a discussion of the facts taking advantage of the principle that since there was a rule for enhancement he was entitled to show that the accused should not have been convicted. For this purpose he offered to demonstrate from the evidence that the whole case had been concocted by the Inspector and the Sub-Inspectors who arrested the petitioners. I pointed out to the learned advocate that he was quite at liberty to take this course but should it fail and should we come to the conclusion that the aspersions on the character of these police officers were without foundation, this circumstance would gravely aggravate the original offence and that the sentence would in that case be substantially enhanced. An adjournment for consideration was granted after which Sir Ali Imam, leading counsel for the petitioners, appeared and stated that after consultation it had been decided not to go further into the facts and he confined himself to other and quite legitimate arguments against the rule for enhancement. It is extremely common for advocates for the defence to argue that the prosecution story is an entire concoction on the part of the police and in the vast majority of cases no evidence whatever elucidated in cross-examination or offered by examination-in-chief is ever produced in support of this argument. Now either the contention is raised on the direct instructions of the client or it is deliberately raised by the advocate without any instructions at all. In the former case the accused has added to the heinousness of the offence with which he is charged by a baseless accusation of outrageous conduct on the part of the police or other prosecutors. In a clear case of this kind the tribunal should take this into account as a circumstance of aggravation in awarding the sentence. In the latter case, that is to say where the suggestion is made by the legal practitioner without reasonable cause, the legal practitioner is guilty of the grossest professional misconduct. Moreover cross-examination on these lines is often grossly abused and it is the duty of the tribunal if it has any suspicion when an advocate begins an attack upon a prosecutor or a witness by way of so called "suggestions" involving dishonourable conduct to demand from the advocate an assurance that he has good grounds for making the suggestions. If the assurance is not received the cross-examination on these lines should be stopped promptly. If the assurance is given and if it should appear at the termination of the trial that no such ground had existed the tribunal should bring the conduct of the advocate to the notice of the High Court. I make these observations in order that a check may be placed upon a growing and serious evil and without reference to the particular facts of this case.

(3) [1968] 9 W. R. Cr. 26.

Chatterji, J.—I agree to the order proposed by the learned Chief Justice for the reasons given by him.

(c) Criminal Trial—Practice to be followed in committal proceedings.

Per Percival, J. C.—In committal proceedings the Magistrate has only to find out whether there is a prima facie case for committal or not, and the committal proceedings should not be treated too much like a final trial; nor is it necessary for the Magistrate to write out a judgment on the question whether the case is true or false. [P 285 C 2, P 286 C 2]

(d) Criminal Trial—Preference should be given to committal proceedings.

Per Percival, J. C.—Preference should be given to committal proceedings over other cases, especially so in murder cases. [P 286 C 1]

(e) Criminal P. C., S. 208—Prosecution need not get recorded every jot of evidence in committal proceedings.

Per Percival, J. C.—In committal proceedings there is no obligation on the part of the prosecution to get recorded by the committing Magistrate every jot and tittle of the evidence which they intend to place before the Sessions Court. [P 286 C 2]

P. J. Wania—for Appellants.

C. M. Lobo—for the Crown.

Barlee, A. J. C.—The facts of this case may be stated shortly as follows: The appellant Khan and two others

Nur Khan his brother-in-law and Jehan Khan son of Allahrakho were committed to the Sessions Court of Hyderabad on charges under Ss. 302 and 201 I. P. C. in connexion with the death of one Mewo who was a cousin of the three accused.

The prosecution story was that Mewo was on terms of criminal intimacy or at any rate was suspected of being so with one Mt. Khanu who was the wife of the third accused Jehan Khan. These three accused lived at the village of Nur Khan and the evidence with the map shows they lived in separate huts within one small compound. Just outside that compound was the house of the deceased Mewo and at a short distance to the West was the hut of their cousin called Achar, who is the principal witness for the Crown. Achar has deposed that on the night of 9th October he was sleeping alone and that at about midnight the deceased Mewo came to him and asked him for a loan of a pair of shoes. He gave him his shoes and went to sleep again. Some three hours later he was again awakened by cries of "murder, murder" which came from the direction of Nur Khan's house. He says that he recognized the voice of Mewo. He ran in direction of Nur Khan's house and there saw the accused Nos. 2 and 3 striking Mewo; Jehan Khan was sitting on Mewo. Khan was striking him with an axe and Nur Khan was inciting them to strike. He himself saw three blows being struck. He challenged them and they told him to go away and he stood at a distance by the outer entrance of the enclosure. He then saw the accused Jehan Khan and Khan the present appellant carrying the corpse of Mewo wrapped in a sheet and suspended from a wooden pole. He then went to his uncle Khuda Baksh and his cousin Piaro, the father and brother of the deceased Mewo, and told them that Khan and Jehan Khan had murdered Mewo and carried away his corpse. They all three went to Nur Khan and met him. The other two accused Jehan Khan and Khan were not present. They questioned Nur Khan and he confessed that they had committed the murder, because of a woman and asked them to save him.

After that they followed some bargaining, for Nur Khan offered two girls in marriage as compensation for Mewo. But this arrangement came to nothing because, when Jehan Khan and Khan returned about three hours after sunrise they refused to give up the body. Accordingly Achar, Khuda Baksh and Piaro left them and went in search of the body. They tracked the foot prints of the accused and the blood marks which had fallen on the ground at various places, and eventually discovered the body lying naked in a jungle about a mile and a half from the scene of the offence. Achar says that it was then noon (Katcha Manjhand). There he left Khuda Buksh and Piaro beside the corpse and he himself went to their Zamindar Sher Mahomed. He reached Sher Mahomed at about sunset, 4 or 5 miles away and informed him of the whole incidence. Sher Mahomed advised them to make a report to the police and he did so.

The report (Ex. 6) purports to have been made at 9 p. m. on 10th October, the day of murder. It is fairly long and gives the story of Achar much as he afterwards gave in Court. The police thereupon made enquiry and in the course of that enquiry the accused Jehan Khan and Khan produced from a heap of manure a bundle of clothes and pair of shoes which were identified as the clothes of the deceased, and the shoes belonging to Achar which he had lent to the deceased shortly before the murder. The case was challaned and it came on for trial in the Court of Sessions. The accused pleaded "not guilty" but the learned Sessions Judge agreeing with the assessors, was of opinion that accused 2 the present appellant was guilty of murder and sentenced him to be hanged. Accused 1 Nur Khan was sentenced under Ss. 302 and 114 for abetment of murder to three years rigorous imprisonment while Jehan Khan was sentenced to five years' rigorous imprisonment under S. 201 for concealment of the offence.

We have nothing to do with the conviction and sentence of Nur Khan and Jehan Khan but I may point out that if Nur Khan was rightly convicted under S. 302 read with S. 114 the minimum sentence to which he was liable was transportation for life.

The evidence for the prosecution consists of the deposition of Achar and the corroborative evidence given by Khuda Bux and Piaro the father and brother of the deceased. There was besides the evidence of the tracker and Mashirs that the prints led them from the compound of the three accused to the place where the body was found and that blood was found on the way; and evidence that subsequently accused 2 and 3 produced the clothes belonging to the deceased.

There can be little doubt that Mewo was killed in the compound of the three accused and that his body was carried by Jehan Khan and Khan and disposed of by them. Apart from the evidence of Achar there is the evidence of Khuda Bux and Piaro, who attempted in the Sessions Court to favour the accused, who were their near relations (presumably being unwilling to lose other members of the family besides the deceased) which establishes the fact that early in the morning of 10th October Achar had come to them and informed them of the murder, that they went to Nur Khan, and that he admitted that Mewo had been killed. The actual scene of the murder must have been in the accused's compound for the men who carried the body away started from that compound. There was no sign of blood at the scene of the offence pointed out by Achar but that is accounted for by the fact that the ground was covered with manure. It may seem curious that the large quantity of blood which must have shed when an artery had been severed should have left no sign, nevertheless we have no reason to suppose that the evidence as to the place of the crime is not true. There is, therefore, a clear case against the accused Jehan Khan and Khan under S. 201. But the question is whether Khan has been rightly convicted of the offence of murder.

Now the learned Sessions Judge has summed up the evidence against him at lines 240/250 of his judgment. He says that there is the direct evidence of Achar, the corroborative evidence of Khuda Buksh, Piaro, Tajo and Sher Mahomed, the evidence of the foot prints, the production of the blood stained clothes of the deceased, the finding of the blood stained hatchet which was recognized by Achar as belonging to Khan and the evidence of motive. But apart from the evidence of Achar, none of the evidence shows that it was the accused Khan who actually killed Mewo. As I have said Khuda Buksh and Piaro and the other men merely prove that Mewo was killed on that night in that place; but not that Khan killed him; and the other evidence merely proves that the body was disposed of.

The first and the most important point then for consideration in this case is whether the evidence of Achar is so probable that we can believe without corroboration. We have given our best consideration to this matter, and we feel that we cannot agree with the learned Additional Sessions Judge. There are several weak points in Achar's evidence which have been brought out by the pleader who has argued this appeal. But the most important point is that his house where he was sleeping was 800 feet in a direct line from the place where he afterwards saw Mewo lying dead and that he had to travel over 1,000 feet by the route which he took. This being so we find it very difficult to understand how he was able to arrive on the scene in time to see the murder committed when he had to travel between 300 and 400 yards in the dark after he heard the cries of murder, murder. We do not doubt that he did wake up and did go to the scene but when we come to the question whether he saw the blows by which Mewo was killed, we feel considerable doubt and naturally the accused must have benefit of that doubt.

The next question is whether even if Achar did not see the actual blows struck, the circumstances established shifted on to Khan's shoulders the burden of proving his innocence. He was found according to our view standing with his relations Nur Khan and Jehan Khan beside the body of Mewo who had just been killed. One of them must have killed him; possibly all; and the question is whether there is reason to suppose that Khan must have had a hand in the crime. Now in considering this question we have to remember that we are absolutely in the dark as to what happened between midnight and 3 a. m. It appears that Mewo had gone out somewhere. A man does not borrow shoes at midnight unless he has to use them at once. That is as much as we can assume. Then at 3. a. m. he was killed in the compound of the three accused but we do not know how he came to be there. •

A suggestion is that he had gone after the wife of Jehan Khan. There is no suggestion that he had been lured there by the three accused and the probability is that he was caught either with the wife of Jehan Khan as the accused are said to have admitted or while attempting to enter her house. If that be so one or two things must have appened. Either the man who caught him seized him, dragged him outside the compound and then with the help of his relatives executed him deliberately or he slew him at once. We are unable to say which of these theories is the more likely and we are bound then, to take the view which is the most favourable to the accused and to hold that the deceased was attacked and killed as soon as he was caught. This being so, there can be no finding of a common intention on the part of the three accused persons and in the absence of the common intention it is impossible to find the appellant guilty of murder without finding that he was the man who actually struck the fatal blows.

For this reason we are unable to agree with the learned Additional Sessions Judge that the guilt of the appellant Khan has been established. The deceased Mewo was killed obviously by one of the three persons who resided in that compound on which he was trespassing. But there is no reason to suppose that the man who killed him was Khan.

In view of this finding we set aside the conviction and sentence under S. 302 and convict Khan of an offence under S. 201 which he has been clearly proved to have committed. The sentence of Jehan Khan was five years by the Additional Sessions Judge but we think that was rather lenient and we do not consider ourselves bound to follow his example. We sentence Khan to rigorous imprisonment for seven years.

Percival, J. C.—I should like to add a few remarks only on the subject of the committal proceedings in this case. The offence which was one of murder, was committed on 9th October 1928 and by 8th January 1929 which is in itself a fairly considerable time, namely three months, the whole of the evidence produced by the prosecution and the examination of the accused had been completed. On 8th January after the completion of this evidence the case was "put off to 15th January 1929 for arguments." The record shows the subsequent proceedings before the learned committing Magistrates of whom they were three in succession. I do not quote the diary in full but merely state briefly what was done at each of the subsequent hearings:

15th January 1929: Magistrate on leave.

29th January 1929: Magistrate ill.

30th January 1929: Police Prosecuting Inspector absent.

11th February 1929: Accused's pleader absent.

26th February 1929: Accused's pleader absent.

5th March 1929: Heard accused's pleader. Put off to 11th March 1929.

11th March 1929: Magistrate ill.

18th March 1929: Magistrate on leave.

20th March 1929: Magistrate busy with other case.

22nd March 1929: Magistrate busy with other cases.

23rd March 1929: Magistrate ordered that two witnesses Khuda Baksh and Piaro whose examination had been completed on 22nd November 1928 (that is four months previously) should be recalled for examination in connexion with their statements made under S. 164, Criminal P. C.

28th March 1929: These witnesses were examined accordingly.

2nd April 1929: Heard the Police Prosecuting Inspector.

4th April 1929: Accused further examined.

6th April 1929: Put off to 8th April for orders.

8th April 1929: Committal order.

It will be seen that for three months the case was delayed although according to my view there was really no need for any further evidence at all before the committing Magistrate. It is to be remembered that in committal proceedings the Magistrate has only to find out whether there is a prima facie case for committal or not. I do not wish to make any pronouncement on the subject of the cases in which the Magistrate should commit and of those in which he should discharge the accused. There have been a number of rulings on this point for the guidance of the Magistrate. But it does appear that in the moffussil in Sind committal proceedings are treated too much like a final trial. In this particular case preference was given to other cases even though the committal proceedings had already been delayed for nearly 5½ months and nothing more was wanted but the writing of the committal order. I do not desire to take to task any particular Magistrate concerned in this case but it seems to me that there is a practice of hearing the committal proceedings as if they were civil proceedings in which delays of months are of no great importance. I am of opinion that, especially in murder cases preference should be given to committal proceedings over other cases; and in particular that no undue postponement should be given in order to write the committal order. In this particular case I do not see how the question whether the accused should be committed or not could have presented any difficulty. It was a murder case and as has been pointed out in the judgment of the learned Additional Sessions Judge there was evidence of an eyewitness of the alleged murder and there was corroborative evidence of other witnesses. There was also evidence of footprints, of bloodstained clothes, of the discovery of a bloodstained hatchet, and of motive. Now this evidence might or might not be sufficient for the conviction of the accused by the Sessions Court but it does not appear that there could be any difficulty in the committal proceedings in deciding that such a case should be committed to the Sessions.

Seeing that in the Presidency proper committal proceedings lasting even three months would be considered most exceptional yet in Sind we find committal proceedings lasting not merely three but even six months. I am aware of the fact that Magistrates are over-worked in Sind; but that is all the more reason why they should get rid as soon as possible of cases that are obviously destined for the Sessions Court. The result of the delay in committal proceedings is that when the cases come before the Sessions Court they are very stale and are likely to have become spoilt. Whether the accused are guilty or whether they are not guilty such delays are of course very undesirable. If the accused are innocent they will have been kept unnecessarily for a long time as under-trial prisoners; while if they are guilty the prolonged delay may have seriously affected the prosecution case. One cannot lay any hard and fast rule regarding committal proceedings. But it is remarkable that the nearer the Court is to head-quarters the more brief are the committal proceedings. I understand from the learned Public Prosecutor that in Karachi when the case is clearly one for committal to the Sessions the proceedings are usually of a brief character and the same thing applies to the Bombay City. But in the moffussil in Sind for some reason or the other they are very protracted proceedings. In this particular case I have no fault to find with the committal order itself of the Magistrate. But I may note in this connexion that certain Magistrates seem to think that a committal order is in fact a "judgment." That is to say that the Magistrate has to write a judgment on the question whether the case is true or false. This, however, is not necessary in committal reports. The Magistrate has only as indicated above to find out and state, whether there is a prima facie case against the accused requiring his committal to the Sessions or not.

There is one other point which may be mentioned namely that S. 208, Criminal P. C., provides that the Magistrate must :

"take in manner hereinafter provided all such evidence as may be produced in support of the prosecution or on behalf of the accused, or as may be called for by the Magistrate."

It is to be noted that the Magistrate is obliged to take all such evidence as may be actually "produced" before him by the prosecution or by the accused. In this connexion I may note that in this particular instance the learned Additional Sessions Judge has observed in regard to a Zamindar witness :

"It is true that he did not give all the details in the Committing Magistrate's Court where he merely said that Achar informed him that the two accused had killed Mewo at the instigation of Nur Khan. The explanation of this is that in the inquiry before the Committing Magistrate it was not thought necessary to go into the small details. The witness is a respectable man paying land assessment of Rs. 10,000 and 12,000 and there is no reason to disbelieve him."

I quite agree with the learned Additional Sessions Judge on this point. I am of opinion that there is no obligation on the part of the prosecution to get recorded by the Committing Magistrate every jot and tittle of the evidence which they intend to place before the Sessions Court.

v.

Emperor—Opposite Party.

Criminal Appeal No. 995 of 1929, Decided on 6th December 1929, against order of Addl. Dist. Magistrate, Shahpur, D/- 9th August 1929.

 Penal Code, S. 307—Important consideration under S. 307, is intention or knowledge of accused and circumstances under which offence is committed—Nature of injury is not necessarily guiding consideration.

Section 307 makes a distinction between an act of the accused and its result if any. Such an act may not be attended by any result so far as the person assaulted is concerned but still there may be cases in which the culprit would be liable under S. 307. If a person knows that certain result will ensue from his act he must be deemed to intend such result by doing the act. Further it is not necessary that the injury actually caused to the victim of the assault should be sufficient under ordinary circumstances to cause the death of the person assaulted. What the Court has to see is whether the act, irrespective of its result, was done with the intention or knowledge and under circumstances mentioned in S. 307: 15 Bom. L. R. 991, Dist. [P 288 C 1, 2]

Amin Chand—for Appellant.

Mulk Raj Chhibrar—for the Crown.

Judgment.—Mutalli appellant has been convicted under S. 307, I. P. C., and has been sentenced to seven years' transportation. The prosecution case is that the convict who is aged about 18 was betrothed to Mt. Rahmon who also is of about the same age, but the match was not approved by some relations and consequently it was broken off and the girl was married to another person called Maulu. This caused resentment in the mind of the appellant who, on 9th April 1929, early in the morning when it was still dark armed himself with a chhuri and went to the house of Mt. Jallo, mother of Mt. Rahmon, where the latter was sleeping along with her mother, younger sister, and a brother and struck her on the left side of the neck with a chhuri causing, according to the doctor, a deep incised wound on the left side of the neck six inches long cutting all the muscles on this side and also cutting the ear into two. The hurt, in the opinion of the doctor, was grievous. It is alleged that there were two other men with the accused but they have apparently not been sent up for trial, for reasons with which we are not concerned. The prosecution witness, the inmates of the house, state that a lantern was burning inside when the accused entered armed, as described above, and that an outcry was raised by Mt. Jallo and her children but before Mt. Rahmon was able to leave her bed the accused had succeeded in causing her the injury with the chhuri. The outcries of the inmate brought some of the neighbours to the scene of the crime before whose arrival the accused ran away but was seen by them when running away.

The above facts are deposed to by Mt. Jallo, Mt. Rahmon, Mt. Bano, younger sister of Mt. Rahmon and their brother Shera. Ghulam Rasul and Maulu corroborate their statements in material details.

The accused produced a number of witnesses in support of his plea of alibi but their testimony has been held by the trial Magistrate to be unreliable and interested. With this conclusion I agree.

I, hold, therefore, that it has been amply proved by the evidence on the record that the accused, early in the morning of 9th April entered the house of Mt. Jallo with the intention of causing injury to Mt. Rahmon and actually did cause her injury with the chhuri. It is no doubt true that in the first information report as well as in their depositions in Court the prosecution witnesses say that the accused was armed with a chhavi but when they were shown the weapon of offence produced in Court, that is the chhuri, they described it as a chhavi. It is, therefore, apparent that they did not know what a chhavi was and have wrongly named chhuri as a chhavi.

The main contention of the appellants' counsel before me is that an offence under S. 307, I. P. C., has not been established on the facts found by the Magistrate, and in support of this contention reliance is placed on a judgment of a Division Bench of the Bombay High Court, Mertin v. Emperor (1), in which it was held that when the accused, the husband of the injured woman, struck a blow with a hatchet on the neck caused her simple injury he could not be held guilty of an offence under S. 307 but must be convicted under S. 324, I. P. C. The full circumstances of the assault and the motive which led to it, however, are not mentioned in the judgment and it is, therefore, difficult to hold that the observations of their Lordships in that case apply to the facts of the present case.

Section 307 lays down that whoever does any act with such intention or knowledge and under such circumstances, that if he by that act caused death, he would be guilty of murder, shall be punished for an attempt to murder, and, if hurt is caused to any person by such act, the offender shall be liable to enhanced punishment as described in the section. Now, it would at once be observed that the important consideration in each case is the intention or knowledge of the accused and also the circumstances under which the offence is committed. The nature of the hurt caused to the victim is not necessarily a guiding consideration as to the applicability of the section to the act of the accused.

It may be mentioned that the counsel for the appellant contended before me that in the opinion of the doctor the injury caused amounted to grievous hurt whereas it really was not so. I do not, however, intend to go into this question because in my opinion, it is immaterial in this case, in view of what I am presently about to hold, whether the injury caused amounted to a simple or a grievous hurt. S. 307 makes a clear distinction between an act of the accused and its result, if any. Such an act may not be attended by any result so far as the person assaulted is concerned still there may be cases in which the culprit would be liable under S. 307, for an instance may be mentioned the case of a person who shoots at another with a loaded gun or pistol, and it may be that owing to the culprit not having aimed properly the person assaulted be not injured at all, in such a case if the Court is able to find that the intention of the assailant was to cause the death of the other person, he must be convicted under S. 307 for an attempt to murder because a person must be presumed at least to know that by firing a loaded gun or pistol at another person he is likely to cause his death and there can be no manner of doubt that if death is caused in such circumstances the offence committed by him would amount to murder.

It is further to be observed that if a person knows that certain result will ensue from his act he must be deemed to intend such result by doing the act. Further it is not necessary that the injury actually caused to the victim of the assault should be sufficient under ordinary circumstances to cause the death of the person assailed. What the Court has to see is whether the act, irrespective of its result was done with the intention or knowledge and under the circumstances mentioned in S. 307. This is apparent from the second part of S. 307, which makes the convict liable to enhanced punishment if hurt is caused to the victim.

Now, having regard to the observations made above, the only possible inference under the circumstances disclosed in this case is that the appellant in this case was actuated by feeling of resentment caused by the breaking off of his betrothal with Mt. Rahmon and her marriage with another person and deliberately arming himself with a chhuri when it was still dark entered her house and struck her on the neck and caused her an injury; and, therefore, he intended to cause her death or at least he had the knowledge that the result of his act would be the death of Mt. Rahmon. It is clear that he would have been liable to be punished for murder if Mt. Rahmon had died as a result of the injuries caused to her. I hold, therefore, that the appellant has been rightly convicted under S. 307, I. P. C.

He is, however, a young man being about 18 years of age and though the assault by him on Mt. Rahmon was deliberate and was committed under aggravating circumstances I consider that having regard to his age he is entitled to some leniency in the matter of sentence. In my opinion a sentence of four years' rigorous imprisonment would suffice in this case. I maintain the conviction and accept the appeal to this extent that the sentence of the appellant Mutalli is reduced to four years' rigorous imprisonment.

BROADWAY AND AGHA HAIDAR, JJ.

Arjan Singh and another—Accused-Appellants.

v.

Emperor—Opposite Party.

Criminal Appeal No. 337 of 1929, Decided on 30th May 1929, from an order of Sess. Judge, Jullundur, D/- 11th March 1929.

(a) Evidence Act, S. 24—Retracted confession corroborated by production of articles is sufficient to warrant conviction.

A confession, although retracted at the very first possible moment, is sufficient to warrant conviction if corroborated by the production of articles for which the accused can offer no explanation. [P 20 C 1, 2]

* (b) Criminal P. C., S. 164—Confession resiled from before Magistrate appended his certificate but after admitting correctness and affixing thumb mark—Confession is not admissible.

A Magistrate complying with necessary formalities recorded the statement of the accused and had the necessary thumb mark affixed on it on his admitting its correctness. He then proceeded to append his certificate and while the certificate was being written, the accused stated that the statement was made at the instance of police. On his persisting in that statement he recorded further statement on which the accused clearly stated that the statement was made at the instance of police:

Held: that the accused must be regarded as having made no confession inasmuch as although statement had been recorded fully and correctness admitted, the requirements of S. 164 had not been fully complied with by Magistrate before the accused resiled. [P 290 C 2]

(c) Evidence Act, S. 30—No corroboration to connect accused with crime—Confession of co-accused cannot be considered.

In the absence of any corroboration connecting an accused with the commission of offences the confession of a co-accused cannot be taken into consideration against him. [P 290 C 2]

Kesar Singh—for Appellants.

Sundar Das for Govt. Advocate—for the Crown.

Broadway, J.—Arjan Singh and Mt. Jiwani have been sentenced to death for the murder of one Nagar Singh husband of the latter. They have appealed and the case is also before the Court under S. 374, Criminal P. C.

It appears that on the night of 12th January 1929, lohri night, Nagar Singh was in his house with his wife Mt. Jiwani. About midnight Wazir Singh, Nagar Singh's brother, who was sleeping in his own house in the same courtyard, was aroused by hearing the cries of Mt. Jiwani. He went towards her house and found the door chained from outside. He entered and was about to make a light when Mt. Jiwani asked him to cover her up first as she was naked. Being unable to find a match in the darkness Wazir Singh returned to his own house and from there brought a lighted diwa having first covered Jiwani up with a lihaf. On his return with the light he found his brother lying on the ground dead, weltering in blood. Mt. Jiwani was on her cot in a state of nudity. Her wrists were tied across her chest with a string and a safa was tied to the sides of the bed, thus restraining her movements. She was not gagged and her feet were not tied. On being questioned she stated that some eight or ten men of whom she named Harnam Singh, Bishan Singh and others had come there that night, knocked up Nagar Singh and had then set on to him, and killed him, held her down, trussed her up, robbed her of certain ornaments, i. e., phul and balas and certain garments. After their departure she had raised the alarm. Other people arrived on the scene and the same story was told to them. Accordingly Wazir Singh proceeded to the police station some eight miles away and made a report there at 11 a. m., on 13th January 1929. The Police went to the spot, sent for the persons named and held an investigation. The story told by Mt. Jiwani appeared to the investigating officer as very improbable. On 16th January Mt. Jiwani made a certain statement to the police which led them to send for Arjan Singh who is a collateral of the deceased and lives close by. On 17th January Arjan Singh made a statement and produced a gandas, a phul and balas and some woman's clothes which were blood-stained. The Imperial Serologist's report is that all these articles are stained with human blood. It is said that Mt. Jiwani in the presence of respectable witnesses recognized the ornaments found as well as the clothes as being hers.

On 22nd January Mr. Bishambar Dial Singh, First Class Magistrate, happened to arrive at Mauza Shah Kot on tour and the police took advantage of his presence there to place the two appellants before him in order that their statements might be recorded. Accordingly the said Magistrate recorded the statement of Arjan Singh after carefully and fully complying with the provisions of S. 164, Criminal P. C. He was then returned to custody. In this statement Arjan Singh confessed his having murdered the deceased and admitted that the motive was to get rid of him inasmuch as Mt. Jiwani had contracted an intimacy with the deponent. The Magistrate then proceeded to record the statement of Mt. Jiwani. He complied with the necessary formalities and recorded her statement, read it out to her and had her thumb mark affixed on it on her admitting its correctness. He was then proceeding to append the certificate which was necessary under S. 164, Criminal P. C. While this certificate was being written Mt. Jiwani stated to the Magistrate that she had made the statement at the instance of the police who had promised that she and Arjan Singh would be set free if she made that statement. The Magistrate, very properly held his hand, and questioned her asking her again and again whether she had spoken the truth and on her persisting in her retraction and her allegations as to the statement having been made at the instance of the police he, instead of signing the certificate recorded her further statement. In this statement Mt. Jiwani clearly stated that the previous statement had been made by her at the instance of the police. The Magistrate then sent for Arjan Singh and recorded his statement asking him if the statement made by him was true. The record shows that the appellant Arjan Singh after thinking for a time made the same assertion as had been made by Mt. Jiwani to the effect that the statement was not true and had been made at the instance of the police.

The evidence on the record shows that Arjan Singh himself produced a bloodstained gandasa, a phul and balas and certain blood-stained garments belonging to a woman. It is in evidence that Mt. Jiwani identified the jewellery and the clothes as her property. In these circumstances, so far as the case of Arjan Singh is concerned his confession, although retracted at the very first possible moment, is corroborated by the production of articles for which he can now give no explanation, more especially the gandasa. He has contented himself by denying that he produced these articles. In these circumstances although there was a very early and prompt retraction of the confession the corroboration afforded by the production of the gandasa and the other articles is to my mind sufficient to warrant the conclusion arrived at by the learned Sessions Judge that Arjan Singh was responsible for the death of Nagar Singh.

The case of Mt. Jiwani is on a somewhat different footing. She must be regarded as having made no confession inasmuch as although her statement had actually been recorded and its correctness had actually been admitted by her, the requirements of S. 164 had not fully been complied with by the Magistrate when she resiled from her statement. In these circumstances I consider that this confessional statement of Mt. Jiwani cannot be admitted in evidence. This being the case there is no real evidence left on the record to warrant a definite conclusion, that she joined Arjan Singh in killing her husband or was privy to the murder prior to its commission. I do not lose sight of the fact that Arjan Singh's confession may be taken into consideration against this appellant. The circumstances of the case are, however, such that in the absence of any corroboration connecting Mt. Jiwani with the commission of the crime I cannot regard Arjan Singh's confession as sufficient to bring Mt. Jiwani's guilt home to her. That she assisted Arjan Singh by giving him her ornaments and her blood-stained clothes is, I think, beyond question. Her lying story as to how her husband was murdered is a most suspicious circumstance. At the same time it seems to me that her lying story and the assistance given to her paramour are consistent and compatible with her having had no knowledge that the murder was to be committed that night and with having been in no conspiracy to murder her husband. It is possible even probable, that Arjan Singh came to the house that night, found Nagar Singh in a drunken sleep, slew him and then called on Mt. Jiwani to assist him in covering his tracks, which Mt. Jiwani, probably very gladly, agreed to do. In these circumstances this appellant is, I think entitled to the benefit of this doubt. I would, therefore, dismiss the appeal of Arjar Singh and confirm the sentence of death passed on him, but would accept the appeal of Mt. Jiwani, set aside her conviction and sentence and direct her release.

TEK CHAND, J.

Emperor

v.

Alia—Respondent.

Criminal Rown. No. 808 of 1928, Decided on 11th January 1929, reported by Sess. Judge, Ferozepore.

(a) Criminal P. C., S. 562—S. 562 is not enacted with intention of letting off every juvenils offender—Attendant circumstances should be considered along with age, character and antecedent of offender.

Section 562 has not been enacted with the intention of letting off without imprisonment every juvenile offender on his first conviction for an offence described in the section, regardless of the circumstances in which the crime was committed. S. 562 itself is clear on this point and Magistrates, before applying the section, should carefully take into consideration the attendant circumstances, along with age, character and antecedents of the offender. There can be no manner of doubt that S. 562 has no application to the case of a youth, who grapples with another and after having been separated by others turns back with rage on his adversary, and inflicts a heavy lathi blow on him, killing him almost instantaneously, and later on speaks of his act in a spirit of truculent braggadocio threatening to kill those who attempt to arrest him. If such a person were to be released on probation, the very object with which this salutary provision of the law was enacted would be defeated, and an impression created in the minds of young men that they can commit at least one serious offence with impunity. [P 292 C 1]

(b) Criminal Trial—Where it is doubtful how death was caused injuries on body of deceased are of great importance and assistance in coming to conclusion.

In cases where it is doubtful whether death of the deceased was due to strangulation or due to a blow with a lathi, the nature of injuries found to exist on the body of the deceased is a matter of great importance and is generally of considerable assistance in determining the truth or otherwise of the account of the incident as given by the eyewitnesses and coming to a conclusion as to how death was caused. [P 292 C 2]

D. R. Sawhney—for the Crown.

Ghulam Mohyuddin—for Respondent.

Order.—The respondent Alia, a Teli, youth, 15 or 16 years old, of mauza Mohal, has been found guilty by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Fazilka, of an offence under S. 304-II, I. P. C., for having caused the death of one Sultan by a blow inflicted with a heavy lathi on the back of the neck of the deceased. Having regard to the age of the respondent, and the fact that this was his first offence the learned Magistrate has released him on probation of good conduct under S. 562 (1), Criminal P. C., on his entering into a bond for Rs. 2,000, with two sureties, to appear and receive sentence when called upon during three years from the date of the conviction. On being moved by the father of the deceased the Sessions Judge, Ferozepore, has forwarded the proceedings to this Court under S. 438, Criminal P. C. He has recommended that if the conviction is to be maintained, the sentence should be enhanced. The learned Public Prosecutor has appeared before me in support of this recommendation, while Mr. Ghulam Mohyuddin, who represents the respondent, has urged under S. 439 (6) that on the evidence on the record the respondent ought not to have been convicted at all, and that, in any case, if the conviction is to be upheld, the sentence passed by the learned Magistrate was just and proper in the circumstances.

Now I have no hesitation in saying that on the findings of the learned Magistrate, the sentence passed by him is manifestly inadequate, and that if I were to maintain the conviction, I shall be constrained to sentence the respondent to a substantial term of imprisonment. The story as given by the alleged eyewitnesses, which has been accepted by the learned trial Magistrate, is that on 16th September 1927, Sultan, deceased, with his cousins was grazing his flock of sheep in the field of his maternal uncle, Fateh Mohammad (P. W. 6), when Alia, respondent, and his cousin, Gudda, took their flock to the same field. On Sultan objecting to the respondent bringing his sheep there, an altercation ensued and they grappled with each other. They were, however, separated by Nura (P. W. 3), Khushia (P. W. 4), Sadiq (P. W. 5), Nizam and Bashir, who were sitting close by and who advised both parties to take away their sheep, but Alia turned back in rage and struck a blow with a bamboo lathi on the neck of Sultan, who fell down immediately and died soon after. Alia made good his escape carrying the lathi in his hand. Kasim Ali (P. W. 12), who had seen the respondent running through his courtyard, on being informed later of the incident, followed him on a pony, armed with a gun and accompanied by one Mohammad Khan and succeeded in overtaking him at a distance of a mile-and-a-half on the other side of the village. When Qasim Ali advanced towards the respondent, the latter flourished his stick at him and said "I have killed one and I will kill you now," but Kasim Ali threatened to fire at him and eventually succeeded in capturing him.

Now, if this story is to be believed, and it has been believed by the learned Magistrate—it is obvious that the beneficent provisions of S. 562 cannot be invoked in favour of the offender. The only reason given by the learned Magistrate for applying that section to this case is that the respondent was a boy 15 or 16 years of age, and that this was his first offence. But it must be borne in mind that S. 562 has not been enacted with the intention of letting off without imprisonment every juvenile offender on his first conviction for an offence described in the section, regardless of the circumstances in which the crime was committed. The section itself is clear on this point and Magistrates, before applying the section, should carefully take into consideration the attendant circumstances, along with the age, character and antecedents of the offender. There can be no manner of doubt that the section has no application to the case of a youth, who grapples with another and after having been separated by others turns back in rage on his adversary, and inflicts a heavy lathi blow on him, killing him almost instantaneously, and later on speaks of his act in a spirit of truculent braggadocio threatening to kill those who attempt to arrest him. If such a person were to be released on probation, the very object with which this salutary provision of the law was enacted would be defeated, and an impression created in the minds of young men that they can commit at least one serious offence with impunity. I, therefore, agree with the learned Sessions Judge, that if the finding is to be maintained, the appropriate punishment must be a substantial sentence of imprisonment.

The main question for consideration, however, is whether the conviction is justified on the record. The story for the prosecution as given above is supported by the evidence of four eyewitnesses, Sadiq alias Pula, son of Ali Mohammad (P. W. 1), Nura (P. W. 3), Khushia (P. W. 4) and Sadiq, son of Suleman (P. W. 5), all of whom depose that they saw the respondent inflict the fatal blow on the neck of the deceased. There is also the evidence of Ghulam Mohammad (P. W. 2), father and Fateh Mohammad (P. W. 6), maternal uncle, of the deceased, that as soon as they reached the spot on receipt of information of the attack on Sultan, they were informed by the aforesaid persons that the respondent had killed the deceased. All these witnesses are, however, closely related to each other and are under the influence of Fateh Mohammad (P. W. 6), who admittedly had civil litigation with the father of the respondent some years ago and who had been sentenced to five years' rigorous imprisonment in a riot case, in which Ghulam Mohammad (P. W. 2), father of the deceased, and Nura (P. W. 3) had also been convicted. Their evidence must, therefore, be accepted with a great deal of caution, even though the first information report was made without any undue delay. Moreover, none of these witnesses has any satisfactory explanation to offer why they and the other persons present at the time did not attempt to capture or pursue the culprit. It seems strange that these six persons should have allowed a youth like the respondent to run away without making any attempt to catch hold of him.

In such cases the nature of the injuries found to exist on the body of the deceased is a matter of great importance and is generally of considerable assistance in determining the truth or otherwise of the account of the incident as given by the alleged eyewitnesses. It is, however, unfortunate that in this case the two medical witnesses who were examined at the trial are not agreed in their opinion. The Assistant Surgeon (P. W. 14), who conducted the post-mortem examination of the body of Sultan on 17th September, was of opinion that he had died of strangulation, and not as a result of a lathi blow on the neck. As his conclusion was in conflict with the evidence of the alleged eyewitnesses, the District Magistrate, Ferozepore, on the matter coming to his notice, ordered the body to be exhumed in the presence of the Civil Surgeon (P. W. 13), the Naib-Tahsildar of Fazilka and a number of other officials. Owing to the decomposed condition of the body and the liquefaction of the important organs, it was not possible for the Civil Surgeon to express a definite opinion as to the cause of death, but he was inclined to the view that the deceased had not been strangled to death and that it was possible that the severe congestion on the back of the neck was due to a blow on the neck.

There being a conflict of medical opinion it is necessary to examine the evidence of the two doctors in some detail. It may, however, be mentioned at the outset that the genuineness of the record, made by the Assistant Surgeon, of the injuries on the body of the deceased and of the state of the internal organs is not challenged on behalf of the Crown. It is conceded that the record is accurate, but it is contended that the conclusions, which the Assistant Surgeon deduced therefrom as to the cause of death are inaccurate, and for this purpose reliance is placed on the evidence of the Civil Surgeon.

Now, as stated already, the Civil Surgeon examined the exhumed body six days after the death. He has deposed that when he saw it, "decomposition was advancing" and "mature maggots were creeping in" the brain, the cord and lungs had 'melted away'; the liver was :

"decomposing and there was no trace of the respiratory organs from which it could be found that the death was due to stoppage of respiration."

There was no skin on the front part of the neck, but the skin on the back and sides of the neck was supple and the underlying tissues still showed signs of congestion. He has also admitted that from :

"the appearance it was not possible to find out the cause of death on account of the decomposition and the liquefaction of the important organs."

It is obvious that much weight cannot be attached to the opinion of the Civil Surgeon, based as it is, on an examination of the body in the condition described above. He, however, concluded that death was not caused by strangulation, but was probably due to compression of the brain, caused by the effusion of blood, because (i) the back of the neck showed severe congestion of the deeper tissues, and (ii) the underlying skin was supple and not "hard and leathery," as, in his opinion it should have been if the deceased had been strangled to death. As to (i) the Civil Surgeon has, however, himself stated that its existence did not exclude the possibility of death by strangulation as originally congestion might have been uniform all round the neck, and that he could not say that it was not so, owing to the disappearance of the skin on the front side, at the time of his examination. It may be stated that in the notes of the post-mortem examination made by the Assistant Surgeon it is clearly stated that there was a continuous horizontal bruise 1" x 10" round the neck. The existence of the congestion on the back of the neck, does not, therefore, militate, in any way against the hypothesis that the deceased was strangled to death. Nor does the other circumstance relied upon by the Civil Surgeon that the skin underlying the bruise round the neck was not "hard and leathery" but supple, appear to be of any value. It is stated in Lyon's Medical Jurisprudence in India (8th Edn.) at p. 277 that in cases of strangulation : "the hard yellow brown parchmenty appearance of the skin in the course of the mark is more seldom met with. Whether the mark will be parchmentized or not depends entirely on the nature of the ligature. If this is hard and rough, such a mark will result. In strangulation, more frequently than in hanging, the ligature employed is a soft one such as a handkerchief, or other piece of cloth, and this is the reason for the frequent absence of the parchmentized mark."

Similarly Dr. Modi in his Text-book of Medical Jurisprudence and Toxicology says at p. 131 :

"The base of the (ligature) mark which is known as a groove or furrow, is usually pale with reddish and ecchymosed margins. It is rarely hard, yellow and parchment like as in hanging."

The learned Public Prosecutor has not drawn my attention to any authority to the contrary and I must hold that the reasons given by the Civil Surgeon in support of his conclusion are not convincing.

Let us now examine the external and internal appearances shown in the Assistant Surgeon's notes of the post-mortem examination. These are :

(a) a continuous horizontal bruise 1" broad and 10" long round the neck at the level of the wind-box, showing a distinct ligature mark ;

(b) a bruise 8" x 3" on the back of the neck ;

(c) marks of violence on the front and the side of the chest, there being bruises on the supraclavicular region of the neck and on the right and left side of the thorax on the mid-ribs ;

(d) effusion of bloody serum in both the pleura, (about 1 lb. in each) and about 10 oz. in the pericardium ;

(e) acute venous congestion of both the lungs and the spleen ;

(f) extensive ecchymosis of the soft tissues below the bruises above-mentioned ; and

(g) effusion of blood below the scalp and also over the brain below the membrane.

It is hardly necessary to point out that (a), (d), (e) and (f) are typical symptoms of asphyxial death by strangulation. If any authority is needed, reference may be made to Taylor's Principles and Practice of Medical Jurisprudence (8th Edn.) and Lyon's Medical Jurisprudence in India (8th Edn.), p. 277. In the former work it is stated at p. 609 of Vol. 1 that when sub-pleural, sub-pericardial and sub-meningeal bleedings are present, we may legitimately say that :

"death has almost certainly taken place from asphyxia."

The learned author also says at p. 658 that in the majority of cases of death by strangulation intense venous congestion of the lungs is found, and that the spleen is usually congested. It is also stated that the brain is occasionally congested, but more commonly is in its natural state. On the same page an instance is cited of an admitted case of strangulation in which "blood was found effused in the brain." That the deceased died of strangulation is further supported by the existence of the injuries described in (c) above, which clearly indicate that the assailant, after having overpowered the deceased, sat on his chest and pressed him with his knees, elbows and hands: See Cox's Medical Legal Court Companion 2nd Edn., p. 106. The learned Public Prosecutor relies, however, on injury (b) as indicating violent impact of a hard substance on the back of the neck, but this, as suggested by the Assistant Surgeon, could have been caused by the back of the neck pressing against a hard substance when he was being strangled. The Civil Surgeon also has explained that the existence of this injury is not necessarily inconsistent with death by strangulation.

The Civil Surgeon has, however, emphasized the absence of (a) the protrusion of the eye-balls and the tongue, (b) lividity of the face and the upper limbs and (c) congestion of the larynx and trachea as negating the theory of strangulation. But as pointed out by Taylor (Vol. 1 at p. 656) these external signs are not essential features of death by strangulation and "may be entirely absent" in some cases : see also Lyon, p. 278.

After a careful perusal of the evidence on the record, I am of opinion, that the external and internal appearances found on the body undoubtedly point to the conclusion that Sultan met with his death by strangulation, and that the story related by the so-called eyewitnesses which as shown already has otherwise also a ring of improbability about it cannot be accepted.

Before concluding, one other matter requires notice. It has been strongly urged by Mr. Ghulam Mohyuddin that the learned Magistrate has acted improperly in attributing corrupt motives to the Assistant Surgeon and in referring in his judgment to the so-called "lengthy accounts" given by the constables Ude Chand (P. W. 7) and Ghulam Mohyuddin (P. W. 8) and by Nizam (P. W. 11). He has read to me the depositions of these witnesses and has rightly pointed out that none of them gave direct evidence relating to this matter, but that the insinuations made by them are based solely on hearsay and as such ought not to have been allowed to go on the record. The learned Public Prosecutor concedes that these statements are inadmissible and were wrongly admitted on the record and referred to in the judgment. It is significant that not a single question even remotely suggesting any corrupt practice was put to the Assistant Surgeon either on behalf of the prosecution or by the Court, though he was twice examined at the trial.

For the foregoing reasons, I hold that the guilt of the respondent has not been established, and I accordingly quash the conviction, acquit him and direct that the bond executed by him be cancelled forthwith.

v.

Emperor—Opposite Party.

Criminal Appeal No. 693 of 1929, Decided on 20th October 1929, from order of Sess. Judge, Jhelum, D/- 3rd July 1929.

Penal Code, S. 396—Where dacoity is proved to be committed by five persons and only four are identified, they are guilty though fifth is not traced.

Where it is fully established that a dacoity was committed by a party of five persons one of whom committed a murder and the identity of four of them is established beyond question, the fifth remaining unidentified the four accused are equally guilty under S. 396, though it is not possible to trace and identify one of the culprits. [P 296 C 2]

Mohammad Shafi and Ghulam Mohy-uddin—for Appellants.

Abdul Rashid—for the Crown.

Judgment.—Four persons, Mohammad Ahsan alias Mulla of Khour (District Attock), Fazal Din carpenter of Shakarpari (District Attock), Ali Akbar Mughal of Sadharyal (District Attock) and Karim Bakhsh alias Kariman Awan of Maira Aku (District Rawalpindi) were tried under S. 396, I. P. C. for having along with Mohammad Zaman approver (P. W. 146), committed a dacoity on 5th August 1928 at about 8 p. m. in the house of Ladha Shah (P. W. 130) at mauza Padhri in the Jhelum District, in the commission of which one Gian Chand was murdered by one of the dacoits. The learned Sessions Judge has acquitted Kariman accused and has convicted Mohammad Ahsan, Fazal Din and Ali Akbar under S. 396, and has sentenced each of them to death. Mohammad Ahsan and Ali Akbar have preferred a joint appeal (Criminal Appeal No. 623 of 1929) and Fazal Din has appealed separately (Criminal Appeal 715 of 1929). Both the appeals have been heard together and will be disposed of in one judgment.

The case for the prosecution is given in detail in the statement of Mohammad Zaman, approver, (P. W. 146) who belongs to mauza Shakarpari, where Fazal Din appellant also lived. Briefly stated, it is, that on the morning of 3rd August 1928, Fazal Din appellant asked the approver to join in a dacoity which was in contemplation, and the latter agreed. In the afternoon they both left Shakarpari for Rawalpindi, Mohammad Zaman taking with him a revolver and a number of loaded cartridges. They stopped for the night at a sarai in Rawalpindi and were met by Mohammad Ahsan appellant, who informed them that Ali Akbar and Kariman would join them at Topi Rakh with a rifle. Next morning Mohammad Zaman, Fazal Din and Mohammad Ahsan took a lorry for Gujar Khan and as previously arranged, Ali Akbar and Kariman joined them near Topi Rakh. They had with them a khokha in which a rifle had been concealed. They spent some time at Pindi Matte Khan and then proceeded to Missa Koswal, where they took the train to Tarakki, arriving there on the early morning of the 5th. They then walked to Domeli and stopped at a well where they discussed the plans of the dacoity.

After spending some time at mauza Thapla they reached Padhri at about 8 p. m. and proceeded straight to the house of Ladha Shah. Ali Akbar noticed some one coming towards them and fired at him but missed. On getting on the roof of Ladha Shah's house, the approver fired twice in the air to threaten the inmates of the house and to let the villagers know that they were armed. Shortly after Ali Akbar also fired twice or thrice from the roof. The other dacoits caught hold of Ladha Shah, beat him with sticks and demanded the keys from him. Ladha Shah raised an outcry which attracted a number of persons towards his house. As they approached the house, Ali Akbar fired at them killing one Gian Chand and wounding Dul Raj (P. W. 131). The villagers, finding that the dacoits had firearms with them, dispersed. The dacoits ransacked the house, broke open an iron safe, rifled the boxes and other receptacles, and having taken away a large number of gold and silver ornaments worth several thousands of rupees and sovereigns, currency notes and cash, made good their escape. While, they were running away, Ram Chand (P. W. 143), hurled stones at them but none of them was hurt. Ali Akbar fired at him but he escaped unhurt. After going about 400 yards from Padhri they threw away the empty money bag (Ex. P. 19) the small tin box (Ex. P. 87) and certain other useless articles and adjusted the load among themselves. A short distance further, Fazal Din threw into a pond a screw-driver (Ex. P. 2) with which he had tried to batter the door of the house of Ladha Shah. They then proceeded by a circuitous road to Tarakki, where they took the train on the morning of the 6th sitting in separate compartments. They detained at Gujar Khan, from where Ali Akbar took them to the Dhok of Jamedar Nadir Khan (P. W. 117). They had their meals there and divided the booty among themselves. After the division they went away one by one.

In the meantime, on 6th August at 8 a. m. a report of the occurrence had been made at the Police Station, Domeli, by means of a rukka which had been sent by the lambardars of Padhri. The police took up the investigation in right earnest and arrested the appellants, Kariman and the approver at different places on the 17th and 18th.

That a daring dacoity was committed on the evening of 5th August in the house of Ladha Shah and in the commission of dacoity one of the dacoits fired at Gian Chand and killed him, is beyond dispute. The evidence on the record leaves no doubt on these points and further establishes that Mohammad Zaman, approver was one of the dacoits. This evidence has been carefully analysed by the learned Sessions Judge and as his findings have not been challenged before us it is not necessary to set it out in detail. The important question for determination is how far the statement of the approver has been corroborated by independent testimony as regards the complicity of the three appellants, or any one of them, in the crime. It is no doubt true that Ladha Shah the other Padhri witnesses are able to identify the approver or any of the appellants and their evidence is of no assistance in determining the identity of the culprits, but, the prosecution contend that the matter is put beyond doubt by the recovery of stolen property from each of them, and also the testimony of disinterested and independent witnesses who had seen the appellants and the approver going to and back from Padhri shortly before and after the occurrence. (After discussing the corroborative evidence and holding that the approver's statement identifying Ali Akbar, Mohammad Ahsan and Fazal Din accused with the offence had been amply corroborated, his Lordship proceeded as follows:) It was urged by the counsel for Ali Akbar that as the approver had stated that the crime had been committed by him and the three appellants conjointly with Kariman, but as Kariman had been acquitted by the Sessions Judge, the three appellants could not be convicted under S. 396. This argument is, however, devoid of force and I have no hesitation in rejecting it. The learned Sessions Judge has found, and his finding is fully supported by a mass of evidence, that the party which committed the crime in the house of Ladha Shah on the night in question consisted of five persons. The identity of four of them has been established beyond question, but it could not be said with certainty whether their fifth associate was Karim Bakhsh or some other person and the learned Judge gave him the benefit of the doubt and acquitted him. The burglary having been committed by five persons and it being proved that in its commission one of the party murdered Gian Chand it is clear that all the appellants are equally guilty under S. 396, even though it has not been possible to trace and identify one of the culprits. I would, therefore, affirm the conviction of each of the appellants under that section.

The crime was carefully planned and cleverly executed and might have remained undetected but for the circumstance that one of the culprits was suffering from leucoderma. There are no extenuating circumstances, and there is nothing to distinguish between the degree of guilt of the various appellants. It is no doubt true that it was Ali Akbar, who actually fired the fatal shot but there is abundant evidence that the dacoity had originally been planned by Mohammad Ahsan and Fazal Din, and that it was at their suggestion that Ali Akbar and the approver had taken the firearms with them. I can, therefore, see no reason for commuting the sentence in the case of any of the appellants.

I would dismiss the appeals and confirm the sentences of death passed against Ali Akbar, Mohammad Ahsan and Fazal Din.

Criminal Appeal No. 780 of 1929, Decided on 28th October 1929, from an order of Sess. Judge, Lahore, D/- 28th July 1929.

Penal Code, S. 302—Fact that accused sets up false defence that he never knew deceased even when evidence shows that deceased was last seen alive in his company and his disappearance immediately after murder is sufficient to bring home offence to him.

Where the evidence against the accused is that the deceased was last seen alive in his company and that the accused disappeared immediately after the murder and the accused sets up a palpably false defence that he did not know the deceased and was never in her company, these facts and circumstances are sufficient to bring the offence of murder home to the accused. [P 298 C 1]

Har Parshad—for Appellant.

Des Raj Sawhney—for the Crown.

Judgment.—On the morning of 13th September 1925, a woman with wounds on her abdomen, neck, etc., was found lying dead on the roof of a kothri (small room) in the compound of the shrine of Data Ganj Bakhsh at Lahore. That very day it transpired that the woman had a companion with her of the name of Fazal Din, who called her his wife, that they had rented the kothri from Haji Ghulam Fakhruddin (P.W. 12)—a majawar of the shrine—only two or three days previously, and that before that they had occupied a room in the house of one Sawan (P.W. 10) at the Akbari Gate, Lahore. Sawan gave the information that Fazal Din was a resident of village Tarsikka in the Amritsar District. Further in the room which Fazal Din had occupied in the house of Sawan the police found among others the following articles:

(1) a pass book bearing the name of Fazal Din son of Labhu Shah, resident of Tarsikka (appellant);

(2) a letter from the Commanding Officer of Platoon 2/13, Frontier Force, New Delhi Cantonment to soldier No. 4036, Fajja Khan of Mauza Tiska Jandiala, District Amritsar;

(3) a silver medal with soldier No. 4036 and the name Fajja Khan engraved on it;

(4) a gold medal with the soldier No. 4036, and the name Fajja Khan inscribed on it.

Fazal Din absconded and was not got hold of for three years. In September 1928, he was arrested by the Gurdaspur police in connexion with a burglary and was then sent to Lahore to be dealt with for the murder in question. He has now been tried by the learned Sessions Judge of Lahore who has, in agreement with the four assessors, found him guilty and sentenced him to death.

That Fazal Din came to Lahore in company with the woman and lived in the house of Sawan is fully established by the evidence of Sawan (P.W. 10), his wife Mt. Zebo (P.W. 11) and Maula Bakhsh (P.W. 8) who lived in that very house. Their evidence receives support from the discovery of the medals, etc., in the room which Fazal Din had occupied for 18 or 19 days. Fazal Din admitted that he was a sepoy in the 1-56 Rifles, that his number in the regiment was 4036, and that the medals were his and had been awarded to him. He was duly identified in an identification parade held in the Borstal Jail at Lahore by Sawan, Mt. Zebo and Maula Bakhsh. It was Sawan who had obtained for him from the mujawar of the shrine, Haji Ghulam Fakhruddin (P.W. 12) the kothri in question. There can thus be no manner of doubt that Fazal Din appellant came to Lahore in company with the deceased, and that they both lived in a room in the house of Sawan for 18 or 19 days and then hired the kothri at the shrine and began to live there.

Further, the kothri in question was one in a row of kothris of which one was in the occupation of Mt. Barkate (P.W. 16). Mt. Bhuri (P.W. 15), too lived in the compound of the shrine. They both deposed that on the fateful night Fazal Din and the woman slept on the roof of their kothri. They identified Fazal Din in Court but Mt. Barkate (P.W. 16) was not present when the identification parade was held and Mt. Bhuri had failed to identify him in that parade. Thus Mt. Barkate's ability to identify Fazal Din was not tested and Mt. Bhuri had failed in the test. It cannot, however, be doubted that these two women were in a position to observe that the man and the woman who had hired the kothri were sleeping on the roof of it, and whether they could, after the lapse of three years, identify them or not, the fact that they had seen them there could not have been effaced from their memory on account of the painful sight beheld by them the next morning. In these circumstances it may safely be presumed that the man and the woman that were seen by them on the roof of the kothri overnight were no other than Fazal Din and the deceased.

Thus the evidence against the appellant briefly is that the deceased was last seen alive in company with the appellant, that he disappeared immediately after the event and that instead of accounting for his disappearance he has set up a palpably false defence that he did not know the deceased, never came to Lahore with her, and never lived in the house of Sawan. These facts and circumstances, in our opinion, are sufficient to bring the offence home to him.

We, therefore, dismiss the appeal and confirm the sentence of death.

FFORDE AND ADDISON, JJ.

Bhagat Singh and another—Accused—Appellants.

v.

Emperor—Opposite Party.

Criminal Appeal No. 748 of 1929, Decided on 13th January 1930, from order of Sess. Judge, Delhi, D/- 12th June 1929.

Penal Code, Ss. 300 (4) and 307—Accused knowing that their act is imminently dangerous and is likely to cause death are guilty—Mere fact that they had no deliberate intention of killing any particular individual does not take their case outside Cl. (4), S. 300.

From the definition of murder in Cl. (4), S. 300 it follows that if a person does an act of the nature described in the clause, he is guilty of an attempt to murder. [P 299 C 2]

Any person of average intelligence knows that the explosion of a bomb in a crowded room, however carefully it may be thrown, is an imminently dangerous act such as he must be deemed to know would in all probability cause death or at least such bodily injury as is likely to cause death. Accused, described by their counsel as persons of exceptional intelligence must, therefore, be presumed to know that their act was dangerous and likely to cause death. The fact that accused had no deliberate intention of killing any particular individual does not take their case outside Cl. (4), S. 300, when they had no excuse for running the risk. It is no excuse to say that they were sincerely and passionately actuated by the desire to alter the present order of things. The defence of an anarchist is no defence to the charge. [P 300 C 1]

(b) Explosive Substances Act (1908), S. 3—Word "maliciously" in S. 3 is used in legal sense.

"Malice" in the legal acceptance of the word is not confined to personal spite against individuals but consists in a conscious violation of the law to the prejudice of another. In its legal sense it means a wrongful act done intentionally without just cause or excuse. It is in the legal sense that the word "maliciously" is used in S. 3. Bromage v. Prosser, 1 B. & C 247, Rel. on. [P 300 C 2]

(c) Criminal Trial—One offence punishable under two provisions of law—Only one punishment can be imposed—Penal Code, S. 71.

Where there is one offence punishable with two different provisions of law, one punishment only can be lawfully imposed. [P 300 C 2]

Asaf Ali—for Appellant 2.

Abdul Rashid and Suraj Narain—for the Crown.

Fforde, J.—This is an appeal by Bhagat Singh and B. K. Datta against the judgment and sentence of the learned Sessions Judge who convicted them of attempted murder within the meaning of S. 307, I. P. C., and also of an offence under S. 3, Explosive Substances Act (6 of 1908) which provides punishment for unlawfully causing an explosion likely to endanger life or property. The facts are shortly these :

On 8th April 1929, at about noon, two bombs were thrown in quick succession in the Legislative Assembly Hall just as the President had risen to make an announcement regarding the Public Safety Bill. The first bomb exploded in close proximity to seats Nos. 4-B, 5 and 33. Almost immediately afterwards a second bomb exploded at seat 146 which is one of the seats nearest to the visitors' gallery. Six persons were injured by fragments of these bombs, namely, Sir Bomanji Dalal who received eight wounds, Sir George Schuster who was injured on the back of the right upper arm, in which three small fragments of metal were found buried, and Messrs. S. M. Roy, A. P. Dube, P. R. Rao and Shankar Rao, all of whom received minor injuries. Immediately after the bombs had exploded two pistol shots were heard which, it is alleged, were fired by the appellant Bhagat Singh, but in regard to this incident no charge has been brought.

The bombs were thrown from a place in the public gallery above the Government benches. That these bombs were thrown by the appellants has been established beyond any possibility of doubt. Both the appellants admitted in the Sessions Court that they threw these bombs, and the appellant Bhagat Singh, who has refused to be represented by counsel, has repeated that admission in his address to this Court. The case of the appellant Datta, however, who is defended by Mr. Asaf Ali, is, firstly, that it has not been proved that he threw one of the bombs in question and secondly, that, if he did so, the bomb was so constructed, and thrown in such a manner as to avoid injury to any person. This latter defence is the one also adopted by Bhagat Singh. They contend that they cannot be found guilty of an attempt to murder inasmuch as the bombs which they threw were deliberately constructed to avoid killing anyone or even causing hurt, and that they were deliberately thrown into a vacant space within wooden barriers protecting the desks and benches where the members sat, with the object of avoiding hurt to any member. They allege that these acts of theirs were for the purpose of drawing attention to their political views which they correctly describe as revolutionary.

That the bomb which exploded first was thrown by Bhagat Singh has been established beyond any doubt. It was this explosion which injured Sir George Schuster and Mr. P. R. Rao. It has also been conclusively proved that the second bomb was thrown by Datta, and caused injuries to Messrs. S. N. Roy and A. P. Dube. S. Sobha Singh who was standing in a portion of the visitors' gallery almost exactly opposite to the place from which the bombs were thrown, has deposed that at the time of the occurrence he was looking at the opposite gallery watching some friends of his who were there with whom he had an appointment for lunch. He was watching them closely so that he should not miss in the crowd. He actually saw Bhagat Singh throw the first bomb and Datta the second. He could not see their faces clearly at the time they threw the bombs, but he ran round immediately after the explosion and saw the two people whom he had seen throwing the bombs, in the custody of the police. After the explosions the appellants were standing somewhat isolated and quite unperturbed.

In my opinion, quite independently of the admissions of the appellants themselves, the evidence of the prosecution witnesses has established the fact that Bhagat Singh did throw the first bomb and Datta the second.

Mr. Asaf Ali has argued, on behalf of Datta, that the convictions under Ss. 307, I. P. C., and S. 3, Explosive Substances Act, cannot legally be upheld. His argument, which applies to the defence of both appellants, is that there was no intention on their part to cause the death of any person and, therefore, they cannot be convicted of an attempt to murder within the meaning of S. 307, I. P. C. The learned counsel, however, has not been able to get over the definition of murder contained in Cl. 4, S. 300, I. P. C., which provides that culpable homicide is murder:

"If the person committing the act knows that it is so imminently dangerous that it must in all probability cause death, or such bodily injury as is likely to cause death, and commits such an act without any excuse for incurring the risk of causing death or such injury as aforesaid."

It follows that if a person does an act of the nature described in this clause but death is not caused, he is guilty of an attempt to murder.

That the appellants knew that in throwing these bombs they committed an act which was so imminently dangerous that it must in all probability cause death, or such bodily injury as was likely to cause death, cannot be seriously doubted. The casings of the bombs in question were made of cast iron of considerable thickness and the force of the explosions shattered these casings into 150 pieces. One fragment has been proved to have travelled a distance of 40 ft. piercing the roof of the ceiling and lodging behind it. Seat 146, on which the second bomb exploded, was shattered to pieces though the wood work was of teak some inch and a half thick. There can be no doubt at all that had one of the heavier fragments of metal struck any person on the head the probabilities are that he would have been killed. The defence that these bombs were designedly constructed with a weak charge, and were deliberately thrown at places where they could do no injury, is not compatible with the proved facts of the explosions. The appellants have been described by Mr. Asaf Ali as persons of exceptional intelligence, and it seems to me clear that anyone of even average intelligence, must have known that the explosions of such a missile in a crowded room, however carefully it might have been thrown, is an imminently dangerous act such as they must be deemed to know would in all probability cause death or at least such bodily injury as was likely to cause death. The fact that the appellants had no deliberate intention of killing any particular individual does not take their case outside Cl. 4, S. 300, I. P. C. They had no excuse for incurring the risk. It is no excuse to say that they were sincerely and passionately actuated by the desire to alter the present order of things. That Bhagat Singh is a sincere revolutionary I have no doubt, that is to say, he is sincere in the illusion that the world can be improved by destroying the social structure as it now stands and substituting for the rule of law the unrestrained will of the individual. That has always been the defence of the anarchist. But it is no defence to the charges upon which he and his co-appellant have been convicted. I am satisfied that both the appellants have been rightly convicted of the offence under S. 307, I. P. C.

It is in my judgment equally clear that they are liable under S. 3, Explosive Substances Act (6 of 1908). That section reads as follows:

"Any person who unlawfully and maliciously causes by any explosive substance an explosion of a nature likely to endanger life or to cause serious injury to property shall, whether any injury to person or property has been actually caused or not, be punished with transportation for life or any shorter term, to which fine may be added, or with imprisonment for a term which may extend to ten years, to which fine may be added."

Bhagat Singh has objected, as has counsel for the other appellant, that the term "malicious" as it appears in this section cannot be applied to them as they were not actuated by any malice towards any individual in the Legislative Assembly. It may be that they were not actuated by malice in the sense in which that term is popularly understood, that is to say, they may not have been inspired by vindictiveness against any particular person, but the acts for which they have been convicted were most certainly "malicious" in the legal sense of that term. "Malice," as Lord Campbell observed:

"in the legal acceptance of the word, is not confined to personal spite against individuals, but consists in a conscious violation of the law to the prejudice of another."

and Bailoy, J., remarked in Bromage v. Prosser (1) (at p. 255):

"Malice in common acceptance means ill will against a person, but in its legal sense it means a wrongful act, done intentionally without just cause or excuse. If I give a perfect stranger a blow likely to produce death, I do it of malice because I do it intentionally and without just cause or excuse."

It is in that legal sense that the word "maliciously" is used in S. 3, Explosive Substances Act.

In my judgment the acts of the appellants came clearly within S. 3 the Act 6 of 1908.

The learned Sessions Judge finding the appellants guilty under both these penal provisions has sentenced them each to transportation for life. Where there is one offence punishable under two different provisions of law one punishment only can be lawfully imposed, and in this case only one punishment has been imposed. It is true that the penalty is the maximum under the respective sections under which they have been convicted but it must be remembered that it was only by sheer good fortune that nobody was killed by the explosions.

I am unable to hold that the sentence imposed by the learned Sessions Judge is, under the circumstances, excessive, and I would accordingly dismiss the appeal of both appellants.

v.

Mohammad Yusuf—Accused—Respondent.

Criminal Appeal No. 798 of 1929, Decided on 19th December 1929, from order of Sess. Judge, Jhelum, D/- 25th May 1929.

Criminal Trial—Admission of guilt in statement by accused only basis of conviction—Statement should be accepted in entirety and benefit of mitigating circumstances therein should be given—Penal Code, S. 300.

When the only account of what happened on the night of murder is given by the accused himself and it is his admission contained in that statement that forms the basis of his conviction, the statement should be accepted in its entirety and if it establishes any mitigating circumstance the accused should be given the benefit of it. [P 803 C 2]

Abdul Rashid—for the Crown.

L. Saunders and Bishan Narain—for Respondent.

Broadway, J. — Mohammad Yusuf, a sepoy in the 1/16th Punjab Regiment stationed at Jhelum, was sent up for trial charged with having murdered his wife Mt. Akbar Jan and his mother-in-law Mt. Fatteh Begam, on the night of 6th March 1929. He was acquitted by the learned Sessions Judge, and against this acquittal the Crown has preferred an appeal under S. 417, Criminal P. C.

Mr. Abdul Rashid has supported the appeal on behalf of the Crown while Mr. Saunders addressed the Court on behalf of the respondent.

The case for the prosecution is that Mohammad Yusuf was living in the lines of his regiment at Jhelum in March with his wife and mother-in-law. Mt. Akbar Jan, the wife, was said to be of loose habits, and her mother, Mt. Fatteh Begam, encouraged her immorality. Mohammad Yusuf remonstrated with her but in vain. On the night of 6th March somewhere about 9 or 10 p. m., the two women prepared to go away. Mohammad Yusuf asked his mother-in-law not to take his wife away and received abuse in reply which abuse was echoed by his wife. Thereupon Mohammad Yusuf struck both the women with a dang knocking them down and then proceeded to use a knife on them.

This statement of the prosecution case is to be found in a confession made by Mohammad Yusuf to Abdul Ali, Magistrate at about noon on 17th March 1929. It should be noted, however, that in this confession no mention is made of the use of a knife. All that Mohammad Yusuf then stated was that he dealt blows to the women with a dang causing their death. He concluded by saying:—

"I do not know how many blows I dealt at each of them as I was in a fury of rage."

The medical evidence clearly shows that the immediate cause of death in the case of Fatteh Begam was the cutting of her throat, and in that of Akbar Jan the cutting of the blood vessels of the neck.

The learned Sessions Judge has found that the confession was duly recorded. After a careful consideration of the circumstances under which it was recorded he says:

"There was, of course, no legal flaw in the recording of the confession. The formalities of the law were duly observed. There is no evidence that the confession of the accused was the result of any inducement, as alleged by the accused in his statement. But all the same, beyond the retracted confession of the accused, there is absolutely nothing on record to connect him with these murders."

Later on he says:

"Thus though there are no circumstances established which should vitiate the confession, there are no circumstances which would lend support to the confession so as to justify a conviction on such a confession."

Now, according to Subedar Allah Ditta, Mohammad Yusuf came to him, at about 11-30 p. m. on the night of 6th March and woke him. The witness asked him what he wanted at that hour of the night and Mohammad Yusuf told him that he had murdered his wife and his mother-in-law and wanted the Subedar to accompany him to the spot. Allah Ditta went to the family quarters of the respondent taking Havaldar Sohaj Khan with him. At the same time he sent a sepoy to inform Subedar-Major Lal Singh. On arriving at Mohammad Yusuf's quarters the witness noticed a lot of blood in the verandah which had apparently flowed out of the inner room where the dead bodies were lying. He also noticed a knife lying on the ground and a khunda. Subedar-Major Lal Singh appeared on the scene and asked the witness why he had been sent for, whereupon he was told that Mohammad Yusuf had reported having murdered his wife and mother-in-law. The Subedar-Major ordered the doctor and Jamadar Jagat Singh to be sent for, took steps to have the corpses guarded and sent Mohammad Yusaf to the quarter guard, information also being sent to the Adjutant.

This story is borne out in all particulars by Subedar-Major Lal Singh (P. W. 10.). The Adjutant, Captain Wilcock, was put in as a witness and stated that, about 23-45 hours he received information of this occurrence from Havaladar Sahib Dad while he was at the mess. He went to the spot and found Subedar-Major Lal Singh and Subedar Allah Ditta there already. Mohammad Yusaf was not there. He did not go inside the house and therefore did not see the dead bodies. He was informed of the confession made by the respondent and ultimately reported the matter at the police station by letter. This letter has been placed on the record and is to the following effect—

"At Jhelum, on the evening of 6th March 1921, I received the report that S-poy Mohammad Yusaf of D. Company (orderly of Lieutenant S. J. White) had after a quarrel with his wife and mother-in-law murdered them at 23-45 hours. After changing his clothes, he at once confessed this fact to the Senior Indian Officer of his Company, Subedar Allah Ditta, and to the Subedar Major Lal Singh."

On being questioned as to the details of this letter Captain Wilcock says that he was positive that Subedar Allah Ditta told him that Mohammad Yusaf had confessed. He was not positive whether Subedar-Major Lal Singh said the same thing but he believed that to be the case.

As already stated the police arrived on the scene and took up the investigation taking the respondent into custody, and the next day placed him before a Magistrate when his confession was duly recorded.

Before the Committing Magistrate the confession was retracted, and the respondent's story was that he was living quite happily with his wife and mother-in-law in the lines, that his wife was absolutely chaste and that there was no quarrel between them, that he had left them alive in his quarters when he went and on his return found them dead. He admitted having gone to Subedar Allah Ditta, but denied having made over a knife to him, or produced any clothes or khunda before the police. He also denied having made any confession to Subedar-Major Lal Singh and stated that the statement made by him to the Magistrate on 7th March had been made on the inducement of the Sub-Inspector that he would be let off. Finally, he said that Subedar Allah Ditta was responsible for the fabrication of this case against him because he was his enemy. To this statement he adhered at the trial adding that the relations between himself and his wife were cordial, that he had recently gifted his land to her an act which enraged his reversioners.

He produced three witnesses in his defence. The first one Lance Naik Fazal Ilahi merely says that in his presence and hearing the respondent made no statement to his officers. D. W. 3, Lal Khan says that he was the orderly of Subedar Allah Ditta, that Mohammad Yusaf had come to him on the night of the occurrence and told him that some one had killed his wife and mother-in-law and that Allah Ditta should be informed. Without waiting, however, for the orderly to arouse Allah Ditta, Mohammad Yusaf himself went and called him. Thereupon Lal Khan went to sleep and took no further interest in the proceedings. D. W. 2, Allah Dad, a shop-keeper in the Regiment, stated that Mohammad Yusaf came to him at 10 p. m. on the night of the occurrence and asked for some milk saying that he had been reading the Holy Quran which delayed him. This milk he took away, but a few minutes later he returned and gave back the milk saying that he did not require the milk, and his wife and mother-in-law had been murdered and that he was going to report the matter to Subedar Allah Ditta.

It is obvious that the evidence produced by the respondent is of no assistance whatever in the matter, and the case rests entirely on the evidence for the prosecution. It seems to me that the learned Sessions Judge is wrong when he says that the only evidence against the respondent consists of his retracted confession. Firstly, there is the circumstance that he was alone with his wife and mother-in-law in the quarters at night. Secondly, there is the fact that the two women were undoubtedly struck with the khunda produced and had their throats cut with the knife. Thirdly, it seems very clear that the women were not killed by anybody coming into the lines from outside. There are no indications whatever of the presence of any outsiders, and it is further clear that no alarm or outcry was raised. Had anybody come from outside and committed the murders the khunda and knife, which undoubtedly had been used, would not have been left behind, seeing that the assassin or assassins had not been disturbed in any way. Then fourthly, there is the undoubted fact that Mohammad Yusuf went and reported the matter to Subedar Allah Ditta. The only cause for enmity that has been suggested is that Allah Ditta admits in cross-examination that he wanted to get his son married to the daughter of Sardar Khan, brother-in-law of Mohammad Yusuf, but Mohammad Yusuf objected. He says that the relations between him and Mohammad Yusuf were not strained on this account. Allah Ditta has consistently stated that Mohammad Yusuf told him that he had killed his wife and mother-in-law.

Next fifthly, there is the statement made to Subedar-Major Lal Singh. This witness undoubtedly is entirely disinterested and has sworn that Mohammad Yusuf confessed to him that he had killed his wife and mother-in-law. The learned Sessions Judge appears to have doubted the correctness of the statement because he says that, when this confession was made to him, Subedar Allah Ditta was present but that Allah Ditta denied the fact at the trial. It is perfectly clear that Allah Ditta did his best at the trial to assist the respondent as far as he possibly could. Subedar-Major Lal Singh's evidence appears to be perfectly straightforward and I have no doubt whatever that he is speaking the truth when he states that the respondent admitted to him that he had killed his wife and mother-in-law.

Sixthly, there is the fact that Mohammad Yusuf was placed in the quarter guard. Had he made no admission of guilt, there is no reason whatever why he should have been taken into custody.

Seventhly, there is the production of the bloodstained clothes which he had taken off before he went to Subedar Allah Ditta.

Finally, there is the confession made before the Magistrate on 7th March. It is true that he had in police custody been for a few hours, but that by itself is no reason to create any doubt as to the genuineness of the confession. The Sub-Inspector was not put any questions in regard to any inducement offered by him and having regard to the fact the respondent had already admitted his guilt to his superior officers the probability of the Sub-Inspector having offered any inducement to the respondent to repeat his confession is to my mind too remote to create any suspicion. Indeed, it seems to me that the very fact that Mohammad Yusuf in his confession to the Magistrate omitted all references to the knife, which was undoubtedly used, is a strong indication that the confession was entirely a voluntary one and made without any inducement or tutoring whatever.

It has been shown that the respondent had recently gifted his land to his wife. This fact, when taken into consideration in the light of his confession really strengthens the case for the Crown. It would seem that the respondent was doing all he could to induce his wife to live with him amicably and had gone so far as to gift his land to her just before the occurrence.

In my judgment the opinion of the two assessors, Dhera Shah and Raja Waliyat Khan, was correct, and Mohammad Yusuf is undoubtedly responsible for the death of his wife and mother-in-law.

I would, therefore, accept this appeal and convict Mohammad Yusuf of the murder of these two women.

There remains the question of sentence. The only account of what occurred that night is that given by Mohammad Yusuf himself. It is his admission of guilt contained in that account that forms the basis of his conviction and I consider that his statement should be accepted in its entirety. It would, therefore, appear that Mt. Akbar Jan was a woman of unstable character and that she was being encouraged in her behaviour by his mother-in-law. Mohammad Yusuf had apparently done all he could to induce his wife to lead a sober and proper life and as an inducement in that direction, had recently gifted his land to her. When, therefore, in spite of all his efforts and the final sacrifice of his land, his mother-in-law, probably after a quarrel, informed him that she was taking her daughter away with her, it is perhaps not surprising that Mohammad Yusaf became enraged and in his rage lost complete control of himself and caused the death of these two women. That he did lose complete control of himself is to my mind evidenced very strongly by the fact that in his confession on 7th March, he stated that he had dealt blows with his dang to both the women but did not know how many blows he inflicted on each owing to the rage in which he was. Indeed, it seems to me that the omission to mention the knife was not deliberate but was due to the fact that, having lost all control of himself, Mohammad Yusaf did not really know what he actually had done. In these circumstances I do not consider it necessary to pass a sentence of death, and would therefore, sentence him to transportation for life.

Criminal Case No. 1631 of 1929, Decided on 3rd January 1930.

Criminal P. C., S. 345 (2)—Duty of granting permission to compromise is upon trying Magistrate and cannot be assigned to District Magistrate or Police.

According to law the Magistrate trying the case has to exercise his own discretion as to whether a compromise is to be allowed or not in a challan case. He is wrong when he refers the case to the District Magistrate. The duty of granting the permission is cast by the legislature upon the Magistrate trying the case and that duty cannot be assigned either to District Magistrate or to the Police. [P 304 C 2]

Mukund Lal Puri—for Petitioners.

Report.—In a case under S. 325, I. P. C., pending in the Court of the Tehsildar of Garhshankar, a compromise was arrived at between the parties. Two petitions were presented to the Court, one for obtaining the permission of the Court as required by law and the other containing a statement as to the compromise. The Court recorded the statements of the parties and referred the application for permission to compromise to the District Magistrate with a recommendation that the permission sought for might be allowed. The learned District Magistrate sent the case to the Public Prosecutor with the following note :

"As the case is a challan, it is apparently for the Public Prosecutor to say whether he wishes to withdraw the prosecution or whether he does not."

The learned Public Prosecutor suggested that the case might be referred to the Superintendent of Police for his opinion as to whether he had any objection to the compromise. The learned District Magistrate then ordered that the case must go on unless the Superintendent of Police chose to withdraw it. The accused have now come up to this Court on the revision side.

According to law, the Magistrate trying the case has to exercise his own discretion as to whether a compromise is to be allowed or not. He was, quite wrong in referring the case to the District Magistrate. The order passed by the learned District Magistrate is clearly ultra vires. I submit the record to the High Court and recommend that the order may be set aside and the trying Magistrate left to exercise his own discretion in the matter.

Order.—The trial Magistrate was clearly of the opinion that the case under S. 325, I. P. C., should be compounded, but he was entirely wrong in referring the matter to the District Magistrate. S. 345, Sub-S. (2), Criminal P. C., lays down that an offence under S. 325, I. P. C., may, with the permission of the Court before which a prosecution for the offence is pending, be compounded by the person to whom hurt is caused. It is clear that the duty of granting the permission is cast by the legislature upon the Magistrate trying the case, and that duty cannot be assigned either to the District Magistrate or to the Police. In view of the opinion expressed by the trial Magistrate in favour of the compounding of the offence I proceed under S. 345, sub-S. 5-A, Criminal P. C., and allow the parties to compound the offence.

The result of the composition of the offence is that the accused are acquitted.

Criminal Appeal Decided on 29th July 1929.

Criminal P. C., S. 393 read with Burma Act (8 of 1927)—Sentence in different cases collectively exceeding period fixed—Person cannot be punished with whipping.

The word "sentenced" which occurs in S. 393, Criminal P. C., and in the Burma Act 8 of 1927, must be read in a general sense, and, if a person is sentenced for any period exceeding the period fixed by the Act whether in conviction in one case or more than one, he cannot be punished with whipping: 1 Mad. 56 Ref. [P 305 C 2]

Tun Byu—for the Crown.

Judgment.—The accused in this case was properly identified by Ma Sein Pu and his guilt has been established.

The case was admitted because a sentence of whipping was passed in addition to the seven years' rigorous imprisonment passed on the accused. In a previous case, Criminal Regular No. 140 of 1929 in the Court of the same Magistrate the accused was sentenced to four years' rigorous imprisonment, and the sentence of seven years passed on him was directed to run after the expiry of the sentence in the previous case.

The question arises whether a sentence of whipping is legal. Under S. 393, Criminal P. C. no male sentenced to death or to transportation or to penal servitude or to imprisonment for more than five years could be punished with whipping. This has been altered by the Burma Act 8 of 1927 and the term of five has been extended to seven years. The question for decision is whether a person, who is sentenced in two different cases to punishments which collectively exceed the term of seven years, could be punished with whipping. In a Madras case Re Proceedings of the High Court (1876) (1) it has been held that a person, who has been punished with the classes of punishment specified in S. 393, Criminal P. C. but in a different case and for a different offence, could not be punished with whipping in a subsequent case in which he has been convicted. It seems to me, therefore, that the word "sentenced" which occurs in S. 393, Criminal P. C., and in the Burma Act 8 of 1927, must be read in a general sense, and, if a person is sentenced for any period exceeding the period fixed by the Act whether in conviction in one case or more than one, he cannot be punished with whipping. The order of whipping in this case is illegal and therefore set aside.

The explanation offered by the District Magistrate is accepted. The trial Magistrate's explanation is also accepted, as the question is not free from doubt and the section of the Burma Act is undoubtedly capable of the construction which the learned Magistrate put on it.

Criminal Appeal No. 28 of 1929, Decided on 7th August 1929, from an order of Sess. Judge, Hoshangabad, D/- 16th February 1929.

(a) Evidence Act, Ss. 133 and 114, Illus. (b)—(Per Subhedar, A. J. C.)—Scope—Rule in S. 114, Illus. (b) has almost acquired force of law by judicial decisions—(Jackson, A. J. C.) doubting.

Per Subhedar, A. J. C.—The rule in S. 114, Illus. (b), that an accomplice is unworthy of credit unless he is corroborated in material particulars has become a rule of practice of so universal application that it has now almost acquired the force of law. [P 307 Q 1]

Per Jackson, A. J. C.—S. 133 cannot be entirely nullified by judicial decisions and there may be cases in which the rule in S. 114, Illus. (b), should not be applied. The question arising in every case where the uncorroborated evidence of the accomplice has to be considered is whether it can be believed or not. Further when the evidence is strengthened by corroboration of other facts of the story by evidence of several accomplices or by confessions of co-accused, the question whether the maxim should still apply must receive careful consideration. A. I. R. 1921 Nag. 29, Rel. on. [P 315 Q]

(Per Subhedar and Jackson, A. J. C's.)—where there are several accused, approver's story should be corroborated as regards particular accused and must be confirmed on some point which implicates that particular accused—(Staples, A. J. C., contra.)

Per Staples, A. J. C.—It is true that an approver's story should be corroborated not only as regards the facts of the case but also as to gards the identity of the accused, but where there are several accused and the story of the approver has been confirmed on many points, and as regards the identity of several of the accused, it should not be considered necessary that his story should be corroborated as regards the identity of the remaining accused unless there are reasons for believing that the approver has named those other accused on account of personal spite or for some other reason. The real test of the evidence of the approver is whether it has been believed or not and when it has been corroborated on many points and has not been shown to be false in any particular it should be accepted; and when once it has been accepted as a whole corroboration as regards the identity of each of several accused should not be demanded: A. I. R. 1921 Nag. 3; 9 All. 528, Expl.; Reg. v. Baskerville, (1916) 2 K.B. 658, Dist. [P 312 C 1, 2]

(Per Jackson and Subhedar, A. J. Cs.)—Even where there are several accused persons, an approver's story to be corroborated as regards a particular accused must be corroborated on some point which implicates that accused. It is not necessary that it should be corroborated on all points relating to him, but there must be some guarantee that his evidence is true as regards that particular accused: A. I. R. 1921 Nag. 39, Rel. on; 14 Bom. 331; A. I. R. 1922 Nag. 172; A. I. R. 1925 Nag. 78, Appl. [P 315 C 1]

(c) Evidence Act, S. 30—(Per Subhedar, A. J. C.)—Confession of co-accused cannot be used to corroborate evidence of approver—(Staples, A. J. C., contra.)

(Per Subhedar, A. J. C.)—Confessional statements of accused cannot be used in corroboration of the evidence of the approver inasmuch as tainted evidence is not made better by being corroborated by other tainted evidence. [P 309 C 1]

(Per Staples, A. J. C.)—Confessions of co-accused must be taken into consideration and cannot be brushed aside merely as tainted evidence: A. I. R. 1921 Nag. 39, Rel. on. [P 313 C 1]

(d) Evidence Act, S. 133—Corroboration may be circumstantial.

Opinion

Subhedar, A. J. C.—The following nine persons were tried by the Sessions Judge, Hoshangabad, for two separate offences under Ss. 302 and 395, I. P. C.: (1) Daulat, son of Jairam Bhoir, (2) Hiraji, son of Sakia Bhoir, (3) Lehram, son of Sakia Bhoir, (4) Lehram, son of Gangu Bhoir, (5) Bajya, son of Sukhya Bhoir, (6) Keoli, son of Ganesh Bhoir, (7) Ganpat, son of Jairam Bhoir, (8) Patiram, son of Karti Mehra, (9) Bhemia, son of Bhogaji Mehra. Of these accused, 1, 2, 3 and 6 were convicted and sentenced to death for the offence of murder and to transportation for life for dacoity and the rest were acquitted. The convicted persons have preferred appeals which are registered in this Court as Criminal Appeals Nos. 28, 29, 30 and 31 of 1929. There are also references by the Sessions Judge for confirmation of the sentences of death passed upon the appellants and these are registered as Criminal References Nos. 6, 7, 8 and 9 of 1929. The Local Government has also preferred appeals against the acquittal of accused 4, 5, 7 and 8 and these are registered as Criminal Appeals Nos. 51, 52, 53 and 54 of 1929. As the two sets of appeals and the references are connected, this judgment will govern the disposal of all the cases.

The case for the prosecution was that in pursuance of a conspiracy all the nine accused and one Tukaram (P. W. 2), who turned an approver, entered the house of one Shiamrao Sonar, a malguzar and money lender of mouza Siladehi, in the Multai Tahsil, Betul District, on the night of 11th October 1928, and while the unfortunate man was fast asleep accused 1 and 2 did him to death by striking him with an axe while the other accused and the approver watched this atrocious crime being committed in their presence, and that after the murder all the accused rifled the safe of the deceased and robbed him of its contents and also took away other articles from the house valued at about Rs. 2,000. The case rests almost entirely upon the evidence of the approver Tukaram (P. W. 2) whose testimony has been believed in by the learned Sessions Judge as it was sufficiently corroborated by the recovery of some of the stolen articles at the instance of some of the accused. At the hearing of the appeals in this Court Mr. R. N. Padhye represented accused 1 Daulat, Mr. Razak appeared for accused 2 and 3, Hiraji and Lehram, while Mr. Pathak appeared for accused 6 Keoli. In the Government appeals Mr. Fida Husain appeared for all the four accused 4, 5, 7 and 8, who had been acquitted in the lower Court.

The main argument advanced on behalf of all the accused was that the evidence of the approver Tukaram (P. W. 2) should be discarded because he was on inimical terms with some of the accused and because his testimony was not corroborated in material particulars by any independent, reliable and legal evidence. It was also argued that the statements of some of the accused, e.g., Bajya, Ganpat and Patiram (Nos. 5, 7 and 8) amounting to confessions could not legally be used against the other accused as evidence either by themselves or in corroboration of the testimony of the approver. It was further contended that on the finding of the Sessions Judge and on the evidence on record the convictions under S. 395, I. P. C., were not correct.

With regard to the first contention it is undoubtedly correct to say that under S. 133, Evidence Act, an accomplice is a competent witness against an accused person and a conviction is not illegal merely because it proceeds upon the uncorroborated testimony of an accomplice: Govinda v. Emperor (1); but by a series of judicial decisions the rule as to the necessity of substantial corroboration of this sort of tainted evidence embodied in S. 114, Illus. (b) ibid, has become a rule of practice of so universal application that it has now almost acquired the force of law. As observed by Jardine, J., in Queen-Empress v. Chagan Dayaram (2) at p. 344 :

"The rule in S. 114 and that in S. 133 are part of one subject, and both are found in most of the great judgments mentioned in our judgments in that case ; and neither section is to be ignored in the exercise of judicial discretion. Illus. (b) is, however, the rule, and when it is departed from, I think the Court should show or that it should appear, that the circumstances justify the exceptional treatment of the case. As I said in Queen-Empress v. Maganlal (3) at p. 138, 'it has been held by two eminent Judges, now members of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, that it would certainly be unsafe to depart in India from the established practice of England in the application of the rule requiring corroboration. These are the words of Couch, C. J., in Reg v. Imam (4), and they pervade Sir Barnes Peacock's decision in Elahee Bukhsh, In re (5).' It is not enough for a Court to state the rule pro forma and merely as a reason to evade it the Courts must act up to it."

It is next to be considered what sort of corroboration is necessary to make the approver's evidence worthy of credit. The fullest and the most authoritative exposition of the law on the subject in question is to be found in Rex v. Baskerville (6) in which the judgment of the Court of appeal consisting of five eminent Judges was delivered by Lord Reading, L. C. J., wherein the law was laid down in these words :

"There is no doubt that the uncorroborated evidence of an accomplice is admissible in law: see R. v. Atwood (7). But it has long been a rule of practice at common law for the Judge to warn the jury of the danger of convicting a prisoner on the uncorroborated testimony of an accomplice or accomplices, and, in the discretion of the Judge, to advise them not to convict upon such evidence ; but the Judge should point out to the jury that it is within their legal province to convict upon such unconfirmed evidence : R. v. Stubbs (8); Meunier, In re (9). 'As the rule of practice at common law was founded originally upon the exercise of the discretion of the Judge at the trial, and moreover, as it is anomalous in its nature, inasmuch as it requires confirmation of the testimony of a competent witness, it is not surprising that this rule should have led to differences of opinion as to the nature and extent of the corroboration required, although there are propositions of law applicable to corroboration which are beyond controversy. For example, "confirmation does not mean that there should be independent evidence of that which the accomplice relates, or his testimony would be unnecessary": Reg. v. Mullins (10), per Maule, J. Indeed, if it were required that the accomplice should be confirmed in every detail of the crime his evidence would not be essential to the case; it would be merely confirmatory of other and independent testimony. Again, the corroboration must be by some evidence other than that of an accomplice, and, therefore, one accomplice's evidence is not corroboration of the testimony of another accomplice: R. v. Nookes (11):

"After examining these and other authorities to the present date, we have come to the conclusion that the better opinion of the law upon this point is that stated in R. v. Stubbs (8) by Parke, B., namely, that the evidence of an accomplice must be confirmed not only as to the circumstances of the crime, but also as to the identity of the prisoner. The learned Baron does not mean that there must be confirmation of all the circumstances of the crime; as we have already stated, that is unnecessary. It is sufficient if there is confirmation, as to a material circumstance of the crime and of the identity of the accused in relation to the crime. Parke, B., gave this opinion as a result of twenty-five years' practice; it was accepted by the other Judges, and has been much relied upon in later cases. In R. v. Wilkes (12) Alderson, B., said: "The confirmation which I always advise juries to require, is a confirmation of the accomplice in some fact which goes to fix the guilt on the particular person charged. You may legally convict on the evidence of an accomplice only, if you can safely rely on his testimony; but I advise juries never to act on the evidence of an accomplice, unless he is confirmed as to the particular person who is charged with the offence."

"We hold that evidence in corroboration must be independent testimony which affects the accused by connecting or tending to connect the accused with the crime. In other words, it must be evidence which implicates him, that is, which confirms in some material particular not only the evidence that the crime has been committed, but also that the prisoner committed it. The test applicable to determine the nature and extent of the corroboration is thus the same whether the case falls within the rule of practice at common law or within that class of offences for which corroboration is required by statute The nature of the corroboration will necessarily vary according to the particular circumstances of the offence charged. It would be in high degree dangerous to attempt to formulate the kind of evidence which would be regarded as corroboration, except to say that corroborative evidence is evidence which shows or tends to show that the story of the accomplice that the accused committed the crime is true, not merely that the crime has been committed, but that it was committed by the accused."

"The corroboration need not be direct evidence that the accused committed the crime; it is sufficient if it is merely circumstantial evidence of his connexion with the crime."

The tests laid down in the above case were applied with approval by Kotval, A. J. C. in Kisan Raghuj v. Emperor (13). In Sheroo v. Emperor (14) Kotval, A. J. C. and Kinkhede, A. J. C., also held that before a conviction is based on the statement of an approver the first and foremost essential condition is that the statement must be a trustworthy statement and there must be ample corroboration of the evidence of the accomplice in material particulars which must be independent of the accomplice or of a co-confessing prisoner.

Applying the principles laid down in the above paragraphs to the present case it appears to me to be unsafe to rely solely on the testimony of the approver Tukaram (P. W. 2) and not to raise the presumption against his evidence under S. 114 (b), Evidence Act. The murder was committed on 11th October 1928, and Tukaram was not arrested till 18th October 1928, and he remained in police custody till 3rd November 1928, when he was remanded with some of the other accused to jail custody. On 12th November 1928, the police again took this man under their care along with some of the accused evidently for the purpose of having his confession recorded, but it was not till 5th December 1928, when the challan was presented that Tukaram made his statement (Ex. P-29), was tendered pardon, made an approver and was at once examined as P. W. 2.

It will, therefore, be seen that in spite of the fact that he was taken out of the jail custody by the police for the express purpose of having his confession formally recorded, Tukaram apparently did not consent to make a confession before a Magistrate, like accused Ganpat (No. 7) and accused Patiram (No. 8) whose confessions (Exs. P-27 and P-28) were recorded by Mr. Mohanlal, Sub-Divisional Magistrate on 25th and 29th November 1928, respectively. It may also be noted that one Tudari, Bhomia and Keoli accused were also put up before the same Magistrate for making confession but they did not make any but complained of ill-treatment at the hands of the police: see Exs. P-9 D and 6 D-1. There is also evidence on the record that the approver Tukaram is on inimical terms with accused Daulat and the brothers Hiraji and Lehram. Unless, therefore, the evidence of Tukaram is corroborated in material particulars by independent evidence and connects individual accused with the crime, I will not consider it trustworthy. In the course of arguments it was not denied that Shiamrao was murdered on the night of 11th October 1928. I will, therefore, proceed to examine the case of each individual accused in order to determine if the evidence on record is sufficient in his case for a conviction for the substantive offence of this murder under S. 302, I. P. C.

Daulat, accused 1.—There is ample reliable evidence of P. W. 12, P. W. 18 and P. W. 19 that this accused was on the most inimical terms with the deceased Shiamrao. The accused himself admits that there were decrees obtained by Shiamrao against him and that in resisting execution of one of these he was convicted under S. 183, I. P. C. The approver Tukaram states that this accused took the most leading part in starting the conspiracy to commit the murder and actually gave four blows to the deceased with an axe which caused his death. An axe head Art. H-3 was also recovered from a well on information supplied by this accused. Similarly Art. T-2 a piece of the broken kardora proved to have been worn by the murdered man on the night of the murder and wrenched from his body was also recovered from a field at the instance of this accused. This portion of the kardora is a part of the other portion Art. V-2 which was seized from Shiamrao's house. In his explanation this accused merely stated that the Kardora (Art. T-2) belonged to him but he has failed to account for its possession and for the necessity of burying it underground. I therefore, hold that the evidence of the approver has been sufficiently corroborated by other independent evidence noted above in the case of this accused to connect him with the murder. Looking to the prominent part that he took in the crime the sentence of death passed against this accused by the Sessions Judge was the most appropriate one and is hereby confirmed.

Hiraji and Lehram accused 2 and 3. — These two accused are real brothers. The approver Tukaram states that these accused were also in the conspiracy to murder Shiamrao, and that both of them were present inside the room where Shiamrao was murdered. There is no independent evidence on the record to substantiate this part of the approver's evidence which attempts to connect these men with the crime. No property belonging to the deceased was recovered from them or at their instance. On the principle of law already enunciated above the confessional statements of Ganpat and Patiram (accused 7 and 8) cannot be used against these accused either independently or in corroboration of the evidence of the approver for as remarked at p. 923 of Amir Ali's Law of Evidence, 8th Edition:

"Tainted evidence is not made better by being corroborated by other tainted evidence."

I would therefore, set aside the convictions of these accused and acquit them.

Lehram accused 4. — This is one of the accused who has been acquitted by the Sessions Judge and against whom the Government has filed an appeal. According to the approver Tukaram this accused was one of the four who did not enter the room but remained in the angan when the murder was committed. As in the case of accused 2 and 3 there is also no independent evidence beyond that of the approver and the confessional statements of accused 7 and 8 against this accused. For the reasons already given in the case of accused 2 and 3, I also hold, though for reasons different from those given by the learned Sessions Judge, that this accused is not guilty of the offence charged against him. I would, therefore, uphold his acquittal and dismiss the Government appeal against him.

Bajya accused 5. — This accused in his statement before the Committing Magistrate as well as before the Sessions Judge has confessed to his having been a party to the conspiracy engineered by accused 1 to kill Shiamrao and also to his having accompanied the other conspirators to the scene of murder and to the part taken by himself as deposed to by the approver Tukaram. But he also stated that he joined the conspiracy because of the threat of death administered to him by accused 1. In the first place even assuming the story of this accused as regards compulsion to be true which, however, is not the case because there is no evidence to support it, his case does not come within the purview of S. 94, I. P. C., which declares that nothing is an offence which is done by a person under circumstances of compulsion specified therein. The very opening words of the section exclude "murder" from its operation. Disagreeing with the learned Sessions Judge I set aside the acquittal of this accused and convict him of murder. As he was a mere hireling on his own admission and took no important part in the actual murder, I sentence him to transportation for life.

Keoli accused 6. — The evidence of the approver Tukaram finds ample corroboration in the statement made by this accused before the Committing Magistrate (Ex. p. 37) although he retracted the same before the Court of Sessions. Tukaram the approver and Guru (P. W. 18) prove that about a month and a half before the murder the deceased Shiamrao did not agree to take the large amount of debt due by the father of this accused by easy instalments. It is also proved that Arts. O-2, P-2 and Q-2 belonging to the deceased were found tied up in Art. N-2 a piece of angobha belonging to this accused. Art. W-2 a portion of Art. N-2 was also dug out from a portion of the field by this accused. All this evidence is sufficient to hold this accused guilty of the offence of murder and I accordingly uphold his conviction. This accused also took a very leading part in the crime and he gave a blow with an axe on the buttock of the deceased apparently out of sheer spite because the fatal blows were already given by accused 1. It was at his suggestion that after having come out of the house after committing the murder that the whole gang went back into the house and committed theft. Under these circumstances this accused was rightly sentenced to death and I confirm the said sentence.

Ganpat accused 7.—Besides his confession (Ex. p. 27) there are his own statements both in the committing Magistrate's Court and the Sessions Court that he agreed to join in the conspiracy to kill Shiamrao at the instance of Keoli accused for a consideration of Rs. 100., that he did go to the place in pursuance of the conspiracy and was one of those who took their stand in the angan. The approver Tukaram also does not assign to this accused any other part in the affair than what is already admitted by him. Disagreeing with the Sessions Judge I set aside his acquittal and convict this accused of murder and sentence him to transportation for life.

Patiram accused 8.—The case of this accused is exactly like that of Ganpat accused 7 with the only difference that in his statement before the Sessions Judge he pleads compulsion. For the reasons given in the case of Bajya, accused 5, the plea of compulsion even if proved cannot be availed of by this accused. I accordingly convict him of murder and sentence him to transportation for life as he was merely a hireling and took no active part in the murder.

A very ingenious argument was advanced by Mr. Fida Husain to the effect that in the case of three of his clients no common intention to murder Shiamrao was established, because the evidence of the approver and their own admissions went to show that they had only agreed to accompany the principal conspirators to the scene merely to stand as spectators without any part being assigned to them in the carrying out of the proposed murder. This argument requires no very serious consideration. An effective reply to it is to be found by holding these accused guilty under S. 114, I. P. C., read with S. 302 ibid, for it was not disputed that their admitted participation in the affair brought them within the four corners of the definition of abettors within the meaning of S. 107 ibid. They could also be held guilty under S. 34 read with S. 302, I. P. C. Barendra Kumar Ghose v. Emperor (15).

This disposes of all the cases so far as the offence of murder under S. 302, I. P. C., is concerned. As to the offence of dacoity under S. 395, I. P. C., I hold that on the evidence on record which I will discuss later on and on the findings of the learned Sessions Judge this offence has not been established.

In para. 8 of his judgment the Sessions Judge states as follows :

"This is not a case in which murder was committed in progress of or in pursuance of the commission of dacoity as for instance for effecting a safe retreat. What the approver has stated is that the intention was that Shiamrao should be murdered that the accused persons left the house after that purpose was accomplished and that they came back to the room to commit dacoity partly because Keoli wanted to remove the bond on which he was liable to pay a debt and partly because it was believed that the crime would be supposed to be the work not of any of the villagers but of those who did not belong to the village. It may be noted here that Keoli in his statement before the Committing Magistrate, has stated that Shiamrao was not attacked while he was on his way to the ghana because it was apprehended that he might manage to escape."

This conclusion of the learned Sessions Judge is perfectly warranted by the evidence on record and the proved circumstances of the case. The very fact that the prosecution was started for two separate offences of murder (S. 302, I. P. C., and dacoity (S. 395, I. P. C.), and not under S. 396, I. P. C., itself indicates that murder was absolutely unconnected with the theft committed by the murderers after commission of the murder. The learned Government Advocate relied on the following passage appearing at p. 37 of the record in the cross-examination of the approver Tukaram to show that the original conspiracy was to commit dacoity as well and that the conviction under S. 395, I. P. C., was therefore, warranted :

"On Friday Daulat said that he would kill Shiamrao. He said that he would kill also Shiamrao's wife, child and even servants. Some of us then said that to that extent we must not go and that only Shiamrao should be killed and his property should be looted. None of these that were present said that he would not kill Shiamrao."

It will be seen that the statement in the above quotation is very vague and indefinite because it does not say that all the conspirators agreed to the suggestion of murder and loot. The above statement is also not corroborated by any other evidence on the record. Moreover just a little later after the aforesaid statement was made the approver also stated as follows :

"It was when the police said after the murder that he has joined in order to take possession of the bond that I came to know that he had joined for that purpose."

The fact that after the murder was committed all the conspirators came out of the house with the idea of dispersing but re-entered the house at the suggestion of Keoli accused to commit theft and thus create evidence that the crime was committed by people living outside the village itself shows that dacoity was not thought of at all by the conspirators in the first instance and that their sole object was only to murder Shiamrao. If it were otherwise it has not been explained why they did not set about ransacking the safe and other contents of the house soon after Shiamrao had been killed. There is no suggestion that they had to leave the room and the house because the inmates of the house had been aroused from sleep and had pursued them.

Under S. 390, I. P. C., theft is "robbery" if in order to the committing of the theft, or in carrying away property obtained by the theft, the offender for that end voluntarily causes or attempts to cause to any person death or hurt etc. Under S. 391, I. P. C., when five or more persons commit robbery it becomes dacoity. The essence of the offence is the inflicting of hurt in order to the committing of the ft. Hurt in the event of theft does not amount to robbery. On the evidence in the present case Shiamrao was already killed before the persons responsible for his murder re-entered the house and rifled it of some of its contents on the suggestion of Keoli accused with a definite end in view. Disagreeing then with the Sessions Judge I hold that the offence of dacoity under S. 395, I. P. C., has not been proved in this case, but that those who took part in the theft are liable to be convicted only under S. 379, I. P. C. On the evidence on record I find all the accused whom I have held guilty under S. 302, I. P. C., also guilty under S. 379, I. P. C., and I sentence each of them to rigorous imprisonment for one year, the sentences in each case to run concurrently.

The net result of the decision is as under :

For the net result see statement at p. 312.

The accused Nos. 4, 5, 7 and 8, who had appeared personally at the hearing of the appeals in this Court, have been bound over to appear before the District Magistrate, Betul to hear the result. When they so appear Nos. 5, 7 and 8 will surrender themselves and undergo the sentence passed against them.

Staples, A. J. C.—I have read the opinion of Subhedar, A. J. C., with whom I heard these appeals, and, while agreeing with him that the conviction of Daulat and Keoli under S. 302, I. P. C., should be maintained and the sentences of death confirmed, that the appeals preferred by the Local Government as regards Bajya, Ganpat and Patiram should be allowed and that the acquittals of these persons by the Sessions Judge should be set aside and they should be convicted under S. 302, I. P. C., and sentenced to transportation for life. I would disagree with his view that the convictions of Hiraji and Lehram son of Sakia should be set aside and am of opinion that the conviction of these two appellants also under S. 302 should be maintained. I am further of opinion that the appeal of the Local Government as regards Lehram son of Gangu should also be allowed and his acquittal should be set aside and he too should be convicted under S. 302, I. P. C. As regards the question of the conviction under S. 395, I. P. C., I would agree with the opinion expressed by Subhedar, A. J. C., that the conviction should be under S. 379, I. P. C., only.

As regards the three persons Hiraji, Lehram son of Sakia and Lehram son of Gangu, Subhedar, A. J. C., following Rex v. Baskerville (6) as interpreted by Kotval, A. J. C., in Kisan Raghuj v. Emperor (13) has held that there has been no corroboration of the approver's story as regards the identity of these persons and that, therefore, they should be acquitted. It is true that in Rex v. Baskerville (6) it has been held that an approver's story should be corroborated not only as regards the facts of the case but also as regards the identity of the accused, but it may be noted that in accused, it should not be considered necessary that his story should be corroborated as regards the identity of the remaining accused unless there are reasons for believing that the approver has named those other accused on account of personal spite or for some other reason.

The rules as regards the corroboration of an approver's testimony should not be interpreted too mechanically, and where there has been a general corroboration of the approver's story the rest of the story should, as a rule, be, I think, accepted unless it can be shown to be false or there are good reasons for disbelieving it. The real test of the evidence of an approver, as indeed of that case there was only one accused and I think it is straining the rule as laid down in that case too far to say, as Kotval, A. J. C., appears to hold in Kisan Raghuj v. Emperor (13) that where there are several accused there must be corroboration of the approver's story as regards each one of them. To hold so would be, I think tantamount to holding that the approver's story must be corroborated in every detail, which view has been expressly dissented from in Reg v. Mullins (10) which has been cited by Kotval, A. J. C., in Kisan Raghuj v. Emperor (13). I am of opinion that where there are several accused and the story of the approver has been confirmed on many points and as regards the identity of several of the

any other evidence, is whether it has been believed or not, and when it has been corroborated on many points and has not been shown to be false in any particular it should, I think, be accepted; and when once it has been accepted as a whole, corroboration as regards the identity of each of several accused should not be demanded. This, I think, is the view which has been taken in Govinda v. Emperor (1) and in Queen Empress v. Gobardhan (16), which has been followed therein. Each case, moreover, must be decided on its own facts, and in the present case I am of opinion that the evidence of the approver Tukaram has been very fully corroborated.

Tukaram has given a very clear and full story of the whole occurrence and his presence at the time of the murder has been corroborated by the evidence Mt. Verubai, the widow of the murdered man, Shiamrao. His evidence is further corroborated, as noted by Subhedar, A. J. C., the confessions of two of the accused and by the recovery of property which has been well-identified. As noted above, his statement has not, I think, been shown to be false in any particular, and the allegations of enmity which have been put forward have not been substantiated or, at any rate, the grounds alleged for enmity seem rather slight. These facts will, I think, completely do away with any suspicion that might attach to Tukaram's evidence on account of the facts noted in paras. 11 and 12 of Subhedar, A. J. C.'s opinion. It would also be borne in mind that Tukaram clearly admits his own presence and complicity in the offence and gives the detail that he was taken there to open the safe adding that he did open the safe which is borne out by the statement of one of the other accused.

Another point, I think, which has to be borne in mind is that the confessing accused Ganpat and Patiram have given a very full and clear account which agrees in practically every detail with the story as told by Tukaram. It is true that such confessions cannot be, strictly speaking, corroboration of the approver's evidence as noted by Subhedar, A. J. C., in para. 15 of his opinion; but on the other hand, those confessions cannot be disregarded altogether and as the accused in making those confessions implicate themselves they may, and, in fact, should, be taken into consideration according to S. 30, Evidence Act. In Govinda v. Emperor (1) confessions of co-accused have been considered as evidence that can strengthen the evidence of an accomplice and I am of opinion that, at any rate, such evidence must be taken into consideration and cannot be brushed aside merely as tainted evidence. In the present case, as noted above, there is a particularly consistent story told both by Tukaram and these two accused Ganpat and Patiram. I would, in particular, note that as regards the two appellants Hiraji and Lehram son of Sakia, they all agree that they were two of the four men who entered the room in which Shiamrao was sleeping, while the remaining accused stood outside. They all agree that it was Daulat who struck Shiamrao with his axe and that Keoli gave one blow later. They all agree that it was Lehram son of Sakia who opened the tatta and again they all agree that it was Keoli who brought the key from Shiamrao's person and gave it to Tukaram who opened the safe. It has not been shown, nor has it even been suggested, that there has been any agreement among these three persons Tukaram, Ganpat and Patiram, to tell a concerted story, and the fact, then that they to tell such a particularly clear and consistent story must, I think, carry great weight. As regards Lehram son of Gangu, Tukaram and both accused Ganpat and Patiram agree that he was in the party and he was one of those who stayed outside, and I see no reason why the evidence should not be believed as regards this accused also.

Then, too, I think, such corroboration may be circumstantial, and Kotval, A. J. C. in Kisan Raghuj v. Emperor (13) has held this at p. 56 (of 6 N. L. J.). Now in the present case from the evidence of Tukaram it appears that Shiamrao had obtained a decree against Hiraji five or six months ago, that in a criminal case against Shiamrao, Hiraji had given evidence against him and that Lehram's (son of Sakia) wife had beaten Shiamrao's son and they were on bad terms. It also appears that in a case filed by a Gond against Shiamrao, Lehram son of Gangu had given evidence against him and that half of Lehram's sister's field had passed to Shiamrao in satisfaction of a debt. There is thus, at any rate, some evidence on record to show that Hiraji and Lehram son of Gangu were on bad terms with Shiamrao, whilst the other Lehram is Hiraji's brother. As regards any motive for Tukaram implicating these persons falsely, there is, I think, as stated above, no sufficient evidence. Hiraji, before the Committing Magistrate, stated on examination that Tukaram was telling lies through enmity, that he had taken a wife from Bidhora and had been fined Rs. 25 by the panchas that there was enmity on that ground and also because he had given evidence against Tukaram's brother on a bond and had also given evidence according to which the house of one Sirju Teli had been released from attachment effected by Tukaram. Lehram son of Sakia stated that Tukaram unnecessarily mentioned his name because he had abused him on being asked to make an admission and quarrels took place at times over a field. Lehram son of Gangu has stated that Tukaram implicated him through enmity because he refused to give false evidence in a case against Tukaram's brother and because he did not depose in favour of Tukaram in another case in which Tukaram had been beaten. He has admitted that that case was some five or six years ago. He has added that he did not prepare a cart for Guru some two years ago and that there was also a quarrel about that. Before the Sessions Judge Hiraji has simply stated on this point that Shiamrao had obtained a decree against him and so they, presumably the prosecution witnesses, spoke against him.

He has added that there was no enmity between him and Shiamrao. Lehram son of Sakia simply stated that Tukaram deposed against him on account of previous enmity, while Lehram son of Gangu stated that Tukaram gave evidence against him because he was tutored by police and on account of previous enmity. No evidence has led in support of their statements but Tukaram has been cross-examined on this point. In cross-examination he stated that Hiraji and his brother Lehram are distant cousins, that they owned separate houses and cultivated land separately. He has admitted that in a criminal case Hiraji gave evidence against Shiamrao and his (Tukaram's) brother Bhaurao about a year ago and that in connexion with the execution of his decree against a Gond Teli Hiraji gave evidence against him and the objection of one Sirju was allowed. He has denied that there was any dispute between him and Hiraji and Lehram about any field or right of way. I can find no statement in Tukaram's cross-examination to bear out the allegation of enmity as regards Lehram son of Gangu, and I am of opinion that the admitted facts as regards Hiraji and his brother Lehram are quite insufficient to show any such enmity as would be likely to cause Tukaram to give false evidence against him on a murder charge. Further, no reason whatever has been shown why the two accused Ganpat and Patiram should wish to make false statements against Hiraji and the two Lehrams, nor has any enmity even been alleged.

I am of opinion, then that, as the case stands, in view of the corroboration of the approver's story on so many points and as regards the identity of several of the accused and in view of the agreement between his story and the confessions made by two accused Ganpat and Patiram. Tukaram's evidence must be accepted as against Hiraji, his brother Lehram and Lehram son of Gangu also. I do not, however, think that the sentence of death as regards Hiraji and Lehram son of Sakia should be confirmed. It is true that it has been shown that these two did enter the room at the time of the murder with Daulat and Keoli, whilst the others remained outside, but it has not been shown that they struck any blow, and I am of opinion that the lesser sentence only of transportation for life should be imposed. As regards Lehram son of Gangu, the approver as well as the confessing accused Ganpat and Patiram all agree that he remained outside and he also should be sentenced to transportation for life. I would agree with the sentence of rigorous imprisonment for one year which has been suggested by Subhedar, A. J. C., for the offence under S. 379, I. P. C., and would add that that sentence should be passed upon Hiraji and the two Lehrams also as well as the other appellants.

On account of difference the case came before another Judge who delivered the following judgment.

Jackson, A. J. C. — Nine persons were tried by the Sessions Judge, Hoshangabad, for the offences punishable under Ss. 302 and 395, I. P. C. Four only were convicted and sentenced to death for the offence of murder and to transportation for life for the offence of dacoity. The Local Government has appealed against the acquittal of four of the accused, and the four convicted have also appealed. As regards two of the accused convicted and one of the persons in respect of whom the Local Government has preferred an appeal the Bench which originally heard the case has differed. Subhedar, A. J. C. is in favour of setting aside the convictions of Hiraji and his brother Lehram, sons of Sakia, and of disallowing the appeal by the Local Government as regards Lehram, son of Gangu. Their cases have consequently been referred to me for decision.

The point taken on behalf of the three persons with whom I am concerned is that the evidence against them is that of an uncorroborated approver Tukaram, and the first question I have to consider is whether there is no corroboration of his evidence. Subhedar, A. J. C., has held that the confessions of two co-accused are no corroboration of Tukaram and that the corroboration that there undoubtedly is of Tukaram's evidence as regards other accused is no corroboration of his evidence as regards the three persons whose cases I am now considering. His opinion is based mainly on the judgment of Lord Reading, L. C. J., in Dex v. Baskerville (6). Staples, A. J. C., would distinguish that case on the ground that there was only one accused person in it but I do not think that the distinction is a sound one. It seems to me that an approver's story, to be corroborated as regards a particular accused, must be corroborated on some point which implicates that accused. It is not necessary that it should be corroborated on all points relating to him, but there must be some guarantee that his evidence is true as regards that particular accused. That is the view that has been taken by a Bench of this Court in Govinda v. Emperor (1) in which the following pronouncement has been made :

"We are in agreement with the view that so long as there is no corroboration by independent evidence regarding a particular accused, the evidence may be termed uncorroborated evidence of accomplices."

I am of opinion that the evidence of Tukaram may be regarded as uncorroborated evidence of an accomplice and may be rejected if the Court thinks fit to apply the rule stated in ill. (b) to S. 114, Evidence Act, that an accomplice is unworthy of credit unless he is corroborated in material particulars. It has been stated by Subhedar, A. J. C., in para. 8 of his opinion that this rule has become a rule of practice of so universal application that it has now almost acquired the force of law. Even so, there may still be cases in which the rule should not be applied. S. 133, Evidence Act, has not been repealed and cannot be entirely nullified by judicial decisions. The question arising in every case where the uncorroborated evidence of an accomplice has to be considered is whether it can be believed or not. In the present case the decision by a Bench of this Court to which I have already referred is directly applicable. Immediately after the words that I have quoted above comes the following sentence :

"but when the evidence is strengthened by corroboration of other parts of the story, by evidence of several accomplices or by confessions of co-accused, the question whether the maxim should still apply must receive careful consideration."

As pointed out by Staples, A. J. C., Tukaram's evidence has been corroborated as against other accused than Hiraji and the two Lehrs, and has nowhere been shown to be false. It agrees in all important particulars with the confessions made by two of the accused, Ganpat and Patiram. It also agrees with the statements made by two other accused, Bajya and Keoli, in their examination, though there is no confession by these accused formally recorded by a Magistrate prior to the trial. No reference to Bajya or Keoli has been made by either of the learned Judges, possibly by reason of the decision in Mahadeo Prasad v. Emperor (17), which makes S. 30, Evidence Act, inapplicable to a case in which the confession of the accomplice appears in his examination in the trial. That ruling would not apply in the present case, as Bajya's and Keoli's confessions were made in the first instance in the Court of the Committing Magistrate and not at the trial before the Sessions Judge.

As regards Hiraji and the two Lehrs, Tukaram's evidence, read with the confessions of the four co-accused, Bajya, Keoli, Ganpat and Patiram, should, I think, be accepted as true. Neither his evidence nor the confessions, it seems to me, can be rejected because they are self-exculpatory and do not implicate the givers to the same extent as the other persons implicated by them. The participation in the crime admitted by them is sufficient to make them fully responsible for the crime. It is urged that Tukaram's evidence should be rejected, because after he had been remanded to jail custody, he was retaken into police custody on 13th November 1928, for the purpose of having his confession recorded, but the confession was not recorded until 5th December 1928. I do not consider that this is a good ground for rejecting his evidence. I cannot find that any question was put to Tukaram or the Circle Inspector Dilarwar Husain (P. W. No. 13) or the Sub-Inspector Shiamrao (P. W. No. 17) as to the reasons for the delay in recording Thukaram's confession. I find also from the evidence of the Circle Inspector that Tukaram was not taken back into police custody for the purpose of getting a confession recorded. The object, according to that witness, was to get Tukaram to show where property stolen from the deceased was concealed and generally to get information to assist the police in their investigation.

Another point on which it is sought to discredit the prosecution case is that one Bapu, the brother of the deceased, has not been prosecuted although the deceased's wife Venubai (P. W. No. 5) when she was awakened by the offenders in the commission of their crime had thought that she recognized Tukaram and Bapu. But as regards Bapu her statement is only this:

"I had a faint suspicion that one of those persons was my husband's brother Bapu;"

and obviously on such a statement there is no reason to support that there is anything wrong in the fact that Bapu has not been prosecuted. Nor in the circumstances can I attach any importance to the fact that the first information report does not mention the names of Hiraji and the two Lehrams. That report was made by the Kotwal who states in it that he personally does not know and how many the thieves were. It is urged that the motive on the part of the accused persons whose cases I am considering was insufficient. But in sufficiency of motive is not itself a ground for rejecting evidence, otherwise considered trustworthy. There was some motive and the evidence, as I have held, is sufficient to prove the case against Hiraji and his brother, Lehram, and Lehram son of Gangu.

For the above reasons I agree with the view of Staples, A. J. C., that the convictions of Hiraji and his brother Lehram should be maintained and that the appeal of the Government in respect of Lehram son of Gangu should be allowed and that he should be convicted of an offence punishable under S. 302, I. P. C., as also of an offence punishable under S. 379. The Bench has held that the second offence committed was of theft and not dacoity.

v.

Emperor—Opposite Party.

Criminal Revn. No. 399 of 1929, Decided on 16th January 1930, against order of Dist. Magistrate, Raipur, D/- 11th October 1929 in Crim. Misc. Case No. 2 of 1929.

(a) Criminal Trial—Evidence — Want of interest in prosecution does not by itself stamp evidence of witness with truth — Evidence must be such as to carry conviction of truth to prudent man.

It is an elementary principle in the administration of criminal justice that want of interest in the prosecution does not by itself stamp the evidence of a witness with truth. The weight to be attached to the testimony of a witness depends in a large measure upon various considerations, e. g., if on the face of it the evidence is so much in consonance with probabilities and consistent with other evidence, and generally so fits in with the material details of the case for the prosecution as to carry conviction of truth to a prudent mind. If these elements are wanting in the testimony of a witness, however independent he may be, his evidence is worthless and should not be relied on in the decision of criminal cases where persuasion of guilt must amount to a moral certainty. [P 317 C 2; P 318 C 1]

(b) Criminal P. C., S. 203 — Serious discrepancies existing in important eye-witnesses — Trying Magistrate is right in dismissing complaint — In such case District Magistrate has no power to interfere, with order of discharge, under S. 436.

Where there are serious discrepancies existing in the evidence of the important eye-witnesses for the prosecution it is perfectly within the trying Magistrate's competence to disbelieve these witnesses and hold that there was no prima facie case as against the accused and the District Magistrate has, therefore, no power under S. 436 to interfere with the order of discharge which is based on a careful appreciation of the evidence on record : 8 A. L. J. 45, Rel. [P 318 C 2]

(c) Criminal P. C., S. 436—Not misappreciation of evidence, but irregularity or illegality in proceedings should be considered by the District Magistrate in setting aside order of discharge.

Even misappreciation of the evidence by the trying Magistrate will not in law justify the District Magistrate in setting aside the order of discharge which can only be done if there is either irregularity or illegality in the proceedings : 81 Mad. 133 ; 18 A. S. C. Dutt Chaudhury—for Accused.

Order.—The facts leading to this application for revision are briefly as follows :

The applicant, Bageshwar Bania, is a driver of the taxi car No. 5262. It was alleged that on the afternoon of 25th February last, while taking his car on the Raipur Arang road, the applicant knocked down Kejana, a seven years old grandson of Mt. Ramkuar (P. W. 3), on the road in front of the octroi outpost and caused his death. The map of the scene of the accident is filed as Ex. P-5. After investigation the applicant was challaned by the police for an offence under S. 304(A), I. P. C., before Mr. G. P. Pande, Magistrate First Class, Raipur, for having caused the death of the boy by rash and negligent driving.

Fifteen witnesses were examined for the prosecution at considerable length and the trial lasted for nearly six months. In a very elaborate judgment extending over seven closely written foolscap sheets the learned trying Magistrate carefully analysed and critically discussed the whole of the evidence and came to the conclusion that it failed to establish the identity of the applicant with the driver of the car which caused the death of the boy. An order of discharge was accordingly recorded in favour of the applicant.

On examining the record of the case suo motu the District Magistrate, Raipur, set aside the order of discharge and ordered further inquiry into the case under S. 436, Criminal P. C., by another Magistrate, Mr. Muniruddin. It is against this order that the present application for revision is filed.

As I understand the District Magistrate's order he held the trial to be defective in two respects :

(1) That the trying Magistrate did not visit the scene of the offence which led to his misappreciation of the evidence of Pitamber (P. W. 5) and Sheikh Lal (P. W. 6), and (2) that the trying Magistrate did not examine the investigating officer at length.

After examining the record carefully and hearing the learned pleader for the applicant, I am quite clear that the order of the District Magistrate is erroneous both on law and facts and should be set aside. It reads more like a special pleading for the prosecution than a balanced judicial pronouncement.

There is no sense in the District Magistrate's suggestion that the visit to the scene of the accident by the trying Magistrate would have either enhanced the worth of the evidence of Pitamber (P. W. 5) and Sheikh Lal (P. W. 6), or explained away the flagrant discrepancies between their testimony inter se and that of Mt. Ramkuar (P. W. 3) on several material points in the case which are detailed by the trying Magistrate in his judgment. The learned District Magistrate should not have imported his own personal knowledge into his judicial order and built a theory of his own that because the outhouses of these witnesses (Pitamber and Sheikh Lal) :

"are not only close to the road but turn in towards the road at such an angle that both Sheikh Lal and Pitamber should have been able to see Bageshwar clearly," because both these witnesses positively stated in their evidence that they could and did see the applicant only on reaching the road where the accident took place and not from the outhouses where they lived.

The learned District Magistrate is evidently wrong in starting with a preconceived notion that because Pitamber and Sheikh Lal are independent witnesses and have no "interest in securing Bageshwar's conviction" they have no reason to depose falsely against him. It is an elementary principle in the administration of criminal justice that want of interest in the prosecution does not by itself stamp the evidence of a witness with truth. The weight which is to be attached to the testimony of a witness depends in a large measure upon various considerations, e. g., if on the face of his evidence is so much in consonance with probabilities and consistent with other evidence, and generally so fits in with the material details of the case for the prosecution as to carry conviction of truth to a prudent mind. If these elements are wanting in the testimony of a witness, however independent he may be, his evidence is worthless and should not be relied on in the decision of criminal cases where persuasion of guilt must amount to a moral certainty.

Neither is the District Magistrate justified in offering an explanation of his own creation in para. 6 of his order in the matter of the evidence of Mt. Ramkuar (P. W. 3). The learned District Magistrate states that :

"in her statement to the police she had said that the car struck the tree immediately after the boy was knocked down."

The inference suggested is that her memory failed her when Mt. Ramkuar deposed before the Court that she did not notice the car striking the tree.

Since no extract of Mt. Ramkuar's alleged statement from the police diary is filed on the record, nor was the alleged statement put to her in the course of her examination as a witness, the learned District Magistrate clearly erred in law in relying upon it for the purpose of explaining away a very material discrepancy between her evidence and that of the other two eyewitnesses for the prosecution, viz., Pitamber (P. W. 5) and Sheikh Lal (P. W. 6). Moreover, in the absence of the police diary before me I have no means to verify if Mt. Ramkuar had even made such a statement to the police.

But if the District Magistrate has relied upon the first information report, Ex. P-1., I can only say that he has misread that document because it is clearly stated therein that:

"on inquiry it was known from Pitamber Dhobi that the driver was driving his car very fast and that he could not stop it when the boy came in front and that he dashed it against a tree and ran away."

The passage just quoted clearly shows that the information as to the car dashing against a tree was conveyed to the police not by the woman, P.W. 3, but by Pitamber (P.W. 5).

The first part of the suggestion by the District Magistrate, therefore, in explaining away the admittedly serious discrepancies in the evidence of the aforesaid three eyewitnesses for the prosecution falls to the ground. Neither is there the slightest justification for the District Magistrate for offering the other suggestion in explanation of the said discrepancies that "some one has made it worth her while to lie."

Moreover, in the teeth of the unequivocal admission of Mt. Ramkuar that she could clearly see up to a distance of five yards and in the absence of any suggestion by her that she had failed to observe or remember other details because of her being unnerved on account of the sudden and unexpected death of her grandson; the learned District Magistrate, who had no occasion to examine the woman personally, has apparently drawn upon his imagination in putting forward on her behalf certain excuses in para. 6 of his order in an attempt to reconcile her evidence with that of Pitamber (P. W. 5) and Sheikh Lal (P.W. 6). To say the least of it such a procedure on the part of the learned District Magistrate was unfair to the applicant besides being unwarranted in the exercise by him of the powers of revision under S. 436, Criminal P.C.

In the face of the serious discrepancies existing in the evidence of the three important eyewitnesses for the prosecution, viz., Mt. Ramkuar (P.W.3), Pitamber (P. W. 5) and Sheikh Lal (P.W.6), as noticed and rightly criticised by the trying Magistrate in paras. 5 to 12 of his well reasoned judgment, it was perfectly within his competence to disbelieve these witnesses and hold, as he did, that there was no prima facie case against the applicant, and the District Magistrate had, therefore, no power under S. 436, Criminal P. C., to interfere with the order of discharge which was based on a careful appreciation of the evidence on record: Chandan v. Kallu (1). Even misappreciation of the evidence by the trying Magistrate which is not made out in the present case would not in law have justified the District Magistrate in setting aside the order of discharge which could only be done if there was either irregularity or illegality in the proceedings: Lakshminarasappa v. Venkatappa (2) and Binderi Dube v. Emperor (3), cited with approval by this Court in Sheocharan v. Emperor (4), (at p. 91 of 21 N.L.R.).

(1) [1911] 8 A. L. J. 45=9 I. C. 274=12 Cr. L. J. 45.

(2) [1908] 31 M.L.J. 133=18 M.L.J. 57.

(3) [1920] 18 A.L.J. 1185=59 I. C. 198.

The deposition of the investigating officer, Murlidhar Ghoshe (P. W. 2), is recorded at considerable length by the trying Magistrate at pp. 14 to 16 of the record. In para. 5 of his order, beyond indulging in bare platitudes on the value of the evidence of an investigating officer "for getting a frame work of the case" the learned District Magistrate has not stated in what respects the frame work got up in the present case from the examination of Murlidhar (P. W. 2) was defective and how it has failed to "link up" the evidence of the set of witnesses from Kanver with the evidence of Raipur witnesses. It is, therefore, impossible for me to uphold the view of the learned District Magistrate that the trial has been defective or incomplete on account of not examining the investigating officer "at length." I, therefore, hold that there was neither any illegality nor irregularity committed by the trying Magistrate in recording the deposition of the investigating officer which vitiated the order of discharge passed by him.

For the reasons given above I have no hesitation in holding that the decision of the trying Magistrate in discharging the applicant was not only not perverse but absolutely correct, arrived at, as it was, after a full and complete inquiry and a careful consideration of the materials on record and probabilities of the case. I, therefore, set aside the order of the District Magistrate and restore that of the trying Magistrate.

The words "any person" in S. 526 (6a) are comprehensive enough to include (1) the Crown or the Local Government, (2) any private individual who has an interest in the subject matters of the complaint, as also (3) all or any one of the accused persons. [P 321 C 2]

* (b) Criminal P. C., S. 526 (6-a)—Application for transfer rejected as being frivolous or vexatious—Government opposing application is entitled to recover costs from applicants.

Where an application for the transfer of a case has been made to the High Court and has been thrown out on the ground that it is frivolous or vexatious, the Local Government opposing the application is entitled to recover its costs from the applicants. [P 322 C 2]

(c) Criminal P. C., S. 526 (6-a)—Rule that Crown neither pays nor receives costs is not without exceptions.

There is not and there cannot be a cast iron rule that the Crown neither pays nor receives costs. Exceptions may be grafted upon this rule by local statute. The peculiar circumstances of a case may also necessitate a departure from the said rule: Johnson v. Reg., (1901) A. C. 817, Rel. on.; 36 Mad. 601, (P.C.), Ref. [P 322 C 2]

Sen, J.—Kanver Sen, Ram Lal, Sat Narain, Gopal Krishua Consul, Kashi Ram, Madan, Kishanchand and Beliram, who, with two others, are on their trial before a Magistrate of the First Class of Benares under S. 420, I. P. C. applied to this Court under S. 526 (1), Criminal P. C. for the transfer of the case to some other criminal Court of equal jurisdiction on the ground that a fair and impartial trial could not be had in the Court where the case was pending.

The learned Government Advocate was instructed by the Local Government to oppose the application. The applicants were represented by counsel. The parties were heard and the application was eventually dismissed on the ground that it was frivolous and vexatious.

The learned Government Advocate moved this Court to exercise the power contained in the provision of S. 526 (6-a), Criminal P. C. On behalf of the Crown, an affidavit was filed by Mohammad Fariduddin, which showed that the costs incurred by the Local Government in opposing the application amounted to Rs. 585-1-6.

It was not controverted that the application for transfer was opposed by the Crown nor was it disputed that the costs claimed had been reasonably incurred by the Crown in consequence of the application for transfer.

Two arguments appear to have been advanced on behalf of the applicants. It was argued that the words "any person who has opposed the application" in S. 526 (6a), Criminal P. C., are not of sufficient amplitude to include either the Crown or the Local Government having regard to the context of the entire section. It was further argued that S. 526, Criminal P. C., must be taken to have been founded upon the doctrine of the English Common Law according to which the Crown neither receives nor pays costs in criminal matters.

The question which has been referred to this Bench for determination is: Does the word "person" in S. 526, Cl. 6 (a), Criminal P. C., include the "Local Government?" If the answer to this question be in the negative there is an end of the matter and the case need not be canvassed any further. If the answer to the question be in the affirmative, the consequence of our finding will be that we must direct the applicants to jointly and severally pay a sum of Rs. 535-1-6 to the Local Government being the costs of opposing the application for transfer, which has already been adjudicated upon as frivolous and vexatious.

Applications for transfer generally fall either under one or other of three categories. Cases do occur at times which fit in with the provisions of S. 526 (1), Criminal P. C. Justice demands that in such cases, this Court should be moved to step in and make an order of transfer. There may also be some cases not exactly on the border line but in which either the complainant or the accused person may be under a bona fide apprehension that the trial was likely to be affected by either pre-possessions or prejudices on the part of the tribunal having the seisin of the case but that in truth and in fact, his alarms were not justified and there were no sufficient or valid reasons to necessitate a transfer. The grounds for the application may have been insufficient and yet the application may well have been an arguable one. An application belonging to this class cannot be described as either frivolous or vexatious. In these two classes of cases, this Court has always been studiously careful in not interposing any barrier in the way of the applicants, which directly or indirectly may have the effect to either discourage or have a tendency to discourage such applications. The third class of cases stands upon a different footing altogether. These applications, not uncommonly, are founded upon actual and sometimes patent falsehoods or contain either half truths or even grave distortion of facts. Not uncommonly, the object of the application is to procure an adjournment of the trial to enable the party concerned to prattle with witnesses, to try tricks with them and even to tamper with their evidence or in the expectation that the particular Magistrate may be transferred. When applications of this class are made to this Court and are opposed by the Government, ex facie, it appears to be reasonable in the highest degree that the Government successfully opposing the application should be entitled to recover their costs.

In Act 5 of 1893, as originally passed, there was no provision corresponding to S. 526 (6a) of the present Criminal P. C. The aforesaid clause was placed upon the statute book under the Amending Act 18 of 1923. This amendment led to consequential changes in S. 526 (5) of the original section.

Section 526 (6a), Criminal P. C., provides as follows:

"Where any application for the exercise of the power conferred by this section is dismissed, the High Court may, if it is of opinion that the application was frivolous or vexatious, order the applicant to pay by way of costs to any person who has opposed the application any expenses reasonably incurred by such person in consequence of the application."

It has been argued that the Crown or the Local Government is not a "person" within the meaning of that term in the Criminal Procedure Code, that the legislature consciously intended to exclude the Crown or the Local Government from the operation of Cl. (6a) and that where it contemplated that the Crown or the Local Government should be referred to, the words used in the text are "a party interested." Reliance has been strongly placed upon Cl. (3) which provides that "the High Court may act either on the report of the lower Court or on the application of a party interested or on its own initiative."

It is not denied that the expression "a party interested" is wide enough to include the Crown or the Local Government. But it is contended that the words "any person who has opposed the application" are not of such wide signi-finance as the words "a party interested" so as to include the Local Government and that if the legislature intended to allow costs to the Government for opposing the application it ought to have introduced in Cl. (6a), S. 526, Criminal P. C. the words "to any party interested" and "such party" in place of the words "any person" or such "person" occurring in the said clause.

We are clearly of opinion that the word "person" in S. 526, (6a), Criminal P. C. is of a wider import than the words "a party interested" in sub-S. (3).

In criminal law, as a branch of public law in jurisprudence, the Crown is a necessary party in view of the immediateness of the public interest involved. Unlike private law, individual interests are not allowed to predominate; but the public interest balances or in some cases even outweighs the private. The commonwealth can be directly represented by the proper officers of the State and vindicated by them in the name of the State or of its titular head. It is in the highest degree fallacious to consider that the State or the Local Government is an obstruction.

The term "person" has not been defined in the Criminal P. C. but S. 4, sub-S. (2), of the Code Provides that "all words and expressions used herein, and defined in the Indian Penal Code and not heretofore defined shall be deemed to have the meanings respectively attributed to them by that Code."

Section 11, I. P. C. provides that "the word 'person' includes any company or association or body of persons whether incorporated or not."

Under S. 17 of the said Code, the word "Government" denotes

"the person or persons authorised by law to administer executive Government in any part of British India."

The Government which evidently means the Local Government is therefore either a person or persons with a definite function. Where there is a constituted authority consisting of a person or a number of persons, having a definite function it would be impossible to hold that the said authority has for some inscrutable reason ceased to be a person within the meaning of S. 526 (6a), Criminal P. C. In all serious offences, it is the Government which is the actual prosecutor. Even in minor offences, theoretically, the Government is the complainant. Where an application for transfer is made, the Government is vitally concerned in the result and S. 526 (6) is imperative that notice of such application shall be given to the Public Prosecutor. The Public Prosecutor has a right to oppose the application and in many cases, the application is opposed by the Local Government through its Crown Officer. In a great majority of cases, more specially in cases of serious magnitude, the only party which steps in to oppose the application is the Crown. In enacting S. 526, (6a), Criminal P. C. the legislature could not have intended to shut out from its purview the one party, which was materially interested in opposing the application. We are of opinion that the word "any person" in the subsection aforesaid is comprehensive enough to include (1) the Crown or the Local Government (2) any private individual who has an interest in the subject matters of the complaint as also (3) all or any one of the accused persons.

The words "any person who has opposed the application" are general enough to include the Local Government can also be inferred as the result of the amendment of the original sub-S. (5). This subsection, as it originally stood, ran as follows :

"When an accused person makes an application under this section, the High Court may direct him to execute a bond, with or without sureties, conditioned that he will, if convicted, pay the costs of the prosecutor."

By the Amending Act, 1893, the words "convicted, pay the costs of the prosecutor" were substituted by the words :

"so ordered, pay any amount which the High Court has power under this section to award by way of costs to the person opposing the application."

There can be no manner of doubt that the scope of this subsection has been considerably enlarged by the amendment, and the substitution of the words "person opposing the application" in place of the words "the prosecutor" clearly indicates that it was intended to extend the benefit of the subsection to persons opposing the application who need not necessarily be the prosecutor.

Our attention was drawn to a large number of sections of the Penal Code with the intention of establishing the postulate that the word "person" had been used in those sections in contradistinction to the word "party." We do not think it necessary to examine this part of the argument in detail. The word "person" in the various sections that we were referred to is bound to have the meaning as given in S. 11, unless the said meaning is repugnant to the subject or context.

It may be observed, in passing, that if the argument of the learned advocate for the applicants be accepted in its entirety and pushed to its logical conclusion, it would be beyond the province of the criminal Court to enforce the production of a vital document from the possession of the Local Government under S. 94, Criminal P. C., if Local Government was not a "person" in whose possession or power such a document was believed to be.

As a last resort, the applicants took their stand upon what is generally known as the common law rule that the Crown neither pays nor receives costs; and our attention was drawn to certain observations of Lord Atkinson, In re, Vaithinatha Pillai v. Emperor (1). In this case, the applicant by special leave had appealed to the Privy Council against the order of the Additional Sessions Judge of Tanjore convicting him of the abetment of the murder of his daughter-in-law and sentencing him to death. On the appeal being allowed, Sir Robert Finlay for the appellant made a motion for costs in favour of the successful appellant. This motion was disallowed and reliance was placed upon the headnote of Johnson v. Reg (2) (at p. 825) which runs thus:

"In future the Board will adhere to the practice of the House of Lords; and their rule as to costs in cases between the Crown and a subject will be that the Crown neither pays nor receives costs unless the case is covered by some local statute or there are exceptional circumstances justifying a departure from the ordinary rule."

It is clear from this pronouncement that the common law rule is not of such wide import as claimed by the applicants and that there is not and there cannot be a cast iron rule that the Crown neither pays nor receives costs. Exceptions may be grafted upon this rule by local statute. The peculiar circumstances of the case may also necessitate a departure from the said rule. In England, this common law rule has been entrenched upon by the Costs in Criminal Cases Act (1908, 8th Edn. 7 C. 15), S. 6 of which provides that:

"The Court by or before which any person is convicted of an indictable offence may, if they think fit, in addition to any other lawful punishment, order the person convicted to pay the whole or any part of the costs incurred in or about the prosecution and conviction including any proceedings before the examining Justices as taxed by the proper officer."

Under the Judicature Act, 1925, S. 25 (3) the Court has the power to award costs on the hearing of an appeal from Quarter Sessions, both in the appellate Court and the primary Court, though such power did not exist prior to the Judicature Act of 1894.

In this country, where we have got statutory provisions relating to costs, payable in a criminal case, we cannot go by the English Common law rule even if the rule had been quite as general as has been claimed for it. There is nothing in the language of S. 250, Criminal P. C., to make that section non-applicable to the case of the Crown. We mention the aforesaid section, not because it has any application to the point under our consideration but because it was referred to us in the course of the argument. The language of S. 526 (6 a), Criminal P. C., appears to us to be clear, explicit and unequivocal. From a consideration of the plain language of the context and the policy underlying the frame work of the entire section, we unhesitatingly come to the conclusion that where an application for transfer of a case has been made to this Court and has been thrown out on the ground that it is frivolous or vexatious, the Local Government opposing the application is entitled to recover its costs from the applicants. Our answer to the reference is in the affirmative, and we hold that the word "person" in S. 526, Cl. (6a), Criminal P. C., includes "the Local Government." We direct that Kanver Sen and seven others referred to above by name jointly and severally do pay a sum of Rs. 585-1-6 to the Local Government.

Criminal Revn. Case No. 941 of 1928, Crim. Revn. Petn. No. 681 of 1928, Decided on 22nd October 1929, from judgment of Sess. Judge, Ramnad, in Crim. Appeal No. 19 of 1928.

* * (a) Criminal P. C. Ss. 117 (2), 256 and 257—Security proceedings—Right of accused to recall for cross examinations is under S. 257 and not S. 256.

An accused person who has been called upon to give security for good behaviour, has no absolute right to recall prosecution witnesses for cross-examination under S. 256, but he has a right under S. 257: (Case law discussed.)

[P 326 C 2]

(b) Criminal P. C., S. 112—"Order in writing setting forth substance of the information received" is equivalent to charge—Criminal P. C., S. 117 (2).

The words "no charge need be framed" in S. 117 (2) can only mean that no occasion can arise for framing a charge because under S. 221 (1) every charge shall state the offence with which the accused is charged. In security proceedings the place of charge is taken by the "order in writing setting forth the substance of the information received" prescribed by S. 112. This order has to be read over to the person in respect of whom it is made, and although the Code does not provide that he should plead to it, it resembles a charge in that it must contain a statement in abstract of the prosecution case.

Order of Reference.

Waller, J.—Mr. Grant on behalf of the petitioner raises two points of law. The first is that the notice served on his client did not conform to the requirements of S. 112, Criminal P.C. Assuming that it did not, the defect seems to me to have been cured by the fact that he was supplied with a copy of the charge-sheet. The next raises a more difficult question. The petitioner during the enquiry, asked the Magistrate to re-summon some of the witnesses against him for further cross-examination but his request was refused. Mr. Grant argues that, by virtue of sub-S. (2), S. 117, Criminal P. C., the whole of the procedure applicable to a warrant case is applicable to a case of this nature. I have been referred to no authority of this Court that bears directly on the point. Indeed in the course of a long experience as a Magistrate, I have never come across a case in which it was even suggested to me that the accused in a security enquiry had the right now claimed. There are two decisions by other High Courts which directly negative it. One is Chintamon Singh v. Emperor (1). The other is Bija v. Emperor (2). I should be prepared to follow these decisions but for certain observations that occur in E. Venkatachinnayya v. Emperor (3).

The question that had to be decided was whether the accused in a security case was entitled under S. 250 (a), Criminal P. C., to demand that the witnesses against them should be re-summoned and re-heard, when there was a change of magistracy. The decision was that though the subsection very clearly refers to a trial and not an enquiry, they were so entitled. With great respect, it seems to me somewhat difficult to reconcile this view with the view expressed in other decisions of this Court as to the distinction between a trial and an enquiry. That, however, is a question that does not arise here. What is material is that two of the Judges, Ayling and Coutts-Trotter, JJ., expressed the opinion that the whole of the procedure governing warrant cases, was attracted by S. 117 (2), Criminal P.C., to enquiries in security cases of the kind I am now considering. The matter is of considerable importance and, in view of the obiter dicta in the case in E. Venkatachinnayya v. Emperor (3), I think that the following question should be referred to a Full Bench:

"Is an accused person, who has been called upon to give security for good behaviour entitled to the benefit of S. 256, Criminal P. C.?"

I may add that, as pointed out in Chintamon Singh v. Emperor (3), the object of S. 256 is to give the accused an opportunity of further cross-examination directed expressly to the case embodied in the charge, which seems to be superfluous where, as in security cases, the precise charges against him are known to him before the enquiry begins.

Anantakrishna Aiyar, J.—I agree that the question stated by my learned brother should be referred for the decision of a Full Bench.

Opinion :

Kumaraswami Sastri, J.—The question referred to us for decision is :

"Is an accused person, who has been called upon to give security for good behaviour, entitled to the benefit of S. 256, Criminal P. C."

The sections dealing with security for good behaviour are contained in Chap. 8, Criminal P. C.

Section 110 empowers the Magistrates enumerated therein to require a person habitually addicted to the commission of offences mentioned in Cls. (a) to (c) to show cause why he should not be ordered to execute a bond with sureties for his good behaviour for such period not exceeding three years as the Magistrate thinks fit.

Section 112 provides that, where a Magistrate deems it necessary to require any person to show cause, he shall make an order in writing setting forth the substance of the information received, the amount of the bond to be executed, the term for which it is to be in force, and the number, character and class of sureties required.

Section 113 says that if the person in respect of whom an order has been made is present in Court, it shall be read over to him or explained to him if he so desires.

Section 114 says that if the person is not present in Court, a summons should be issued calling on him to appear.

Section 115 requires the summons or warrant to be accompanied by a copy of the order made under S. 112 and to be delivered to the person.

Then comes S. 117, the section which prescribes the mode of enquiry. It says that when the person appears in Court, the Magistrate shall proceed to enquire into the truth of the information upon which action has been taken and take further evidence as may appear necessary.

Clause (2) runs as follows :

"Such inquiry shall be made, as nearly as may be practicable where the order requires security for keeping the peace, in the manner hereinafter prescribed for conducting trials and recording evidence in summons cases; and where the order requires security for good behaviour in the manner hereinafter prescribed for conducting trials and recording evidence in warrant cases, except that no charge need be framed."

The form prescribed in Sch. 5 for the summons to be issued under S. 114 runs as follows :

"Whereas it has been made to appear to me by credible information that (then the substance of the information is set out)

"you are hereby required to attend in person (or by a duly authorized agent) (on a date specified in the form) to show cause why you should not be required to enter into a bond, etc."

So that Chap. 8 provides for the procedure to be adopted till the enquiry opens and S. 117 says that where the order requires security for good behaviour the enquiry shall be made as nearly as practicable in the manner prescribed for conducting trials in warrant cases. Turning to the mode prescribed for the trial of warrant cases which is provided for in Chap. 21, S. 252 provides for the discharge of the accused if no case is made out by the prosecution witnesses.

Section 254 enacts that if the Magistrate is of opinion that there is ground for presuming that the accused has committed an offence, a charge should be framed.

Section 255 requires that the charge should be read and explained to the accused and that he should be asked whether he pleads guilty or has any defence to make and empowers the Magistrate to convict the accused if he pleads guilty.

Under S. 256 if the accused refuses to plead, or does not plead, or claims to be tried, then he has to state within the period mentioned in the section whether he wishes to cross-examine any, and, if so, which of the witnesses for the prosecution whose evidence has been taken. If he says he does so wish, the witnesses named by him shall be recalled, and, after cross-examination and re-examination, if any, they shall be discharged and the evidence of the remaining witnesses for the prosecution shall next be taken, and, after cross-examination and re-examination, if any, they also shall be discharged and the accused shall then be called upon to enter upon his defence and produce his evidence.

Section 257 runs as follows :

"(1) If the accused, after he has entered upon his defence, applies to the Magistrate to issue any process for compelling the attendance of any witness for the purpose of examination or cross-examination; or the production of any document or other thing, the Magistrate shall issue such process unless he considers that such application should be refused on the ground that it is made for the purpose of vexation or delay or for defeating the ends of justice. Such ground shall be recorded by him in writing :

Provided that, when the accused has cross-examined, or had the opportunity of cross-examining any witness after the charge is framed, the attendance of such witness shall not be compelled under this section, unless the Magistrate is satisfied that it is necessary for the purposes of justice.

(2) The Magistrate may, before summoning any witness on such application, require that his reasonable expenses incurred in attending for the purposes of the trial be deposited in Court."

Under S. 258, the Magistrate has to record the order of acquittal if he finds the accused not guilty, and if he is guilty to pass sentence according to law.

Section 259 refers to the procedure to be adopted if the complainant is absent and the case is compoundable.

Now it is obvious that under Chap. 21 the Magistrate can frame a charge at any stage of the prosecution case. He is not bound to wait until all the prosecution witnesses have been examined. The sections following S. 254 presume that a charge has been framed and are only applicable on that basis. They also refer to offence and to acquittal.

It is obvious from the provisions of Chap. 8 that no charge is framed but the procedure till we come to trial is that the Magistrate proceeds ex parte until it comes to the stage of sending notice or summons to the person against whom security is required. Then under S. 112, the Magistrate gives the substance of the information received and the particulars as to the bond, and then the trial begins.

Reading the provisions of Chaps. 8 and 21 it is clear that so far as the person required to give security is concerned, the trial really commences from the point where notice has been given to him to show cause which contains the substance of the information and which must be treated as equivalent to a charge though not the charge itself. In this view effect can be given to all the provisions and under S. 256 the cross-examination of the witnesses should take place as if witnesses examined for the prosecution are witnesses examined after a charge has been framed. S. 257 would apply where for any reason he wants to recall and cross-examine the prosecution witnesses, the Magistrate having a discretion to refuse an application if he is of opinion that the application is made for the purpose of vexation or delay.

It has been argued by Mr. Grant that all that S. 117, Cl. (2), says is that no charge need be framed and that consequently if a Magistrate chooses to frame a charge, then there will be really two charges, one contained in the notice and the other in the charge framed. I find it difficult to see how any Magistrate can, having regard to the provisions of Chap. 8 frame any charge such as is contemplated by Ss. 221 to 223 in Chap. 19. The words "no charge need be framed" really mean that the charge shall be dispensed with because in the very nature of things it is not possible to frame a charge with the particulars enjoined by Ss. 221 to 223.

It is also argued that a party cannot know exactly for what he is tried until all the witnesses have been examined and it may be necessary for him to cross-examine the witnesses and that it would be a great hardship if the opportunity given to him by S. 256 is not given. Treating it as a mere question of hardship, I think S. 257 provides for all reasonable requirements. The Magistrate is bound, if he refuses the application, to state in writing that in his opinion the application is made for the purpose of vexation or delay or for defeating the ends of justice. Except for that reason the Magistrate is bound to issue process and there is no reason why if the right is going to be abused the Magistrate is still bound to issue summons. I agree with the observations of Shadi Lal, J., in Ahmad Bakhsh v. Emperor (4), that if there is no hardship to the other party under S. 287 it is desirable that proceedings under Chap. 21 should not be unduly delayed.

The view I take is amply supported by authority.

In Chintamon Singh v. Emperor (1) Rampini and Sharfuddin, JJ., observed :

"No doubt, under S. 117, Criminal P. C., the enquiry into bad livelihood cases should be made as nearly as may be practicable in the manner prescribed for conducting trials and recording evidence in warrant cases. But we do not think that the provisions of S. 256, Criminal P. C., indicate that the person called upon to show cause under S. 110, Criminal P. C. has a right to further cross-examine the prosecution witnesses under S. 256, Criminal P. C. inasmuch as the provisions of this section relate to cases where a formal charge is required by (4) [1916] 1 P. B. 1916 Cr.—22 I. C. 676—58 P. W. B. 1915 Cr.

S. 254 has been drawn up and the accused has been called upon to meet that charge. In cases under S. 110, Criminal P. O. the order of the Magistrate under S. 112, Criminal P. C. is equivalent to a charge. The object in giving the substance of the information in an order under S. 112, Criminal P. C. is that the person called upon to show cause may clearly understand the matter that he has to meet in his defence, and a Magistrate has no power to go beyond the requirements of his order under S. 112, Criminal P. C."

In Bija v. Emperor (2), it was held that a person against whom proceedings have been taken under S. 110, Criminal P. C., has no right to further cross-examine the prosecution witness under S. 256 of the Code. Sir Shadi Lal, C. J., refers with approval to Chintamon Singh v. Emperor (1).

In Ahmad Bakhsh v. Emperor (4), Shadi Lal, J., observed :

"In security cases the order passed by the Magistrate under S. 112 is equivalent to a charge in a warrant case and the person against whom the order is made is fully aware of of what is alleged against him. The evidence is thereafter recorded in his presence and he has every reasonable opportunity of cross-examining the witnesses. There is consequently no conceivable reason why he should be allowed the right of a second cross-examination and why he should thereby protract the proceedings unnecessarily. The reason which underlies the rule as to double cross-examination in warrant cases is entirely absent here and the principle of cessante ratione legis, cessat ipsa lex is fully applicable."

The learned Judge follows the view taken in Chintaman Singh v. Emperor (1) and dissents from the view taken in Emperor v. Lansha (5).

Mr. Grant has referred us to Venkatachinnayya v. Emperor (3). The question there for determination was whether S. 350 (1), proviso (a), Criminal P. C. which refers to change of magistracy during the pendency of a trial and the right to have a de novo trial applies to security proceedings and the Full Bench held it did. In dealing with the question, however, there are observations of Ayling and Coutts-Trotter, JJ. to the effect that the accused had a right under S. 256 to recall the prosecution witnesses. These observations are in my opinion obiter dicta as the learned Judges were not there dealing with the right now claimed.

Reference has also been made to Emperor v. Lansha (5) which is a case decided by the Chief Court of Burma and where it was held that S. 256, Criminal P. C. is applicable to proceedings under S. 110 by virtue of the provisions of S. 117, Cl. (2) of the Code. There is no reference to any authorities, and this case is dissented from in the case reported in Bija v. Emperor (2).

In Emperor v. Tirlok (6) Boys, J., after referring to the provisions of S. 117 and the provision that no charge need be framed, observed ;

"The reason for the exception is obvious. What is equivalent to a charge has already been framed in the order served upon the accused in accordance with S. 112."

The learned Judge then goes on to deal with Ss. 254 and 255 and observes that at any stage of the proceedings the Magistrate, if he is prima facie satisfied that there is a case against the accused, may interrupt proceedings for the purpose of asking the accused whether he pleads guilty or whether he has any defence to make and that if he does so and the accused wishes to defend, then the accused can recall for cross-examination witnesses examined up to that stage and if the Magistrate does not do so but waits till all the prosecution witnesses are called, the accused can, when he is asked if he wishes to defend, ask for the recall of prosecution witnesses. It seems to me that if the notice under S. 112 is equivalent to the charge and if when that notice is read to accused he has the option of either executing the bond or denying his liability to do so, there is no necessity for the Magistrate interrupting proceedings. He cannot again issue a notice under S. 112 and there is no analogy to a Magistrate in warrant cases framing a charge when only some of the prosecution witnesses are examined and then going on with the rest of the prosecution evidence.

I prefer to follow the view taken in Chintaman Singh v. Emperor (1), Ahmad Bakhsh v. Emperor (4) and Bija v. Emperor (2) and would answer the reference by stating that in security proceedings where the other side wants to recall any prosecution witness he has no absolute right to do so under S. 256, Criminal P. C., but has a right under S. 257 of the Code.

In this case it appears that the Magistrate rejected that application to re-summon on the ground that S. 256 does not give the accused that right. He has not applied his mind to the question whether it is necessary in the interests of the accused that the witnesses should be re-summoned nor does he state that he considered the application was one made for the purpose of delay. Whether this would be a ground for interference is a matter entirely for the Bench to decide.

Curgenvén, J.—In deciding whether the right to recall prosecution witnesses for cross-examination, given by S. 256, Criminal P. C., can be claimed under S. 117 in security proceedings, it is of assistance to consider why the right is given in the trial of a warrant case. Two answers are possible :

(1) The charge shows the accused, perhaps for the first time, precisely what he has to meet. The first cross-examination may, therefore, have been conducted in some measure under a mistaken impression.

(2) Answers elicited from later prosecution witnesses necessitate the further questioning of earlier ones.

If the right had been given on ground (2), exercise of it would not have been restricted to the stage immediately after charge, since a charge may be framed before the examination of the prosecution witnesses is completed. It would have been fixed at the close of the prosecution evidence. The fact that the stage in the case at which the right must be exercised is the stage at which the charge is framed supports the view that charge and right are related as cause and effect, and therefore no charge no right. There is no such right in proceedings where no charge is framed, e. g., summons cases, sessions trials, civil suits.

If the right is allowed in proceedings under S. 117, it must be on a less qualified basis than in a warrant case. We must hold that it is exerciseable in all instances after all the witnesses for the prosecution have been examined. In so holding, instead of merely applying warrant procedure "as nearly as may be practicable," we should be going beyond it and conceding a right which it does not confer. We should be creating an inflexible rule in security cases where no such inflexible rule exists in warrant cases.

I agree with my learned brother

Kumaraswami Sastri, J., that the words "No charge need be framed" can only mean that no occasion can arise for framing a charge; because under S. 221 (1) every charge shall state the offence with which the accused is charged. In security proceedings the place of charge is taken by the "order in writing setting forth the substance of the information received" prescribed by S. 112. This order has to be read over to the person in respect of whom it is made, and although the Code does not provide that he should plead to it it resembles a charge in that it must contain a statement in abstract of the prosecution case.

In Venkatachinnayya v. Emperor (3), the question for decision, so far as we are now concerned, was whether in security proceedings for good behaviour the effect of sub-S. (2), S. 117, Criminal P. C., was to render applicable the provisions of Ch. 21 of the Code, dealing with warrant cases, and those of Ch. 25, in so far as they deal with the mode of taking or recording evidence in such cases, or whether the subsection attracted the provisions of all sections of the Code which are applicable to warrant cases. The Full Bench had not to decide which of the provisions of Ch. 21, should be deemed to be inapplicable, so that any observations made upon that question were clearly obiter. I do not myself think that Ayling, J., in selecting S. 256 as what seems to have been a random illustration, meant that in his view its provisions had necessarily to be enforced. All that he says is that S. 350 is as much a matter of procedure as the right to have prosecution witnesses recalled and cross-examined conferred by S. 256. Accordingly there was no ground for disputing the applicability of S. 350 merely because it occurred elsewhere in the Code. The line of reasoning is not vitiated by the circumstance that the provisions of S. 256, although a matter of procedure and therefore prima facie applicable, may, on special grounds, be found incompatible with the method of conducting a security inquiry. The observation of Coutts-Trotter, J., (as he then was), that the whole of the procedure in a warrant case must be adopted, was clearly no more than a generalisation.

I agree with the answer to the reference proposed by my learned brother.

Walsh, J.—I agree that the order calling on a person to show cause why he should not execute a bond to be of good behaviour is "equivalent to a charge" and there is ample authority for this position. It is impossible to frame a regular charge for several reasons. In the first place it is doubtful whether a person called on to show cause in such a case is an "accused."

In Jhoja Singh v. Queen-Empress (7), it was held that he was; but in Hopcroft v. Emperor (8) more cautious language is used that "he stands in the position of an accused person" and finally in Binode Behari Nath v. Emperor (9), it was held that he was not an accused person so that Jhoja Singh v. Queen-Empress (7), must be held to have been overruled. Queen-Empress v. Mona Puna (10), does not deal with a case of security for good behaviour. No doubt Queen-Empress v. Mutasaddi Lal (11), remains and Coutts-Trotter, J., in E. Venkatachinnayya v. Emperor (3), seems to incline to the same view.

Secondly, it is doubtful if there is any "offence". In E. Venkatachinnayya v. Emperor (3), Ayling, J., remarked on p. 523 that no "offence" is involved in an enquiry under Chap. 8 of the Code and Coutts-Trotter, J., (as he then was) says: "If he cannot be said to be "charged" with an offence it is at least sought to be proved against him that he is a person with criminal or undesirable propensities."

I agree with my learned brothers in interpreting the words "No charge need be framed" as meaning that no occasion can arise for framing a charge. If the order under S. 112, Criminal P. C., which is equivalent to a charge is not a charge there is no stage at which or process by which it can become anything more. Neither evidence in support of it nor the Court's opinion that it is prima facie proved by the evidence tendered can enable anything else to be framed than an order under the terms of S. 112 and the Code does not contemplate two identical charges in the same case. I agree with my learned brother Curgenven, J., in his classification of the two reasons why a right to recall and cross-examine prosecution witnesses is given in a warrant case and I would say that Ss. 256 and 257 seem to me to deal respectively with those two rights. The right to cross-examine when the person first knows exactly what the charge against him is, is absolute and is dealt with under S. 256. It extends not to all the prosecution witnesses but only to those examined before the charge is framed and the Court may frame a charge at any stage. It does not mean as we should have to hold that it means if we accepted Mr. Grant's argument, a right to recall and cross-examine all the prosecution witnesses.

The right to recall and cross-examine earlier witnesses owing to what may be said by later ones is qualified and is dealt with by S. 257. As the "equivalent to a charge" is framed under Chap. 8 before any of the prosecution witnesses are examined the absolute right of recall cannot arise for the first purpose, but the qualified right for the second purpose does exist. It may be noted that Chap. 8 seems to be somewhat defective as it does not expressly provide for an examination of witnesses called for the defence and the only form of summons given in the Appendix, Sch. 5, is with regard to giving security for keeping the peace.

The balance of authority is certainly against a right of re-call and cross-examination of the prosecution witnesses under S. 256 (1). The remarks relied on in E. Venkatachinnayya v. Emperor (3) are obiter. Although the reference to us does not mention S. 257 I agree that we should answer the question in the manner proposed by my learned brothers.

* Penal Code S. 124-A—It is no defence to say that only form and not fact of the Government is attacked—Any advocacy for change in Government that brings present Government into hatred etc. comes within S. 124-A.

The words used by the legislature in S. 124-A are the "Government established by law in British India." The section does not contemplate the probability of attempts being made to excite hatred and contempt against abstractions, but uses a clear phrase for a definite thing and, therefore, it is no defence to say that the attempt to excite hatred and contempt was directed solely against the particular form of Government now obtaining in India and not against the fact of the Government. Any advocacy regarding change in the form of Government as bringing into hatred or contempt or exciting disaffection towards the present Government comes within the mischief of S. 124-A. [P 331 C 2]

B. C. Chatterjee—for Applicant.

The Advocate General—for the Crown.

Rankin, C. J.—This is an application by Sojini Kanta Das under S. 99-B, Criminal P. C. in respect of a book entitled "India in Bondage: Her right to Freedom" of which he is the printer and publisher. On 13th August 1929, the Government of Bengal declared every copy of this book to be forfeited to His Majesty under S. 99-A of the Code. The present application is to set aside that order on the ground that the book did not contain any seditious matter or any matter the publication of which is punishable under S. 124-A, I. P. C. Our duty is to come to a finding under S. 99-D, Criminal P. C., namely, if we are not satisfied that the book contains seditious or other matter of such a nature as is referred to in sub-S. 1, S. 99-A, our duty is to set aside the order of forfeiture.

The book would appear to have been first published in December 1928 and again in May 1929. The name of the author is given as Jabez T. Sunderland. From certain passages in the book it would appear that it is addressed to an American audience and the author writes as an American. The book, however, was printed in India and it is only with its publication in India that this Court can be concerned. The general thesis or argument of the book is that Great Britain has no right to rule in India; that British rule in India is unjust, tyrannical and highly evil in its effects—is a crime against humanity and a menace to the world's freedom and peace. The main purpose of the book is to remove the impression, said to be widespread in America, that British rule in India has been and is a great and almost unqualified good. The author claims to be well qualified to deal with this matter by reason in particular of the fact that he has paid no less than two visits to India—one in the years 1895-96 and again in 1913-14. He claims to have read the Indian periodical press extensively during his visits and to have been a regular subscriber since 1896 to no fewer than 7 Indian newspapers. Accordingly the reader is informed with great thoroughness and persistency that any signs of prosperity to be noticed in India are not signs of the prosperity of the Indian people but only of the English; that the all-over-shadowing fact connected with the history of India in recent years has been the succession of famines and the consequent plague epidemics. That in fact there is always famine, in the sense of starvation on a wide scale somewhere in the land. That the people of India are growing speedily poorer. The causes of India's impoverishment are set forth as being heavy taxation, the destruction of her manufactures as a result of British rule, the enormous and wholly unnecessary cost of her Government and in particular the heavy military expense of Government. These things are set forth as being the evils of foreign rule and the only remedy for them is said to be self-rule. It further appears, according to the author, that England's position in India works much injustice to the United States of America:

"When our Government desires to communicate upon any matter officially with India, it must be done round about by way of the British Ambassador, the official not of India, but of the nation that is holding India in bondage."

A chapter is devoted to the "Arrogance of the British India"; another is devoted to the denunciation of the legal system in India, the information of the author being that its "law system" was framed for India by Macaulay. This it appears (the reference would seem to be to the Indian Penal Code) is of a nature degrading to the Indian people. Its main features are said to be that the Judge and the prosecutor is the same man, that so many of the Judges are foreigners, generally Englishmen, who have little acquaintance with the Indian people; that Englishmen are often appointed Judges who have no knowledge of law; that the legal system is very costly. But the gravest charge of all against the British legal system in India is given as partiality and favouritism towards Europeans. So too, the kind of peace which British rule has brought to India is explained to have been worse than war. "The British have made a graveyard and they call it peace." Again, the British Government is responsible for India's "opium curse":

"The British have fostered the opium evil and organized it for purposes of revenue. It has done this hypocritically, pretending that it is fulfilling the wishes of the Indian people."

The like is said, at length, of India's "drink curse." Of caste in India, it is said:

"The truth is the caste which is the most galling of any to the Indian people, and which they most desire to see reformed or removed, is that of their arrogant foreign lords and masters, who with some honourable exceptions, treat them as serfs."

Of Hindu-Mahomedan riots it is explained that the responsibility for them is primarily on the British who "have employed the policy of fostering divisions among the people, knowing well that divisions always weaken a nation and render it easier to hold in subjection."

Again, as to the military protection which the British give to India a chapter is devoted to showing that "The only protection the British give India in return for the crushing military burden that she is compelled to bear is the infinite injustice and wrong of subjection, bondage, exploitation, loss of freedom, deprivation of the place which she has a right to occupy among the great nations of mankind."

Another chapter describes the British rule in India as worse than that of the Moghul Emperors because it is a government of "foreigners and transients," India being a

"plundered nation in the hands of constant plunderer with the plunder carried away clean out of the land"

It does not seem to me to be necessary in this judgment to illustrate further the character and contents of the book, nor do I propose to select for quotation the more extreme or rhetorical passages, or the passages which display at its worst the authors animus against the Government at present established by law in British India.

The question being whether we are satisfied or not satisfied that the book contains seditious matter the publication of which is punishable under S. 124-A, I. P. C., the only reasonable answer in my opinion is that there is in this book ample to satisfy any Court of justice that the terms of that section have again and again been contravened. The book appears to me to be a sustained attempt to bring into hatred or contempt and to excite disaffection towards the Government established by law in British India. The disapprobation expressed of the measures of Government or of the administrative or other actions of Government is motivated throughout by a desire to excite hatred, contempt and disaffection.

The Advocate-General has referred us to the statement by Strachey, J., in Queen Empress v. Bal Gangadhar (1) at p. 137 of the meaning of S. 124-A, I. P. C., as it then stood:

"A man may criticize or comment upon any measure or act of Government, whether legislative or executive, and freely express his opinion upon it. . . . He may express the strongest condemnation of such measures and he may do so severely and even unreasonably, perversely and unfairly. So long as he confines himself to that, he will be protected by the explanation. But if he goes beyond that and, whether in course of comments upon measures or not, holds up the Government itself to the hatred or contempt of his reader as for instance by attributing to it every sort of evil or misfortune suffered by the people or dwelling adversely on its foreign origin and character or imputing to it base motives or accusing it of hostility or indifference to the welfare of the people—then he is guilty under the section and the explanation will not save him."

Of this book it can hardly be doubted that its leading features are accurately described in the latter portion of the passage just cited. It proceeds indeed upon well worn lines every evil and misfortune, be it the "drink curse" the "opium curse," famine or anything else, is attributed to the English Government whose foreign origin and character is insisted on upon every page. The baseness of its motives is the ever ready explanation of its policy.

In these circumstances Mr. B. C. Chatterjee, counsel for the applicant, contended before us that the criticism of Government was both elaborate and severe but that nevertheless the book does not offend against section 124-A by reason of the fact that it appears from certain passages therein that it is no part of the author's purpose to advocate that India should become entirely independent of the British Empire. Thus in one passage the author says :

"Here lies India's only hope. She must be come an absolutely independent nation with no connexion with Great Britain, or else, remaining in the Empire, she must be given the place of a real partner not that of a subordinate under a partner's name,) a place of as true freedom and of an perfect equality with the other partners in the Empire as that of Australia, or New Zealand or South Africa or Canada "

In other passages, moreover, the book contains criticism of the present form of Government as being contrary to England's own interests and its continuance as the kind of policy which cost her the American colonies and which, if persisted in must cost her India also. In the preface or "foreword," there is a passage in which the author disclaims enmity to Great Britain and states that what he advocates for India he believes to be for England's good as well as that of India. It appears that this position is maintained, so far as the author is concerned, by asserting that there are two Englands one which he likes to think of as the true one and the other which he describes as "this evil and as I believe dangerous England" and "this imperialistic, might-makes-right England" which :

"unless held in check will make India a smouldering volcano of unrest."

On the whole it seems to me to be quite true to say that it is no part of the purpose of the book to argue that all connexion with Great Britain should be abrogated. So long as the author is engaged in denunciation, he has little interest, so far as I can discover, in any particular proposals for reform and the book does not seem to be an argument in favour of any special type of constitution. This circumstance, however, has little bearing upon the question whether the book infringes S. 124-A. It is not necessary for our present purposes to consider whether the advocacy of any particular policy or any particular kind of constitution would necessarily, and of itself, be within the terms of the section. Though there may be policies or doctrines the advocacy of which is otherwise illegal no such question need be considered in this case. The words of the section are:

"brings or attempts to bring into hatred or contempt, or excites or attempts to excite disaffection towards His Majesty or the Government established by law in British India."

No interpretation can be given to these words which would render it possible to hold that the book does not offend against the section.

Mr. Chatterjee suggested that there was room for a distinction between the fact and the form of British Government of India and contended that the attempt, if any, to excite hatred and contempt was in this book directed solely against the particular form of Government now obtaining and was thus innocent under the section. The words used by the legislature are "the Government established by law in British India." The section does not contemplate the probability of attempts being made to excite hatred and contempt against abstractions, but uses a clear phrase for a definite thing, and it would be altogether misinterpreted if effect were given to Mr. Chatterjee's argument. The book itself, moreover, fails altogether to fall into line with the distinction suggested. People who are so unfortunate as to be unable to advocate change in the form of Government without attempting to bring into hatred or contempt or to excite disaffection towards the Government established by law have not been specially favoured by the legislature either by the terms of the section itself or by the explanations. They may take their grievance, if any, to the legislature, but the section while it stands must be interpreted according to the plain and natural meaning of its words. In my opinion this application must be dismissed.

(b) Evidence Act, S. 159—Witness can refresh his memory by referring to document read at or near the transaction—It is immaterial that it was not printed by him.

When a witness wants to refresh his memory under S. 159, he is to do so by referring in Court to the document which he had read at or near the time of the transaction, and it is the fact that he had known it to be correct when he read it that is the justification for his doing so. It is quite immaterial that a document to which the witness refers in Court was not printed by the witness himself or in his presence. It is essential only that he should have read it at or soon after the transaction, to which it relates. [P 333 C 1]

Das Raj Sawhay—for the Crown.

Judgment.—Ram Chandra has been convicted by the Additional District Magistrate of Lahore under S. 124-A, I. P. C., and sentenced to rigorous imprisonment for one year and a fine of Rs. 200 on account of a speech alleged to have been made by him on 19th November 1928, at a public meeting held outside the Mori Gate at Lahore. At the same trial he was also convicted under the same section and sentenced to rigorous imprisonment for two years and a fine of Rs. 300 on account of a speech alleged to have been made by him on 16th December 1928, at a meeting held in the Bradlaugh Hall at Lahore. It was ordered that the sentence of imprisonment should run consecutively. He now appeals against these convictions and sentences.

I take first the speech of 16th December 1928. The prosecution were able to lead evidence of persons who were present at the meeting and who deposed that they heard what the appellant uttered. Among these was Agha Rashid Ahmad, a Sub-Inspector of the C. I. D., who recorded a shorthand report of the speech while it was being made. The version of the speech contained in the report is the version upon which the prosecution has relied and the charge framed is based upon it.

The appellant did not deny that he had spoken at this meeting but he made a defence that his speech was entirely different from the version entered in the charge sheet to which the prosecution witnesses had deposed. He called several witnesses and cited others to depose that they attended the meeting and that they heard what the appellant uttered. There is no doubt that the appellant expected these witnesses to depose that the appellant's words were not those entered in the charge sheet. When Ram Kishan, D. W. 10, was being examined he stated that he had heard the appellant's speech and that next morning he had read a report or account of that speech in the Bande Mataram newspaper of that date. The defence counsel then wanted to ask the witness whether that account which he had read on the following morning was such as he knew to be correct when he read it. This question was disallowed by the learned Magistrate on an objection made by the Public Prosecutor. The defence counsel also wanted that the witness should be permitted to refresh his memory concerning the words of the speech from a copy of the Bande Mataram newspaper bearing the date 18th December 1928, (and presumably published on 17th December). This request was also disallowed on the Public Prosecutor's objection. The reasons which the learned Magistrate recorded for overruling the appellant's counsel on these matters were first that the witness had not himself printed the newspaper nor had seen it in the process of being printed, and secondly, that the defence had not been able to prove that the issue of the newspaper which was tendered in Court contained an account of the speech identical with any report that had been recorded by any reporter while the meeting was going on.

When the learned Magistrate had given his ruling on these points the appellant made a statement closing his defence on the ground that the Magistrate's ruling would debar from coming on the record the remaining evidence upon which he had intended to rely.

Strong exception has been taken before me to the learned Magistrate's ruling on these points and it is contended that the appellant's defence was thereby nullified contrary to law. In my opinion, the learned Magistrate did not take a correct view of the law and his ruling cannot be upheld.

The first point to observe is that the word "writing" used in S. 159, Evidence Act, includes also printed matter (see General Clauses Act 10 of 1897, S. 3, sub-S. 59).

The next point is that when a witness wants to refresh his memory under S. 159, Evidence Act, he is to do so by referring in Court to the document which he had read at or near the time of the transaction, and it is the fact that he had known it to be correct when he read it that is the justification for his doing so. Thus there is no question, as the learned Magistrate seems to have thought of producing in Court any report recorded by a reporter at the meeting, for the simple reason that no such report had ever been read by the witness at or near the time of the transaction.

The next point is that it is quite immaterial that the document to which the witness refers in Court was not printed by the witness himself or in his presence. It is essential only that he should have read it at or soon after the transaction to which it relates.

The final point which has occupied me, though I am not sure whether it was raised before the learned Magistrate, is the fact that the specimen of the newspaper actually produced in Court when the witness was being examined was probably not the identical specimen which the witness says that he had read on the day after the speech. It might seem at first sight that if the specimen which the witness had read is the original, the specimen produced in Court would be only its copy and that, therefore, the Magistrate had under para. 3, S. 159 a discretion to disallow a reference to such a copy. Turning, however, to Explan. 2 to S. 62, Evidence Act, it is found that where a number of documents are all made by one uniform process as in the case of printing, etc., each is primary evidence of the contents of the rest but where they are all copies of a common original they are not primary evidence of the contents of the original. From this it follows that one specimen of a newspaper is not a copy of another specimen of the same newspaper of the same date. There is no relation between them of copy and original. They are all counter-part originals, each being primary evidence of the contents of the rest. The specimen produced in Court is, therefore, primary evidence of the contents of the specimen which the witness had read and I can see no valid reason why in that case the witness cannot refresh his memory by referring as well to one specimen as to another. It may be added that there is a presumption under S. 81, Evidence Act of the genuineness of the specimen actually produced.

For the above reasons I am led to conclude that the ruling of the learned Magistrate was not in accordance with law and that it had the effect of depriving the appellant of his right to put his defence properly before the Court.

In such a case as this the correct course to pursue would ordinarily be to direct under S. 42b, Criminal P. C., that the defence witnesses of the category in question should now be examined by way of additional evidence. I have carefully considered the advisability of adopting this course and have come to the conclusion that it should not be followed. Whatever the memory of these witnesses might have been in March 1929, when they attended the learned Magistrate's Court concerning a speech made in the proceeding December, their memories of actual words used could now be of very little assistance to the Court even when refreshed by a reference to documents read by them soon after the speech. It must, I think, be admitted that the appellant would still remain with a valid grievance that his witness-ses had been examined too long after the date of the speech to carry such conviction to the mind of the Court as they might have carried some months earlier. On this view of the matter I have decided to acquit the appellant on the charge, relating to the speech of 16th December 1928.

Coming now to the speech of 19th November 1928, the appellant admitted that he had made the speech, which has been proved by S. Arjan Singh, Sub-Inspector of the C. I. D., P. W. 2, who was present at the meeting and took a shorthand report of the speech at the time it was being made.

The appellant's learned counsel has argued before me that the version proved by S. Arjan Singh does not represent the entire speech which the appellant made, but comprises only quotations or extracts from it and that the appellant cannot be condemned unless the full speech is before the Court from which the Court could judge the tenor of it as a whole. He has referred me to several authorities, most of which relate to newspaper articles and one of them Bal Gangadhar Tilak v. Emperor (1) to a lengthy and obviously well-considered speech. In the first place I do not find it proved that the prosecution version is not the full speech. S. Arjan Singh clearly deposed that he took down the speech word for word and omitted nothing and that he can write shorthand at 130 words a minute. No defence witness was asked to give any rival version of the speech. In fact no defence witness was called who was present when this speech was made. I hold, therefore, that prosecution version is a full and correct version. The remaining question is whether the speech is within S. 124-A. Reading it as a whole and wherever two interpretations of a phrase are possible giving the appellant the benefit of the more innocent, I find the speech to be seditious.

The appellant led some defence evidence to prove how certain injuries were received by the late Lala Lajpat Rai and what effect they had on his health. The object of this evidence was to show that certain remarks on this subject in the speech were based on facts. Those facts are, however, not important for the purpose of judging the character of the speech. If certain alleged facts are used as a peg on which to hang seditious comments the truth of the facts does not excuse the seditious commentary. I, therefore, express no opinion about this defence evidence and proceed to examine the speech.

In it I find indirect incitements to violent action in the expression that in other countries streams of blood would have been shed and also couplet which begins with the words : " If the arm is not strong." These phrases are somewhat tempered by others where non-violent movements are referred to. On the whole there is not much incitement to violence. On the other hand excitement of hatred and disaffection of the established Government is plentiful. The phrase about shaking the Government goes well beyond disapprobation which Explan. 2 to S. 124-A allows. Then there is the contemptuous charge that the Government believes in force. Disaffection is strongly pronounced in the phrase : " If you want to put an end to this Government " and again in the sentence about the movement of complete independence. These are phrases which colour the whole speech and express its intention. They amount, in my opinion, to sedition.

As regards the sentence I would have reduced it to some extent as the speech is not very violent, but for the fact that the appellant has a previous conviction of recent date under the same section. I dismiss the appeal in respect of the conviction for the speech of 19th November 1928, and confirm the sentence of one year's rigorous imprisonment and fine of Rs. 200. I accept the appeal in respect of the speech of 16th December 1928, and setting aside the conviction and sentence of two years' rigorous imprisonment and Rs. 300 fine, I direct that the appellant be acquitted on that charge and that the fine of Rs. 300 if paid, be refunded.

Emperor—Opposite Party.

Criminal Revn. Case No. 617 of 1929, and Criminal Revn. Petn. No. 561 of 1929, Decided on 29th November 1929.

(a) Madras District Municipalities Act, Sch. 4, R. 30—Distraint warrant signed by facsimile stamp is irregular and invalid.

Where an officer leaves a facsimile stamp of his signature behind him, which the peons continue to use, a warrant issued stamped by such facsimile is quite irregular and invalid.

(b) Madras District Municipalities Act, Sch. 4, R. 30—Warrant must be issued under sign manual—Civil P. C., S. 2 (20) has no application to District Municipalities Act—But illiterate may affix mark under Madras General Clauses Act, S. 3 (29).

Under the District Municipalities Act a warrant must bear the signature of the Chairman. Signature must be taken in its accepted sense of sign manual. The fact that in S. 2 (20), Civil P. C., sign is used as including stamp has no bearing on the Madras District Municipalities Act. But if the Chairman happens to be illiterate, under S. 3 (20), Madras General Clauses Act, he may affix his mark. [P 335 C 2]

(c) Madras District Municipalities Act, Sch. 4, R. 31—Distrainer has no right to take front door—Accused resisting such distraint is protected by rule of self defence and cannot be convicted under Penal Code, S. 332.

A distrainer having a warrant has no right to take the front door of a house, and if he threatens to do so, such a proceeding renders the house unsafe calling for immediate defence of private property. Further if the accused resists such attempts he cannot be said to have exceeded his right of self-defence and any conviction under Penal Code, S. 332, is liable to be set aside: 13 Mad. 518, Foll. [P 335 C 2]

Order.—The two petitioners have been sentenced to three months' simple imprisonment and Rs. 50 fine under S. 332, I. P. C., for resisting a distraint under a warrant purporting to have been issued by the Municipal Chairman of Cuddappah. It seems clear that there was no warrant. The prosecution theory is that the ex-Chairman left a facsimile stamp of his signature behind him, which the peons continued to use. Of course this would be quite irregular and would give no validity to a warrant.

It is clear from Appendix A of Sch. 4, District Municipalities Act that the warrant must bear the signature of the chairman. Signature must be taken in its accepted sense of sign manual. The fact that in S. 2 (20), Civil P. C., sign is used as including stamp has no bearing on the Madras District Municipalities Act. The only departure from the general rule is that if the Chairman happens to be illiterate, under S. 3 (29) Madras General Clauses Act he may affix his mark. Even if the distrainers had a warrant they had no right to do so as they threatened, and take the front door of the house Queen Empress v. Sahaik Ibrahim (1), a proceeding which rendered the house unsafe, and called for immediate defence of private property. In the circumstances I am not prepared to hold that the accused exceeded that right. The conviction is set aside and the fine ordered to be refunded. Accuseds' bail is released.

The nomination of a Jury is a nomination of the Court which has to try the case and irregularity with regard to that matter is an irregularity which goes to the root of the proceedings. Judgment.—This rule is directed against the order of the Magistrate made on 13th June 1929, as a result of an award by a Jury under Chap. 10, Criminal P. C. He ordered the petitioners to remove an encroachment being a wall on plot No. 234 on or before 27th June 1929. Execution of this order was stayed on 27th June 1926, till the disposal of an appeal which was pending before the Sessions Judge.

I very much regret to have set aside the order of the Magistrate having regard to the fact that although there was irregularity in the proceedings, it is perfectly clear to me that so far as it was possible, the petitioner waived this irregularity. The first contention is that the Jury which was summoned was appointed in contravention of the provisions of S. 138, Criminal P. C. That section provides that :

"On receiving an application under S. 135 to appoint a jury, the Magistrate shall forthwith appoint a jury consisting of an uneven number of persons not less than five, of whom the foreman and one-half of the remaining members shall be nominated by the Magistrate. . . ."

In this case the Magistrate nominated the foreman, but stated that the parties would nominate the remainder and that in fact was done ; two were nominated by the petitioners and two were nominated by the opposite party. It is contended that this is an irregularity by reason of the provisions of S. 537, Criminal P. C. It is to be noticed that in S. 537 the errors and omissions which are cured by that section are stated to be in :

"the complaint, summons, warrant, charge, proclamation, order, judgment or other proceedings before or during trial" and then in sub-para. (c) mention is made of an omission to revise a list of jurors or assessors in accordance with S. 324 ; and apart from the mention of a misdirection to the jury in subpara. (a) there is nothing in the whole of this section about the appointment or nomination of a jury. Now quite clearly the nomination of a jury is a nomination of the Court, which has to try the case and it would seem that irregularity with regard to that matter is an irregularity which goes to the root of the proceedings. Therefore, in my judgment it is doubtful whether in any event the provisions of S. 537, Criminal P. C., could cure the irregularity in this respect. In connexion with this point the decision in Upendra Nath v. Khitish Chandra (1) is relied upon. In that case similar irregularity in the appointment of a jury was held to be incapable of making a legally binding award. However, having regard to the other point in the case it is unnecessary for me to say whether as a matter of law the irregularity in the appointment of the jurors in the case was such as could not be cured by S. 537, Criminal P. C. The other point in the case is that the Magistrate did not comply with the provisions of S. 139-A, Criminal P. C. In this connexion I might mention that it is clear that the petitioners the moment they were summoned to come before the Magistrate asked for a jury, and, therefore, it seems to me that there was a clear waiver of their rights under S. 139-A. But I have the gravest doubt whether there can be a waiver of a mandatory provision such as is contained in S. 139-A of the Code. The section provides that

"where an order is made under S. 133 of the Code, . . . the Magistrate shall, on the appearance, before him of the person against whom the order was made, question him as to whether he denies the existence of any public right in respect of the way, river, channel or place, and, if he does so, the Magistrate shall, before proceeding under S. 137 or S. 138, inquire into the matter."

Now there was no inquiry by the Magistrate. If there had been it might have resulted in the necessity of proceeding under the second subsection of S. 139-A. As I have said, there was no inquiry and therefore, it is idle to speculate as to what the result of such inquiry would have been. It is contended that in the petitioners' written statement the question of whether the land was private property or public land was not disputed, that is to say, that it was admitted that it was a public land and the fact desired that there had been an encroachment. In my judgment I do not think that this contention is supported by a perusal of the written statement ; but in any event that matter is immaterial, because the section quite clearly means that the party against whom the order under S. 133 is directed is under no necessity of contending that it is his private land, but on the other hand it is obligatory on the part of the Magistrate to inquire whether that in fact is the contention of the party or not. In these circumstances the award of the jury is set aside. The matter will proceed from the stage in which the proceedings had reached on the date when the petitioner first came before the Magistrate after being served with the order under S. 133, and the Magistrate will determine the matter according to law.

ACT 2 of 1930

(Received G. G's assent on 1st March 1930)

The Dangerous Drugs Act

This Act has been enacted for centralising and vesting the control of the operations relating to Dangerous Drugs in G. G. in Council. It applies to the whole of British India including British Baluchistan and Sonthal Pergannas.

Section 2 gives the various definitions of different kinds of Dangerous Drugs and of acts of importing, exporting, transporting etc.

Section 3 gives G. G. in Council power to frame rules for determining percentage.

Sections 4 to 9 deal with prohibition and control over dealings with the "Dangerous Drugs."

Sections 10 to 21 deal with offences and punishments therefor including attempts and abetments.

Sections 22 to 35 deal with procedure regarding issue of warrants, seizure and arrest without warrant, the mode in which they are to be effected and incidental rights and liabilities of the excise officers and the offenders, including the rules for confiscations etc.

Sections 36 to 41 are miscellaneous. S. 36 relates to rules made under the Act. S. 37 deals with recovery of sums due to Government. S. 38 relates to applicability of Sea Customs Act. S. 39 relates to savings of Local Acts.

Schedule 1 deals with bonds to abstain from the commission of offences under the Act.

Schedule 2 gives the extent to which local Acts have been amended:

ACT 6 of 1930

(Received G. G's assent on 15th March 1930)

Amends the Prisons Act, 1894.

In S. 27, Cl. (2), Prisons Act 1894, "21" is substituted for "18."

ACT 9 of 1930

(Received G. G's assent on 20th March 1930)

Amends the Cantonments (House Accommodation) Act, 1923

Clause (bb), S. 2, sub-S. 1, has been omitted. Cl. (d), sub-S. 1, has been amended so as to include Officer Commanding the district. S. 6 has been now substituted by new section. In S. 7 a proviso has been added. S. 8 has been omitted. By the amended S. 13, sub-S. 2, "Civil Court" has been substituted for "committee of arbitration." In sub-S. (1), S. 15, word "30" has been substituted for the word "15." The same is the case with S. 16, sub-Ss. (1) and (2). S. 17 has been substituted for the old S. 17. The whole of Chap. 4 has been substituted by a new Chap. 4. S. 29 has been amended. The old S. 30 has been substituted by a new S. 30. S. 34-A has been added.

Canon Law and a Registrar Marriage,

By

A. PHIL, FONSECA, B. A. LL.B., PLEADER, KARACHI

I will now consider the Code of Canon Law. Can it be possible or even probable that the drafts-man was so ignorant of such a public fact as a civil marriage that he did not provide for such a case. I will not refer to canons already quoted in the judgments. By Canon 6 ignorantia juris neminem excusat, and Canon 18 is very important if there is:

"any doubt or ambiguity one must refer to the previous law in force, the purpose and object of the law and the circumstances, and the mind of the legislator."

There can be no doubt that the marriage is forbidden, as that is the opinion of all canonists. By Canon 16 this opinion should have been followed. Kemp, J., in dealing with the impediments after Canon 1035 has omitted to refer to Canon 1036 (2) and (3) concerning a diriment impediment and a grave prohibition. Further, Canon 1042 perfectly includes clandestinity. The ordinary impediments and objections in Indian and English law to the validity of a marriage e. g., affinity, prohibited degrees etc., are referred to here as those of a minor order but all the rest are of a major order. This is clear and sweeping and it must include clandestinity. Thus, one must conclude that this is the law and that there is a prohibition. At least the Tamesi decree is clear and it should have been enforced. It is unnecessary to refer to other canons in support of my arguments at this stage. Again, marriages ex facie ecclesiae are recognised by the Catholic Church in only two instances and no other. Does this not exclude clandestinity? The ordinary maxim supports this view expressio unius alterius exclusio. Consequently, a civil marriage is prohibited by the Code of Canon as explained in Kemp, J.'s judgment.

Kemp, J., speaks of "an entire nullity." What is null must be void. That is the sense in which it is used. To have no existence in law it must be forbidden or prohibited. A civil marriage alone is recognized by law where expressly it is compulsory by statute.

In India a religious marriage is attended with full legal status as much as a civil marriage of non-Catholics. If Canon Law lays down that a civil marriage produces a state of concubinage, which Kemp, J., admits is a state of sin, it must be forbidden. If the effect is forbidden it must follow that the cause is equally forbidden. The effect, murder, is punished and therefore forbidden, so, the cause is equally forbidden. The same may be said of other null and void contracts. It is clear from the foregoing that Canon Law legislates regarding the validity of marriages, and this is partly admitted in the judgments: vide essentials. From the findings it follows that certain implications, which the Judges say do not arise certainly do so, as I have tried to show above. And regarding custom and usage, I will quote two sound rules of interpretation optimus legis interpret consuetudor optimus interpret rerum usus. These also apply.

In conclusion, I will only refer to the amendment of S. 88. An explanation may be added in these words. Personal Law includes the forms and essentials of Hindu, Mahomedan and Canon Laws. An unusual method would be to add a section to Canon 1012 or 1035 prohibiting clandestinity. It will be really a surprise to the Vatican authorities that India makes an amendment necessary but it will be more expeditious.*

*NOTE on Berthiasume v. Dastous, 1930 P.C. 1929, cited by Kemp, J. The facts of this case are quite different. Two Canadians, their domicile being Canadian, married in France, where a certificate of a civil marriage is a condition precedent to a religious marriage by the French Code. The marriage according to the French Law was void because of its absence. The remarks of Viscount Dunedin are relevant only when a conflict of laws arises, or when a reference to international law becomes necessary. The conclusion of the Privy Council really supports the Catholic position, because they hold in favour of the religious marriage on the Doctrine of the Canon Law regarding a putative marriage, which "has been adopted by many systems" including the Quebec Code. Viscount Dunedin states clearly, she was "from her antecedents and religion quite incapable of considering marriage as anything but a religious ceremony." No S. 88 arose here for interpretation. Here the marriage was contracted in India, not outside India, where a civil ceremony was not necessary. If the Canon Law was not the personal law, or if the Portuguese domicile fell for consideration, the rules of international law would apply to the case. It is important to note that the original and appellate Courts held in favour of a valid marriage, which was confirmed by the Privy Council on the ground stated above.

The Sarda Act and after

By .

B. Srinivasa Rao, M.A., B.L., Vakil, Guntur.

Now that Act 19 of 1929, more popularly known as the Sarda Act, is a fait accompli and the Governor-General of India has given his assent thereto, the orthodox critics and opponents of the measure seem to be desperately trying to get at some device by which to get over its penal provisions. The device that easily strikes them, is a journey to the nearest Native State, with a view to solemnise the prohibited marriage, within that State. Readers of the All India Reporter may well ask, is this a successful device? or does the law of the land attach the same penalty to it? But before that question is answered, a brief survey of the Act is necessary.

The preamble clearly enunciates the purpose of the measure, as an act to restrain the solemnisation of child-marriages; and this purpose is sought to be achieved by eleven short sections: of which S. 1 deals with title, extent and commencement; S. 2 gives definitions; Ss. 3-7 deal with penalties; and Ss. 8 and 9 with jurisdiction and cognizance; while the powers of the Court relating to preliminary inquiries and security for costs, are described in the last two sections of the Act.

As if to reconcile the masses as well as the classes, to the new awakening, the enforcement of the measure has been put off till 1st April 1930. A child has been defined as a male under 18, or a female under 14; and child-marriage, has been defined as a marriage to which either of the contracting parties is a child. The punishment for an offending adult under 21 is limited to a maximum fine of Rs. 1,000; while adults over 21 are liable to an additional sentence of a month's imprisonment. The abettors are likewise dealt with, for performing, conducting or directing, any child-marriage.

The foregoing resume of the Act suffices to start our discussion. To take a concrete case, A and B are British Indian subjects of His Majesty. A has a daughter aged 11 while B has a son aged 22. A wants to give his daughter in marriage to B's son. A and B consent to perform this in British India on 1st April 1930. In this case the bride will escape with fine, but the bridegroom as well as A and B, are liable to be punished with a month's simple imprisonment as well.

Can this be averted by A and B going to Hyderabad Deccan, for instance; and perform the marriage there; and what differences does it make, if A and B do not personally go to the Native State but send their children with instructions to solemnise their marriage there? That is the question to be answered. But to get at a complete answer to that question, we have to travel a little outside the Sarda Act, and turn our attention to the Penal Code and the Code of Criminal Procedure. It is to these enactments we have to look for enlightenment in doubtful matters, except in cases where reference to them has been specifically barred.

The word "Offence" has been defined by sub-S. (0), S. 4, Criminal P. C., as an act or omission, made punishable by any law for the time being in force : and S. 188 of the same Code imposes a liability on Indian subjects for punishment in British Courts, even in cases where the offence is committed beyond British India. The only proviso to the application of that section is that the Political Agent or the Local Government, as the case may be, has to certify to the fitness of inquiry into the charge.

For clearer understanding, the section is reproduced below :

"Section 188 : where a Native Indian subject of His Majesty commits an offence, at any place, without and beyond the limits of British India, or when any British subject commits an offence in the territories of any Native Prince or Chief in India or, he may be dealt with, in respect of such offence, as if it had been committed at any place within British India, at which he may be found :

Provided that no such charge shall be inquired into in British India, unless the Political Agent, if there is one, for the territory in which the offence is alleged to have been committed, certifies that in his opinion, the charge ought to be inquired into in British India; and where there is no Political Agent, the sanction of the Local Government shall be required :

Along with this, S. 108-A, I.P.C., has to be considered. This new section has been added by the Indian Penal Code Amendment Act (4 of 1898) and reads :

"A person abets an offence within the meaning of this Code, who in British India, abets the commission of any act, without and beyond British India, which would constitute an offence, if committed in British India."

Even a cursory reading of the above extracts would incline us to the view that our orthodox critics cannot escape the penal provisions of Act 19 of 1929; even if they actually do not go to Hyderabad, but send their children to that place for the specific purpose of having their marriage performed there. It has further to be remembered that sub-S. 2; S. 6, Sarda Act, draws a rebuttable presumption, that where a minor has contracted a child-marriage, the person having charge of such minor, has failed to prevent the marriage from being solemnised. In other words the parents the prima facie held to be abettors.

That is where we stand; and it makes no difference whether the prohibited marriage is solemnised within or without British India; and whether or not the parents actually accompany them to the Native States, for the purpose of solemnising the marriage of their children.

As a drowning man catches at a straw, the orthodox critic will hereafter have to shift the scene of his activity to the chambers of Political Agents, and Government Houses, thanks to Rai Sahib Harabilas Sarda. The orthodox critic will have to take the further precaution, that the Native State to which he proposes to go, or send his children, does not itself contain a local parallel Act, like the Infant Marriage Prevention Act, of Baroda, or the Child Marriage Prevention Act of Rajkot.

It is not the purpose of this article to canvass the necessity or desirability of such a measure as the Sarda Act, but only to elucidate the legal position of the orthodox critics who think they can get over the penal provisions of the Act, by running to the nearest Native State for achieving the very purpose, forbidden within British India.

In fairness it has, however, to be conceded that the matter under discussion is by no means free from doubt. From the nature of things, there cannot be case law to illumine us; nor a plentiful crop of text books and commentaries, to guide us. A priori considerations may not always assist us in coming to a correct conclusion; and it has also to be remembered that where angels fear to tread, it may not be wise for others to rush in. Nevertheless, I have tried, in the crowded columns of the All India Reporter, to develop a categorical statement of the law on the subject; with a view to sound a note of warning to my orthodox friends, against a possibly precipitate path of peril: even if they should hold that the Sarda Act has resulted as Justice Mackay of the Madras High Court has observed not merely in a social revolution, but "a seismic disturbance of an age-long practice."

BHIDE, J.

Muhammad Rafi—Appellant.

v.

Emperor—Opposite Party.

Criminal Appeal No. 602 of 1929, Decided on 6th August 1929, from an order of Magistrate, First Class, Sialkot, D/- 4th June 1929.

Penal Code, Ss. 320 and 326—Wound on neck with sharp edged weapon is dangerous to life, but it is not sufficient in itself to cause death.

The accused, a young man of twenty, inflicted a wound with a sharp-edged weapon on the neck of his friend in a sudden impulse as a result of a quarrel. The wound became septic and wounded man died.

Held: that a wound on the neck was "dangerous to life" within the meaning of Cl. 8, S. 320 and was therefore grievous. But the wound itself was not in itself sufficient to cause death and the circumstances did not justify a finding that the accused knew that his act was likely to cause death. Considering the age of the accused and the circumstances, the sentence of seven years passed on the accused was very severe and sentence for two years was sufficient. A. I. R. 1922 Lah. 26, Ref. [P 338 C 1, 2]

Muhammad Amin—for Appellant.

Shambu Lal Puri—for the Crown.

Judgment.—The appellant Muhammad Rafi alias Raffo, aged about 18 or 20 has been convicted in this case under S. 304 (II), I. P. C., for causing the death of another youth named Habibullah, aged about 20, by inflicting an injury on his neck with a pen-knife and has been sentenced to rigorous imprisonment for seven years.

The prosecution story briefly was that on 10th March 1929, at about mid-day, there was a quarrel between the two boys over a loan of ten annas and later on, at about 1 p. m. when the deceased was sitting at the shop of one Allah Rakha, a mochi, the appellant came up and inflicted an injury on his neck with a pen-knife from behind. The deceased was taken to the hospital and died there fifteen days later as the result of septic poisoning from the wound.

The prosecution case rests on a dying declaration made by the deceased to a Magistrate at about 6 p. m. on the day on which he was wounded and the testimony of one Siraj (P. W. No. 9). There were three other witnesses relied on by the prosecution, viz., Allah Rakha Mochi, Allah Rakha Gujjar and Umar Din, but they have not supported the prosecution story as stated above.

As regards the dying declaration Ex. P. A. recorded by the Magistrate, the learned counsel for the appellant had urged that the document itself cannot be treated as evidence under S. 160, Evidence Act as the Magistrate did not state that he had no recollection of the facts and that he could only say that whatever he had recorded was correct [see Partab Singh v. Emperor (1).] The Magistrate has, however, given some of the facts orally. He has deposed that the neck of the deceased was bandaged and on being questioned the deceased told him that Raffo, son of Shafi, of his own Mohalla had stabbed him with a knife at 1 p. m. at the shop of Allah Rakha mochi. The Magistrate had not given orally the details of the previous quarrel which appear in Ex. P. A. There is, however, no independent evidence on the record about this previous quarrel and the learned trial Magistrate has disbelieved it as a probable improvement introduced to heighten the gravity of the offence. The Magistrate who recorded the dying declaration states that there were four or five persons sitting by the side of the deceased when the declaration was recorded and that he suspected that they prompted him when this part of the story, i. e. about the previous quarrel was narrated to him. This fact no doubt throws suspicion on the dying declaration. At the same time, I do not think there is any good reason to doubt the truth of the deceased's allegation, that it was the appellant who inflicted the injury on the neck; for there is nothing on the record to show that the deceased or his relations had any motive to implicate the appellant falsely. Although innocent persons are sometimes implicated with the guilty in cases of this description it must be remembered that only one person, viz., the appellant was charged in this case, and I cannot believe in the circumstances that he would have been charged instead of the real culprit, if the offence had been committed by some one else.

The dying declaration is corroborated by the evidence of Siraj. The learned counsel for the appellant has pointed out certain discrepancies in the statement of this witness before the Police and in Court but this witness also appears to be distinguished and I see no good reason to distrust his evidence as the main facts regarding the attack made by the appellant on the deceased in his presence.

The two Allah Rakhas and Umar Din have not supported the prosecution story, but as the learned Magistrate has pointed out their statement are mutually inconsistent and it seems that they have deliberately refrained from disclosing the truth in order to save the appellant.

The appellant pleaded not guilty but could give no reasonable explanation of the charge brought against him. He produced some evidence in defence to show that he was in Lahore on the date of the offence. This was not even alleged by him in his statement and the evidence produced is valueless.

In my judgment, it is proved beyond any doubt that it was the appellant who inflicted the injury on the neck of the deceased which resulted in his death. Owing to the paucity of the evidence as regards the circumstances which led to the commission of the offence, the determination of the nature of the offence is not free from difficulty. There is no reliable evidence as to the motive for the offence but the probability is that it was committed on a sudden impulse as the result of a quarrel.

The medical evidence shows that the injury was on the right side of the neck about 2½" by ½" in dimension and was inflicted with a sharp-edged weapon. The Assistant Surgeon, who treated the deceased has, however, deposed that there was every possibility of the deceased surviving but for the wound becoming septic, apparently as a result of it being pressed with hands and bandaged with dirty cloth in the initial stages before the deceased was taken to the hospital. From the medical evidence, it thus appears that the wound was not in itself sufficient to cause death. I do not think the circumstances of the case justify a finding that the appellant knew that his act was likely to cause death. At the same time, a wound on the neck, must, I think be at least considered to be 'dangerous to life' within the meaning of Cl. 8, S. 320, I. P. C., and therefore 'grievous.'

I alter the conviction of the appellant to one under S. 326, I. P. C. As regards the sentence, the appellant's age is given in the record as 17 or 18. The learned Magistrate has estimated it in his judgment as 20. Even taking the latter figure to be correct, the sentence of seven years passed on him, seems very severe in view of all the circumstances. The facts of the case are somewhat similar to those in Ghulam Muhayuddin v. Emperor (2) in which the accused was awarded a sentence of three years, though the injury was more serious and resulted in death in a few hours. I think, a sentence of rigorous imprisonment for two years will meet the ends of justice in the present case and I reduce the sentence to this term accordingly.

FFORDE, J.

Anand Kishore—Accused—Appellant.
v.

Emperor—Opposite Party.

Criminal Appeal No. 361 of 1929, Decided on 7th May 1929, from order of Addl. Dist. Magistrate, Lahore, D/- 2nd April 1929.

(a) Penal Code, S. 124-A — Speech in which the speaker approves of violence as means of achieving self-Government amounts to offence under S. 124-A.

A speech in which the speaker exhorts his audience to persuade Congress to alter their constitutional policy of non-violence into a policy of anarchy is intended to excite disaffection towards the established Government and amounts to an offence under S. 124-A. To advise a person to persuade others to adopt violence as a means of attaining a political goal is no less objectionable than advising that person to commit violence himself for that purpose. In either case the advice is to pursue a course of action which is calculated to disturb the tranquility of the State. It is a recommendation to oppose the established Government by force. Such a speech as a whole is obviously calculated to cause disaffection towards the Government established by law and the speaker must be deemed to have that intent.

[P 339 C 2]

(b) Penal Code, S. 124-A—Accused of peaceful character committing offence on impulse—Sentence of 12 months was reduced to what had been undergone.

Where the offence is a first offence and committed by a person of peaceful character on the impulse of the moment, the sentence of 12 months' rigorous imprisonment and a fine or Rs. 500 is somewhat severe and should be reduced to wit, to what had been undergone. [P 341 C 1]

Gokal Chand Narang and Amin Chand—for Appellant.

C. H. Carden Noad—for the Crown.

Judgment.—The appellant has been convicted under S. 124-A, I. P. C. of having delivered a speech on 16th December 1928, the intent of which was to excite or attempt to excite disaffection towards the Government established by law in British India. The speech which he is alleged to have made, according to the evidence of the principal witness for the Crown Sub-Inspector, Agha Rashid Ahmad, is as follows:

"As a member of Congress I shall not say that you should resort to violence, because I have taken the vow of non-violence. But I shall try in the Congress to secure a change in the creed of non-violence. I beg to say from a personal stand-point that while Mahatma Gandhi has rendered a service to the country he has caused a severe loss to us also. The army of the bureaucracy could not have achieved that success which one command of Mahatma Gandhi has achieved. Bengalis resorted to violence in order to secure the cancellation of the partition of Bengal. You should force the Congress to discard the programme of non-violence because Swaraj cannot be attained by it. My personal opinion is that you should resort to violence if we should obtain Swaraj by anarchism and violence. You should study history. The obvious work that you should do is that you should enter the Congress and get non-violence discarded. I personally believe that it was non-violence which emboldened the bureaucracy to deal lathi blows to Lala Lajpat Rai and Jawhar Lal Nehru. Gandhi Ji has said that we should not constitute secret societies. But the first work that you should do is to secure the alteration of the Congress creed, so that there should remain no distinction between violence and non-violence."

This version of the speech delivered by the appellant on the occasion in question is stated by the C. I. D. witness to have been reduced to shorthand notes and he has sworn to the accuracy of that version by refreshing his memory from the actual shorthand notes which were taken at the time. I see no reason why this witness' evidence should not be accepted. He has no motive whatsoever to single out the appellant and in the absence of any evidence to his discredit it must be assumed that a person of this officer's standing is speaking the truth. The other two witnesses who purport to give substantially the same version of the speech do not impress me as persons to whose evidence much weight can be attached. Dr. Narang in a very powerful defence on behalf of the appellant has urged that even taking the speech as it is deposed to by the police witness, that speech does not establish an offence under S. 124-A, I. P. C. The contention I am unable to accept. There cannot be the slightest doubt that the speaker by exhorting his audience to persuade Congress to alter their constitutional policy of non-violence into a policy of anarchy was exciting and intended to excite disaffection towards the established Government. It is true that he states in his speech that:

"as a member of Congress I shall not say that you should not resort to violence" but later on he stated that his personal opinion was that "you should resort to violence if we would be obtain Swaraj by anarchism and violence."

Moreover, he has pointed out to his audience that but for the policy of non-violence the "bureaucracy would not have permitted lathi blows to be dealt with to Lala Lajpat Rai and Jawahar Lal Nehru."

I have not the slightest doubt that the speech as proved by the official witness constitutes an offence under S. 124-A, I. P. C.

The speaker approves of violence as a means of achieving self-Government. To advise a person to persuade others to adopt violence as a means of attaining a political goal, is no less objectionable than advising that person to commit violence himself for that purpose. In either case the advice is to pursue a course of action which is calculated to disturb the tranquility of the State. It is a recommendation to oppose the established Government by means of force. Such a speech read as a whole is obviously calculated to cause disaffection to the Government established by law and the speaker must be deemed to have had that intent when he uttered the words in question.

Dr. Narang has very strongly contended that this version of the speech should not be accepted. He contends that his client was rather deprecating the policy of violence towards the established Government than advocating it. He says that even the official report of the speech should be read as a warning to the audience not to resort to violence but rather to enter the Congress party and achieve their object. But this view, as I have said, is obviously untenable if one is to accept the speech as sworn to by the Sub-Inspector. Even if the speech had rested at exhorting the audience to attempt to convert the Congress policy of non-violence to one of anarchy, it would still, as I have already explained, come within the purview of S. 124-A. I do not rely only on the evidence of the Sub-Inspector in coming to the conclusion that the appellant did intend to use words likely to cause disaffection towards the established Government, but I am fortified in this view by some of the remarks which one of the defence witnesses let fall in the course of his examination. I would refer to the evidence of Lala Ganpat Rai, D. W. No. 11. In the course of his examination-in-chief he expressed himself as follows:

"The purport of his speech was that the people were dissatisfied with the Congress creed of non-violence. He exhorted his audience to remain non-violent and said that, being a member of the Congress he could not and would not break the pledge he had taken. He added that he would not advise violence till such time as the creed had been changed."

In other words, according to this witness the speaker excused himself from advocating the policy of violence owing to his pledge to Congress. He expressed, however, his intention of ceasing to maintain a non-violent political attitude if the audience succeeded in changing the policy of the Congress party. Dr. Narang has argued that as it is known to everybody that persons who belong to the Congress party could never be induced to change their policy of non-violence for one of violence, therefore, the speaker must be understood to have intended to dissuade the audience from themselves attempting to enforce their political views by violent methods. The witness, however, stated in cross-examination that the "kakori martyrs," including persons who were sentenced to death were Congressmen and he added that it was said in the meeting that they were Congressmen. If that be so the audience would be inclined, I take it, to assume that Congressmen could by active propaganda be persuaded to adopt a violent policy. However, I need not pursue the very ingenious and able argument of Dr. Narang any further as I am satisfied that the speech delivered by the appellant is accurately given in the evidence of the Sub-Inspector.

There remains the question of the penalty which has been imposed upon the appellant. It appears that the appellant had no intention of attending the meeting held by "Naujawan Bharat Sabha" but happened to be in Bradlaugh Hall at the time attending a Congress meeting. The meeting in commemoration of the kakori crime took place after the Congress meeting and the appellant apparently, was persuaded by one of the speakers at the second meeting to come into the Hall. He was also asked, though he was not one of the official speakers, to express his views, and it was not until all the speeches were delivered that he got up and said a few words, and, admittedly, he did not speak for more than a few minutes. Dr. Narang states that the appellant is a well connected person of respectable antecedents and is of a peaceful and harmless character. He is a man of 45 and a bookseller and it is not suggested that he has ever before been a party to any meeting of a seditious or violent nature. The learned Government-Advocate agrees that the appellant in attending the meeting and in making his speech acted on the impulse of the moment, and had not originally intended to have had anything to do with that meeting. I am inclined to think that the appellant did act rather on the impulse of the moment, and, having been induced to attend a meeting of the kind he felt that he could hardly leave it without saying something that was not antagonistic to the views of the audience which he was to address. I do not for a moment desire to minimise the gravity of the appellant's conduct in using the expressions he did at that gathering.

There is no doubt that an incitement to political violence, expressed in moderate language by a respectable person, would have more effect upon ordinary people than the ranting of an irresponsible individual. At the same time I am impressed by the previous character of the appellant and I think that for a first offence—having regard to all the circumstances the punishment which has been imposed is somewhat severe. The appellant was sentenced to 12 months' rigorous imprisonment and a fine of Rs. 500. He has already undergone five weeks' imprisonment. I think that, bearing in mind the character and antecedents of the appellant and the circumstances under which he was persuaded to address the audience, it would meet the ends of justice if the imprisonment is reduced to the punishment already undergone. At the same time I would confirm the penalty of fine with the alternative, in default of payment, of further three month's rigorous imprisonment.

ZAFAR ALI, J.

Satya Pal—Convict—Appellant.

v.

Emperor—Opposite Party.

Criminal Appeal No. 725 of 1929, Decided on 11th November 1929, against order of the Addl. Dist. Magistrate, Delhi, D/- 11th July 1929.

(a) Criminal P. C., S. 497—Offence under S. 124-A, Penal Code—Accused on bail—Charge read—Accused praying for adjournment for argument before pleading—If adjournment granted bail need not be cancelled.

In a trial for an offence under S. 124-A, if the accused is on bail and the charge being read before pleading the accused asks for an adjournment for argument and the Magistrate agrees to it, the Magistrate is not bound to cancel the bail. [P 341 C 2]

(b) Penal Code, S. 124-A—To advocate expulsion of Englishmen from India is tantamount to asking for subversion of Government established by law.

At present to advocate expulsion of Englishmen from India is tantamount to asking for the subversion of Government now established by law. [P 342 C 1, 2]

(c) Penal Code, S. 124-A — "War" and "warring against Government" do not necessarily make speech seditious.

The word "jung" in urdu is often used metaphorically and means the same thing as the implication of the word war in such expressions as "warring elements," "warring opinions" and so on, and unless there is something expressly to the contrary in a speech the expression "war against the Government" does not transgress the border line between exciting discontent and exciting disaffection. [P 342 C 2]

Gokal Chand Narang and Mohammad Alam—for Appellant.

Abdul Rashid and Suraj Narain—for the Crown.

Judgment.—The appellant in this case is Dr. Satya Pal, a prominent congressman of this province. He addressed a public meeting in the Queen's Garden at Delhi on 10th March 1929, and the sequal was that the Senior Superintendent of Police of Delhi lodged a complaint against him with the sanction of the Local Government, charging him with having delivered a speech which was seditious within the purview of S. 124-A, I. P. C. The appellant was tried by the Additional District Magistrate of Delhi, who found him guilty and sentenced him to rigorous imprisonment for two years and a fine of Rs. 500 or in default to further rigorous imprisonment for six months.

The speech was in Urdu and was taken down in shorthand by a C. I. D. Reporter who produced a transcription of it as well as its translation into English. This Reporter was the principal prosecution witness in the case. Dr. Satya Pal did not cross-examine him or any other prosecution witness, nor did he produce any witness in defence. When examined by the Magistrate he admitted that the translation was "a fair summary of his speech." In the written statement that he filed he admitted that:

"the governing sentiment expressed in that speech was one of entire dissatisfaction with the present system of Government and the desire to replace that system by swaraj by which he meant the Government of India by Indians freed from alien domination."

In these circumstances the Magistrate had no other alternative nor has this Court than to accept the report of the speech as correct and to determine whether it was seditious within the purview of S. 124-A, I. P. C.

When the Magistrate read out the charge under the section to the appellant he did not plead, but asked for an adjournment for arguments. The Magistrate agreed to this but at the same time cancelled his bail bond and ordered his arrest. Hearing this Dr. Satya Pal withdrew his prayer for an adjournment. Counsel for the appellant Dr. Narang complains that the Magistrate did not afford reasonable facilities to the appellant to defend himself and refers chiefly to the above incident in support of the said complaint. All that I consider necessary to remark in this connexion is that the Magistrate was not bound, as he thought he was, to cancel the bond and it would have been of no consequence to let the appellant remain on bail till final orders.

Coming to the merits, Dr. Narang argued that the speech could not appear to be seditious if read as a whole in "a fair, free and liberal spirit," and that, as observed by Fitzgerald, J., in Sullivan (1) "the case should be viewed in a free, bold, manly and generous spirit towards the appellant." I am of opinion that the utterance as a whole sounds seditious, as the speaker's theme throughout was that the Government was tyrannical and that Englishmen or English rulers were devoid of all feeling of sympathy towards India and Indians. According to the appellant's admission, it was the speech of a political worker who was highly dissatisfied with the present system of Government, and it is clear from the speech that his aim and object was to impress upon the audience the paramount necessity of making a sustained effort for independence and to gain it or to perish in the struggle for it. It is not, therefore, necessary to produce the whole of the speech, but the following excerpts therefrom will amply bear out the above remarks:

"These Englishmen have been ruling over us for long in a highly oppressive and tyrannical manner. During 150 years they have, by destroying all "the good things of India, rendered India crippled, penniless, helpless, forlorn, dishonoured, degraded and disgraced." * * * "The greater the tyranny the more the Indians will realize their duty."

Then follows a conversation between a Martial Law prisoner and his wife, who said:

"That his son was not to go to a school where even the shadow of an Englishman was near and that Englishmen should be turned out of India." * * * "English rule was not required in India even for a single moment."

The speaker ended by saying:

"Brothers and sisters; take a pledge, God to witness, that either you will have your chests perforated by bullets in this battle field, reduce yourself to dust, or you will turn out of India these proud, pharaoh-tempered merciless and oppressive Englishmen."

The above statements and sentiment against the Englishmen in India were practically against the British Government in India because Englishmen constitute the predominating element in the administration and Government of this country. Thus the natural consequence of the appellant's speech was to bring into hatred or contempt or to excite disaffection against the Government established by law in British India, and it must be presumed that he had the intent to do so.

At the same time it may be observed that these are the main portions of the speech which appear to me to be reprehensible within the purview of S. 124-A, I.P.C., and the expression "war against the Government" that occurred at an early stage of the speech and other utterances do not transgress the border line between exciting discontent and exciting disaffection. The word jung "war" as in English so in urdu is used in a metaphorical sense and it was obviously used in that sense by the appellant. In English such phrases as "warring elements," "warring opinions" are in common use.

My attention was invited to the fact that the creed of the congress was non-violence and on that ground it was argued that the appellant could not have asked his hearers to have recourse to violence; but, leaving that out of consideration, I consider that the appellant had no intention to incite people to violence. But there can be no gainsaying the fact that what he said was sufficient to bring into hatred or contempt or to excite disaffection against the Government.

Dr. Muhammad Alam, who too appeared on behalf of the appellant, raised a novel contention which may be noticed here in passing. He strenuously argued that the scope of the law of sedition becomes narrower with the liberal change in the policy of the Government and acceptance of the principle that India should be governed by Indians, and that, as by the Declaration of 1917, and the preamble to the Government of India Act 1919, and the recent announcement of the Viceroy of India, the right of India to attain dominion status has been recognized, it is no offence to advocate exclusion of Britishers from the Government. This argument cannot hold water, because in the present moment at least to advocate expulsion of Englishmen from India is tantamount to asking for the subversion of the Government now established by law.

In view of what has been stated above I come to the conclusion that the appellant has been rightly convicted of sedition under S. 124-A, I. P. C.

As regards the sentence, it appears to be excessive. Speeches expressing similar sentiments are commonly made but are couched in a language to which no exception can be taken. People are now accustomed to hearing such speeches and the general political awakening has advanced so far that feelings are not easily aroused. In a case which was worse than this inasmuch as the accused in that case incited people to violence Fforde, J., reduced the sentence of imprisonment to five weeks which had already expired: see Anand Kishore v. Emperor (2). In the present case the appellant has already suffered imprisonment for four months. I reduce the sentence to the imprisonment already undergone and remit the fine. The appeal is accepted to this extent.

Shamair Chand and Sham Lal—for Appellants.

S. C. Chatterji for Government Advocate—for the Crown.

Judgment.—Jagar has been convicted under S. 326, I. P. O. and sentenced to rigorous imprisonment for 10 years. Bhartu has been convicted under Ss. 326-109, I. P. C., and sentenced to rigorous imprisonment for three years. They both appeal.

The facts found by the learned Sessions Judge are that one Pehlada, met his death on the evening of 12th November 1928, from injuries of an incised character which had been inflicted on legs and which had resulted in compound fractures of the leg bones which in turn had led to shock and haemorrhage and thus to heart failure. These injuries are held to have been inflicted by the appellant Jagar while the appellant Bhartu is held to have seized the victim's waist and thrown him on the ground. The story which the learned Sessions Judge appears to have believed is that the deceased Pehlada had had a quarrel with Jagar appellant in a field which he was irrigating concerning his turn of the water and had then run a considerable distance to another field described as Nikku's field in order to avoid being struck by the appellant Jagar. As he thus ran pursued by Jagar some other persons are believed to have confronted him and blocked his way and one of these, namely, the appellant Bhartu then threw him to the ground while Jagar came up and inflicted with a gandasa the blows on the legs from which Pehlada subsequently succumbed.

The defence of both appellants was that their implication was due to enmity and village factions and that neither of them had taken any part in the attack upon Pehlada.

There were two alleged eye witnesses named Ad Ram and Maman of whom the first named admitted facts which show that he is not on good terms with the appellants. The learned Sessions Judge did not entirely disbelieve their evidence but considered it to be exaggerated. The main point on which he did not believe them was their assertion that several other persons whom the learned Sessions Judge acquitted had joined with the two appellants in striking blows upon the deceased. As regards the witness, Maman, it does not appear that he had any direct enmity with the appellants but his cross-examination gave some reason to believe that he and they belonged to opposite factions.

An important witness was Santa who deposed that he had been with the deceased Pehlada in the field which the latter was intending to irrigate, that Pehlada had told him that his turn of water had finished and that the witness could start to take his turn and that the witness then went to the canal outlet which is more than a kos from that field. Before he went to the canal outlet he had observed the appellant Jagar in his field and had heard some talk between Jagar and the deceased Pehlada in which Jagar had been saying that he would have his turn of water first while Pehlada had been saying that his turn would be first. The witness left the place while the two men were thus talking to each other.

In my opinion the evidence of the two eye witnesses is such that it is not safe to rely upon their uncorroborated testimony and this, to some extent, is the view which the learned Sessions Judge himself adopted. He did not, however, apply it to its full extent inasmuch as he has convicted Bhartu against whom there is no corroboration. As against Jagar appellant I find corroboration of the testimony of these two witnesses in the evidence of the witness Santa whose testimony has been detailed above. This witness clearly proves that Jagar had begun to quarrel with the deceased about their respective turns of water and that this quarrel took place not far from the scene where Pehlada was subsequently struck to the ground. I hold therefore that the guilt of Jagar is sufficiently proved by the evidence of the prosecution. I also agree with the learned Sessions Judge that the intention of Jagar was to maim Pehlada and not kill him, and that the offence is, therefore, one under S. 326, I. P. C.

Applying the criterion already mentioned I find no sufficient evidence to corroborate the story of the eye witnesses regarding Bhartu and I consider that Bhartu is entitled to an acquittal. As regards the sentence passed upon Jagar, even the eye-witnesses did not profess to see the beginning of the fight and it is therefore impossible to say whether any provocation was given and to what extent. The quarrel was probably a sudden one arising in the heat of passion. The theory which the prosecution had put forward to the effect that the attack upon Pehlada was a premeditated attack owing to enmity arising out of the fact that Pehlada had remarried Jagar's mother 16 years earlier in absurd. This theory was obviously introduced into the case in order to make out the case of premeditated attack which the evidence did not otherwise justify. on this account I consider that a reduction of Jagar's sentence is called for.

I accept the appeal of Bhartu and direct his acquittal. I maintain the conviction of Jagar but reduce the sentence to rigorous imprisonment for five years.

R. C. Soni—for the Crown.

Report.—The accused Karam Singh (26) a Labana of Kanjra in the Lahore Tahsil has been committed for trial before this Court on a charge of theft under S. 379, I. P. C.

According to the evidence in the case it appears, that one Dharam Singh and his brother Vir Singh of the same village concealed themselves in the field of one Tehl Singh on the night of 18th and 19th March 1929, with the object of trying to catch such person or persons as were stealing their green fodder. Towards morning Dharam Singh and Vir Singh saw the accused Karam Singh and Karam Singh son of Baisakhi enter their fields and commence to cut green wheat and Sainji. The two watchers did not move from their place of concealment till the two culprits namely Karam Singh accused and Karam Singh son of Baisakhi were moving off with what they had cut and stolen. Vir Singh is then alleged to have stepped forward and dealt Karam Singh accused a blow on the head with his dang. On this Karam Singh accused threw down his bundle and ran away. Karam Singh son of Baisakhi, however, turned and faced Dharam Singh and Vir Singh, and seized the latter by his hair. Dharam Singh thereupon ran to Vir Singh's assistance upon which he was assailed with a datri, which he seized and wrested from his assailant. Karam Singh son of Baisakhi is then said to have grappled with Vir Singh, and Dharam Singh went to the assistance of his brother and dealt Karam Singh son of Baisakhi some lathi blows which felled him.

An alarm was then raised and several persons collected and Karam Singh son of Baisakhi was beaten by them with sticks, because he was a thief. He died from these injuries and in connexion with his death Dharam Singh and Vir Singh have been committed to this Court on a charge of murder under S. 302, I. P. C.

The learned Magistrate in committing Karam Singh son of Khushal Singh, the accused, to this Court for trial under S. 379, I. P. C. has remarked as follows:

"The question for determination is whether the story told by Dharam Singh, who has been separately challanged for murdering Karam Singh son of Baisakhi, is correct or not. Since the point at issue in the murder case which has been committed today to the Court of the Sessions Judge, at Lahore is the same, I think it desirable that the present theft case should as well be committed to the same Court as both the cases relate to the same occurrence and the questions involved in both of them are the same."

Now S. 206, Criminal P. C. confers powers on Presidency Magistrate, District Magistrate, Sub-Divisional Magistrate, or Magistrate of the First Class or any Magistrate (not being a Magistrate of the Third Class) empowered on this behalf by the Local Government, to commit any person for trial to the Court of Session, or High Court, for any offence triable by such Court.

The offence of theft under S. 379, I. P. C., according to Col. 8, Sch. 2, Criminal P. C., is triable by any Magistrate and not exclusively by a Court of Sessions.

The reasons given by the learned Magistrate for committing the accused Karam Singh are in my opinion inadequate. It would appear that the sole reason for his having done so is to avoid a possible conflict of decisions but this could easily and well have been avoided by awaiting the result of the sessions trial in the case of Dharam Singh and Vir Singh. In paras. 26 and 27 on p. 533 of Sohoni's Code of Criminal Procedure, 10th Edition 1927, it is remarked that in committing cases not exclusively triable by the Court of Sessions, Magistrates should exercise a proper discretion and give adequate reasons for making commitment to the Court of Sessions. Reasons should be such as to show whether the commitment is made in the sound exercise of the discretionary power vested in the Magistrate by law, and if he does not give adequate reasons the commitment may be quashed.

In this connexion the learned Public Prosecutor on whom I called to show cause, why the case should not be submitted to the High Court with a recommendation that the commitment be quashed has cited the following authorities. Emperor v. Asha Bhatti (1) which is a case very much on all fours with the present case; Emperor v. Dharm Singh (2) and Diwanchand v. Emperor (3).

The learned Public Prosecutor thus agrees that the commitment is illegal, and endorsing this view, I submit the case to the Hon'ble High Court with the recommendation that the commitment be quashed.

Order.—For the reasons recorded by the learned Sessions Judge I quash the order of commitment and direct the Magistrate to try the case in accordance with law.

Ali Hussain—Convict—Petitioner.

v.

Emperor—Opposite Party.

Criminal Revn. Petn. No. 1315 of 1929, Decided on 31st January 1930, against order of Dist. Magistrate, Gurdaspur, D/- 9th August 1929.

Public Gambling Act, S. 4—It is not necessary that persons proceeded against should be actually arrested in gambling house—But prosecution must prove that he was seen in it.

In order to sustain a conviction under S. 4 it is not necessary that the person proceeded against should have been actually arrested in the gambling house in question but it is incumbent on the prosecution to prove that he was actually seen in the house. The mere fact that the person proceeded against was seen going from the direction of the gambling house to his own house is insufficient.

Ghulam Mohyuddin—for Petitioner.Partap Singh—for the Crown.

Judgment.—The petitioner Ali Hussain, alias Hussain Shah, of Batala was tried under Ss. 3 and 4, Public Gambling Act and convicted by the trial Magistrate for both offences. On appeal the learned District Magistrate held that it had not been proved that the house in question was owned by the petitioner. He accordingly set aside the conviction under S. 3; but he found the offence under S. 4 proved and maintained the sentence of one month's simple imprisonment. Ali Hussain has preferred a petition for revision to this Court.

The first ground urged in the petition, that the Public Gambling Act did not apply to the locality where the house in question is situate has not been pressed by counsel. He has, however, urged that the evidence on the record falls short of proving that the petitioner was "found" in the house in question at the time when it was raided by the police. The evidence relating to this matter consists of the statements of Mr. Wall, Superintendent of Police, (P. W. 1) Mahmud Hassan Sub-Inspector (P. W. 4), and Muhammad Shafi, Assistant Sub-Inspector (P. W. 6). Of these the first two are definite that Ali Hussain was not seen by them coming from the house which the police party had raided but was arrested by Muhammad Shafi from his house on the other side of the road. The only evidence, therefore, against the petitioner is that of Muhammad Shafi, but his statement, as recorded before the District Magistrate, makes it clear that he did not see the petitioner actually in the house in question but saw him for the first time when he was running from the road into his own house on the opposite side.

Now, in order to sustain a conviction under S. 4, Public Gambling Act, it is not necessary that the person proceeded against should have been actually arrested in the gambling house in question, but, it is incumbent on the prosecution to prove that he was actually seen in that house. It is conceded that the evidence of Muhammad Shafi does not establish this. All that can be said to have been proved is that the petitioner was seen going from the direction of the house in question to his own house but obviously this is insufficient. In my opinion the case against the petitioner has not been established.

I accept the petition for revision, set aside the conviction and sentence and acquit him.

v.

Emperor—Opposite Party.

Criminal Appeals Nos. 312 and 382 of 1929, Decided on 24th June 1929, from order of Sess. Judge, Hissar, D/- 9th February 1929.

Penal Code, Ss. 99 and 105—Right of private defence is available to person wrongfully deprived of property, but wrong-doer has no such right.

The law does not require that when a person is being wrongfully deprived of property of which he is in possession he should leave the thief alone and run to a thana at a distance of a kos to seek redress from the police and such person has right of private defence, but the wrong doer has no such right. [P 348 C 1]

Nanwa Mal—for Appellant.

R. C. Soni for Govt Advocate—for the Crown.

Judgment.—Criminal Appeals Nos. 312 and 382 of 1929 arise out of a case in which the appellants were jointly tried and can be conveniently disposed of together.

The material facts alleged by the prosecution were as follows: Udmi and Amilal (appellants in Criminal Appeal

No. 329 of 1929) are brothers, while Har Chand (appellant in Criminal Appeal No. 312) is said to be their cousin. They were tenants of one Mirza Malik Muhammad Beg. Similarly Arjan, Balla two brothers and Sukh Dev, their uncle, were also tenants of the same landlord.

On 13th August 1928, the landlord fixed the turns of these two tenants as regards irrigation of their land with canal water. According to the arrangement then made Arjan and Balla were to irrigate their land from 11 a. m., to 5 p. m., on 14th August and the appellants Udmi and Amilal were to irrigate their land thereafter. At about 2 p. m., however, Udmi and Amilal appeared in Arjan's field and wanted to divert canal water to their field. Arjan objected, but the appellants persisted and started diverting the water. Arjan called out to the landlord's chaprasi Bashir who was in the neighbouring field. Bashir came and asked Udmi not to divert the water but he paid no heed to him. Thereupon a fight ensued. Amilal gave two lathi blows to Balla when he tried to prevent the water being diverted. Arjan grappled with Amilal when Har Chand suddenly appeared and gave him a blow with an axe on the head which caused his death. In the meantime Udmi also gave a kassi blow to Sukh Dev. When Arjan fell down fatally wounded the appellant decamped.

During the course of the trial the appellants Udmi and Amilal admitted that they tried to divert the water from Arjan's field but tried to make out that it was their turn and they had a right to do so. They alleged further that they themselves were beaten and fell down unconscious and professed ignorance as to what followed. Har Chand pleaded alibi but was unable to give any explanation as to why he should have been falsely implicated. None of the appellants produced any evidence in defence.

Har Chand has been convicted by the learned Sessions Judge of the murder of Arjan and sentenced to transportation for life. Udmi and Amilal have been convicted under Ss. 325 and 323, I. P. C., for causing grievous and simple injuries to Sukh Dev and Balla, respectively and have been sentenced to rigorous imprisonment for one year and six months on each count, the sentences to run consecutively.

There is no doubt whatever that the appellants Udmi and Amilal were in the wrong in trying to divert their canal water to the fields. They have alleged that it was their turn of water, but this allegation is not borne out by any evidence and is belied by the evidence of Mirza Malik Muhammad Beg, the landlord, who appears to be a respectable and disinterested witness. Arjan deceased had, therefore, clearly a right of private defence as regards the use of the canal water of which he was being wrongfully deprived. The appellants Udmi and Amilal had certain injuries on their person and these were apparently inflicted by the deceased and his companions. But under S. 105, I. P. C., they were justified in causing these injuries in the exercise of their right of private defence. As the injuries were inflicted on the appellants by the deceased and his companions in the exercise of their right of private defence, the appellants Udmi and Amilal had no right to retaliate. In the circumstances the injuries caused by the appellants Udmi and Amilal to Sukh Dev and Balla must be held to constitute offences under Ss. 325 and 323, I. P. C.

The learned counsel for the appellants Amilal and Udmi did not attempt to challenge the learned Sessions Judge's finding of fact as regards his clients but merely argued that the deceased Arjan had no right of private defence as the thana was only about a "kos" distant and there was, therefore, time to seek the protection of public authorities. This position seems to be wholly unsupportable. The appellants Udmi and Amilal were already in the field of the deceased and were wrongfully diverting the water. I doubt if the police would have interfered in the deceased's favour when the parties were disputing the turn of water, but in any case it would have taken the deceased some time to go to the thana and bring the police. But before their arrival he would have been deprived of the use of valuable water for a considerable time and his turn would also have probably come to an end. The position would have been different if the deceased had received intimation about the intentions of the appellants in advance and there was the possibility of his obtaining the assistance of the public authorities in time to prevent the diversion of water. The law does not require that when a person is being wrongfully deprived of property of which he is in possession he should leave the thief alone and run to a thana at a distance of a kos to seek redress from the police.

As regards Har Chand, as already noted, he has not attempted to support his plea of "alibi" by any evidence and has not been able to offer any explanation as to why he should have been falsely implicated. The case against him seems perfectly clear. The learned counsel who appeared for him tried to make out that the offence was committed in a sudden fight or in the exercise of the right of private defence and that it would, therefore, fall at the most under S. 304 or S. 325, I. P. C. But this contention seems untenable. Although the fight was sudden, Har Chand had no justification for giving a blow to the deceased on the head with an axe and in doing so he must be held to have taken undue advantage of the deceased and also acted in a cruel manner. As regards the right of private defence, it has been already pointed out that Amilal himself being in the wrong, he had no right of private defence. Consequently, Har Chand too could not claim advantage of any such right in attempting to defend Amilal.

The convictions of the appellants must, in the circumstances, be upheld. The conviction of Har Chand being under S. 302, I. P. C., no lighter sentence, than transportation for life could be passed on him. Udmi and Amilal were themselves injured and, in view of all the circumstances, the sentences passed on them seem to be somewhat severe. At the same time they cannot be dealt with very leniently, as they started the trouble by wrongfully attempting to divert water to their fields. We accept their appeal only to the extent of making the sentences passed on them under Ss. 325 and 323, I. P. C., concurrent instead of consecutive. In other respects the appeals are rejected.

Mohammad Akbar Khan—for the Crown.

Judgment—A certain document purporting to be the will of one Moti Ram was recovered from the house of a man named Tola Ram by the Official Receiver of Multan on 28th July 1926. Moti Ram had died on 29th May 1926. A prosecution for forgery under S. 467, I. P. C., was started against Tola Ram, the alleged scribe of the document, and certain attesting witnesses. On 6th June 1927 the learned Sessions Judge of Multan, Mr. Currie, pronounced judgment in the case, convicting some of the accused while acquitting others. In this case Chothu Ram had appeared as defence witness 30 and Gobind Ram as defence witness 31. There was an appeal on behalf of the convict to the High Court and the decision of the learned Sessions Judge was mainly upheld, the High Court interfering only with the sentences. The date of the High Court decision is 21st May 1928. The record of the case together with a copy of the judgment of the High Court, I gather, was sent to the District Magistrate of Multan on 29 May 1928. It may be observed here that Chothu Ram (D. W. 30) and Gobind Ram (D. W. 31) had given evidence before the Sessions Judge on 22nd March 1927.

On 24th October 1928 the Public Prosecutor made an application to the successor-in-office of Mr. Currie, the Sessions Judge, Multan, asking him to take action under the provisions of S. 476, Criminal P. C., and file a complaint under S. 193 I. P. C., among other persons, against, Chothu Ram and Gobind Ram. The learned Sessions Judge, Mr. Anderson, on 2nd September 1929 granted the application.

A glance at these dates would at once show that the alleged false statement was made on 22nd March 1927 and the application by the Public Prosecutor for action under S. 476 was not made until 24th October 1928. From whichever point of time the period may be calculated, there cannot be any doubt whatsoever that the sanction proceedings have been inordinately delayed. The case law on the subject of delay is almost voluminous and by way of sample I may refer to Rahimatullah Sahib v. Emperor (1), where it was laid down by the Chief Justice and Wallis, J. (Miller, J. dissenting) that it was the intention of the legislature in enacting S. 476, Criminal P. C., that an order under that section should be made either at the close of the proceedings or so shortly thereafter that it may reasonably be said that the order is part of the proceeding. The matter came up again before another Full Bench of the Madras High Court consisting of five learned Judges and is reported in Aiyakannu Pillai v. Emperor (2). There also the Full Bench (Miller, J., dissenting) held that the power conferred by S. 476 can be exercised by the Court only in the course of the judicial proceeding or at its conclusion or so shortly thereafter as to make it really the continuation of the same proceeding in the course of which the offence was committed. In Bhim Lal Sah v. Bisa Singh (3) there are certain observations in which a delay of a month and a half was adversely commented upon. A different view was taken by the Bombay High Court in Waman Dinkar v. Emperor (4), but I would prefer to follow the Madras Full Bench decisions as they coincide with my own opinion which I formed independently of the case law on the subject.

There cannot, therefore, be any doubt that in the present case the delay has not been satisfactorily explained and the reasoning of the learned Sessions Judge on this point does not appeal to me. He refers to a certain supplementary case against another accused person who had been absconding as accounting for the delay, but the learned Public Prosecutor before me has frankly conceded that he is not prepared to say that there was any connection between that case and the present proceedings. The record, as already mentioned above, had been sent down to the District Magistrate soon after the decision of the appeal in the High Court and there is no reason whatsoever why the Public Prosecutor should have waited for almost five months before making up his mind as regards the application which he eventually made on 24th October 1928. The delay in starting proceedings under S. 476, should not receive any encouragement, as it is highly unjust and improper that the apprehension of a threatened prosecution should continue to hang like the sword of Damocles over the head of any person. In this connexion the new sub-S. (3) which has been added to S. 476 by the amending Act of 1923 may be referred to.

Coming to the merits of the case as to how far it can be reasonably expected that the prosecution of Chothu Ram and Gobind Ram is likely to end in their conviction, it may be observed that Mr. Currie, the learned Sessions Judge, while dealing with the evidence of these witnesses in the original case observed that their evidence was "nil" or "valueless." Further on he makes the following observations :

"These witnesses, D. Ws. 13, 29 and 31 are as already remarked obviously false."

It may be noted that there is no mention here of D. W. 30 namely Chothu Ram and it is rather a big step to characterise the evidence of witnesses as "obviously false" when as already mentioned all that he had said about their evidence was that its value was nil or that the evidence was valueless. I may observe that the learned Judges of this Court on appeal while referring to the reasoning of the learned Sessions

(1) [1908] 31 Mad. 140=17 M.L.J. 584 (F.B.).

(2) [1903] 32 Mad. 49=1 I. C. 597=19 M. L. J. 42 (F.B.).

Judge on the question of the evidence of the defence witnesses simply observed as follows :

"For the reasons given by the learned Sessions Judge we reject the defence evidence on the point."

The judgment under appeal on this point reads like a piece of special pleading and does not carry any conviction to my mind.

Having regard, therefore, to the long and unexplained delay and to the observations of the learned trial Judge, Mr. Currie, as to the evidence of these witnesses, I do not think that any useful purpose would be served by continuing the harassment of these witnesses after all these years. It is very doubtful whether reliable and trustworthy evidence to support a conviction would be forthcoming and there is the further danger that on account of the lapse of years the appellants might be prejudiced and handicapped in their defence. Under all the circumstances I allow the appeals of Chothu Ram and Gobind Ram and set aside the order of the learned Sessions Judge.

Criminal Revn. No. 1219 of 1929, Decided on 15th November 1929, reported by Sess. Judge, Rawalpindi, on 20th July 1929.

Criminal P. C., S. 423—Appeal—Alteration of sentence to whipping—Trial Court not empowered to pass that sentence—Sentence is illegal.

It is not open to an appellate Court to alter the sentence of the trial Court and substitute a sentence of whipping, a sentence not within the power of trial Court. Though such course be most suitable it must be considered to be an enhancement and hence becomes illegal.

[P 350 C 2]

*R. L. Anand—*for Petitioners.

Report.—The facts of this case are as follows :

On 11th September 1928, the Daroga of the Murree Municipal Forests, with four Forest Guards, caught 21 head of cattle grazing in a Reserved Forest. He proceeded to drive them off when six were rescued by Yusaf, Dulla and Dadu accused. The matter was reported at the thana the same day. The accused were challaned before Lala Gokal Chand, Tahsildar, Magistrate, Second Class, Murree, who convicted all the three accused under S. 26, Cattle Trespass Act, and sentenced them to a fine Rs. 50 each.

One appeal, however, the learned District Magistrate upheld the conviction, but altered the sentence of fine to that of whipping 10 stripes each in the case of Yusaf and Dulla accused, holding them to be juvenile offenders. But in the case of Dadu accused, he reduced the fine to one of Rs. 20.

The learned District Magistrate on appeal from the order of the Tahsildar fining the petitioners Rs. 50 each came to the conclusion that they were juveniles, and ordered them to be whipped. Though this was undoubtedly a most suitable punishment for the offence, it would appear that it must be considered to be an enhancement of the sentence as the Tahsildar was not empowered to order whipping. I therefore, forward the case to the High Court with a recommendation that the order of the learned District Magistrate be set aside, and, the fine imposed on the present petitioners be reduced to Rs. 20 each, as imposed by the District Magistrate on their companion Dadu.

Order.—For the reasons recorded by the learned Sessions Judge I quash the order of whipping passed by the District Magistrate, and reduce the fine in the case of Yusaf and Dullah to Rs. 20 each.

Criminal Revn. No. 1916 of 1928, Decided on 14th December 1928, against order of Sess. Judge, Multan, D/- 15th October 1928.

(a) Criminal P. C., S. 439—Magistrate acting in contravention of law and admitting inadmissible and irrelevant evidence—Guilt established by legal evidence on record—New trial need not be ordered.

The mere fact that the magistrate has acted in contravention of the clear provisions of the law and that his findings are vitiated by a consideration of inadmissible and irrelevant evidence is not by itself a ground for ordering a new trial or reversal of the conviction by High Court if the guilt is established by legal evidence on record. [P 352 C 2]

(b) Penal Code, S. 377—Sodomy—Stains of semen constitute important evidence.

In a charge of sodomy stains of semen constitute important evidence. Great weight must therefore be attached to the Chemical Examiner's report, [P 352 C 2]

B. R. Puri—for Petitioner.

D. R. Sawhney—for the Crown.

Judgment.—The petitioner, Devi Das aged 51 was convicted by the District Magistrate, Multan, of an offence under S. 377, I. P. C., for having committed unnatural offence with a 12 years' old "Biloch" boy, Ahmad, alias Hamid (P.W. 1), in an abandoned factory situate in the outskirts of the town of Muzaffargarh on 17th October 1927, at about 10 or 11 p.m. In view of his age and position, he was sentenced to one year's rigorous imprisonment. His appeal has been dismissed by the learned Sessions Judge, Multan, and he has preferred a petition for revision to this Court. As the learned District Magistrate in his judgment had relied largely upon the police diaries and the learned Sessions Judge had rejected the evidence of the Civil Surgeon Dr. H. J. Fordham (P. W. 5), and the report of the Chemical Examiner to the Punjab Government which were to a large extent inconsistent with the story for the prosecution, I found it necessary to examine the record for myself and to hear the counsel for the petitioner and the Public Prosecutor at length.

Before discussing the evidence for the prosecution on which the conviction is based, it is necessary to point out that the learned District Magistrate has acted illegally and with grave irregularity in referring in his judgment to the police diaries in disregard of the clear provisions of the law and numerous rulings of this Court and other Courts. S. 162, Criminal P. C., lays down in clear and unambiguous terms that no statement made by any person to a police officer in the course of an investigation under Chap. 14, or any record thereof : "whether in a police diary or otherwise, or any part of such statement or records, can be used for any purpose (save as hereinafter provided) at any enquiry or trial in respect of any offence under investigation at the time when such statement was made."

To this section is added the proviso, that when any witness is called for the prosecution in such enquiry or trial whose statement has been reduced into writing by a police officer, the Court shall on the request of the accused refer to such writing and direct that the accused be furnished with a copy thereof in order that any part of such statement, if duly proved, may be used to contradict such witness in the manner provided by S. 145, Evidence Act. In Cl. (2) of the section a further exception is made in favour of the admission of dying declarations, and in S. 172 power is given to a criminal Court to send for the police diaries of a case under enquiry or trial before it and to use these diaries "not as evidence in the case, but to aid it in such enquiry or trial." The Court may use the diaries for contradicting the investigating police officer when he is giving evidence or such officer may use them to refresh his memory. The provisions of the statute on these points are clear and imperative and it is not necessary to refer at length to the numerous rulings bearing on them. So far as S. 162 is concerned it will perhaps be sufficient to refer to the recent decision of Addison and Skemp, JJ., in Emperor v. Ibrahim (1) in which it has been pointed out that the only way a witness can be contradicted by a statement made to the police under the provisions of S. 162, Criminal P. C., is to prove that portion of his statement to the police which contradicts his evidence and to put it to him under S. 145, Evidence Act, so that the witness may be given an opportunity of explaining the contradiction; and that statements made to the police "cannot be used at a trial in any other way." With regard to S. 172, Criminal P. C., reference may be made to the following directions contained in Vol. 2, the Rules and Orders of the High Court (p. 54) :

"The provision of S. 172, that any criminal Court may send for the police diaries, not as evidence in the case, but to aid it in any enquiry, or trial, empowers the Court to use the diary not only for the purpose of enabling the police officer who compiled it to refresh his memory, or for the purpose of contradicting him, but for the purpose of tracing the investigation through its various stages, the intervals which must have elapsed in it, and the steps by which a confession may have been elicited, or other important evidence may have been obtained. The Court may use the special diary, not as evidence of any date, fact, or statement referred to in it, but as containing indications of sources and lines of enquiry and as suggesting the names of persons whose evidence may be material for the purpose of doing justice between the Crown and the accused. Should the Court consider that any date, fact or statement referred to in the police diary is, or may be, material, it cannot accept the diary as evidence, in any sense, of such date, fact or statement, and must before allowing any date, fact, or statement referred to in the diary to influence its mind, establish such date, fact or statement by evidence."

These directions are in accord with the rule laid down in the leading case Queen-Empress v. Mannu (2), which has been recently affirmed by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Dal Singh v. Emperor (3), and which is to the effect that :

"the special diary may be used by the Court to assist it in the enquiry or trial by suggesting means of further elucidating points which need clearing up and which are material for the purpose of doing justice between the Crown and the accused : but entries in the special diary cannot by themselves be taken as evidence of any date, fact or statement therein contained."

Now in this case the learned District Magistrate has not only referred in his judgment to the statements of some of the witnesses for the prosecution made to the police, which had not been proved as required under S. 162, and which even in that case could be used for the very limited purpose aforesaid, but he has also taken into consideration the statements made to the police during the investigation by persons who were not examined at all at the trial either by the prosecution or the defence. At p. 4 of the judgment, while referring to one Udho Ram, who could not be found by the police, the learned Magistrate has remarked :

"Udho Ram was called, but it was stated that he could not be found and he was eventually given up by the police. This is unfortunate for the case, as his statement before the police was particularly clear."

Again, at p. 5 he has stated :

"Maugha before the police made a similar statement, but he has not been produced in court. I venture, however, to mention this statement because therein he explains how it was that Udho Ram eventually came into the courtyard to look for Hamid."

In another part of the judgment he refers to his having drawn up a "rough timetable" of the event at the police station "extracted from the first information report and the Zimnis." The learned Public Prosecutor has frankly admitted before me that in this matter the learned District Magistrate has acted in contravention of the clear provisions of the law and that his findings are vitiated by a consideration of inadmissible and irrelevant evidence. This, however, is not of itself a ground for ordering a new trial or reversal of the conviction but this Court has to see if the guilt of the petitioner is established by the legal evidence on the record. (His Lordship here considered the evidence and proceeded.) The result of the chemical examination of Hamid's loin cloth, with which the petitioner is alleged to have wiped himself off immediately after the crime, and of the chadar which had been spread on the charpoy also does not agree with his deposition. These articles are deposed to by the Sub Inspector and other prosecution witnesses to have had stains of semen. They were taken possession of without delay and sent in sealed covers for chemical examination, but Khan Sahib Sayad Muhammad Hussain, Assistant Chemical Examiner to the Punjab Government, who conducted the chemical examination has reported that he did not detect any semen on either of them. As pointed out by Taylor at p. 283 of the second volume of his Principles and Practice on Medical Jurisprudence (Edn. 2), "in a charge of Sodomy, stains of semen constitute important evidence." Great weight must, therefore, be attached to the Chemical Examiner's report and this contradicts Hamid's account of the occurrence in a very material particular. Thus we find that on both the above points the evidence of unimpeachable character led by the prosecution themselves casts serious doubts upon the correctness of the evidence of the boy. (After further considering the evidence on corroboration, the judgment proceeded.) After a careful consideration of the record and for the reasons recorded above I am of opinion that the guilt of the petitioner has not been established and that his conviction cannot stand. I accept this petition for revision set aside the conviction and sentence and direct that the petitioner be set at liberty forthwith.

Anil Chandra Roy Chowdhury—for the Crown.

Judgment.—This rule has been issued on two grounds (1) that the elements necessary to constitute an offence under S. 6 (1), Bengal Food Adulteration Act 6 of 1919 have not been proved and (2) that as the mustard oil, the subject matter of the case was, sold to the Sanitary Inspector not as mustard oil but as mixed mill oil and as the sign-boards in the shop indicate that mixed mill oil for lighting purposes is only sold the conviction under S. 6 (1) of the Act is not sustainable. Both the grounds may be considered together.

The facts are that the Sanitary Inspector on the authority from the Chairman of the Municipality went to the shop of the accused and purchased a quantity of mustard oil which he says was for human consumption. After his purchase he divided the oil according to the Act into three parts one of which was kept with the shop-keeper. It was found on analysis that the oil sold was adulterated mustard oil and the owner of the shop was prosecuted and fined Rs. 200. It has been found by the trial Court that the oil was sold as mustard oil for human consumption and that the oil sold was adulterated. Reading Ss. 5 and Ss. 6 and 7 of the Act together it would appear that the articles enumerated in S. 6 are presumed to be articles of food therefore it has been made penal to sell any such article in 'an adulterated condition, the presumption being that it was sold for human consumption. This is clear as in S. 5 of the expression "articles of food" is used whereas in S. 6 there is no express provision that the "articles mentioned in that section must be sold as articles of food. But the Act itself is for making provision for the prevention of adulteration of food and therefore the articles mentioned in S. 6 are considered to be articles of food and the sale thereof in an adulterated condition is made punishable. Now in this case the facts sufficiently proved and found by the lower Court are that the oil was sold by the petitioner to the complainant and that the oil was found to be adulterated. The petitioner says that he had put up a sign board on his shop that he was selling adulterated mustard oil. With regard to this sign board I am inclined to believe the Sanitary Inspector when he says that it was not there on the day of the occurrence but it has been subsequently put up. But in my judgment even if this sign board was on the shop it will be no defence to say that he had notified to the public that he was selling adulterated food.

The Food Adulteration Act makes it penal to sell adulterated articles. It does not excuse the offence on the ground that the purchaser knew that what he was purchasing was not pure food stuff. The Act was intended to protect the public from using adulterated articles and therefore it has made it penal to sell these adulterated articles to persons irrespective of the fact that the purchaser knew the article to be adulterated or otherwise. With regard to the articles mentioned in S. 6 they are ordinarily articles of food and it is no defence to say that these articles can be adulterated and sold in the market with the publication of the fact that they are adulterated. S. 7 of the Act makes the storing of adulterated things penal. In this case it is admitted that the accused sells in his shop ghee, flour, atta etc which are sold for human consumption. He also sells mustard oil and there is no evidence and no allegation for what purpose the mustard oil which is said to be adulterated was sold in the shop except what is stated on the signboard. On the other hand there is evidence that mustard oil is purchased from his shop by people for consumption as an article of food. His own witness 2 says that no better stuff is available, that he always purchases mustard oil for human consumption from the shop though it was advertised as mixed oil. As I have said it is no defence to say that because it was advertised as mixed oil the seller though he sells the article for human consumption is entitled to plead that he had told the purchaser that it was not pure in defence in a prosecution under the Act. As the Act is intended for the safety of the people, in my judgment it should be construed liberally. It is no defence to the accused that the adulterated oil is stored in his shop for some purpose other than for consumption as an article of human food. I cannot say that even if he had taken that defence it would have been a good answer. But it is clear that the adulterated mustard oil is kept in his shop for being sold to persons for consumption as an article of food. In the sign board which he says he put up in his shop it is said that mustard oil is sold for lighting purposes. But there is no evidence that any one purchases it for that purpose. As I understand the sign board has come into prominence since this case. There is also evidence as found by the Magistrate that the accused's shop supplies to the locality the oil at a wholesale rate to small shop keepers who sell it by retail to the inhabitants of the locality for consumption as an article of food. The mischief therefore which is done by his selling adulterated oil in his shop is very great.

I am accordingly of opinion that on the evidence in the case the learned Magistrate has come to a right decision and the conviction must be sustained. This rule is discharged.

S. K. GHOSE, J.

Nagendra Nath Saha—Accused—Appellant.

v.

Emperor—Opposite Party.

Criminal Appeal No. 505 of 1929, Decided on 6th December 1929.

(a) Trade mark—Infringement of—Similarity—Standard of comparison should be that of lay public and not that of experts.

For the purpose of establishing a case of infringement it is not necessary to show that there has been the use of a mark in all respects corresponding with that which another person has acquired an exclusive right to use. But if the resemblance in such as not only to show an intention to deceive but also such as to be likely to make unwary purchasers suppose that they are purchasing the article sold by the party to whom the right to use the trade mark belongs. Therefore the standard of comparison is not that of the experts, but it is that of the lay public, of the unwary purchaser: Wotherspoon v. Avery, (1872) L. R. 5 H. L. 508 Rel. on. [P 355 C 1]

(b) Merchandise Marks Act, S. 15—Offence mentioned in S. 15 is offence charged—Accused agreeing to give up use of trade mark—Limitation runs from date when complainant is again aware of infringement.

The offence mentioned in S. 15 is the offence charged. Where after original discovery of infringement of trade mark the complainant takes some action as the result of which the accused gives an undertaking not to make use of the trade mark and it does not appear from the evidence that the complainant actually knew that the infringement of the trade mark had continued, the limitation does not run from the date of the original discovery. It runs from the date on which the complainant is again aware of the infringement and a suit brought within one year from the date, i. e., within one year after discovery of offence charged is within time: A. I. R. 1928 Cal. 495, Rel. on.; 22 Mad. 483, Dist. [P 356 C 1]

Mrityunjay Chattopadhyay—for Appellant.

A. N. Choudhury—for the Crown.

Probodh Chandra Chatterji—for Complainant.

Judgment.—The case against the appellant is that he has infringed two trade-marks belonging to the complainant Manilal Anandji, one a white deer on a red back ground and the other composed of figures 4 and 5 on a black ground in the shape of a star on a yellow label. Both the marks were used as trade marks on packets of 'biri' sold by the complainant. The learned Chief Presidency Magistrate has found that in respect of the figures on the second trade-mark the complainant had no monopoly but as regards the rest of the device of the second trade-mark, and as regards the first trade-mark, the prosecution case has been established. He has accordingly convicted the appellant under S. 482, I.P.C., and sentenced him to pay fine of Rs. 500 and of Rs. 200 respectively on the two counts and in default to undergo rigorous imprisonment for three months and two months respectively. In this Court it is not disputed that the complainant did not have the trade-marks as alleged by him. The question is as to whether it has been established that the appellant used false marks in respect of the two trade-marks produced by the complainant. I have before me three sets of trade marks which are relevant to the case and I may say at once that in minor details the trade-marks of the complainant and the trade-marks used by the accused are different: but that in essential matters, that is to say, as regards the general appearance, the prominent portion of the device, the colouring, and so forth the two sets of trade-marks are similar. This view was also taken by the learned Magistrate. The question is what is the standard of comparison? It has been held that, for the purpose of establishing a case of infringement, is not necessary to show that there has been the use of a mark in 'all respects corresponding with that which another person has acquired an exclusive right to use. But if the resemblance is such as not only to show an intention to deceive but also such as to be likely to make unwary purchasers suppose that they are purchasing the article sold by the party to whom the right to use the trade mark belongs. Wotherspoon v. Avery (1). Therefore the standard of comparison is not that of the experts. But it is that of the lay public, of the unwary purchasers. In the present case it would be correct to say that it would be standard of the ignorant people who use these sorts of 'biris' and purchase them from the bazar. In view of these considerations it seems to me that the learned Magistrate correctly held that the trade-marks which had been used by the appellant were false trade-marks. In the lower Court the accused also appears to have given an undertaking to drop the use of both trade-marks.

The next point which has been urged in support of the appellant, in so far as the prosecution with regard to the stag brand is concerned is that it is barred by limitation, under S. 15, Merchandise Marks Act. It is pointed out that it is admitted and found that the complainant first came to know of the infringement in September 1927 and he brought the case in March 1929 and it is contended that the case was brought more than a year after the first discovery of the offence and that therefore it is barred by limitation.

In support of this I am referred to the cases of Ruppell v. Ponnusami Teran (2). In that case, however, it appears the complainant had not shown that he believed that the use of the alleged counterfeit trade mark has been discontinued after the first discovery in 1893. This case was considered in Akshoy Kumar Dey v. Emperor (3). There it was held that the word 'offence' under S. 15, Merchandise Marks Act meant the offence charged. Mr. Chaudhury for the Crown has pointed out that in the present case the offence charged is an infringement in June 1928 which is well within time. It is contended that in the case reported in Akshoy Kumar Dey v. Emperor (3) the decision went upon the supposition that it was not found that before 10th March 1926, which was the date of offence charged, the prosecution party was aware that the offence had been committed. In the present case, however, it is established that after the original discovery in September 1927 some action was taken by the complainant and as the result the appellant gave an undertaking not to make use of the trade-marks. It is contended that nevertheless the complainant must have known that the accused was going on infringing the trade-marks because their places of business are only a hundred steps apart. But it does not appear from the evidence that the complainant actually knew that the infringement of the trade-mark had been continued. No doubt, there was no written undertaking but there was a verbal undertaking and this is deposed to by the pleader P. W. 4 and the complainant himself. This part of the evidence has not been challenged by cross-examination. There are also the letters written by the complainant's agents to the accused and these were found in the "gadi" of the accused. They are of June 1928 and they refer expressly to the fact that the accused had given an undertaking. Therefore it comes to this that after the original discovery in September 1927, the accused had given an undertaking to desist from infringing the trademark any further and that there is nothing to show that before June 1928 the complainant was aware that there had been a fresh infringement. It is contended that nevertheless the limitation must run from the original discovery in September 1927. Mr. Chaudhury for the Crown has contended that if that be so, then the undertaking would be meaningless and that the complainant would be put upon his watch to see whether there was going to be another infringement within one year of the first discovery; and it might be that, if there was a subsequent infringement after one year of the original discovery, then the second offence not be punishable at all. This position reduces the argument advanced on behalf of the appellant to an absurdity. But as has been pointed out in the case referred to above that the offence mentioned in S. 15, Merchandise Marks Act, is the offence charged and this seems to me to be the only common sense view that can be taken in the present case. In this case the prosecution is clearly in within time. No other points are pressed in this appeal. The conviction of and the sentences passed on the appellant are confirmed. The appeal dismissed.

(2) [1899] 22 Mad. 488.

(3) A. I. R. 1928 Cal. 495.

(1) [1872] 5 H. L. 508.

v.

Emperor

Criminal Appeal No. 480 of 1929, Decided on 17th January 1930, against order of Addl. Sess. Judge, Assam Valley Dist.

(a) Evidence Act, S. 154—Hostile witness—Definition—Hostile witness is one who from his evidence shows that he is unwilling to tell truth.

A hostile witness may be defined as one who from the manner in which he gives his evidence (within which is included the fact that he is willing to go back upon previous statements made by him) shows that he is not desirous of telling the truth to the Court. [P 358 C 1]

* (b) Criminal P. C.; S. 298—Judge should explain to jury situation arising in case of hostile witness—He should tell jury to reject evidence of such witness altogether—Omission to do so amounts to misdirection—Evidence of hostile witness cannot in part be relied upon and rest rejected—Evidence Act, S. 154—Criminal Trial.

The evidence of a hostile witness cannot in part be relied upon and the rest of it discarded or rejected. When a witness is declared hostile so that leave to cross-examine is granted to the party calling him, it is necessary that the Judge should explain what the position is, that then arises, namely, that by asking for leave to cross-examine the witness, the party calling him admits that he is not a witness of truth and one whose evidence is not entitled to credit, who is prepared to make one statement on oath at one time and another at another time and that the evidence of such witness should be rejected and left out of account in the minds of the jury. It is a rule which leans in favour of the accused and as such ought not to be departed from lightly. The Judge should tell the jury to reject the evidence of such witness altogether and his omission to do so amounts to misdirection: A. I. R. 1929 Cal. 463; Alexander v. Gibson, 2 Camp. 556, Ref. [P 358 C 1]

Narendra Kumar Basu and Abdul Kasem—for Appellants.

D. N. Bhattacharjee—for the Crown.

Judgment.—The accused in this case (Panchanan Gogai, Gopal Gohain, Mohari Ahom alias Mohari Dursa, Kan Bap Baruah, Laghona Koar, and Ratneswar Ahom) were found guilty by the jury in manner following i. e. Pachanan and Kan Bap were found guilty under Ss. 328 and 366, I. P. C., Gopal and Mali Ali or Mohari under S. 366, I. P. C. and the remaining two under S. 366 read with S. 107, I. P. C. The learned Additional Sessions Judge of the Assam Valley Districts, agreeing with the verdict of the jury has sentenced the accused to undergo various terms of imprisonment.

The main point which has been argued in this appeal before us arises with reference to the evidence of one Sashi, Prabha, a girl aged about 17, who was alleged to have been abducted. The case for the prosecution, shortly stated, was as follows: It appears that the marriage of Sashi Prabha with one Lokenath had been settled and the marriage was to have taken place on 6th May 1928. Her father Durga Prosad had been away from home for some time prior to the date of the occurrence hereinafter referred to. It is alleged that taking advantage of the absence of Durga Prosad, the accused Panchanan in conspiracy with the accused Kan Bap Gopal and Mohari, and with the approver, Sona Ram, abducted the girl after making her unconscious. They also administered dhatura poison to the adult members of the family. The abduction took place on the night of 27th April and the girl was removed from place to place until she was brought to the house of one Haranath who was the brother-in-law of the accused Panchanan. Haranath sent a wire on 26th May to Durga Prosad and ultimately the police recovered the girl on 29th May. Sashi Probha appeared before the Magistrate for the first time on 11th June 1928.

The passage in the learned Judge's charge to the jury, to which exception has been taken before us, runs as follows:

"Of course in a case of abduction, the most important witness is the abducted girl but the abducted girl in this case has retracted all that she deposed in the lower Court. But before we discuss the evidence, you should remember some dates.

The occurrence took place on the night of 27th April, corresponding to 14th Baisakh. The marriage of Sashi Probha was to have been celebrated with Lokenath on 6th May i.e., 23rd Baisakh. Durga Babu left this house a few days before to purchase articles for marriage and for other important business, he was to return on 29th April. The negotiations of the marriage were going on for about six months or so. The girl was recovered on 29th May; Haranath sent a wire on 26th May. She was examined by the police at Sibsagar on 30th May. After her examination, she was sent to her father's house immediately. She remained at her father's house for four or five days, after which she again came to Sibsagar. She was again brought home two or three days before her father's death which took place on 14th June. Her sister, Ratna's marriage was celebrated with Lokenath on 6th May, the date on which her marriage with Lokenath was to have been celebrated. On 11th June she was produced before the Subordinate Divisional Officer to have her statement recorded under S. 164, Criminal P. C. An Honorary Magistrate was deputed to verify the statement so recorded. Sashi Probha was examined by the Committing Magistrate on 22nd August 1928. Durga Prosad died on 14th June 1928. Sashi Probha left her father's house in the night of 4th September. While her mother and her little sister Santi and the youngest brother, was alone living, Sashi Probha was again produced before the Magistrate on 5th September 1929, the date of commitment. On that date, Panchanan was sent to jail. Sashi Probha was allowed to go of her own free will to the house of Panchanan. The letter Ex. 7 which goaded her to take this fatal step is dated 29th August 1928. Sashi Probha was examined in this Court on 8th May 1929. Sashi Probha personally appeared before the Additional Judge, Mr. Mehta on 7th March 1929, to apply for bail describing herself as the wife of Panchanan Gogai."

The girl has spoken in four voices. The first three statements are substantially the same. In all the statements, she spoke of being drugged and then carried by force in an unconscious state. All these statements have been read before you and you have also heard her deposition here. The suggestion of the defence is that what she spoke on the previous occasions were tutored and it is only here that she has spoken the real truth. It is also suggested that what she spoke to Bheduri, Kameswari and others when she was being taken from place to place were false and intended to convey wrong impression. This suggestion is made in the cross-examination to anticipate the evidence to be given by these persons. You must bear in mind the adverse comments of the defence pleader about the delay in producing her before the Magistrate and also that she did not appear before the Magistrate voluntarily. It is for you to decide in what voice she spoke the truth. The determining test should be, what version has been corroborated by the independent evidence. It has been the attempt of the prosecution to prove that her first three statements have been so corroborated."

On behalf of the accused it has been contended before us that the learned Judge had misdirected the jury in not calling their attention to the fact that the girl had been declared hostile by the prosecution and that she was allowed to be cross-examined and further that in the circumstances which happened the learned Judge ought to have directed the jury that the evidence of the girl ought to be rejected altogether. In support of this contention reliance has been placed upon the case of Emperor v. Satyendra (1) at pp. 176 and 177 (of 37 C. L. J.). The learned Deputy Legal Remembrancer on behalf of the Crown has argued that it is not a hard and fast rule that when a witness is cross-examined by the party calling him his evidence must be rejected in toto and has drawn our attention to a number of cases in the Courts in this country, where a somewhat different view has been taken.

Before I proceed further, I desire to refer to the order of the learned Judge under S. 154, Evidence Act, allowing the prosecution to cross-examine the girl. The order is as follows:

"The Public Prosecutor after examining the witness for sometime and found out that the witness was making statements contrary to what she deposed in the lower Court—wants the permission of the Court to cross-examine her after she is declared hostile. The other side objects. I am of opinion that the permission should be granted."

(1) A. I. R. 1923 Cal. 463.

The order of the learned Judge is not very happily expressed but I take it to mean that he having considered the submissions made by the prosecution exercised his discretion in the matter and gave leave for the cross-examination of the witness. This the learned Judge did, because the witness was clearly, in his opinion, one who was hostile. A hostile witness may be defined as one who, from the manner in which he gives his evidence, (within which is included the fact that he is willing to go back upon previous statements made by him) shows that he is not desirous of telling the truth to the Court. Where therefore one comes across a witness of this description, there is very high authority for the proposition that the evidence of such witness cannot in part be relied upon and the rest of it discarded or rejected: see Alexander v. Gibson (2). This case has been followed ever since 1881 and only in one case, namely, in the case Bradley v. Ricardo (3) it was not followed. Where the witness is declared hostile, so that leave to cross-examine is granted to the party calling him, it is in our opinion necessary that the Judge should explain to the jury what the position is that then arises, namely, that by asking for leave to cross-examine the witness, the party calling him admits that he is not a witness of truth and one whose evidence is not entitled to credit, who is prepared to make one statement on oath at one time and another at another time and that the evidence of such a witness should be rejected and left out of account in the minds of the jury. On principle we can see nothing why this rule which is in accordance with justice and fair play should not be adhered to. At any rate it is a rule which leans in favour of the accused and as such ought not to be departed from lightly.

In our opinion the learned Judge should have told the jury to reject the evidence of the girl altogether and that his omission to do so amounts to misdirection. The verdict of the jury must therefore be set aside and with it the conviction and sentence. The question then arises as to what should be done. We have very carefully considered the position and have come to the conclusion in view of all the circumstances that it would not be unduly stretching the law if we were to direct that there need not be a retrial. The accused who are on bail will be discharged from their bail bonds.

* Criminal P. C., S. 195—Where offence is not committed by parties to any proceeding while it is pending in respect of document produced, S. 195 does not operate as bar to cognizance of offence.

Certain criminal case in which K was on one side and R on the other, ended in a compromise. In these proceedings a certified copy of a municipal plan had been filed on behalf of R. The copy was taken out by a person identified as R by a pleader N. R made an application to the Chief Presidency Magistrate asking for enquiry into the matter, his complaint being that K and others had tampered with the original plan and had taken out the certified copy by giving a false receipt and on false identification by N. The Chief Presidency Magistrate, after examining R, issued warrant against K under Ss. 417, 419 and 430 109, Penal Code.

Held: that the offences were not committed by parties to any proceedings in Court while the said proceedings were pending in respect of documents produced or given in evidence in such proceedings. The offences were committed long after the proceedings had terminated and S. 195 did not operate as a bar to the cognizance of the offences. C. C. Ghose, J.—This rule must be discharged for the following reasons.

This rule was issued by my learned brothers Mittoo, J., and S. K. Ghose, J., on 30th September 1929, on the application of three persons, viz., Kartick Chandra Biswas, Bisheswar Biswas and Bhubaneswar Biswas. The matter of the application on which that rule was issued came up before this Court on a previous occasion in a slightly different form and in order to understand and appreciate the order that we propose to make, it is necessary to set out briefly, the circumstances giving rise to the present application.

In the year 1927 there were two criminal cases in which the petitioners or some of them were one of the parties and one Ramkrishna Saha or his men were the other party. These cases ended in a compromise and the result was that the proceedings in those cases terminated on 28th July 1927. In those proceedings a certified copy of a municipal plan had been filed on behalf of the said Ramkrishna Saha. This certified copy, it is alleged, was taken out by some person or persons, signing as or for Ramkrishna Saha on a receipt given for the purpose. The executant of the receipt was identified as Ramkrishna Saha by a pleader named Mr. Nares Chandra Sen. This took place on 25th May 1928. In August 1928, Ramkrishna Saha made an application to the Chief Presidency Magistrate asking for an enquiry into the matter, his complaint being that his name had been forged on the receipt aforesaid and the plan had been taken out by somebody not himself. This was followed up by another application made to the Chief Presidency Magistrate on 9th October 1928, in which he went into greater details and stated that Kartick Biswas and others had tampered with the original plan that was in the custody of the Calcutta Corporation and having done, that they removed the certified copy of the plan that was lying with the record of the police cases referred to above by giving a false receipt and with the false identification of the pleader Mr. Nares Chandra Sen. On this petition the learned Chief Presidency Magistrate, after examining the complainant Ramkrishna Saha and after certain preliminary orders which he passed, eventually issued warrants against the three petitioners under Ss. 417, 419, 420, 109, I. P. C. Thereafter the learned Chief Presidency Magistrate commenced an enquiry into the matter. In the course of the proceedings the learned Chief Presidency Magistrate came to entertain some doubt as to whether a complaint by Dr. Sarbadhikary was necessary in a case of this kind but eventually thought it was. On 9th January 1929, he expressed himself thus :

"The forgery was actually a receipt for taking back the document but it appears, however, to be probably within the meaning of S. 195 (c) in respect of the document that was put in evidence."

He, therefore, suggested to Dr. Sarbadhikary to make formal complaint inasmuch as otherwise there might be difficulties in going on with the proceedings. It appears that on this matter being placed before Dr. Sarbadhikary the latter on 14th January 1929 made an order which runs in these words :

"I did not pass the order and I do not know anything about it. I cannot therefore, make this complaint."

On the same day, evidently by reason of the order aforesaid of Dr. Sarbadhikary, the learned Chief Presidency Magistrate recorded a further order which runs in these words :

"If the Magistrate takes the trouble to read the order, to look up the law and then see the reports he will be able to learn all about it. The C. C. I should appear before him and move him to make the necessary complaint. Otherwise the case cannot proceed."

It appears further that, therefore, Dr. Sarbadhikary was moved by the C. C. I and certain papers were put before him with the result that he on 15th April 1929 made the order which forms the subject matter of the appeal. That order runs in these words :

"After perusing the abovenamed papers, I am strongly of opinion that if any offence has been committed, it has been chiefly committed by the certifying pleader Mr. Nares Chandra Sen. He must, therefore, be made an accused in the case along with Bhubaneswar Biswas, Kartick Chandra Biswas and Bisheswar Biswas. Accordingly, all these four persons are made accused in this case."

On the strength of this order of Dr. Sarbadhikary the learned Chief Presidency Magistrate took cognizance of the case. Against the order of Dr. Sarbadhikary the petitioners preferred an appeal to this Court being Criminal Appeal No. 257 of 1929 : The appeal came on for hearing before my learned brothers Mukerji, and Jack, JJ., and by their order dated 28th August 1929, the learned Judges allowed the appeal and set aside the order which was made by Dr. Sarbadhikary. It is not necessary for us to go into the grounds of the order made by Mukerji and Jack, JJ., at length. Briefly stated, their points were two in number: First, that S. 195, Criminal P. C., would not operate as a bar to the cognizance of any of the offences referred to hereinbefore and that Dr. Sarbadhikary in the circumstances which had happened was not competent to make a complaint under S. 476, Criminal P. C. It appears that the matter thereafter went back to the Chief Presidency Magistrate and warrants were issued for the arrest of the present petitioners. Thereafter the present petitioners came before Mitter and S. K. Ghose, JJ. and obtained a Rule, as stated above, on 30th September 1929, calling upon the Chief Presidency Magistrate to show cause why the proceedings against the petitioners should not be quashed on the following grounds, viz.:

For that the learned Magistrate has misconstrued the order of the High Court in holding that the case was one not covered by S. 195, Criminal P. C.;

For that what this Court had held was merely that no complaint by Dr. Sarbadhikary was necessary to prosecute the petitioners under S. 467, I. P. C. and

For that the allegations made in the petition of the complaint do not make out any case under Ss. 417, 419, 420/109, Penal Code or under S. 467, I. P. C.

So far as the first ground is concerned, we are of opinion that having regard to the order of this Court dated 28th August 1929, it is not open to the present petitioners to raise any such question as is referred to in the first ground. Their Lordships Mukerji and Jack, JJ. have held expressly that S. 195, Criminal P. C. would not operate as a bar to the cognizance of any offences hereinbefore referred to. Mr. Basu, however, has argued before us that having regard to the language of S. 195, Cl. 1, sub-S. (c), it is clear that the offences hereinbefore referred to were committed by parties to a proceeding in Court in respect of a document produced or given in evidence in such proceeding. We are of opinion that apart from the objection that such an argument is not admissible in this case having regard to what was laid down by Mukerji and Jack, JJ., it is quite clear on the facts of this case that the offences were not committed by parties to any proceedings in Court while the said proceeding was pending in respect of documents produced or given in evidence in such proceeding. It is not necessary to recite the facts again; but it is sufficient from what has been stated above that the offences were committed long after the proceedings in Court had come to a termination. That being so, there is no substance whatsoever in the first ground taken by the present petitioners.

As regards the second ground, it is quite true that no complaint by Dr. Sarbadhikary, the Honorary Magistrate concerned was necessary in this case; and if that is so, then this ground which is really one for the purpose of explaining what was held by Mukerji, and Jack, JJ. on 28th August 1929, must fall to the ground along with ground 1.

As regards the third ground, it is one dealing with the facts. In view of the order which we propose to make, it is neither desirable nor convenient that we, at this stage should go into the facts at any length and express an opinion thereon. We are, however, clearly of opinion that the allegations made in the complaint of Ramkrishna Saha are such as must be enquired into and it is quite impossible, having regard to the events which have happened and having regard to the nature of the complaint made by Ramkrishna Saha, that this Court should take upon itself at this stage to direct that the proceedings against the present petitioners should be quashed. It is sufficient for us to observe that ample materials are existent on the record which demand an enquiry and, in this view of the matter, the only course that is open to us at this stage is to discharge the rule and to direct that the record should be sent back as early as possible.

So much for the case itself. We cannot part, however, with this case without referring to the explanation which has been submitted by Mr. Roxburgh. In our opinion, it is a matter of abiding regret that a Magistrate of Mr. Roxburgh's position and of his experience and ability and knowledge of the procedure obtaining under the Criminal Procedure Code should have addressed to this Court an explanation in the language which he has thought fit to adopt and use. It is necessary to remind the Magistrate that he has no right to express himself in language of an annoyance nor to make sneering references to one of the Judges of this Court. Nothing is gained by using language wanting in decorum and politeness and the sooner Mr. Roxburgh gets rid of his present style of communications, the better. Reading the explanation as a whole, it strikes us that he has indulged in a criticism of Mukerji J.'s judgment—a proceeding in respect of which we must express our severe disapproval and condemnation.

Pearson, J.—I agree that this rule must be discharged for the reasons given by my learned brother. I only wish to say with reference to the latter part of the judgment of my learned brother that I endorse what he has said as regards the attitude of the learned Chief Presidency Magistrate as disclosed in his explanation and particularly the fact that it appears that the expressions to which objection may be chiefly taken appear to be based upon certain language attributed to one of my learned brothers which does not appear anywhere, so far as we can find, from the records in the proceeding. It has occurred to me that the word to which Mr. Roxburgh takes exception may have found place in a newspaper report which he has read. If so, I can only say that he has no business to utilize anything which he may have seen in the papers for the purpose of making adverse comments upon any Judge of this Court.

*Budhiswar Patni and others—*Accused Criminal Revn. No. 752 of 1929, Decided on 17th January 1930, from order of the Deputy Magistrate, Patna.

Bengal Ferries Act, Ss. 16 and 18 — "Distance" must be measured by reference to river frontage and not by land.

The land "distance" in S. 16 means distance by river. The distance must be measured by reference to the water frontage and not by land: Blissett v. Hart; (174) 125 E. R. 1923 Huzzey and Field, 150 E. R. 186 and Anderson v. Jellet, (1883) 9 S. C. R. 10, Ref.

Anil Chandra Rai Chowdhury — for Petitioner.

Mrityunjoy Chatterjee and Manindra Nath Banerji—for Opposite Parties.

C. C. Ghose, J.—The facts involved in this case, shortly stated as follows: The accused, who are four in number, were put on their trial before the Deputy Magistrate, Pabna on charges under S. 16 read with S. 28, Bengal Ferries Act, on the allegation that they were plying a private ferry at a place called Simla or Sakha without the sanction of the District Magistrate within two miles of the public ferry at Dhangora. The accused plead not guilty. Evidence was adduced on the point whether the offending ferry was within two miles of the public ferry at Dhangora. The Magistrate found on the record before him that the distance between the two places by river was 3 & 17/18 miles whereas by land it was 1 & 1/2 miles and he accordingly acquitted the accused, holding that the distance contemplated by S. 16, Bengal Ferries Act, was the distance by river and not by land. It is against this order of acquittal that the present rule has been obtained, and the point for consideration is whether the word "distance" in S. 16 of the Act means distance by river or by land.

Section 16, Bengal Ferries Act, runs as follows:

"No person shall except with the sanction of the Magistrate of the district, maintain a ferry to or from any point within a distance of two miles from the limits of a public ferry.

"Provided that, in the case of any specified public ferry, the Lieutenant-Governor, may by notification, reduce or increase the said distance of two miles to such extent as he thinks fit."

"Provided also that nothing hereinbefore contained shall prevent persons keeping boats to ply between two places, one of which is without, and one within, the said limits, when the distance between such places is not less than three miles, or shall apply to boats which the Magistrate of the District expressly exempts from the operation of this section."

A ferry is a franchise that no one can erect without a license from the Crown. It is in the nature of a highway and is the exclusive right to carry passengers across a river or stream or arm of the sea. It is publici juris and when a ferry is erected, another cannot be erected without an ad quod damnum. If a second ferry is erected without a license the Crown has a remedy by a quo warranto, and the former grantee has a remedy by action. Blissett v. Hart (1). The franchise of a ferry is not a grant of an exclusive right to carry across a stream by any means whatever, but only a grant of the exclusive right to carry across by means of a ferry. If, therefore, a person has a grant of a ferry another may not erect a second ferry upon the same river near to it, by which the former ferry is impaired. The erection of the second ferry in such circumstances will amount to a nuisance and an action will lie. What, however, amounts to a disturbance of a ferry must in each case be a question of fact: in other words the Court has got to determine what amounts to what is called sufficient proximity: see Huzzey v. Field (2). This question is determined by measurement of the distance from one terminus to another of the water frontage. An instructive case on this point is to be found in one of the Canadian reports: see Anderson v. Jellett (3). In that case, under a Crown license the town of B executed a lease to plaintiff granting the franchise "to ferry to and from the town of B to A," a township having a water frontage of about ten or twelve miles, directly opposite to B, such lease providing only for one landing place on each side, and a ferry was established within the limits of B. on the one side, to a point across the bay of Q., in the township of A within an extension of the east and west limits of B. Defendants established another ferry across another part of the bay of Q., between the township of A and a place in the township of S, which adjoins B, the termini being on the one side two miles from the western limits of B and on the A shore, about two miles from the landing place of plaintiff's ferry. It was held that the establishment and use of plaintiff's ferry within the limits aforesaid for many years had fixed the termini of the ferry and defendant's ferry was no infringement of plaintiff's right. The above propositions are deducible from the cases in England and elsewhere where English law prevails. They are of some assistance in determining the precise meaning of S. 16, Bengal Ferries Act.

In India legislation was first had with respect to ferries in 1816 and Regn. 19 of that year laid down rules for the better management of ferries. Only authorized persons could erect ferries and unauthorized persons plying a ferry were liable to payment of fines not exceeding Rs. 100 or in default of payment of fine to confinement with hard labour not exceeding three months. Regn. 19 of 1816 was replaced by Regn. 6 of 1819 and by S. 6 of that regulation the exclusive right to public ferries was first declared to belong to Government and all private ferries in their vicinity were prohibited or suppressed, the language used being "immediate vicinity." See Clarke's Bengal Regulations, Vol. 2 p. 544. The expression "immediate vicinity" would in this context certainly connote neighbourhood on the river frontage. With the passage of time, it became necessary to define the limit or limits of the vicinity and it is thus we finally arrive at S. 16, Bengal Ferries Act where the vicinity is limited to two miles. I am therefore of opinion that the distance must be measured by reference to the water frontage and not by land. The Magistrate has pointed out certain considerations which cannot be overlooked. I would therefore discharge the rule and refuse to interfere.

Pearson, J.—I agree.

 (c) Criminal P. C., Se. 476 and 476-B—In case of appeal under S. 476, reference to O. 41, R. 11, Civil P. C. is irrelevant—Provisions of S. 476-B shall be complied with.

Where an appeal is pending under the provisions of S. 476-B it should be disposed of under the provisions of S. 476-B and reference to O. 41, R. 11, Civil P. An appeal from order passed under S. 476 is an appeal in exercise of statutory right of appeal and the provisions of S. 476-B should be complied with. The Court should issue notices to both the parties concerned in the matter, it should send for the record, examine the case and should come to an independent finding whether, under the circumstances, the petitioners would be put in jeopardy by a complaint being lodged against them. Judgment.—This matter comes before us under somewhat peculiar circumstances and having regard to the lapse of time since the date of the original rule in this case being Civil Revision No. 10 of 1929, namely, 3rd May 1929, it is desirable to set out the facts which have given rise to the present application, on 24th September 1929. They are as follows :—It appears that petitioner 1 was plaintiff in a certain suit in the Court of the Munsiff of Karimganj in the District of Sylhet. The three other petitioners were his witnesses in the case. The plaintiff's suit was dismissed by the Munsiff on 5th October 1926. There was an appeal to the District Judge, but it was dismissed. A second appeal thereafter to this Court was summarily rejected under the provisions of O. 41, R. 11, Civil P. C. What has happened since then, shortly stated, is this. One of the defendants named Gopinath made an application to the Munsiff, who had succeeded the Munsiff who had tried the case in the first instance, for an order against the petitioners under S. 476, Criminal P. C. on the allegation that certain offences mentioned in S. 195, Criminal P. C. had been committed by the plaintiff and his witness. That application was disposed of by the Munsiff on 8th December 1928, the Munsiff holding that there was no case for enquiry and therefore for the lodging of a complaint under S. 476, Criminal P. C. Gopinath did not prefer any appeal against the order of the Munsiff dismissing his application. But it appears that within a week or so another defendant of the name of Hari-charan who, it is alleged, is an uncle of Gopinath, made a substantive application on his own account for an order similar to that which was prayed for by Gopinath against the petitioners. This last mentioned application was disposed of by the Munsiff on 15th March 1929. The Munsiff held that there was a case for enquiry and he thereupon lodged a complaint under S. 476, Criminal P. C. on 27th March 1929. The petitioners thereupon preferred an appeal to the District Judge Mr. Edgley under the provisions of S. 476-B, Criminal P. C. It appears that Mr. Edgley without sending for the record and without issuing notices to both the parties concerned in this case summarily dismissed the appeal on 12th April 1929. Against that order the petitioners moved this Court and obtained a rule on 3rd May 1929, from my learned brother Mr. Justice Pearson sitting with Mr. Justice Mallik. That Rule being Civil Revision No. 10 of 1929 came on for hearing before Mr. Justice Graham and Mr. Justice Lort-Williams on 3rd September 1929, and the order that was passed by their Lordships on that date runs as follows :

"This rule is directed against an order of the District Judge of Sylhet dismissing an appeal summarily under O. 41, R. 11, Civil P. C. We discharge the rule on the ground that we have no jurisdiction in the matter."

Thereafter the present petitioners moved the Vacation Bench (Mitter and S. K. Ghose, JJ.) and obtained a rule on almost the same terms as were stated in the original rule No. 10 of 1929.

No doubt in Mr. Edgley's order reference is made to O. 41, R. 11, Civil P. C. But it is quite clear that Mr. Edgley had to dispose of the appeal which was pending before him under the provisions of S. 476-B, Criminal P. C. and under no other section. The reference, therefore, to O. 41, R. 11, Civil P. C. was clearly irrelevant in the circumstances. As regards the question whether the learned Judges, Graham, J. and Lort-Williams, J. had jurisdiction to dispose of the rule in the way in which such rules are ordinarily disposed of by this Court the position appears to have been this. It appears that for a number of years when Sir Lancelot Sanderson was Chief Justice and more especially after the decision of the Full Bench in the case Emperor v. Har Prasad (1), the Bench taking the criminal, appellate and revisional business of the Court had always been authorized to entertain applications in connexion with orders made by civil Courts under Ss. 195 and 476, Criminal P. C. We have made enquires into the matter and we have satisfied ourselves that in the Daily List which was printed, it was specifically stated that the Criminal Bench were to deal with applications in connexion with orders made by Civil Courts under Ss. 195 and 476, Criminal P. C. Through some omission or other on the part of the office, this authorisation of the Criminal Bench had not been printed in recent years in the Daily List and, in consequence thereof, doubts arose whether the Criminal Bench had authority from the Chief Justice to deal with such applications. Those doubts are mainly responsible for the form of the order passed by Mr. Justice Graham and Mr. Justice Lort-Williams. Administrative action is being taken by the learned Chief Justice to prevent all such doubts in future. Be that as it may, it is perfectly clear that the order of 3rd September 1929, was passed by Graham and Lort-Williams, JJ. under a misapprehension. That being so, although the rule that was granted by my learned brothers, Pearson, and Mallik, JJ., was discharged on 3rd September 1929, we are of opinion that that order would not stand in the way of our disposing of this rule which was granted by the Vacation Bench on its merits. To hold otherwise would amount to a denial of justice. Besides, the present Criminal Bench have been specifically authorised by the learned Chief Justice to dispose of the present Rule on its own merits. That being so, we have felt ourselves completely at liberty to go into the whole matter for ourselves and see whether or not there is any substance in the contention put forward before us by Mr. Roy on behalf of his clients. It is perfectly clear that Mr. Edgley's order is unsupportable. Mr. Sen on behalf of the opposite party has made a vigorous attempt, as indeed it was his duty to do so, to support that order. But, as stated above, Mr. Edgley has not complied with the provisions of S. 476-B, Criminal P. C., the appeal to him being one which was in the exercise of the petitioners' statutory right of appeal from the order passed by the Munsiff under S. 476, Criminal P. C. He has neither issued notices to both the parties concerned in the matter nor has he sent for the record and examined the case for himself and come to an independent finding of his own whether, in the circumstances disclosed, the present petitioners should be put in jeopardy by a complaint being lodged against them. That being so, if not for anything else, Mr. Roy is entitled to ask us to make the rule absolute. We have not been content with merely listening to the technical complaints made by Mr. Roy; but we have gone into the substance of the thing and we are of opinion that on the merits Mr. Roy's clients have a good case. The Munsiff who gave the sanction at the instance of the defendant Hari Charan did not make any enquiry before he made a complaint against the present petitioners. It is true that under the provisions of S. 476, Criminal P. C. a preliminary enquiry is not legally necessary. But it has been laid down ever since the enactment of the present S. 476, Criminal P. C. that although a preliminary enquiry may not be legally necessary, it should in common prudence be held by every Court before it passes an order under S. 476, Criminal P. C. That, as we understand, is the present case law in this Court. This preliminary enquiry was not held by the Munsiff. Further, it is to be remembered that the application was made to the Munsiff who, it may be noted again, was the successor of the Munsiff who had originally tried the case, nearly two years and a half after the disposal of the case itself. The Munsiff who made the order complained of had no knowledge of the case, had not seen the witnesses and had to rely on the judgments which had been pronounced by the primary Court and by the Court of appeal below. In addition to all this, there is the circumstance that one application, made by one defendant namely, Gopinath, had already been dismissed. That was a factor which should have been and had to be taken into consideration. But it does not appear from the order of the Munsiff that this was taken into consideration; indeed none of these circumstances were ever taken into consideration by Mr. Edgley who had to dispose of the appeal. In these circumstances, in our opinion, it would not be just and proper that Mr. Roy's clients should be put to further trouble, inconvenience and expense. We think this is one of the cases in which this Court should interfere and put an end to these proceedings. We, therefore, direct that the rule be made absolute, that Mr. Edgley's order be set aside and that the complaint which had been made by the Munsiff at the instance of Hari Charan and all proceedings following thereon be set aside.

Corporation of Calcutta — Opposite Party.

Criminal Revn. No. 1083 of 1929, Decided on 27th November 1929.

Calcutta Municipal Act (1923), Ss. 271 and 278 (1)(b)—Whether there is proper access to privy is question in which corporation is not interested and requisition for that purpose is not covered by S. 278(1)(b)—It has to see only whether accommodation is sufficient and privy is in sanitary condition.

The words "take such other order" must be construed ejusdem generis with the words preceding. Whether proper access is available to a privy by people living in a particular portion of a house is a question in which the corporation is not prima facie interested. The tenants having just grievance can take such steps for securing proper access as the law provides but the corporation is only entitled under the Municipal Act to see that privy is in a sanitary condition, and the privy accommodation is sufficient. A requisition by the corporation that proper access should be provided to a privy is not, therefore, covered by S. 278 (1) (b). [P 365-C 2]

Mrityunjay Chattopadhyaya and Rabin-drath Mukherjee—for Petitioner.

Probodh Chandra Chatterjee and Gopendra Krishna Banerjee—for Opposite Party.

Judgment.—This rule has been issued against the conviction of the petitioner for not complying with the requirements of S. 278 (1) (b), Calcutta Municipal Act 1923. The requisition with which we are concerned in this case was to the effect that the petitioner should provide access to the northern connected privy of the first floor through the nearest verandah. The question which I am called upon to determine in this case is first whether the requisition is one which the corporation was entitled to issue under the Act; and secondly, whether the corporation has the right to say that access to the privy provided by the petitioner is insufficient. S. 278 (1) (b) authorizes the corporation to renew, repair, cover, recover, trap, ventilate, pave and pitch, cleanse, flush or take such other order with the same (including a privy) as the corporation may think fit to direct. It is argued on behalf of the corporation that the requisition is covered by the words "take such other order." In my judgment this contention is not sound. The words "take such other order" must be construed ejusdem generis with the words preceding, whether proper access is available to a privy by people living in a particular portion of a house is a question in which the corporation is not prima facie interested. It is a tenanted house and the tenants living in the first floor may have just grievance that they have no proper access to the privy. They can leave the premises if they like or they can take such steps for the purpose of securing access as the law provides; but the corporation is only entitled under the Municipal Act to see that the privy is in a sanitary condition. I am clearly of opinion that the requisition made by the corporation in this case is not covered by S. 278 (1) (b). It appears that there was a partition decree between the joint owners of this house and the first floor was allotted to the petitioner and he was required under the decree to provide access to the privy. The corporation is trying to execute that decree.

It further appears that petitioner has provided a wooden ladder from the ground to the privy. The corporation objects to this mode of access on the ground that it will be too inconvenient for the occupants of the first floor to go down to the ground and from that mount up the privy. This is a question which is beyond the function of the corporation to raise. It is not the case for the corporation that the privy is in an insanitary condition. The only objection is that it is inconvenient for the petitioner's tenants to use the privy. This is a matter which is between the petitioner and his tenants. In this connexion reference may be made to S. 271 which provides as follows :

"When any premises intended for human habitation are without privy or urinal accommodation or if the corporation are of opinion that the existing accommodation therefor available for the persons occupying the premises is insufficient, inefficient or for sanitary reasons objectionable, the corporation may, by written notice require the owner to provide such additional privy as they may prescribe or to make such structural or other alterations in the existing privy or urinal accommodation as they may prescribe."

The corporation if it thinks that the privy accommodation for the occupants of the first floor is not sufficient it may take such steps as it is authorised under the Act to do. But it cannot insist upon the owner to provide facilities for the tenants.

In my judgment the rule must be made absolute and the order of the Municipal Magistrate imposing fine upon the petitioner should be set aside. The fine, if paid, will be refunded.

MUKERJI, J.

Pran Nath Kundu—Petitioner.

v.

Emperor—Opposite Party.

Criminal Revn. No. 182 of 1929, Decided on 8th May 1929, against order of Sub-Deputy Magistrate, Rajbari, D/- 15th October 1928.

(a) Easement — Right of way — Three kinds enumerated.

In India just as much as in England there are three distinct rights of way. First there are private rights in the strict sense of the term vested in particular individuals or the owners of particular tenements and such rights commonly have their origin in grant or prescription. Secondly, there are rights belonging to certain classes of persons, certain portions of the public, such as the freemen of the city, tenants of a manor or the inhabitants of a parish village. Such rights commonly have their origin in custom. Thirdly, there are public rights in the full sense of the term which exists for the benefit of all the King's subjects and the sense of these is ordinarily dedication. 15 Cal. 460 (F. B.). Foll. [P 367 C 1]

(b) Easement—Public right of way can be acquired by user or dedication to public in general.

A public right of way in the full sense of the term and as to all King's subjects is unson-nected with dominant tenements. Such right of way may be acquired by user or dedication to the public in general. In this connection the fact that there were no thoroughfares at the termini is not of much importance on the point of dedication, but the question whether public in general use the way as pathway or only the inhabitants of the village or some other village do, are questions of considerable materiality. For where the privilege to use a road is enjoyed by a particular section of the public community or by inhabitants of two or three villages and not by others the road is not a public road. 25 W. R. 233 and 9 All. 481, Ref. [P 367 C 2, P 368 C 1]

(c) Easement—Public right of way which have their origin in custom—Evidence to support user sufficient to raise presumption of dedication must be cogent.

Ways permitted to be used by a section of the public or ways used by all in particular cases are private ways which have their origin in custom and such customary ways can be converted into an ordinary highway after user by the general public sufficient to raise the presumption of dedication, but the evidence in support of the public claim must be cogent. Brookbank v. Thompson, 2 Ch. 311; Furquhar v. Newbury Rural District, 1 Ch. 12; Bermondsey v. Brown, L. R. 1 Eq. 204, Ref. [P 368 C 1]

(d) Penal Code, Ss. 283 and 341—S. 283 does not contemplate pathway with regard to which there is no testimony of universal user sufficient to raise presumption of dedication to public.

A pathway, which lies over a private land and which is used by the villagers and perhaps by the inhabitants of some of the villages, but with regard to which there is no testimony of universal user sufficient to raise a presumption of dedication to the public, is not a public way within the meaning of S. 283. To establish a customary right of way to the same pathway the Court must be satisfied of the reasonableness and certainty of the user and that such user was not permissive nor exercised by stealth or force and that the right has been exercised for such length of time as to suggest that by agreement or otherwise the usage has become the customary law of the particular locality: 17 All. 87; 31 All. 257; 20 Mad. 39, and 23 Bom. 666, Ref. [P 368 C 2]

Surajit Ch. Lahiri for Suresh Ch. Talukdar—for Petitioner.

Order.—The proceedings in this case originated in an application addressed to the Circle Officer of Pangsia Circle by which a number of persons complained that the petitioner Prannath Kundu had placed some refuse etc., on a public road running through plots 511, 512 and 513, which was in use for a very long time, in order to convert it into land in his possession and had thus caused inconvenience to the applicants. It prayed that the public road, right be cleared up and opened to the public as before. It was forwarded by the Circle Officer to the Sub-Divisional Magistrate who summoned the petitioner under Ss. 283 and 290, I. P. C. The case was tried by another Magistrate who eventually convicted the petitioner under Ss. 283 and 426, I. P. C. and sentenced him to pay a fine of Rs. 20, in default to undergo simple imprisonment for one month. On appeal the District Magistrate has altered the conviction to one under S. 341, I. P. C. keeping the sentence intact. The learned District Magistrate has found that the path lies on the land of the accused and to that extent it is not a public path, but that the public have been using it for over twenty years and that right of way has been established. The petitioner's contention is that those findings, and for the matter of that the evidence, is not sufficient for the conviction of the petitioners.

In the Full Bench decision of this Court in the case of Chuni Lal v. Ram Kissen Sahu (1) Wilson, J., in one of his classical judgments, agreed in by the other members of the Bench, explained that in India just as much as in England there are three distinct classes of right of way:

"First there are private rights in the strict sense of the term, vested in particular individuals or the owners of particular tenements, and such rights commonly have their origin in grant or prescription. Secondly there are rights belonging to certain classes of persons, certain portions of the public, such as the freemen of a city, the tenants of a manor or the inhabitants of a parish or village. Such rights commonly have their origin in custom. Thirdly, there are public rights in the full sense of the term which exists for the benefit of all the Queen's subjects; and the sense of these is ordinarily dedication."

The first question that falls for determination is, to which class of rights does the right alleged to be infringed in the present case appertain? In the application to which I have referred the way is described as a public way. The evidence bearing on the matter stands thus:

P. W. 1 "The public of the village Magura-dangi and others walk by this path. . . . The path is 4 or 5 cubits wide and 5 or 6 rasis long. It does not go beyond his (meaning witness's,) house. From witness's house it goes to accused's house and then by Sham Lal Kundu's house and thence to the Railway line."

P. W. 2—"The path is 6 cubits wide. The path from the accused's house up to the railway line to the north and then east is raised, but not so on the south up to the house of P. W. 1."

P. W. 3 "The path was used by public for a very long time for over 20 years."

P. W. 4 "The path does not meet the halot on the south. It passes along the south east of house of P. W. 6 and then along the south of his house. The path is not a raised one. The witness comes southward from his house and going along the south of the house of P. W. 1 and then east, he uses the path, P. W. 3's house is south of witness's, and he goes eastward by the south of the house of P. W. 1 and then east and then uses the path in question. Another halot to the south of the house of P. W. 1 is 200 cubits away from the path alluded to by the witness along the south of the house of P. W. 1"

P. W. 5 Witness, P. W.'s and the public walk over it. There is no other path for going to that direction."

It has been found that the plots over which the path is alleged to pass belong to the petitioner. The evidence quoted above shows that the way begins at or near the house of P. W. 1 and ends at or near the railway line and does not join any highway or public thoroughfare at either end. It also shows taken at its highest that the inhabitants of this village and possibly of other villages, use the way, but such user must be for the purpose of going to or from one of the houses abutting on the way, for the termini of the way are not on any highway or public thoroughfare. A public right of way in the full sense of the term and as to all the King's subjects is unconnected with any dominant tenement. Such right of way may be acquired by user of or dedication to the public in general. But as the Judicial Committee has pointed out in the case of Muhammad Rustam Ali Khan v. Municipal Committee, Karnal City (2)

"in order to constitute a valid dedication to the public of a highway by the owner of the soil, there must be an intention to dedicate, there must be an animus de-dedicandi, of which the user by the public is evidence and no more"

It has also been pointed out in that case that while there may be dedication to the public for a limited purpose as for instance, an access to a particular building, or a footway, horseway or driftway, there can be no such thing in law as a public right of way constituted by dedication to only a section of the public. The fact that there are no thoroughfares at the termini is consequently of not much importance on the point of dedication, but the question whether the public in general use the way as a pathway or only the inhabitants of this village and also of some other villages do so is a question of considerable materiality. Where the privilege to use a road is enjoyed only by one particular section of the community or by inhabitants of two or three villages and not by others, the road is not a public road S'am v. Nonee (3), Fattelyab v. Mohammad (4), where there is the intention to allow not the public generally but merely visitors to or traders with the people of the village, or ways allowed to be used by villagers to go to a church or a market or the common fields of a village such ways are not regarded as public ways but private ways, and they generally have their origin in custom. Brocklebank v. Thompson (5). Such a customary way can be converted into an ordinary highway after user by the general public sufficient to raise the presumption of dedication Farquhar v. Newbury Rural District (6), but the evidence in support of the public claim must be cogent vestry or Bermondsey v. Brown (7). See Peacock's Law of Easements 3rd Edn. p. 237 footnote. The evidence of user such as there is in this case does not support an inference of dedication for the use of the public in general and the pathway alleged is not one which S. 283, I. P. C. contemplates.

Section 283, I. P. C. being out of the way, it will have to be considered whether one of the other two kinds of rights has been established so that the case may come under S. 341, I. P. C. In the present case there is no question of the complainant, whose case is that the obstruction put upon the way has prevented him from going in a particular direction has acquired a right of way by either grant or prescription. The question really is whether the prosecution has established a customary right of way on the part of the villagers, amongst whom the complainant is one, to use this land as a pathway. The English common law rule of the immemorial user is not required to establish a custom in India, and it has been held that it is sufficient if the Court is satisfied of its reasonableness and certainty and that the user on which it is founded was not permissive nor exercised by stealth or force and that the right had been enjoyed for such a length of time as to suggest that by agreement or otherwise the usage has become the customary law of the particular locality. Kuar Sen v. Mamman (8); Shadi Lal v. Mohammad Isaq Khan (9). Palaniandi Tevan v. Puthirangonda Nandan (10), Mohidin v. Shirlingappa (11). For the conviction of the petitioner under S. 341, I. P. C. this customary right of way has necessarily to be proved by the prosecution in order to make out that the complainant had the right to proceed on the pathway in some particular direction. The difficulty of proving a customary right of way, with all its requisite elements, upon the oral testimony of two or three witnesses, who are only able to say that for over 20 years the way has been used by the villagers, is considerably enhanced by the exception to the definition contained in S. 339, I. P. C. It is extremely difficult in a case of this nature to say that the accused who has caused the obstruction did not in good faith believe that he had a right to obstruct the further user of his land as a pathway.

For this reason I am of opinion that this conviction cannot be supported. The rule is made absolute. The petitioner's conviction and sentence are set aside. The fine, if paid, will be refunded.

Before parting with the case I may point out that in cases of this nature the law has provided for a remedy in the shape of proceedings under S. 133, Cr. P. C. which speaks of "obstruction" on "any way" and not merely "public way." The original application of the complainant and his co-applicants clearly suggested that course, but unfortunately it was not adopted, for reasons which are not apparent. Those proceedings were clearly more appropriate than a prosecution for a criminal offence.

v.

Mt. Nanhi—Opposite Party.

Criminal Revn. No. 461 of 1929, Decided on 29th October 1929, from order of Dist. Magistrate, Bijnor, D/- 4th June 1929.

(a) Criminal P. C., S. 435 (1)—Revision application filed before Sessions Judge or District Magistrate bars another application before the other.

The construction of sub-S. (4) clearly is that where either the Sessions Judge or District Magistrate has had an application in revision, in the same matter, before them, moved by either party, the other local district Court would have no jurisdiction to hear a further application in the same matter : 26 Mad. 477 and 110 P. R. 1912 Cr. Ref. [P 370 C 1]

(b) Criminal P. C., S. 435—District Magistrate cannot order retrial—He can act under S. 436 only—High Court alone can order retrial.

A District Magistrate has no jurisdiction to order a retrial of a case. He can order, if he so wishes, on proper grounds, under S. 436, a further inquiry into the complaint, but it is reserved to the High Court in S. 439, to use any of the powers conferred on a Court of appeal, which would include the right of ordering a retrial. [P 370 C 2]

(c) Criminal P. C., Ss. 253 and 436—Order of discharge should be set aside only when prima facie incorrect and further evidence necessary.

An order of discharge should only be set aside very sparingly and only when it can be said either to be perverse or prima facie incorrect and there is a suggestion that any further evidence might be forthcoming.

[P 371 C 1]

K. O. Carleton and T. A. K. Sherwani for Applicant.

A. M. Khawja—for Opposite Party.

Judgment.—This is an application in revision from an order in revision of the District Magistrate of Bijnor. A complainant brought a charge under S. 406, I. P. C., against the applicant. The matter came before a Special Magistrate and he discharged the applicant. The complainant went in revision to the District Magistrate who, purporting to act under S. 436, Criminal P. C., ordered a retrial. The applicant comes in revision to the High Court against the order of the District Magistrate.

Mr. Khawja, on behalf of the complainant, raises a preliminary objection to the case being entertained by the High Court. He contends that the applicant should not be heard by the High Court, until he has first made an application in revision to the Sessions Judge, and he prays in aid the authority of Sharif Ahmad v. Qabul Singh (1). In that case a Bench of this Court decided that :

"as far as the practice of this Court is concerned, an application to the lower Court should be considered an essential step in the procedure, and that should be so whether the District Magistrate or Sessions Judge has power to grant the relief or not. In future, therefore, failure on the part of the applicant to submit his application to the lower Court will operate as a bar to the application being entertained by this Court."

- It is contended that the applicant in this case should have first of all filed an application in revision in the Court of the Sessions Judge as a preliminary step to an application to the High Court in accordance with the ruling quoted above. It is contended that the District Magistrate's Court is an inferior Court to the sessions Court within the meaning of this ruling, and it is contended that this is made clear specially in matters of revision by the explanation following S. 435 (1), Criminal P. C., which enacts that :

"all Magistrates, whether exercising original or appellate jurisdiction, shall be deemed to be inferior to the Sessions Judge for the purposes of this sub-section and of S. 437."

I am of opinion that this preliminary point is misconceived and has no force. It is to be noted that the case of Sharif Ahmad v. Qabul Singh (1) was dealing with an application in revision from an order convicting the applicant and sentencing him to a fine of Rs. 10. In that case the conviction was by a Magistrate and no application had been made in the matter in revision to either the District Magistrate or the Sessions Judge. In the matter before me an application in revision has been made to the District Magistrate by the complainant and it is clear, in my view, that sub-S. (4), S. 435, therefore, applies. The sub-section enacts that :

"if an application under this section has been made either to the Sessions Judge or District Magistrate, no further application shall be entertained by either of them."

It is contended by the complainant that this sub-section should be construed so as to mean :

"an application under this section has been made to either Court by the applicant to the High Court," and that the sub-section would not apply where the application to the lower

(1) A. I. R. 1921 All. 30=48 All. 497.

Court had been made by the opposite party in the High Court. If effect were given to this contention of the complainant, it would mean that the applicant in revision to the High Court, having already applied to the District Magistrate in revision on the same point, would have then to go to the Sessions Court as a mere formality, because the Sessions Judge would have no power to pass an effective order; he would merely be a sort of conduit pipe through which the applicant would have to travel before he reached the High Court. This would mean additional expense and delay to the parties for no effective purpose. If the Bench of this Court in Sharif Ahmad v. Qabul Singh (1), had made a rule of practice enforcing such a step upon applicants in revision, I would, of course, be bound by it. But, as I have pointed out, the case of Sharif Ahmad v. Qabul Singh (1), has no real application to the present case. The construction of sub-S. (4) clearly must be that where either the Sessions Judge or District Magistrate has had an application in revision in the same matter before them, moved by either party, the other local District Court would have no jurisdiction to hear a further application in the same matter. This reading of the subsection accords, in my view, with common sense. I am confirmed in my view on this point of law by decisions of other High Courts in India: see the case of Kalimuthu v. Emperor (2). In that case an application in revision was made to the Sessions Judge, which was dismissed. The District Magistrate then took up the case suo motu and made an order contrary to the decision of the Sessions Judge. It was held in that case under Cl. (4) of S. 435 that the District Magistrate's order was invalid. In Emperor v. Waryam (3) the Punjab Chief Court held that S. 435 (4), Criminal P. C., applied to all cases in which either a District Magistrate or a Sessions Judge had taken action, or had refused to take action, under Ss. 435, 436, 437 and 438 of the Code and that the words "further application" in S. 435 mean another application in respect of the order in question of the inferior criminal Court.

It is clear that the provisions of S. 435 (4) were enacted for the purpose of avoiding a conflict of opinion between two local Courts of co-ordinate jurisdiction.

The preliminary objection having been disposed of, it is contended by the applicant that the order of the District Magistrate in this case, ordering a retrial, ought to be set aside.

In the first place, the order of the District Magistrate is clearly illegal and improper, in that a District Magistrate has no jurisdiction to order a retrial of a case. He can order, if he so wishes, on proper grounds, under S. 436, Criminal P. C., a further inquiry into the complaint, but it is reserved to the High Court in S. 439, Criminal P. C., to use any of the powers conferred on a Court of appeal, which would include the right of ordering a retrial. The order of the District Magistrate is, therefore, bad. It is competent for this Court to amend the order of the District Magistrate to one competent to him under S. 436. But as any order under S. 436 would be clearly improper in this case, it is unnecessary to amend it.

The case for the complainant was that she had paid Rs. 700 to the accused for the purpose of his discharging a debt due by her deceased husband to a certain moneylender one Piare Lal. She alleged in her complaint that the accused had never paid the money to the moneylender, but had appropriated it to his own use and, therefore, had committed a criminal breach of trust. The complainant called evidence before the Magistrate. She proved herself that she had paid the money to the accused and that is accepted by both Courts as being a fact. She also called Piare Lal, the moneylender and the moneylender gave evidence that on 23rd October 1928, Mohammad Husain, the accused applicant, paid him Rs. 700, and that he (Piare Lal) had struck the debt for this amount out of his hahikhate and returned the bond to the applicant. The prosecution closed its case. On the evidence before him the Magistrate came to the conclusion, which was entirely proper, that the prosecution had failed to make out any case under any section of the I. P. C. It is clear, of course, that no criminal breach of trust had been proved. The prosecution had proved the receipt of the money by Moham-mad Husain and the payment of it by him to the moneylender, as he was instructed to do. The applicant was, therefore, entitled, if he felt so inclined, to submit that no case had been made out and that it was unnecessary for him to make a statement or enter upon his defence. The District Magistrate, however, in an application in revision has delivered himself of a judgment which it is almost impossible to understand. He says,

"it is clear that the money had been deposited by the accused with Piare Lal, but it was deposited not on behalf of the plaintiff but on behalf of the accused himself."

As there was no evidence of this before the learned Magistrate, it is difficult to know how he so found, but even if the facts be as stated, it could not make the accused guilty of a criminal offence. It is perfectly clear that the applicant was entitled, on the evidence of the prosecution itself, to an order of discharge.

It has been laid down in this Court on many an occasion that an order of discharge should only be set aside very sparingly and only when it can be said either to be perverse or prima facie incorrect and there is a suggestion that any further evidence might be forthcoming. In this case it is impossible to say that the order was perverse or incorrect, and it has never been suggested that the prosecution did not call all the evidence it could on this matter, or that it would be possible on any further enquiry to call any further evidence. Indeed, on the evidence of the money lender himself, it would be impossible to call any other evidence which could alter the nature of the finding of the Court. On that evidence alone the accused was entitled to be discharged. I accept the application, discharge the order of the District Magistrate and restore the order of the trial Court.

Criminal Misc. Case No. 472 of 1929,
Decided on 2nd December 1929.

Criminal P. C., S. 167 — Magistrate has no power to investigate and keep person in custody for purposes of investigation—Criminal P. C., S. 202.

Where a Magistrate receives a complaint he should either himself examine one or more complainants and take action under S. 202, or if he is taking action on his own knowledge, he should transfer the proceedings completely to another Magistrate so that Magistrate may proceed to enquiry or trial after recording the statement of the complainant. It is also open to him to make report to police who can take action under S. 167. But so far as can be gathered from provisions of the Code a Magistrate has not the powers of a police officer to investigate and keep an accused person in custody for the purposes of such investigation: custody can only follow where definite charge has been made and complainant has been examined. Judgment. — The learned Government Advocate has now obtained particulars and I am made acquainted with the proceedings taken by the District Magistrate of Farrukhabad. It appears that the District Magistrate received a complaint from a patwari school teacher that he had not received his salary during the time he was on leave. It appears to have been the duty of the applicant Anand Behari Lal to distribute the pay, and the District Magistrate suspected that Anand Bihari Lal was guilty of embezzlement. He immediately issued a warrant for Anand Bihari Lal's arrest and directed a subordinate Magistrate to hold an inquiry. There has been no examination of the complainant as is emphatically directed in S. 200, Criminal P. C., see S. 202 (1) (a). There does not appear to be any authority given to a Magistrate to keep an accused person in custody just as is given to the police under S. 167 of the Code to enable the police to carry out further investigation. In my opinion custody can follow only where a definite charge has been made and the complainant has been examined. The learned Government Advocate suggested that the District Magistrate had taken action under S. 190 (1) (c) upon information received from any person other than a police officer, or upon his own knowledge or suspicion, that such offence had been committed. If such was the case the District Magistrate had no jurisdiction under S. 191 and he ought to have transferred the inquiry preparatory to commitment to session.

or trial to a subordinate Magistrate and was not entitled to take action under S. 202 himself. It is apparent that he did not make a complete transfer from the fact that he entertained the application for bail himself on 20th November last. It is desirable that action should be taken according to law. Either the District Magistrate himself should examine one or more complainants and take action under S. 202 of the Code, or, if he is taking action on his own knowledge, he should transfer the proceedings completely to the Court of a Subordinate Magistrate so that Magistrate may proceed to inquiry or trial after recording the statement of the complainant. So far as can be gathered from the provisions of the Code, a Magistrate has not the powers of a police officer to investigate and keep an accused person in custody for the purposes of such investigation. It was also open to the District Magistrate to make a report to the police who could then have taken action under S. 167 of the Code.

As matters stand at present Anand Bihari Lal is entitled to bail. I direct his release on bail on his own bond in Rs. 2,000 with two sureties in Rs. 2,000 each to the satisfaction of the District Magistrate. If there is any apprehension subsequently that Anand Bihari Lal in spite of giving sureties is likely to abscond any Magistrate trying the case is permitted to cancel this order for reasons to be stated in writing and order the arrest of Anand Bihari Lal.

Criminal Misc. Case No. 379 of 1929,
Decided on 11th December 1929.

Criminal P. C., S. 491 (1) (b)—Power given by S. 491(1) (b) has to be exercised with caution and not in case where there is dispute as to who should be guardian of minors.

The power under S. 491 (1) (b) is to be exercised in matters of urgency, where, for instance the father is suddenly deprived of the custody of his sons and there is danger to the life of the sons in the transferred custody. It is a remedy for a person deprived of his liberty. The power therefore has to be exercised with caution and not in a case where there is a dispute merely as to who should be guardian of particular minors. [P 372 C 2]

Kumuda Prasad, H. P. Sen, K. D. Malaviya and Hari Ram Jha—for Applicant.

B. Malik—for Opposite Party.

Order.—The applicant Sultan Singh is father of two minor sons and the opposite party Maya Ram is father of the applicant. The minor boys are at present under the charge of Maya Ram. They have been, according to the applicant's own affidavit, under the charge of Maya Ram since 1925. This application is made for a direction of the nature of a habeas corpus under S. 491 (1) (b), Criminal P. C. That section gives power to this Court whenever it thinks fit to direct that a person illegally or improperly detained in public or private custody within the limits of its appellate criminal jurisdiction may be set at liberty. In the very nature of things the power would be exercised in matters of urgency, where, for instance, the father is suddenly deprived of the custody of his sons and there is danger to the life of the sons in the transferred custody. It is stated in Wharton's Law Lexicon that this, the most celebrated prerogative writ in the English Law, is a remedy for a person deprived of his liberty. The power, therefore, has to be exercised by this Court with caution and not in a case where there is a dispute merely as to who should be guardian of particular minors. In the present case the applicant has permitted his sons to be in the custody of their grandfather for four years and this application is merely a cheap way in which he desires to establish his guardianship over the boys. It further appears that even prior to 1925 the boys were living with Maya Ram. Such a statement has been made in an affidavit of Maya Ram and not been denied by a counter-affidavit filed by Sultan Singh. The case, therefore, clearly is not one of urgency. There may be some difference of opinion between High Courts as to whether a suit should lie in case of Sultan Singh never before having been in charge of his boys, or whether S. 25, Guardians and Wards Act would be applicable : see Achhralal v. Ohimantal (1) and Sukhdeo Rai v. Ram Chandar (1) [1916] 40 Bom. 600 = 37 I. C. 215 = 19 Bom. L. R. 682.

Rai (2). However that may be, a civil remedy is open to the applicant wherein a District Court or a civil Court may fully inquire as to whose custody would be most beneficial to the sons. This Court is not the Court for such an inquiry. There is no cause so far as can be made out from the affidavits for interference. I dismiss the application. F.V.S./R.K. Application dismissed.

An application filed by an advocate or counsel on behalf of the prisoner and purporting to be from the prisoner himself, "petition by a prisoner" within the meaning of S. 19 (17), and the fact that it was an adjournment application made by the counsel for his personal convenience is immaterial: A. I. R. 1922 U. B. 14; 14 N. L. R. 77 and A. I. R. 1924 Rang. 160, Rel. on. [P 374 C 1]

Sailanath Mukerji—for Applicant.

U. S. Bupai—for the Crown.

Judgment.—This is a reference for a decision whether a certain application filed by an advocate on behalf of a prisoner in jail is chargeable with a court-fee.

The application in question was filed by an advocate on behalf of the prisoner on 12th November 1929, and purports to be from the prisoner himself. The application runs as follows:

"That my counsel will be absent from Allahabad between 14th and 21st November 1929, both days inclusive. It is prayed that the above mentioned case be not put up on the days list between the above mentioned dates."

The learned advocate, who appears on behalf of the advocate who presented the petition, has argued that the application is exempted from liability to court-fee under S. 19 (17), Court-fees Act, 1870. This clause runs as follows: "Petition by a prisoner or other person in duress or under restraint of any Court or its officers."

Undoubtedly the application in question is a petition on behalf of a prisoner, and the only question is whether it should be held to be a "petition by a prisoner" within the meaning of S. 19 (17).

It is conceded that certain classes of applications made to the High Court on behalf of prisoners are in practice held not to be chargeable with court-fee, for example:

(1) Applications for bail on behalf of prisoners in jail. (2) Applications for summoning records of other cases which are required for arguing the prisoners' appeal. (3) Applications for revision on behalf of prisoners in jail.

Also it is conceded that appeals on behalf of prisoners in jail are admitted by this Court without payment of any court-fee although such appeals may not be signed by the prisoner in jail or come from the prisoner through the Superintendent of the jail.

It appears to have been tacitly conceded, therefore, in view of the practice followed in such cases, that applications which are made on behalf of prisoners in jail are considered as equivalent to applications by prisoners.

I have been referred to several reported cases in which this question has been considered by different High Courts. In the case of Jagannath Kahar v. Emperor (1), it was held by the Upper Burma Judicial Commissioner's Court that an application for bail signed only by the advocate of a prisoner is an application made by the prisoner himself, and under S. 19 (17), Court-fees Act, it is not required to be stamped. The view taken by the Court was that an application made by the advocate of a prisoner should be treated as equivalent to an application by the prisoner himself.

In the case of Emperor v. Maroti Teli (2), it was held by the Nagpur Judicial Commissioner's Court that a petition of appeal presented by a prisoner not personally but through his pleader is exempted from court-fees under Cl. 17, S. 19.

In the case reported in A. I. R. 1924, Rangoon, p. 160 it was held by the Rangoon High Court that a petition of appeal or revision signed and filed by an advocate or pleader on behalf of a prisoner under an authority signed by a prisoner need not bear a court-fee stamp. At the present day it is not necessary for the prisoner to give his advocate a written and signed authority, but the reason for the decision still holds good, namely, that it is the less a petition by a prisoner because it is filed on his behalf by an advocate.

I agree to the view taken by the Courts in these cases. In interpreting a fiscal statute the Court is entitled to demand that the liability of the subject should be clearly established, and in the present case I see no reason why the maxim "qui facit per alium facit per se" should not be applicable. No cases have been shown to me in which a contrary view has been held.

It has been argued by the learned Government Advocate that, although the petition purports to be on behalf of the prisoner, practically it is in the interests of the advocate himself. He contends that the petition was not really in the interests of the prisoner because it meant that the hearing of his appeal would have to be adjourned and that, therefore, he would not have a chance of release from jail so soon as he would otherwise have done. I am not prepared to accept this contention because when a prisoner appoints an advocate to conduct his appeal he presumably wishes the advocate to do so personally. If the advocate appointed is for some reason unable to appear on certain dates and desires that the appeal should not be heard during his absence I think that he would be considered to be acting in the interests of his client if he asks for an adjournment in order to enable him personally to argue the case as desired by his client. In the present case although the advocate's personal convenience was no doubt partly responsible for the application I am not prepared to hold that the application was not made, partly at least, in the interests of the prisoner.

In my opinion, therefore, the application in question should be held to be made "by the prisoner" although it was actually presented through his advocate on the prisoner's behalf. It follows that under S. 19 (17) the application is not chargeable with any court-fee and I decide accordingly

Decided on 4th March 1929.

(a) Criminal P. C., S. 526.—Ground for transfer.

The fact that a Magistrate, fifteen years before, had been a class-fellow of somebody who was either a complainant, a respondent or an advocate in the case is not a fit ground for transfer, [P 374 C 2]

(b) Legal Practitioners Act, S. 13—Mere fact that opposite party happens to be member of the same profession is not a circumstance which entitles a member of the Bar to refuse to undertake the case against him: See A. I. R. 1929 All. 367.

It is very important that men at the Bar should understand that they are members of a public profession. That is by their very calling they engage and undertake to, act for anybody who fulfils certain conditions. Therefore if a client comes to them with proper instructions and prepared to pay a fair and proper fee and invites them to undertake a case of a kind, which they are accustomed to do and they refuse, such refusal amounts to professional misconduct and should be punished as such. Order.—This is a transfer application in which Gokul Prasad and others ask that a case now before a Special Magistrate, Captain Bijai Prasad Singh, may be transferred to some other competent Magistrate's Court outside the district of Benares.

The affidavit in support of this application is untrue in one important respect. Para. 11 runs as follows :

"That the learned trying Magistrate was a class-fellow of B. Sahadeo Singh, Advocate, and is on terms of intimacy with him."

The statement "on terms of intimacy with him" is a falsehood. The Magistrate in his explanation has said :

"About fifteen years ago Babu Sahadeo Singh Advocate, was my class-fellow for a few months. I knew him then very casually and after that I have never met (him) as a friend or intimate and have never exchanged any social visits as he is not known to me well."

If a case was to be transferred on every occasion on which a Magistrate fifteen years before had rubbed shoulders with somebody who was either a complainant, or a respondent or an advocate in the case the whole of the judicial work in this country would come to an end.

The learned Magistrate in his explanation has said :

" that the real reason underlying this application is not any apprehension that the applicants will fail to receive justice from me but has been done to harass the other side. "

The incidents out of which this case arises are said to have taken place on 2nd November 1928, and we are now in the month of March and the case has not been concluded.

I refuse this application for transfer. A copy of this order is to be sent to the learned Magistrate with an expression of my wish that he will use all reasonable expedition to sweep this, and apparently some connected cases, off his file as soon as he can.

There is one other point that should be mentioned, and that arises from a statement contained in para. 15 of the affidavit which runs as follows :

" That legal practitioners of influence having been involved in the case as accused, the petitioners have failed to get standard (sic) legal assistance from the local Bar. "

It is very important that men at the Bar should understand that they are members of a public profession. That is by their very calling they engage and undertake to act for anybody who fulfils certain conditions. Therefore if a client comes to them with a proper instructions and prepared to pay a fair and proper fee and invites them to undertake a case of a kind which they are accustomed to do and they refuse, such refusal amounts to professional misconduct, and should be punished as such. I should like this to be communicated by the Magistrate to any of the members of the local bar who appear not to be aware of that rule. That is to say, a man at the Bar has no right whatever to refuse a case if proper instructions are given and proper fees are tendered to him and the work is of a class which he is accustomed to do. The mere fact that the opposite party happens to be a member of the same profession is not a circumstance which entitles him to refuse to undertake the case.

Judgment.—The facts of the case which have given rise to this reference are set out in extenso in the judgment of the Additional Sessions Judge of Benares, dated 16th September 1929, and require no recapitulation.

Luttur Balai, Ram Nath and Raghu were on their trial before a Special Magistrate of Jaunpur, under S. 324, I. P. C. During the progress of the trial one Luttur had applied to the Magistrate under S. 526 (8), Criminal P. C., for stay of proceedings to enable him to move the High Court for the transfer of his case. The application was granted, and the case was adjourned. Luttur did not apply to the High Court for the transfer of the case. He applied to the District Magistrate for a transfer, but his application was rejected, and he submitted to the order.

On 17th May 1929, Balai made a similar application, but his application was refused. A second application was made by Balai, on 18th May 1929, but this application shared the same fate. Between 18th May, and 23rd May 1929, there were holidays in the lower Courts and also in the High Court consequent upon the Id-uz-Zoha. On 23rd May 1929, Balai presented an application in the Court of the Magistrate stating that he had been to Allahabad to instruct his counsel to make the necessary application under S. 526, Criminal P. C., for the transfer of his case and that the application was going to be made immediately upon the opening of the High Court. He prayed further for the adjournment of the case till the matter had been finally disposed of by the High Court. This application was dismissed. Between 17th May 1929, and the date of the actual decision of this case, the proceedings in the Court of the Magistrate continued. The proceedings terminated in the conviction of all the four accused persons upon whom non-bailable sentences were passed. They moved the learned Additional Sessions Judge of Benares for the revision of the conviction, and the matter has been submitted to this Court under S. 438, Criminal P. C.

Under S. 526 (8) where an accused notifies to the Court before which the case is pending his intention to make an application under this section, the Court is bound to adjourn the case for such a period as will afford a reasonable time for an application to be made to the High Court, and an order obtained thereon. S. 526 (8) embodies a statutory mandate, which the Courts below ought to respect and obey. There has been a catena of decisions of this Court and of other High Courts in favour of the view that the rule referred to above is imperative. Some of the later decisions may be referred to. In re, Sartaj Singh v. Emperor (1), Sulaiman, J., held that after the application for transfer had been made to a Magistrate, the trying Magistrate should not have recorded any evidence at all but should have adjourned the case at once. In Walidad Khan v. Emperor (2) Dalal, J., held that the provisions of S. 526 (8), Criminal P. C., were mandatory, and must be enforced. In Bacridi v. Emperor (3), Walsh and Banerji, JJ., held that where an application under S. 526 (8), was presented, it was the duty of the Court to stay all judicial proceedings.

The learned Magistrate has submitted an explanation, which does not seem to me to be at all satisfactory. Where a rule of law is absolute in terms the said rule has got to be observed and duly given effect to, and it is no province of a Magistrate to deviate from the said rule upon any grounds of expediency. Further, it does not appear that, when Luttur made the application under S. 526 (8), he was doing so on behalf of himself and the other three other co-accused. The Magistrate might well have asked the other three accused persons at the time as to whether they too wanted to avail themselves of the adjournment to make an application to the High Court jointly with Luttur or severally on their individual account. This was not done. In refusing the applications, dated 17th and 18th May 1929, the Magistrate has acted in contravention of an absolute and imperative enactment. The progress of the case in his Court between 17th May 1929, and the date, when the application of Balai was finally rejected by the High Court, was illegal, and not a mere irregularity cured by S. 537, Criminal P. C.

I accept the recommendation of the learned Additional Sessions Judge, set aside the conviction and sentence of the applicants and direct a retrial. The witnesses examined between 17th May 1929, and the date, when the final order was passed by this Court, on the application of Luttur, should be recalled, and an opportunity afforded to the accused persons to cross-examine them. Let it be distinctly understood that no aspersion is cast upon the trying Magistrate in any shape or form. There can be no doubt that the said Magistrate will deal with the case fairly and justly. In view of all the circumstances of the case, I do not think that I should make an order of transfer of this case from the Court of Mr. Biqar Hussain to that of any other Magistrate. Let the papers be returned.

Ismail Biswas and others—Accused—Petitioners.

v.

Emperor—Opposite Party.

Criminal Revn. No. 1189 of 1929, Decided on 3rd December 1929.

(a) Penal Code, S. 430—Offence under S. 430 is grave form of mischief as defined in S. 425 and elements of S. 425 must be proved.

Offence under S. 430 is particularly a grave form of the offence of committing mischief as defined in S. 425. It is necessary to prove in such cases the elements that constitute mischief under S. 425. No doubt a person who takes water from a tank causes loss but it should be shown that whether he has caused a diminution of the supply of water for agricultural purposes. [P 377 C 2]

(b) Evidence—Sufficiency of—Evidence that person has occupation of lands and that he takes water from tank to irrigate it is good evidence of fact that he has right to do so—Easement.

The evidence that a person has the occupation of lands and that he has been taking water to irrigate his lands through a channel from a tank is good evidence that he has some right to do so. This is not one of those things that can be concealed. The fact of enjoyment of such a right is some evidence of the right itself. [P 377 C 2]

Bireswar Bagchi—for Petitioners.

Mrityunjoy Chatterjee and Gopal Chunder Mookerjee—for the Crown.

Judgment.—In this case the petitioners have been convicted of an offence under S. 430, I. P. C., that is, of committing mischief by doing an act which caused or which they knew to be likely to cause a diminution of the supply of water for agricultural purposes. This offence is perhaps a particularly grave form of the offence of committing mischief which is defined in S. 425:

"Whoever, with intent to cause, or knowing that he is likely to cause, wrongful loss or damage to the public or to any person, causes the destruction of any property or any such change in any property or in the situation thereof as destroys or diminishes its value or utility, or affects it injuriously."

Now it appears that the tank in question is in the middle of two others. It appears that the complainant has a channel from which he has been getting the water of the tank in question to irrigate his lands. The finding of the Courts below is that the petitioners have cut a new channel in another part of the tank and they have been taking water to their own lands across a certain road.

At the hearing of the case, it was necessary, first of all, to prove the elements that constituted "mischief" under S. 425, I. P. C. and that involved showing that the petitioners knew that they were likely to cause wrongful loss or damage to the public or to any person. The first question is whether this conviction should be set aside on the ground either that it is not shown that this question of wrongful loss or damage is made out or that it is shown that the question has been wrongfully dealt with by either of the Courts below. It appears to me that, if the evidence is that a person has the occupation of lands and has been taking water to irrigate his lands through a channel from this tank, that is pretty good evidence that he has some right so to do. This is not one of those things that can be concealed or that can be done behind the back of people so that no body in the neighbourhood can possibly get to know of it. It is done openly and on the face of it, it appears to me that the fact of enjoyment of such a right as that is some evidence of the right itself. Now, when the case came before the District Magistrate it is complained that he did not deal sufficiently with this matter. I am bound to say, as I read the grounds of appeal before him, that I see no indication that the accused persons on that appeal were suggesting to him that the complainant did not have the right to take water from the tank to irrigate the lands. It appears to me that what was then complained of was the finding of the Magistrate to the effect that the complainant was in possession of it. The Magistrate says that that is so. In the notice of appeal to the District Magistrate it is said that it was never admitted that the three tanks were in the position of the complainant; but the question which was before the Court and about which the witnesses spoke was about the right to take water. That suggests that the mistake of the Magistrate was that he thought that the accused admitted the right to possession of the tank whereas he only admitted the right to take water. In my judgment there was no occasion at all on the part of the District Magistrate, on the case coming before him, to deal expressly or fully with this question whether or not the complainant was a person who had a right to take water, so that even assuming that the accused had no right it was shown sufficiently that the complainant was a proper person to be heard to complain. In the same way, it seems to me that it was entirely nugatory and idle to ask, in the circumstances of this case, for a finding from the District Magistrate in terms following the language of S. 430, I. P. C. No doubt a person who takes water is causing loss and here one has to show whether he has caused a diminution of the supply of water for agricultural purposes. In my opinion, the facts in this case and the case which came before the District Magistrate render it entirely trivial to complain that it is not shown that the amount of water taken diminished the supply of the complainant's water. It has been pointed out to me that there is paragraph in the grounds of appeal which says that it is not shown how much water the accused people took. That is a paragraph which is criticizing the passage in the judgment of the trial Judge where he said that these accused had only got a little bit of land and that it was entirely unnecessary for them to get water from this tank. These two criticisms to my mind come to nothing.

It has been complained very much that the Magistrate took a wrong view in saying that the question before him was not a question of title and that the question of possession of the tank was not of primary importance. Of course, if a case was made to the effect that, though he had been out of possession one of the accused had his title to the tank, the Magistrate could not find wrongful loss until he dealt with that claim of title. The claim of title in the part of the accused in such a case has to be dealt with. In this case, what was said is that the tank belonged to another mouza altogether, it belonged to another landlord altogether and that these people who were tenants of that landlord had acquired a right of easement by continued user. In this particular case, it was not necessary to investigate questions of the documentary title very far because on the facts of the case the Courts were both satisfied that the accused people had cut a new channel and the accused themselves, among other things, made a case which rendered their position very difficult as regards this matter because as is pointed out they called witnesses to show that the second channel had existed for a number of years and that the accused had been in the habit of irrigating their lands by means of it.

One version was that the channel ran beside the bund of the tank but did not cross the road, another was that it crossed the road, and another was that there was no channel to cut across the road but that water overflowed. The Courts below have found that this story of there having been a channel there before is entirely untrue and that entirely negatives any question of easement right in the accused persons. A case was referred to in which it was pointed out that certain tenants were prosecuting their landlord for interfering with the tenant's right to water for agricultural purposes. In that case, if the facts are looked into, the tank in question was admitted to belong to the landlord, the water was admittedly the landlord's and the landlord had admittedly the right to settle the fishery right; and the tenants were prosecuting the landlord, therefore, for doing something with the landlord's own water; and, in order to show that there was any right in them to complain, they had to establish that they had right of easement in what was prima facie the landlord's. In that case it turned out that the claim of the tenants to make good their right to take water raised difficult questions and this Court pointed out the these questions were of a character difficult to determine in a mere police Court. That is not this case. That decision is not to be read as wiping S. 430 out of the Penal Code altogether. This is a case where somebody who made a claim to an easement which is found to be false was taking water from somebody else's tank. In my judgment, the complainant has shown to have a perfectly good right to complain if he has shown that he has been openly in enjoyment of the water of that tank. In my opinion, in this case there is no force in the submission of these accused before the District Magistrate that the complainant had no right to take water from the tank. In these circumstances, I think that the Rule must be discharged.

R.M./R.K. Rule discharged.

GRAHAM AND LORT-WILLIAMS, JJ.
Supdt. and Remembrancer of Legal Affairs, Bengal—Appellant.

v.

Bhajoo Majhi—Accused—Respondent.
Criminal Govt. Appeal No. 1 of 1929, Decided on 2nd September 1929, against order of Sess. Judge, Maldah.

(a) Criminal P. C., S. 274 (2)—Objection as to jury raised for first time in appeal against acquittal cannot be entertained.

An objection as to the constitution of the jury raised for the first time at the hearing of an appeal against acquittal cannot be entertained. [P 379 C 2]

* (b) Evidence Act, S. 27—Out of statement containing confession only such portion as leads to discovery is admissible.

Per Graham, J.—S. 27 being a proviso to the preceding sections must be strictly construed and any relaxation must be sparingly allowed, care being exercised to see that the purpose and object of Ss. 25 and 26 are not rendered nugatory by any lax interpretation. [P 380 C 1]

A statement made by an accused while in police custody which contains a confession of guilt and also supplies information in consequence of which a discovery is made is not admissible in its entirety under S. 27, but only so much of it is admissible as relates distinctly or immediately to the discovery. [P 380 C 1]

Per Lort-Williams, J.—S. 27 is not a proviso to either S. 24 or S. 25. It follows that some restricted or limited meaning narrower than the natural meaning must be attached to the words in S. 27. [P 380 C 2]

The practice in England now is and doubtless was at the time when the Evidence Act was passed to allow to be stated in evidence that in consequence of information received from the prisoner certain facts had been discovered, thus to the extent of fixing the prisoner with knowledge. To this extent evidence under S. 27 may be given. [P 382 C 1]

D. N. Bhattacharyya—for Appellant.
A. K. Dhar—for Respondent.

Graham, J.—This is an appeal by the Superintendent and Remembrancer of Legal Affairs, Bengal against the verdict of the jury and order of acquittal passed thereon by the Sessions Judge of Malda on a charge under S. 302, I. P. C.

The case for the prosecution was that the accused Bhajoo Majhi murdered one Baneswar on the night of 25th February 1928, the motive for the crime being alleged to be a love intrigue between the accused and the deceased's wife Munia.

The jury brought in a unanimous verdict of not guilty and the learned Judge accepting it acquitted the accused.

In support of the appeal against that order two main grounds have been urged, firstly, that the jury was not constituted according to law, as there were only seven jurors instead of nine as required by S. 326 (1) read with the proviso to S. 274 (2), Criminal P. C.
This ground has not as a matter of fact been taken in the petition of appeal and was only put forward at the 11th hour.
We do not think, therefore, that it ought at so late a stage so be entertained.
It appears moreover that no objection of any kind was raised at the trial, nor has any allegation been made that the accused were prejudiced in any way.

This ground accordingly fails and must be disallowed. The second ground urged on behalf of the appellant is that the learned Sessions Judge erred in rejecting evidence as to certain statements and conduct of the accused in pointing out places at which discoveries of importance were made as a consequence of the information given by him. These statements are referred to in para. 8 of the petition of appeal, and the question which arises in connexion with them is, whether they should have been allowed to go in evidence in their entirety, that is to say, including the admissions said to have been made by the accused that he had killed the deceased and had thrown his body into the river, or whether only so much of the information given by the accused as related to the actual discovery of the blood stains near the tree and the articles of clothing in the river was admissible.

The answer depends upon the construction to be put on S. 27, Evidence Act. That section is in the nature of a proviso to the preceding S. 26. S. 26 reads as follows :

"No confession made by any person whilst he is in the custody of a police officer, unless it be made in the immediate presence of a Magistrate, shall be proved as against such person."

Section 27 goes on to say :

"Provided that, when any fact is deposed to as discovered in consequence of information received from a person accused of any offence, in the custody of a police officer, so much of such information, whether it amounts to a confession or not, as relates distinctly to the fact thereby discovered, may be proved."

The precise meaning to be attached to S. 27 is not altogether free from difficulty, and it is possible to interpret it as allowing even a confession of guilt to go in provided it has led to discovery. On the other hand it may be read as meaning no more than that the facts discovered may be proved excluding the actual confession. So far as this Court is concerned the more restricted interpretation has been given to the section, and it appears to be well settled that only so much of the information can be allowed to go in as relates distinctly or immediately to discovery. That seems to be the correct view of the section. The language bears that interpretation, and I do not think it can ever have been the intention of the legislature to admit statements containing an actual confession of the crime. A distinction is apparently drawn between that part of the information which leads directly to discovery of material facts, and that part of it which cannot in itself be held to lead to any discovery, the principle underlying the distinction being that discovery affords some guarantee of the truth of a portion of the statement, but not necessarily of the whole. If that portion of the statement or information which contains a confession of the commission of the crime, were admitted there would be a great temptation for the police to drag in statements of this nature. It has been held over and over again that the prohibition contained in Ss. 25 and 26, Evidence Act against false and fabricated confessions must be strictly applied. S. 27 being a proviso to the two preceding sections must be strictly construed and any relaxation must be sparingly allowed, care being exercised to see that the purpose and object of Ss. 25 and 26 and the safeguard provided in S. 27 are not rendered nugatory by any lax interpretation.

Section 27, it is true, says "whether it amounts to a confession or not" and it may be argued that these words favour the wider interpretation. But in using these words the legislature had, as I think, in mind the meaning of the word confession, viz. :

"an admission made at any time by a person charged with a crime, stating or suggesting the inference that he committed the crime," and it means, therefore, no more than this that so much of the information as leads to discovery may be proved, even if the facts discovered lead to an inference of guilt. For statements of this kind obviously do suggest a very strong inference of guilt although taken by themselves they would fall short of proof.

In my judgment the Sessions Judge was right in adopting the restricted view of S. 27. This ground, therefore, also fails. The appeal is dismissed and the accused if in custody will be released.

Lort-Williams, J.—There is a school of legal thought in India which holds that in construing Acts of the Indian legislature, the natural meaning of the sections should be given effect to regardless of previous decisions, and especially of decisions other than those of Indian Courts. The Evidence Act in general and S. 27 in particular are examples which in my opinion, indicate the falsity of this point of view.

If their natural meaning were given to the words of S. 27 regardless of their parentage and history, I am satisfied that the result would be contrary to the intention of the legislature. It would be so wide as to render S. 26 practically useless. "Relates to" means ordinarily, "is connected with" or "has reference to" while "distinctly" means "clearly" or "definitely" or "positively" or "undeniably" or "undoubtedly" (see the Oxford Dictionary.) If, therefore, so much of the information as is clearly connected with, or has reference to, the fact thereby discovered, is admissible under S. 27, it is difficult to see where the line can be drawn. The presence of S. 26 to which S. 27 is only a proviso, shows that this conclusion cannot have been intended. I agree with Mahmood, J., in his most learned interesting judgment in Queen Empress v. Babulal (1), at p. 520 that S. 27 is not a proviso to either S. 24 or S. 25. It follows that some restricted or limited meaning, narrower than the natural meaning must be attached to these words.

The Evidence Act, as stated by Sir James Fitzjames Stephen in his introduction, is little more than an attempt to reduce the English Law of Evidence to the form of express propositions arranged in their natural order with some modifications rendered necessary by the peculiar circumstances of India.

The English Law of Evidence consists mostly of negative rules declaring what is not evidence. It is almost wholly judge-made law, formed by degrees, to meet the exigencies of particular cases and comparatively of very modern date, to which have been added the glosses which successive textbook writers have put upon the decisions of the Judges. The Evidence Act, as stated by Woodroffe, was drawn up chiefly from Taylor on Evidence, and he based his treatise largely on the work of former authors. S. 27 was an attempt to apply the English Law of Evidence about information unduly obtained from a prisoner to information given by an accused while in the custody of a police officer and is merely a paraphrase of Taylor's, para. 902 (see the Edn. 11, p. 614). The words "relates distinctly", are taken directly from that source. And reference to the decision upon which his paragraph is based R. v. Butcher-postea (2) shows that the words were his own invention, or that of a previous author, and are not to be found in the decision itself.

It is necessary, therefore, to ascertain what meaning Taylor himself attached to these words. Para. 902 reads as follows:

"When, in consequence of information unduly obtained from the prisoner, the property stolen, or the instrument of the crime, or the body of the person murdered, or any other material fact, has been discovered, proof is admissible that such discovery was made conformably with the information so obtained. The prisoner's statement as to his knowledge of the place where the property or other article was to be found, being thus confirmed by the fact, is shown to be true, and not to have been fabricated in consequence of any inducement. It is, therefore, competent to prove that the prisoner stated that the thing would be found by searching a particular place, and that it was accordingly so found; but it would not, in such a case of a confession improperly obtained, be competent to inquire whether he confessed that he had concealed it there. So much of the confession as relates distinctly to the fact discovered by it may be given in evidence, as this part at least of the statement cannot have been false."

The crucial words are in the last line. Only that part of the statement which cannot have been false is admissible. For example that the prisoner stated that the thing would be found by searching in a particular place and that it was accordingly so found but not that he confessed that he concealed it there.

The difficulty of applying these English rules about information unduly obtained, and their unsuitability, to the Indian situation where information is given by an accused while in the custody of a police officer is manifest. Under the English rule it is assumed that the prisoner has confessed, but that his confession must be excluded because being obtained improperly, it may be false. His admission, however, of knowledge about the whereabouts of the thing cannot be false, because it is discovered subsequently in the place indicated by him. But the position in India is that confessions to or while in the custody of a police officer are excluded because if alleged to have been made to the police officer, they may have been invented by him and if made to others while in the custody of a police officer, they may have been induced by him and may be false. In neither case is the discovery of the thing any guarantee that the accused had knowledge of its whereabouts.

Phipson (Edn. 6, p. 270), states that facts disclosed in consequence of inadmissible confessions are receivable if relevant and where property has been discovered or delivered up in this way so much of the confession as "strictly relates" thereto will be admissible, for these portions at least cannot be untrue, but independent statements not qualifying or explaining the fact though made at the same time will be rejected. It will be observed that his statement of the rule is much narrower than that of Taylor, being restricted to property which has been discovered or delivered up, nor does he use Taylor's word "distinctly" but the word "strictly" which is the word used in the reporter's note of the case of R. v. Butcher (2) tried at Maidstone Summer Assizes in 1798, which is the main authority relied upon by both Taylor and Phipson.

Phipson moreover states that the earlier rule admitted the facts but excluded the accompanying statements R. v. Warwickshall (3), and the reporter in the note above referred to,

(2) [1798] 1 Leach. C. C. 285.

(3) [1783] 1 Leach. 268.

goes on to quote Mr. East 2, C. L. 658, as saying:

"But it seems that this opinion namely the opinion expressed in the note to R. v. Butcher (2) must be taken with some grains of allowance, for even in such case the most that is proper to be left with the jury is the fact of the witness having been directed by the prisoner where to find the goods and his having found them accordingly, but not the acknowledgment of the prisoner having stolen or put them there which is to be collected or not from all circumstances of the case and this is now the more common practice."

And Taylor in a note to para. 902 says that Ld. Eldon laid down the rule somewhat more strictly saying in Harvey's case (4), that where the knowledge of any fact was obtained from a prisoner, under such a promise as excluded the confession from being given in evidence, he should direct an acquittal, unless the fact proved, would itself have been sufficient to warrant a conviction without any confession leading to it.

Whether or not the rule laid down by the Judges at one period was as wide as is suggested in Leach's note upon R. v. Butcher seems to me very doubtful and the evidence on this point is extremely meager, see especially: R. v. Griffen (5), where the Judges were divided R. v. Jones (6), R. v. Mosey (7). I am satisfied from personal experience that it has not been the practice so to apply it in England during the last quarter of a century, and I do not believe it to be the law in England today. In my opinion Ld. Eldon's view is the correct one. However, I have no doubt that the practice in England now is, and doubtless was at the time when the Evidence Act, was passed, to allow to be stated in evidence that in consequence of information received from the prisoner, certain facts had been discovered, thus to that extent fixing the prisoner with knowledge.

And to this extent, I am satisfied that such evidence may be given under S. 27.

This was the view taken by the learned Sessions Judge, and I am of opinion that he was right in excluding the remaining part of the statement of the accused, which the Crown has urged should have been admitted, apart altogether from the wider question which I have been discussing, I do not consider that the facts discovered in this case were discovered in consequence of the prisoner's alleged statement that he felled the deceased, and threw his body into the river, but in consequence of the prisoner taking the witnesses to the spots referred to in the evidence and pointing out to them the marks in the grass and the clothing of the dead man. On the second point taken by the prosecution, I do not think that this Court ought to listen to any argument by the Crown against an acquittal, which is based on a technical objection about the constitution of the jury. Especially in view of the fact that no objection was raised at the trial, and that this point was not even included among the grounds of appeal but was raised for the first time at the hearing.

For these reasons, I am of opinion that this appeal should be dismissed.

Criminal Revn. No. 400 of 1929, Decided on 15th May 1929, against order of Sess. Judge, Tipperah, D/- 21st February 1929.

Criminal P. C., S. 107—Several persons bound over to keep peace—Individual finding showing reason for each person's liability is necessary.

Where in a case under S. 107 several persons are bound over to keep the peace there must be individual finding showing how each person against whom order is made deserves to be so treated. The mere fact that the persons were followers of one party or other will not justify making an order in lump against the whole body of men. [P 383 C 1]

Order.—The defect that is noticeable in the judgment of the learned Sessions Judge is that he has not dealt with the evidence which would justify the order as against each of the 14 accused persons who were the appellants before him, separately and individually. This defect would not have been of much materiality if the inquiring Magistrate had done so in passing the order that he did. That officer, it appears, considered it sufficient to find that all the accused belong to a party known as "Rahimuddin's party" or "Abani Babu's party" Rahimuddin being the immediate leader, Abani Babu the guiding or controlling authority and the remaining accused persons being Abani Babu's tenants and adherents. Considerations such as these are not sufficient for making an order in a lump against a body of men. Facts and figures have to be given showing how each person, against whom the order is to be made, deserves to be so treated.

The Rule is made absolute, and the judgment of the learned Sessions Judge being set aside it is ordered that the petitioner's appeal be reheard by the Additional Sessions Judge.

Criminal Revn. No. 832 of 1929, Decided on 5th September 1929, from an order of Dy. Magistrate Naraingung, D/- 30th April 1929.

Bengal Food Adulteration Act (1919)
S. 6 (1)—Both owner and servant selling come under S. 6 (1).

Section 6 (1) applies, not only to master or owner of the adulterated article sold, but also the servant or agent who sells such article : Brown v. Foot, (1892) 66 L. J. 649 and Hotchin v. Hindmarsh, (1899) 2 Q. B. 181, Inf.

[P 384 C 2]

Suresh Chandra Taluqdar and Syama Prosanna Deb—for Petitioner.

Birbhusari Dutta—for Opposite Party.

Rankin, C. J.—The accused in this case has been convicted of an offence under Cl. (1), S. 6, Bengal Food Adulteration Act 1919. The offence charged was committed on 25th January 1929 and consisted in the accused having sold to a Health Officer a quantity of mustard oil which was not derived exclusively from mustard seed. The accused has been fined Rs. 150 and ordered to undergo two months' simple imprisonment in default of payment.

This rule was issued on the grounds that Cl. 1, S. 6, Bengal Food Adulteration Act does not apply to the facts of the case, and that S. 6, makes the master or owner of the article sold guilty of an offence but not the servant.

* It is clear that the sale was made by the accused in his capacity of servant of a certain firm which used the name of one Josada Lal Roy Chowdhury. Josada Lal is dead, but there is no question that the accused sold the mustard oil as a servant of the proprietors of the said firm and that he is a servant and not a partner therein.

The Act in question applies to the province of Bengal outside Calcutta and it is in the power of the local Government to extend any of the sections of the Act to any local area outside Calcutta. The prosecution in this case was sanctioned by the Chairman of the Municipality of Naraingunge. So far as Calcutta itself is concerned, the provisions against the adulteration of food were contained in S. 495, Municipal Act of 1899, and in the Calcutta Municipal Act of 1923, S. 407 contains similar provisions to those which we are now concerned with in the Act of 1919.

The contention of the accused is that the opening words of the first clause of S. 6 of the Act of 1919 are designed to constitute the sale of mustard oil in contravention of the provisions of the section, an offence on the part of the master or principal on whose behalf the sale is made, but that the servant or other person selling on behalf of the principal is not guilty of an offence by reason of his act. He contends that this section is not to be construed in the light of the interpretation put by English decisions upon similar, but somewhat different, words in S. 6 of the sale of Food and Drugs Act 1875 (38 and 39 Vic. Cap. 63), but is to be arrived at by the Court upon a consideration of the terms of the Bengal Act by themselves. The material words are as follows :

"No person shall directly or indirectly himself or by any other person on his behalf sell, expose for sale or manufacture or store for sale any of the following articles etc."

The accused's contention is that the phrase "himself or by any other person on his behalf" points to a principal who may either sell at his own hand and on his own account or by some other person on his behalf. This, it is said is enforced by the use of the word "vendor" in Cl. (3) of the section.

On the other hand, it is contended for the prosecution that the words "directly or indirectly, himself or by any other person on his behalf" cannot and are not intended to cut down the effect of the words "no person shall sell;" that the acts which are made offences by the section are physical acts; that the question of the party who is responsible as a matter of contract to the purchaser is irrelevant; that the servant in such a case as the present is a person who does the prohibited act himself, and that the effect of the words in a case like the present is to make both the servant and the master liable as offenders against the section. In other words the contention of the prosecution is that the words to which I have referred elaborate and emphasize the prohibition against certain classes of acts being done at all, and declare explicitly the meaning which in Brown v. Foot (1892) 66 L. T. 649; 17 Cox. C. C. and Hotchin v. Hindmarsh (1899) 2 Q. B. 181 was put upon the words "no person shall sell" in S. 6 of the sale of Food and Drugs Act of 1875.

No doubt only a master or principal is a person who has a choice of selling himself or by any other person on his behalf, and the contention of the defence, as the Magistrate has in this case observed, at first sight looks like a sound view. It is also true that in Hotchin's case T. W. Chitty arguing for the prosecution said:

"possibly if the Statute had used the term 'vendor' that might have been construed strictly as meaning the person who has the property in the article."

Ordinarily one would not refer to a person as "himself selling" except in a case in which selling by a servant or agent was contemplated as a thing to be negatived.

The Magistrate has argued, on general principles, that the legislature to effect its purpose must have intended by the words now under consideration to make the act of the servant an offence, because the provisions of the law as to abatement would be insufficient to enable the purpose of the prevention of adulteration to be effectively attained. This line of reasoning is certainly precarious. No doubt a desire to prevent the sale of adulterated articles may be attributed to the legislature, but it is a question of the correct meaning of the words used by the legislature, whether it has thought fit to bring a servant within their scope. It is by no means inconceivable that an Indian legislature might consider it unfair or inadvisable to penalize the servant, and it is no part of the duty of the Court to go beyond the immediate meaning of the words in question.

In my opinion the real question for determination is whether or not there is sufficient in the words of the section to show that it is directed against the physical acts of selling, exposing for sale etc. If so, then, as Coleridge, C. J. said in Hotchin's case:

"A person who takes the article in his hand and performs the physical act of transferring the adulterated thing to the purchaser is a person who sells within this section."

As used in an Indian statute, I do not think that the word "vendor" throws any light upon this question, as it is common to speak of petty traders or hawkers as vendors.

The present case is one in which the Health Officer exercised his powers under the Cl. 3, S. 10, which says that "any person in possession or exposing the same for sale shall be bound to sell such quantity."

Clause. 1, S. 11 speaks of "the seller or agent selling the article." It appears to me, therefore, that the agent or servant is within the prohibition of the words "no person shall sell." The legislature is not necessarily contemplating a person who has a choice to sell at his own hand or by any other person on his behalf. It is concerned to make the act of selling an act which is imputable both to the person with whose hand it is committed and to any other person, if such there be, on whose behalf it is committed. Precisely similar language will be found in the Sale of Tea Act, 1922 (12-13 Geo. V. C. 29) and that it is intended to hit the servant is shown clearly by Cl. 6 of the schedule thereto. The accused in this case is a person who himself sold and as such was, in my opinion, rightly convicted.

The rule must, therefore, be discharged.

Criminal Appeal No. 1201 of 1929, Decided on 27 January 1930, from order of First Class Magistrate, Montgomery, D/- 30th November 1929.

Mohammad Munir — for Appellant.

Chandra Datta for Govt. Advocate — for the Crown.

Judgment. — The appellant, Ghulam Hussain, has been convicted of an offence under S. 376, I. P. C. by a Magistrate of the First Class exercising powers under S. 30, Criminal P. C. and sentenced to a term of seven years' rigorous imprisonment, including three months' solitary confinement. He has appealed to this Court through his counsel Mr. Mohammad Munir.

The story for the prosecution is that, on 17th May 1929 at about noon Mt. Nabbo (P. W. 1), daughter of Muhammad Khand Pathan, (P. W. 2), aged about six years, was playing not very far from the Veterinary Hospital at Dipalpur when she was lifted and carried away by the appellant, a young man of 18–20 years, to some neighbouring bushes where he raped her. The accused was never medically examined. Three days after the occurrence Mt. Nabbo was examined by a doctor, and there can be no doubt that the child had been the victim of a diabolical outrage upon her person. The question for determination is whether the appellant was the real culprit

There is no eye-witness to the actual offence. Haq Nawaz (P. W. 5) who says that he saw the child with the appellant, and that her private parts were at the time bleeding, is a disreputable witness and has been rightly disbelieved by the trial Magistrate. There remains the statement of Mt. Nabbo herself. The trial Magistrate before examining Mt. Nabbo, did not record any proceedings to the effect that he had satisfied himself that the child was sufficiently intellectually developed so as to understand the questions put to her and convey the relevant information to the Court. If the Court was of opinion that, by reason of tender years and consequent immaturity of judgment, the child was unable to do this, it ought not to have examined it at all, vide Emperor v. Dhani Ram (1). A similar view was expressed by me in Criminal Appeal 648 of 1926 (decided on 8th October 1926) with the concurrence of the learned Chief Justice. A somewhat different view was taken in a case reported as Nafar Sheikh v. Emperor (2), but with respect to the learned Judges I would prefer to follow the Allahabad case. In the absence of any such proceedings as were indicated in the Allahabad case the value of the statement made before the Court by Mt. Nabbo, such as it is, is considerably reduced. In the direct question put to her she no doubt suggests that the appellant forcibly took her towards the canal minor and there raped her, but in cross-examination she stated she told her father that the appellant was not the man when he was shown to her at the thana. In her re-examination she said that she was not asked at the thana as to who had raped her. She was examined as defence witness 4 and deposed that she did not identify the accused at the thana, and that she told the Munshi that he was not the man. And in the same breath she said that she told him (meaning thereby Munshi) that the accused was the man who had raped her. The trial Magistrate realized these discrepancies in the statements of the girl, but tried to explain them away by remarking that the questions that were put to the girl were ambiguous and not at all clear. If these questions were misleading and ambiguous it was the duty of the Magistrate to record them while the girl was giving her evidence. There was nothing to prevent him from putting a few questions to the girl in order to get at the truth. He did not do anything of the kind. Moreover, when she was examined as a defence witness, she was not cross-examined by the Crown at all and her divergent statements remain unexplained.

(1) [1916] 38 All. 40 = 31 I. C. 1005 = 18 A. L. J. 1072.

(2) [1914] 41 Cal. 406 = 18 C. L. J. 582 = 20 I. C. 741 = 18 C. W. N. 147.

The evidence of the two lads, Jawala Ram, (P. W. 3) and Ram Lal (P. W. 4), is not of much value. They simply say that at about noon they saw the accused carrying the girl. This, I need hardly say, is wholly insufficient to prove the guilt of the appellant.

I may also mention that the first information report was not made till 6.30 p. m. although the scene of the occurrence is only about 500 karams from the thana. The father of the girl, Muhammad Khan (P. W. 2), had been examined on behalf of the prosecution. He had not seen the occurrence himself and was only informed by his son, Nawab, that Mt. Nabbo had been injured. Nawab, who at peshi time went to the well where Mohammad Khan was working, informed him that Ghulam Hussain accused had taken away Mt. Nabbo while she was playing. Her further said that on enquiry the girl told him that she was taken away and raped by "Ghulam" and not Ghulam Hussain accused. It does not appear what was the interval of time between the outrage upon the child and the statement which she is alleged to have made to her father. In the absence of any definite and reliable evidence that the outrage and the statement constituted together res gestae much value cannot be attached to this statement even if it is held to be admissible. We do not know what other persons had had conversations with the girl in the meantime. I gather that the mother of the girl is alive and I attach very great importance to the fact that she was not produced by the prosecution as a witness. There cannot be any doubt whatsoever that the girl, when taken to her parent's house, immediately after the outrage, must have made a clean breast of the whole affair to her mother and her evidence as to what the child told her would have been of very considerable value. Therefore, the case against the appellant remains doubtful, and I am not satisfied in my mind, having regard to the evidence on the record, that he is the real culprit. The result is very unfortunate, for a dastardly and brutal crime has undoubtedly been committed upon the person of an innocent child and the perpetrator of the crime has not been brought to book. As already stated, the case against the accused is not free from doubt and I, therefore give him the benefit of doubt, set aside his conviction and sentence and order that he be set at liberty.

The police investigation was clearly mismanaged and the prosecution does not seem to have been properly conducted, but this does not concern me.

Sada Singh and others—Convicts-Respondents.

Criminal Appeal No. 1012 of 1929, Decided on 6th January 1930, against order of Addl. Sess. Judge, Lahore, D/- 14th August 1929.

* (a) Penal Code, Ss. 114, 109 and 302—Sentence to abettors different from that to principals is illegal.

Four accused were sent up for trial, under S. 302. Two of them were convicted under S. 302, and were sentenced to transportation for life. The other two were found guilty of abetment and were found to be present when offence was committed and were sentenced to imprisonment for seven years.

Held: that the sentence of seven years in respect of two of the accused was illegal. The two accused were liable to receive either the capital sentence or one of transportation for life. [P 397 C 2]

(b) Criminal P. C., S. 439 (1)—Whether discretionary power can be exercised when sentence is illegal—Quaere.

It is doubtful whether the discretionary power under S. 439 (1) can be exercised in a case in which the sentence is manifestly illegal. [P 398 C 1]

(c) Criminal P. C., S. 439 (4)—Accused charged under S. 302, convicted under

S. 302/109, Penal Code—His conviction amounts to acquittal, under S. 302—Criminal-P. C., S. 417.

Where an accused being charged under S. 302 is convicted under S. 302/109 his conviction under S. 302/109 can be regarded as an acquittal on the charge under S. 302 and an appeal from such acquittal is competent: A. I. R. 1928 P. C. 254, Rel. on. [P 388 C 1]

(d) Penal Code, S. 34—Several persons accused of murder and proved to be present at time of commission of offence are guilty under S. 34.

Where four persons are accused of having committed murder and have been proved to have been present at the time of the commission of the offence, all of them are guilty. Even if two of them are alleged to have taken no active part in the affair, yet they are constructively liable on the application of S. 34: A. I. R. 1925 P. C. 1, Rel. on. [P 390 C 1]

Abdul Rashid - for the Crown.

Dr. Nand Lal - for Respondents.

Tapp, J. - The four appellants Sohan Singh, Nawab, Sada Singh and Dhara Singh, Jats of Kot Rattan Singh, were sent up for trial under S. 302, I. P. C., for having caused the death of Teja Singh on the night of 19th April at about 10 p. m. Sada Singh and Dhara Singh are brothers and Sohan Singh is the son of Sada Singh while Nawab is their tenant and the following pedigree-table shows the relationship of the first three persons with the deceased and Kundan Singh (P.W. 3), one of the three eye-witnesses:

Budh Singh.

Teja Singh
(deceased.)

Kundan Singh
P.W. 3.

Sada Singh (accused.)

Dhara Singh
(accused.)

Hazara Singh

Sohan Singh
(accused.)

Three of the assessors were of opinion that Sohan Singh and Nawab were guilty of a murder while Sada Singh and Dhara Singh were innocent and the learned Additional Sessions Judge partly agreeing with them convicted Sohan Singh and Nawab under S. 302, I. P. C. and for certain reasons sentenced each to transportation for life. Sada Singh and Dhara Singh were found guilty of abetment of murder under S. 302/109,

I. P. C., and each sentenced to seven years' rigorous imprisonment. According to the evidence and the finding of the learned Additional Sessions Judge both Sada Singh and Dhara Singh were present when the offence was committed and in the circumstances S. 114 would also apply, but the learned Additional Sessions Judge appears to have completely overlooked the provisions of both Ss. 109 and 114 in the punishment he awarded. The sentence is clearly illegal as in the absence of any express provision, and there is none in the case of murder S. 109 provides the same punishment for an abettor as for a principal and S. 114 requires that when an abettor is present at the commission of the offence abetted by him he is to be deemed a principal. The punishment provided for murder is either death or transportation for life. One or other of these two sentences must be imposed and while this is discretionary there is no other alternative. It was not, therefore, open to the learned Additional Sessions Judge to impose a sentence of seven years' rigorous imprisonment in the case of Sada Singh and Dhara Singh who as abettors pure and simple or as principals in the second degree (as found) were liable to receive either the capital sentence or one of transportation for life.

The Local Government through the Government Advocate has preferred an appeal against the acquittal of Sada Singh and Dhara Singh on the charge of murder and has prayed that in any event the illegal sentence of seven years should be enhanced and the legal sentence of death or transportation for life inflicted. There is also a prayer for the enhancement of the sentence of transportation for life in the case of Sohan Singh and Nawab to one of death. The petition is clearly a combination of an appeal and a petition for revision and in the circumstances any discussion of the contention advanced by Dr. Nand Lal, the learned counsel for the convicted appellants, that there has been no acquittal in the case of Sada Singh and Dhara Singh would be of purely academic interest.

If there has been no acquittal then under sub S. (1), S. 439, Criminal P. C. we have full powers to enhance the sentence as the restriction imposed by sub-S. (4) would not come into operation. The exercise of this power is certainly discretionary but to me it seems doubtful whether in the present case where the sentence is manifestly illegal, any such discretion could be exercised. The various authorities cited by Dr. Nand Lal have no bearing on this particular aspect of the present case. I am, however, of opinion that the course adopted by the local Government in treating the conviction of Sada Singh and Dhara Singh under S. 302, 109, as an acquittal on the charge of murder under S. 302, I. P. C., is in accordance with the decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Kisan Singh v. Emperor (1), in which it was held that a conviction under S. 304, I. P. C., was to be regarded as an acquittal on the charge of murder which was the indictment in that particular case. I would hold, therefore, that the appeal by the Local Government is competent and has been rightly preferred.

Coming now to the facts, the case for the prosecution may be stated as follows: There was some ill-feeling between the deceased and his three collaterals (appellants) on account of the latter being in possession of a larger share of the shamilat land of the village of which their common ancestor Budh Singh appears to have been the sole proprietor.

Some 15 or 16 days before the occurrence Sada Singh had also appropriated Teja Singh's turn of water and according to Kundan Singh (P.W. 3) there were daily quarrels between them. On the night in question the deceased and his tenant Janu (P.W. 2) while on their way to their threshing floor stayed to watch an acrobatic performance by some Natts (acrobats). The appellants Sohan Singh and Nawab and Ghulam Muhammad (P.W. 4) were also there and the former invited the deceased to sit beside him on a charpoy. After a while the appellants Sohan Singh and Nawab left and later the deceased and Janu went on to their threshing floor. On the way they were accosted by all the four appellants who abused the deceased. Sohan Singh and Sada Singh were armed with chhavis and Nawab and Dhara Singh with dangs. Sohan Singh dealt the deceased a blow on the hand with his chhavi while Sada Singh struck him on the head. Dhara Singh and Nawab used their danges.

The cries of the deceased and Janu were heard by Kundan Singh and Ghulam Muhammad who both ran in that direction and saw the four appellants assailing the deceased. On the approach of Kundan Singh and Ghulam Muhammad the appellants ran away.

Teja Singh was placed on a charpoy and taken to the Chunian police station four miles distant where he himself made the first information report at 2 a. m. on 20th. In this he mentions the cause of ill-feelings and the facts as set out above.

Teja Singh was then taken to the dispensary and the Assistant Surgeon considering his condition to be serious suggested that his statement should be recorded. This was done at 4 a. m. by the Naib Tahsildar of Chunian (P.W. 4). This is practically a repetition of the first information report. Despite medical treatment Teja Singh died at 5 p. m. on 20th and the autopsy disclosed an incised wound on the head, a second between the ring and middle finger of the right hand cutting the palm, a third on the left hand cutting all the metacarpal bones except that of the thumb, a fourth on the right leg cutting a few muscles, tendons and blood vessels and a fifth on the right thigh skin deep. The right sixth rib was fractured and there was a contusion on the right arm. Death was due to shock and haemorrhage, principally the latter.

During the course of the investigation two chhavi blades were produced by Wallu (P.W. 8), a blacksmith of Majra at the instance of Sohan Singh and Nawab who had made them over the Wallu. One of these was found to be stained with human blood. A dang which had been left with Chiragh Din (P.W. 10) of majra by Nawab at the same time was also recovered at the instance of these two appellants. Sohan Singh and Nawab were not in the village when the police arrived and when produced before the Sub-Inspector he found that the chadar of Sohan Singh and the kurta of Nawab were blood-stained. Their other garments appeared to be new and the investigation showed that they had disposed of their blood stained clothes at Okara by giving them to some beggars. A blood-stained chadar given to him by

(1) A. I. R. (1928) P. C. 254=50 All. 722=55 I.A. 390.

Nawab was recovered from a beggar named Abdulla (P. W. 18) and a blood-stained kurta given to him by Sohan Singh from another beggar named Bahadur (P. W. 19). All the above four garments were found to be stained with human blood. It is also in evidence that when Sohan Singh and Nawab made over the chhavi blades to Wallu at Majra, they each borrowed a pair of shoes from Ida and Maulu of that village (P. Ws. 12 and 13) before going on to Okara. One shoe identified as belonging to Sohan Singh was found at the spot.

The appellants denied all the allegations made against them and attributed their implication to one Raisham Singh of Harchoke, though in his statement at the trial Nawab named one Sohan Singh, a cousin of the deceased, as being at the bottom of the case.

Raisham Singh it is stated was inimical to Sikh appellants on account of a dispute with Sada Singh over the lambardari and further it was alleged that the son of the deceased was betrothed to a relative of Raisham Singh.

Dr. Nand Lal contended that Raisham Singh prompted and influenced the deceased into naming the appellants as his assailants because Raisham Singh accompanied the deceased to the thana and was present when the report was made and the dying declaration recorded.

Beyond this, there is nothing to support this argument and in my opinion it is quite insufficient to show that Raisham Singh is responsible for the appellants being falsely implicated.

Sohan Singh and Dhara Singh further pleaded alibis, and Sada Singh illness.

In support of Sada Singh's plea of illness two medical practitioners of Chumian and Kot Radha Kishen deposed to having treated Sada Singh for intestinal colic and given him an enema on 9th April. They did not attend him again and their opinion as to whether Sada Singh could have been well again in 2, 3, 10 or 15 days is not of any value. It seems obvious that if Sada Singh did not require any further medical attention, the treatment was efficacious and made him quite fit and well again. In any case, it does not follow that because a man was suffering from intestinal colic on the 9th, he would still be ill on the 19th. The evidence of Dhara Singh (D. W. 3), a brother-in-law of Sada Singh as to the latter only being able to move about with the aid of a stick on the night of the occurrence and as to Sohan Singh being away at Handal at the time is of no value and his evidence in my opinion was rightly disbelieved by the learned Additional Sessions Judge.

The evidence as to the absence of Dhara Singh and Nawab is also worthless and does not prove anything in their favour.

In connexion with the first information report and the dying declaration of the deceased Dr. Nand Lal pointed out a few minor omissions which in my opinion are perfectly immaterial.

He characterized the direct evidence of Jamu, Kundan Singh and Ghulam Muhammad as interested because the first was a tenant of the deceased, the second was his nephew and also his stepson and the third had been a tenant. These in my judgment are wholly inadequate reasons for rejecting the testimony of these witnesses whose evidence I consider has been rightly believed by the learned Additional Sessions Judge fully supporting as it does the first information report and the dying declaration of the deceased.

Reference was made to a panchayat having been held and as to this body having found that Sada Singh and Dhara Singh were not concerned in the affair because Kundan Singh and Ghulam Muhammad are alleged to have so said before the panchayat.

Apart from evidence of this nature being inadmissible it is obviously valueless and cannot possibly detract from the clear and convincing prosecution evidence both direct and circumstantial, and which in my opinion undoubtedly establishes the guilt of the appellants. In view of such evidence the adequacy or inadequacy of motive is of minor importance. As a rule there is no love lost between collaterals and it needs but little to change this into open hostility and ill-feeling which generally finds expression in occurrences like that in the present case.

I am also of opinion that the appellants Sada Singh and Dhara Singh are guilty as principals and have been wrongly held to have been abettors. They were certainly present and according to the evidence Sada Singh was responsible for the wound on the head of the deceased. Even if, as the learned Additional Sessions Judge thinks (though wrongly in my view) that these appellants took no active part in the affair, they would be constructively liable on an application of S. 34, I. P. C., as this provision of law has been interpreted by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Barendra Kumar v. Emperor (2).

The question of sentence presents some little difficulty, but after giving the matter my careful consideration I do not think a capital sentence is called for in the case of the respondents, Sohan Singh and Nawab. I am not prepared to agree with the learned Additional Government Advocate that the assault was a premeditated and planned affair. It was I think a chance encounter and there was no deliberate intention to kill the deceased. If there had been, this could very easily have been achieved seeing that two of the assailants were with armed chhavis and yet no serious injuries were inflicted on any vital part.

The incised wound on the left hand though serious cannot I think be regarded as individually fatal.

For the above reasons I would dismiss the appeal and affirm the convictions and sentences of Sohan Singh and Nawab. I would accept the appeal preferred by the Local Government against the acquittal of Sada Singh and Dhara Singh on the charge of murder under S. 302, I. P. C., convict them of this offence and enhance the sentence of seven years' rigorous imprisonment to one of transportation for life in the case of each of these two appellants.

Criminal Revn. No. 1257 of 1929, Decided on 22nd November 1929.

Opium Act, S. 9 (c)—Where two persons are in joint possession of opium less than two of them could hold separately neither is guilty.

If it is proved that a person is in possession on behalf of others as also of himself of opium the total quantity of which is less than all the joint owners are entitled to possess he would not be guilty of any offence.

Two persons were found in possession of 9 mashas of chandu, the amount allowed by law to each person being 6 mashas i. e. they were in joint possession of less than the two of them could have held separately.

Mahomed Amin—for Petitioners.

Report.—On information received that the house occupied by Zarin Khan and Allah Bakhsh was used as a common gaming house and that gambling was going on there, the police raided the house to find that no gambling was going on as anticipated, but, on the other hand, they found a number of articles and apparatus showing that chandu smoking was going on and two phials containing chandu were found therein. The evidence shows that Allah Bakhsh was caught inside the house while Zarin Khan managed to run away and make good his escape when the police entered the house. The chandu found in the two bottles was put into one and on being weighed, it was found that the total weight was 9 mashas. The two accused Zarin Khan and Allah Bakhsh, were accordingly challaned under S. 9(c), Opium Act for being in possession of more chandu than could be legally possessed by them, the total amount of chandu that can be legally possessed by one person being half a tola, i. e., 6 mashas. The lower Court found that the two accused were in joint possession of 9 mashas of chandu found in the house and it accordingly convicted both the accused and sentenced them to a fine of Rs. 50 each or two month's rigorous imprisonment in default.

The two accused have come up in revision to this Court urging, firstly that the prosecution have failed to establish that the total amount of chandu found was 9 mashas as alleged and further that both the accused were present at the time of the raid, it being urged that Zarin Khan was away at Muzaffargarh at the time. The joint possession of chandu in question was denied.

So far as the merits of the case go I am of opinion that the facts as found are correct. The prosecution story has been deposed to by Lala Amar Nath, Sub-Inspector of Police, Mr. Warburton, Inspector of Police and Allah Ditta, P. W., and I can see no reason to doubt the truth of the statements made by them. I hold it, therefore, as established that the two accused were found in joint possession of the 9 mashas of chandu as alleged by the prosecution. Learned counsel for the appellant has urged that even taking the facts as alleged by the prosecution to be true, still, as each of the appellants was entitled to hold 6 mashas the joint possession by them of 9 mashas was not an offence. As against this contention I have been referred to the notes on p. 25 of the Punjab Excise Manual, Vol. 1. Herein it is stated, (about the middle of the page) that when several persons are in joint possession of any quantity of an excisable article, each is regarded in possession of the whole. This view was taken by Bullock, J., in an unpublished ruling noted in Queen-Empress v. Salaru (1) but was not followed in that judgment or in Queen-Empress v. Wazir Singh (2) or in any later judgment. The quotation Queen-Empress v. Wazir Singh (2) appears to be a mistake for Crown v. Sadiq (3). A reference to Queen-Empress v. Salaru (1) shows that an accused was charged with having more than one tola of chandu in his possession in contravention of the rules under the Opium Act. He did not deny that 2½ tolas were found in his house but his defence was that there were four inmates of the house and that they all smoked chandu. The accused had been acquitted by the Sessions Judge on appeal on the finding that there were other inmates of the house who smoked chandu and that, therefore, the amount in the possession of each was less than one tola allowed by law. On appeal by Crown against this acquittal it was held that the accused had not proved that as a matter of fact, a certain number of persons living in one house had joined in the purchase of the drug and that it was actually held by one for the use of all. Further it was held that as it is the possession of more than one tola of intoxicating drugs that constitutes the offence and not the amount that the person in possession may himself own, accused had been rightly convicted on the ground that he was in possession of 2½ tolas although there may have been three persons each using a fourth of it, and accused's own share may have been only a fourth. As regards the unpublished judgment of Bullock, J., referred to in this judgment the learned Chief Judge stated that he was somewhat doubtful if the proposition can be stated in such wide terms as set out in the judgment of Bullock, J. He definitely stated that he preferred to reserve his opinion as to the effect of a joint possession until such possession was in fact proved. We thus see that the proposition set out in the Punjab Excise Manual on p. 25 has not been subscribed to in the judgment quoted therein, i. e., Queen-Empress v. Salaru (1).

Furthermore, the present case is distinguishable from the ruling cited. In that case one person was found in possession of more than the quantity of opium that is permissible by law to be held by any one person. He alleged that he held it for himself as also for others and that his share was less than the quantity allowed by law. It was found that this allegation had not been established. In the present instance two persons have been held to be jointly in possession of 9 mashas of chandu, the amount allowed by law to each person being 6 mashas. Thus they were jointly in possession of less than the two of them could have held separately. Furthermore, it is in evidence that the chandu found was in two separate bottles and that the total weight of the contents of both bottles was 9 mashas. Since the accused have been held to have been jointly in possession, the presumption is that each held his own share in separate bottle, but it has not been shown what the weight of the contents of each bottle was. Again in King-Emperor v. Buta Singh (4), it was held that the defence to a charge under the Opium Act of being in possession of a greater quantity of opium than allowed by law, that other persons living in his house also consumed opium is of no avail, unless it is conclusively shown that the possession of the accused was the joint possession of himself and other and that he held on behalf and for the use of all. In this judgment Crown v. Sadiq (3) has been cited. It is clear from this judgment that the proposition set out in the notes of the Excise Manual is not correct. According to this ruling, if it is proved that a person is in possession on behalf of others as also of himself of opium, the total quantity of which is less than all the joint owners are entitled to possess, he would not be guilty of any offence. The case is, however, a doubtful one since not one but two persons have been found in joint possession of a quantity which is less than the two of them could possess, if held separately. In these circumstances I am of opinion that the conviction cannot be maintained. I accordingly accept the revision and refer the case to the High Court with the recommendation that the petitioners be acquitted and the fine inflicted on them be remitted.

Order.—For the reasons recorded by the learned Sessions Judge I quash the conviction and direct that the fines, if realized, be refunded to accused.

Emperor—Opposite Party.

Criminal Appeal No. 1165 of 1929, Decided on 22nd January 1930, against order of Sess. Judge, Lyallpur, D/- 19th November 1929.

Penal Code, S. 300—Abuse by deceased who is person of low caste to her husband does not constitute grave provocation though it may be sudden—Lesser punishment should however be given.

R a Bharai by caste and an agriculturist by occupation was accused of murdering his wife in a quarrel by means of an axe. He pleaded grave and sudden provocation and in support of the plea produced a witness who had heard the deceased calling the accused "a pig, son of pig."

Held: that such abuse could not constitute grave provocation specially in the case of a low caste of man of the class of the accused, accustomed to the use of abusive language. But the accused could be said to have acted without premeditation under some provocation which though not grave was sudden and deserved lesser sentence than sentence of death.

Zafarullah Khan—for Appellant.

D. R. Sawhney—for the Crown.

Judgment.—The appellant Rahman, aged 40 years, is a Bharai by caste and an agriculturist by occupation. He has been convicted of the murder of his wife Mt. Rahman and has been sentenced to death.

The deceased was only 30 years of age and was pregnant. She had been married for some 10 years and the couple had all along lived amicably together and had three sons. On the fateful day she was late in taking to the appellant at his field his midday meal. He remonstrated with her for having come late, whereupon an altercation ensued and she abused him. He picked up an axe and inflicted with it two blows on her neck which almost severed her head from the trunk. He admitted that it was he who thus caused her death but he pleaded grave and sudden provocation. In support of this plea there was the evidence of one of the prosecution witnesses, namely, Wallu (P. W. 3) that he heard the deceased calling the appellant "a pig, son of a pig." But such abuse cannot constitute a grave provocation, specially in the case of a low caste man of the class of the appellant accustomed to the use of abusive language. But all the same there can be no denying the fact that the appellant acted without premeditation under some provocation which, though not grave, was sudden. In view of this circumstance the learned Public Prosecutor supports the contention of the appellant's counsel that the appellant deserves the lesser sentence.

We, therefore, alter the sentence to one of transportation for life and accept the appeal to this extent.

Emperor—Opposite Party.

Criminal Rwn. No. 1531 of 1929, Decided on 24th January 1930, against order of Dist. Magistrate, Gurdaspur, D/- 12th April 1929.

Penal Code, S. 504—Temperament of individual concerned is not to be judged—

Court should find out of what effect abusive language would have been in ordinary circumstances.

In dealing with S. 504 the Court has not to Judge the temperament or the idiosyncrasies of the individual concerned. It should try to find out what in the ordinary circumstances would have been the effect of the abusive language used. Where there is no doubt that the abusive language used might ordinarily have resulted in broken limbs or at least in an affray and consequent breach of the peace an offence under S. 504 is committed: 10 Mad. 353 and 1 U. B. R. 290, Rel. on. [P 393 C 1, 2]

Nawal Kishore—for Petitioner.

Judgment.—The applicants abused one, Charan Das, an Aggarwal Bania. The applicants are also Banias. The applicants have been convicted under S. 504, I. P. C., and sentenced by a 3rd Class Magistrate to pay a fine of Rs. 10 each. They went up in appeal to the District Magistrate and their appeal was dismissed. They came up in revision to this Court. A point was taken by Mr. Nawal Kishore at the preliminary hearing that there was no finding as regards any apprehended breach of the peace as required by S. 504, I. P. C., and that, therefore, the conviction was bad in law. It may be observed that this point was never taken in the grounds of appeal in the Court below, or in the grounds of revision in this Court. However I allowed Mr. Nawal Kishore to argue this point.

Admittedly the applicants used abusive language towards the complainant.

It was argued that the complainant was a man of a placid temperament, and as he belonged to a very peaceful community it was not likely that there would have been a breach of the peace as a result of the abuse in which the petitioners indulged. This is not the correct way to look at the matter. The applicants are also Aggarwal Banias, and if they could indulge in the "most filthy and provocative words," to quote the trial Magistrate, there is no reason why their adversary, the complainant, should not have abused in the same terms. Moreover, in dealing with S. 504, I. P. C., we have not to Judge the temperament or the idiosyncrasies of the individual concerned. We should try to find out what, in the ordinary circumstances, would have been the effect of the abusive language used. There cannot be any doubt that the abusive language used in the present case might ordinarily have resulted in broken limbs or at least in an affray, and consequent breach of the peace. There are authorities in support of this view, e.g., Queen Empress v. Jogayya (1) and Queen Empress v. Mi Te (2).

In my opinion the application is without any merits, and there is no substance in the point of law raised by Mr. Nawal Kishore at the time of arguments. The application is dismissed.

v.

Emperor—Opposite Party.

Criminal Revn. Petn. No. 1707 of 1929, Decided on 27th January 1930, against order of Dist. Mag. Karnal, D. - 31st July 1929.

(a) Criminal P. C., Ss. 110 and 112—Evidence as to mere suspicion on particular isolated occasions is insufficient for purposes of S. 110.

Evidence as to mere suspicion on particular isolated occasions is not sufficient evidence at all for the purposes of a case under S. 110, Criminal P. C. What is necessary is evidence to prove that the man is by habit a thief. Evidence can no doubt be led of his general reputation about the matter and that he was suspected in a particular case by a particular person or the police of having committed a theft. But there must be a large number of cases before it can be held to be proved on this evidence alone that he is by habit a thief. [P 394 C 1, 2]

(b) Criminal Trial—Evidence — Procedure recording evidence against two persons in one case and then considering it as evidence against one is illegal.

A and B were given notice under S. 112 Criminal P. C., to show cause as to why they were not to be bound down with bonds and securities. There was no joint trial nor was there any intention of having a joint trial. The Magistrate recorded the evidence against both in one case and then proceeded to consider it as evidence in the case against B.

Held: that the procedure in recording the evidence was illegal. B's case was never tried at all and the orders passed against him under S. 118, Criminal P. C., and S. 7 Habitual Offenders Act could be set aside. [P 394 C 1]

Rama Nand—for Petitioners.

Ram Lal—for the Crown.

Order.—Two men, Lilu and Bhuru, were given notice under S. 112, Criminal P. C., to show cause as to why they should not be bound down with personal bonds and securities in Rs. 1,000 with one surety each for a period of three years because they are cattle lifters and burglars etc. The notice also directed them to show cause why their movements should not be restricted to their village for the said period. The notice did not cite the Habitual Offenders Act. The evidence was all recorded in one case, namely, that of Lilu and then the Court proceeded to pass orders against both under S. 118, Criminal P.C., and under S. 7, Habitual Offenders Act restricting their movements for a period of two years. The appeals were dismissed by the learned District Magistrate, and the petitioners have come on revision.

The learned counsel contends inter alia that there is no sufficient evidence to justify the orders passed so far as Lilu is concerned. The learned counsel for the Crown points out that the evidence against Lilu consists of two men who deposed to his having received bhunga on two occasions and the evidence of one lambardar and one zaildar about his reputation as a thief, also that of two police officials. In my opinion this is insufficient to justify an order under S. 118 or under S. 7, Habitual Offenders Act. I, therefore, accept the petition qua Lilu and set aside the order passed against him.

As regards Bhuru it is perfectly clear that his case has never been tried at all. There was no joint trial, nor was there ever any intention to have a joint trial. What has happened is this. The Magistrate recorded the evidence against both in one case and then proceeded to consider it as evidence in the case against Bhuru. I, therefore, accept the petition qua Bhuru and set aside the order passed against him. It is open to the Crown, if so advised, to bring a fresh case against Bhuru as really speaking there never has been a trial of his case at all.

I should like to point out that the Courts below have erred hopelessly in procedure in this case. I have already pointed out the illegality about the recording of evidence. Further, it would have been better, though perhaps not essential, to specify that the petitioners were being asked to show cause under the Habitual Offenders Act as well as under S. 112, Criminal P. C. Secondly, the provisions of S. 9, Habitual Offenders Act, should have been complied with. Thirdly, evidence as to mere suspicion on particular isolated occasions is not sufficient evidence at all for the purposes of a case under S. 110, Criminal P. C. What is necessary is evidence to prove under S. 110 (a) that the man is by habit a thief. Evidence can no doubt be led of his general reputation about the matter and evidence that he was suspected in a particular case by a particular person or by the police of having committed a theft. But there must be a large number of such cases before it can be held proved on this evidence alone that he is by habit a thief. He was never given any notice under S. 110(f) so the appellate Court was wrong in taking this subsection into consideration against him.

Criminal Revn. Petn No. 134 of 1930, Decided on 21st January 1930, from order of Dist. Judge, Delhi, D/- 15th July 1929.

Criminal P. C., S. 476—It is not necessary that words "expedient in the interest of justice" should appear in order under S. 476—It is sufficient that Court is of opinion that enquiry is expedient.

The words "expedient in the interest of justice" are not a formula or incantation which must of necessity appear in every order made under S. 476. S. 476 merely requires that the Courts concerned should be of opinion that the interests of justice render it expedient that an inquiry should be made into any offence referred to in S. 195 (1) (b) or (c). It is sufficient that the Court arrives at such an opinion and also that there is a reasonable prospect of the conviction of the accused there being sufficient evidence to support prosecution. Whether the evidence is believed or not or will be sufficient to justify the conviction of the accused is quite another matter. [P 395 C 2]

Nawal Kishore—for Petitioners.

Jagan Nath Aggarwal—for the Crown.

Judgment.—This purports to be an appeal against the order of the District Judge, Delhi directing the prosecution for giving false evidence and forgery under Ss. 193 and 471, I. P. C., of three persons Naurang Rai, Kastur Chand and Radha Kishan. It has, however, been conceded in view of the decision of this Court in Mahomed Idris v. Emperor (1) that no appeal lies and accordingly I propose to treat the appeal as a petition for revision.

It appears that in certain execution proceedings between the respondent, Dalu Ram and the petitioner Naurang Rai as decree-holder and judgment-debtor respectively the latter on 1st July 1927 produced a receipt purporting to be signed by the decree-holder who denied the authenticity of the signature and the alleged payment to him. The petitioners, Kastur Chand and Radha Kishan, alleged payment to and execution by the decree-holder. The executing Court held that the receipt was not genuine in its order dated 31st October 1927 and on appeal by Naurang Rai the judgment-debtor the District Judge on 19th November 1927 also came to the same conclusion. On 20th December 1927 the decree-holder made an application under S. 476, Criminal P. C., in the Court of the District Judge for the prosecution of the three petitioners and three other persons for forgery and perjury. This application was returned by the District Judge with the direction that it should be filed in the Court executing the decree where it remained pending for over a year and four months till the 22nd April 1929 when the Subordinate Judge who had succeeded the officer to whom the application had been made dismissed it on the ground that he did not find there were sufficient grounds for directing prosecution of the persons referred to above. On appeal by the respondent Dalu Ram the learned District Judge disagreed with this view and holding after an examination of the record that there were sufficient grounds for believing that the receipt was a forgery and sufficient evidence justified the launching of a prosecution, directed that a complaint be filed against the three petitioners.

Now, I can find nothing in the order of the learned District Judge to throw any doubts on the correctness, legality or propriety of the finding arrived at by him. It was urged by the learned counsel for the petitioners that the learned District Judge had not stated that it was "expedient in the interests of justice" that the petitioners should be prosecuted and that there was a reasonable prospect of their conviction after trial. Now the words "expedient in the interests of justice" are not a formula or incantation which must of necessity appear in every order made under S. 476. This section merely requires that the Court concerned should be of opinion that the interests of justice render it expedient that an enquiry should be made into any offence referred to in S. 195, sub-S. (1), Cl. (b) or Cl. (c) and that the learned District Judge did arrive at such an opinion is sufficiently obvious from his order. He has also arrived at an opinion that there is a reasonable prospect of the conviction of the petitioners as there is sufficient evidence to support a prosecution. Whether this evidence is believed or not and will be sufficient to justify the conviction tion of the petitioners is quite another matter and one with which the learned District Judge is not concerned nor would it be proper for him to express any opinion in this connexion.

For the above reason I see no ground for interference with the order of the learned District Judge and dismiss the petition.

Criminal Appeal No. 491 of 1929, Decided on 2nd December 1929, from order of Addl. Sess. Judge, Multan, D. 27th March 1929.

 Criminal P. C., S. 151—Order for arrest without emergency contemplated by S. 151 is illegal and person whose arrest is attempted may offer resistance and if constables use force towards him causing injury, the person has right of private defence—Penal Code S. 99.

If without any emergency for arrest contemplated by S. 151, a police officer arrests or attempts to arrest a person, the arrest or the attempt to arrest is not only not strictly justifiable by law but is illegal and the person who is arrested or attempted to be arrested, is entitled to offer resistance. If further, such person apprehends hurt at the hands of armed constables sent for the arrest, and such constables use criminal force towards such person, who retaliates it causing them simple injury it cannot be said that he has exceeded his right of private defence: 24 Cal. 320 and A. Hakumat Rai--for Appellants.

Abdul Rashid--for the Crown.

Zafar Ali, J.—The five men whose names are given in the margin (viz : 1. Khairu 2. Mohammad Azim 3. Gamun 4. Rshim 5. Hassan) were tried together by the Additional Sessions Judge of Multan on alternative charges under Ss. 307, 109 and 333, I. P. C. with the result that he acquitted the first two and convicted the rest of hurt under S. 324, I. P. C., and sentenced each to rigorous imprisonment for one year. These three convicts have appealed, and the Local Government has also appealed against the acquittal of Khairu and Mohammad Azim, and for the conviction of all five under S. 307 or S. 333, I. P. C. coupled with S. 149, I. P. C., or enhancement of the sentences under S. 324, I.P.C.

The various incidents mentioned by the prosecution may briefly be described thus:

(1) On 29th November 1928, Gamun appellant was beating a student of the Multan Islamia, High School when Ghulam Mohammad, Head Constable (P.W. 4), who was attached to the police post near there, interfered and separated them and scolded Gamun, Gamun felt insulted and said to the Head Constable something to the effect that he would take revenge. The Head Constable was the only witness produced about this incident. The student's name was mentioned but he was not produced.

(2) On 8th December 1928 at about 10-30 a. m. the Head Constable left the police post for the tahsil to perform his duty there as a Naib Court. On the way, as he struck into the Am Khas garden, Gamun and others fell upon him and beat him with fists, kicks and sticks. He was rescued by two constables and others but none of them was put in the witness-box, and so the Head Constable was the solitary witness produced about this assault upon him.

(3) The above incident was soon reported to the Police Inspector Mr. Warburton who rang up the Superintendent of Police on the telephone and apprised him of what had befallen the said Head Constable. The Superintendent of Police gave instructions for the arrest of the assailants of the Head Constable under Ss. 107 and 151, Criminal P. C. The Inspector (P. W. 6) conveyed those instructions to the Sub-Inspector on the phone. The latter made an entry in the station diary as to what had been communicated to him, and then went to the Inspector at the tahsil and, after receiving further verbal instructions from him, he came back to the police station and made another entry in the diary embodying all that he was told by the Inspector. Then, with eight constables all in uniform, he proceeded to the residence of the four brothers Gamun, etc., who it was stated had beaten the Head Constable. Some more constables and Seth Narain Das or Naru Karar joined the Sub-Inspector on the way.

(4) The police or prosecution version of what took place further on and at the house of the four brothers was this : When the Sub-Inspector's party emerged from the Delhi Gate, Nimun accused was seen coming from the opposite direction.

Seeing the police he ran back and disappeared. When the party reached the house of the accused they found its door fastened from inside. They knocked at it but it was not opened. In the meantime the four brothers and their cousin Hassan Bakhsh appeared on the scene with knives in their hands and shouting "Ali, Ali." The Sub-Inspector told them that he had come to arrest them and not to fight with them. These five men, however, proceeded to attack some of the constables and caused injuries to three of them. The police succeeded in arresting three out of the five assailants, namely, Gamun, Hassan Bakhsh and Nimun. The three constables who were attacked received incised wounds.

Now, the first question to be determined is whether there was any justification for the order made by the Superintendent of Police for the arrest of the assailants of the Head Constable under Ss. 107 and 151, Criminal P. C.

Section 151 runs thus :

"police officer knowing of a design to commit any cognizable offence may arrest without orders from a Magistrate and without warrant, the person so designing, if it appears to such officer that the commission of the offence cannot be otherwise prevented."

Apart from S. 151, there is no provision in S. 107 for the arrest of any person.

The Superintendent of Police did not appear in the witness-box to state what was the information received by him upon which he ordered the arrest. In the instructions given by the Inspector to the Sub-Inspector which the latter reduced to writing it is nowhere stated that the assailants of the Head Constable threatened to kill him. When the Inspector appeared in the witness-box he stated that the Head Constable told him that his assailants had threatened to kill him. He further stated that he phoned to the Superintendent of Police and repeated to him all that the Head Constable had told him. But he did not specifically state that he phoned to the Superintendent of Police that the assailants of the Head Constable had threatened to kill him. Even assuming that the assailants did utter that threat before leaving the Head Constable, there was nothing to indicate that they intended to carry out that threat and could do so unless immediately prevented by arrest. There was no old deadly feud at the bottom, and the Head Constable had been sufficiently punished for his interference in the quarrel between Gaman and the student, and he was now at the police post where there could be no danger of any further molestation by the accused. In these circumstances there was no occasion for ordering their arrest under the provisions of S. 151, Criminal P. C., and the contention to the contrary possesses no force.

The next question is whether the Superintendent of Police acted in good faith. S. 52, I. P. C., lays down that nothing is said to be done or believed in good faith which is done or believed without due care or attention. There is nothing to indicate that the Superintendent of Police exercised due care and attention. On the other hand, it appears from what has been stated above that he was hasty and careless. The direction that he gave for arrest cannot therefore be said to have been given in good faith.

It is further clear that the police had no jurisdiction to arrest as the assailants were, according to the information then received by the Sub-Inspector of Police and entered by him in the diary, only four in number and their offence was punishable under no other provision of the Penal Code than S. 323. No emergency for arrest which S. 151 contemplates having been shown to have existed, the attempt, to arrest on the part of the Sub-Inspector was not only "not strictly justifiable by law," but was illegal. Therefore neither Cl. (1) nor Cl. (2), S. 99, I. P. C., could afford protection to him. Queen Empress v. Jogendra Nath Mukerjee (1), is in point. In that case a District Magistrate issued a warrant for the arrest and production of a witness for the purpose of giving evidence at an investigation held by the police, and in attempting to execute such warrant the police arrested the wrong person and were assaulted in the attempt. And Ghose and Gordon, JJ., held that :

"apart from the fact that the attempt to arrest was made on the wrong person a District Magistrate has no authority to issue a warrant for the production of a witness at an investigation by a police officer : but only before his own Court under Ss. 76 and 81, Criminal P.C."

"Held, also, that as the investigation was held by a police officer under Chap. 14, Ori-iminal P. C., the proper course was for the Sub-Inspector of Police to require the attendance of the witness under S. 163, Criminal P. C., and on failure by her to comply with such order, prosecute her under S. 174, I. P. C."

"Held, also, that the accused were justified in their resistance, and that no offence, either under S. 143 or S. 183, I. P. C., was committed, and that they should be acquitted."

. This ruling was followed in Haq Dad v. Emperor (2), and it was held that S. 99 was inapplicable where the action of the Sub-Inspector of Police was wholly without jurisdiction.

In the present case the Sub-Inspector was not competent to execute the Superintendent's order for arrest as the order was illegal.

Coming now to the factum of the assault on the three constables it may be observed at first that the account thereof as given by the police is not corroborated by any independent trustworthy witness. Besides the Sub-Inspector and the constables, only two other witnesses were produced, namely, Narain Das and Nawab. The former, according to his own showing is a helper of the police inasmuch as he not infrequently attends police investigations, and the latter is a sarbarah lambardar whose duty it is to help the police and who was, after all, a chance witness. No witness was produced from the locality where the assault took place, though several people from there must have been attracted to the spot in consequence of the arrival of so many police men in uniform and the noise of their scuffle with the accused. The story that the five accused came up all of a sudden to deliver an attack on 13 policemen is on the face of it highly improbable as they could not have imagined that they could overpower them. The defence story that the police entered the house of the accused and caused annoyance by interfering with their womenfolk seems probable though no evidence was produced in support of it. In any case the police version, improbable as it is, is not supported by any independent evidence and cannot therefore be believed in its entirety.

In all these circumstances we are not prepared to conclude that the lower Court was manifestly wrong in disbelieving the prosecution evidence as against the two accused who bore no injuries and who were not arrested on the spot. They no doubt absconded for a few days but they did so probably for fear of arrest and not necessarily because they had taken part in the scuffle with the police. Further we find that there was no intention on the part of the assailants to inflict any fatal injury and no dangerous injury was as a matter of fact caused.

We are of opinion that the finding of the Additional Sessions Judge that the injuries received by the constables were simple is correct in view of all that has been stated above and there could be no conviction either under S. 307 or S. 333, I.P.C. The appeal by the Local Government therefore fails and we dismiss it.

As regards the appeal of the convicts it is clear that they were entitled to offer resistance to their arrest which was illegal. As regards the circumstances under which they did so, the evidence, as stated above, is not satisfactory, but it may safely be presumed that they apprehended hurt at the hands of the constables who were admittedly all armed with lathis. These lathis were actually used as the three appellants received a number of injuries. They were therefore, justified in causing to their assailants the simple injuries that they did, and the right of private defence that they had against unlawful arrest was not exceeded.

We therefore accept their appeal and acquit them.

Criminal Revn. Petn. No. 1236 of 1929, Decided on 2nd December 1929, from order of Sess. Judge, Delhi, D/- 29th July 1929.

* * Penal Code, Ss. 153-A and 295-A—Article printed in periodical exclusively subscribed by Hindus under signature of correspondent which had effect of causing excitement amongst Mahomedans—Editor held responsible and liable under Ss. 153-A and 295-A irrespective of fact how it came to notice of Mahomedans.

Reference order by

Jai Lal, J.—The petitioner Swami Chida Nand has been convicted under Ss. 153-A and 295-A, I. P. C., and has been sentenced to six months' rigorous imprisonment and a fine of Rs. 300 separately under both the sections. The sentences, however, have been ordered to run concurrently. The Sessions Judge of Delhi having dismissed his appeal this petition for revision has been presented on his behalf. It has been found that he is the editor, printer and publisher of a periodical called the Shuddhi Samachar, which is printed in Delhi in the Hindi language and script, and that in the month of September 1928, he published in this periodical a signed article contributed by a correspondent and that the contents of the article are such that if read by the Mahomedans they are likely to promote feelings of enmity or hatred between the Hindus and the Mahomedans.

It is contended on behalf of the petitioner that the periodical in question is not sold to the public but is sent out to its subscribers who are invariably Hindus. It is, however, conceded that in the month of September 1928 one copy of the periodical was subscribed for by a Mahomedan who, however, was a resident of a Native State and not of British India. It is further admitted that the number of persons who subscribe to the periodical is ten thousand. It seems that some Mahomedans somehow got to know of the contents of the article in question with the result that at a meeting held in the Juma Mosque of Delhi speeches were made protesting against the article and condemning what was contained therein.

The petitioner's counsel contends that if any feelings of enmity or hatred have been promoted as a result of the publication of the article the persons responsible therefor are those who published it in the meeting in the Juma Mosque and not the petitioner who did not intend that it should be read by the Mahomedans. Counsel strongly relies on the conclusion of the learned Sessions Judge that the appellant did not attempt to promote feelings of enmity amongst Mahomedans against Hindus as this was not his primary object and contends that after this finding it was not open to the learned Sessions Judge to convict Swami Chida Nand for actual promotion of such feelings because the intention of the accused is a necessary ingredient in the offence made punishable by S. 153-A.

Mr. Abdul Rashid, Additional Government Advocate, who appeared for the Crown; on the other hand contended that the learned Sessions Judge did not intend to hold that the petitioner did not intend to promote feelings of enmity amongst Mahomedans against Hindus as would appear from his remark that "he must be held to have intended that the article should have become known to Mahomedans." In this connexion, the petitioner's counsel relied inter alia on the judgment of Dalip Singh, J. in A. I. R. 1927 Lah. 570 and contended that the Division Bench of this Court which decided the case reported as A.I.R. 1927 Lah. 594 did not expressly differ from the view expressed in the former case. He also urged that even if it be held that the view taken in the later case by the Division Bench is correct, the judgment has no bearing on this case because in that case it was definitely found that apart from a poster issued by a Mahomedan leader inviting the attention of the Mahomedans to the objectionable article there had already existed excitement among the Mahomedans who had read the article independently. Such a circumstance does not exist in this case. To this the learned Additional Government Advocate replied that it was immaterial how the article came to the knowledge of the Mahomedans and the petitioner is responsible for the result; and relied upon Emperor v. Kalicharan (1) and also the judgment of the Division Bench of this Court referred to above.

Finally, it was contended on behalf of the convict that a charge under S. 295-A could not under any circumstances be sustained. The learned Additional Government Advocate conceded that if a charge under S. 153-A could not be sustained for want of the requisite intention of the accused the charge under the other section must also fail for the same reason. He also conceded that the accused could not be convicted under both the sections but that he could be convicted only in the alternative. This, however, is immaterial because the sentences have been ordered to run concurrently.

It was also asserted on behalf of the petitioner that if the view of the learned Sessions Judge is sustained an honest criticism of another religion by a missionary in his own place of worship or congregation when addressed to his own followers exclusively would become punishable, which could not have been the intention of the legislature, and, finally, it was urged with regard to the sentence that the fact that the Government have selected persons of a particular persuasion for prosecution and have refrained from prosecuting the members of the other community for similar attacks on the religion of the accused should, inter alia, be considered a circumstance in support of a plea of provocation or extenuation and entitles the petitioner to leniency in the matter of sentence. No evidence, however, was cited in support of this assertion.

In my opinion the points of law involved in the case are important, especially in view of what I have stated above and in view of the somewhat contradictory findings of the Sessions Judge and a more authoritative decision thereof is desirable. I consequently refer this case to a Division Bench and direct that it be placed before the learned Chief Justice immediately with a view to its being heard very early.

Judgment on reference.

Fforde, J.—This is a petition in revision in which this Court is asked to hold that the decision of the Sessions Judge of Delhi, declaring a certain article to have been published with the intention of promoting enmity between Hindus and Mahomedans, and also being deliberately and maliciously intended to outrage the religious feelings of Mahomedans, is a finding against law.

Having been taken through the judgment in question and having heard Mr. Kapur, who has advanced every argument which could reasonably be put forward, I am of opinion that the finding of the learned Sessions Judge that the article in question was intended to promote enmity between the two communities, and that it was published with the deliberate and malicious intention of outraging the feelings of one of the communities, has not been shown to be in violation of any principle of law. I am satisfied that upon the findings of the learned Sessions Judge on the evidence an offence has been established both under S. 153-A and under S. 295-A, I. P. C.

Mr. Kapoor has finally urged that the punishment imposed is too severe for the offence. The learned Sessions Judge has sentenced the petitioner to six months' rigorous imprisonment and a fine of Rs. 300 for the offence under S. 153-A and to rigorous imprisonment for six months under S. 295-A, I. P. C. Had these sentences been made to run consecutively the question might have arisen whether two separate sentences should be given for offences which arise out of one publication. As, however, the sentences of imprisonment have been made to run concurrently and, in effect, the punishment to be suffered will only be six months' rigorous imprisonment in addition to the fine, I see no reason to interfere with the sentence. This petition, in my opinion, must be rejected.

Addison, J.—I concur.

Criminal Appeal No. 842 of 1928, Decided on 20th February 1929, against order of Sess. Judge, Tipperah, D/- 27th September 1928.

(a) Criminal P. C., S. 304—Judge is not obliged to accept an absurd verdict—He can ask jury to reconsider matter over again.

In a criminal trial with the help of a jury a Judge is not obliged to accept an absurd verdict either as a verdict of guilty or as a verdict of not guilty. He is quite entitled to tell the jury to consider the matter over again.

[P 401 C 2]

(b) Criminal P. C., S. 298—It is not duty of Judge to accept and interpret unintelligible verdict.

It is no part of a Judge's duty to accept and interpret for himself a verdict of an unintelligible character when the members of the jury are there and can give a proper verdict.

[P 401 C 2]

(c) Criminal P. C., S. 297—Judge can re-charge jury after unintelligible verdict—Cross-examination of jury in such case is not proper.

When in case of an unintelligible verdict from a jury, a Judge thinks it better to re-charge the jury on specific points there is nothing in the Criminal P. C., to prevent him from doing so. In such a matter it is most unsatisfactory for a Judge to cross-examine the jury which as a matter of fact means cross-examination of the foreman of the jury.

[P 401 C 2]

A. K. Basu and Satindranath Mukerji—for Appellants.

Khundkar—for the Crown.

Rankin, C. J.—In this case when the trial had proceeded to the end of the learned Judge's charge to the jury, the jury considered their verdict. There were eleven accused and the foreman read out the names of those eleven people and said that the jury found them all guilty under S. 147, I. P. C. So far as the learned Judge is concerned, the foreman was then heard to read out the names of five of those accused and to say that the jury found them guilty under S. 364 and to go on to say that the others were not guilty under that section. Thereupon, the learned Judge recorded that as their verdict. He typed out a little judgment and sentence on that basis and he read it out in Court, when, to his astonishment, the foreman said :

"No that is not what we said. What we said was that these five people were guilty under

S. 364, but we gave them the benefit of the doubt."

Thereupon, the learned Judge has, I think, exercised a most admirable discretion. He recharged the jury, telling them particularly about the benefit of the doubt and what S. 364 meant and sent them back to consider and find out what their verdict really was. They came back. They delivered their verdict perfectly properly, finding the eleven accused guilty under S. 147 and finding certain accused guilty under S. 365. It is not said that there is anything wrong with the charge, and the verdict cannot be attacked upon that ground. It is said, first, that in this course there is something contrary to the Code and that the learned Judge had no right to re-charge the jury at all; secondly, that he should have taken this absurd verdict as a verdict of not guilty; and, thirdly, that at all events he was confined to asking certain questions of the jury.

I desire to say that I protest against all three of these suggestions. The learned Judge was not obliged to accept an absurd verdict, either as a verdict of guilty or as a verdict of not guilty. He was quite entitled to tell the jury to consider that matter over again. In the case in which the jury have not considered the matter over again, a verdict of that character would doubtless be construed afterwards as a verdict of not guilty; but that there is any duty upon the Judge to accept and interpret for himself a verdict of that character, when the jury are there and can give a proper verdict, is to my mind a proposition which has no foundation. Again, the learned Judge could, if he liked, have asked questions of the jury. He was not obliged to do so. If he thought it fairer and clearer and simpler to re-charge the jury on certain specific points and to tell them to go and get their heads clear on the subject and give a proper verdict, there is nothing in the Code against that. The Judge put the matter in a much better position than it would have been if he had endeavoured to cross-examine the jury, which, as matter of fact, means cross-examination of the foreman. That is generally a most unsatisfactory procedure.

Then it is said that, because the learned Judge has not treated as part of the record the piece of paper on which he typed out the foreman's verdict of guilty as the Judge understood him, which the foreman afterwards disclaimed as not being the verdict at all, that is contrary to the Code and ought to vitiate this trial. In my judgment, the intention of the Code has in this case been most scrupulously fulfilled. You cannot put down in black and white a misunderstanding, and if the learned Judge had allowed that record to remain, it would have been obviously wrong unless he coupled it with something to say that there was a discrepancy between what he took the verdict to be and what the foreman afterwards said it was. The learned Judge, accordingly, recorded in the greatest detail everything connected with this incident; and, in my judgment, there is no ground whatsoever for interference with the result of this trial.

The appeal must be dismissed. The applicants must now surrender to their bail and serve out the remaining periods of the sentences imposed on them.

Criminal Revns. Nos. 341-B and 342-B of 1929, Decided on 15th October 1929, from order of Sess. Judge, Moulmein.

(a) Criminal P. C., S. 239 -- Persons charged with criminal conspiracy to steal timber for certain term and also with habitually receiving and dealing with it during that term in pursuance of conspiracy—There is no misjoinder—But trial will be bad if persons are charged with stolen timber outside the conspiracy.

There is no misjoinder where the accused persons are charged as being parties to a criminal conspiracy to steal Government timber for a term of years and also with habitually receiving and dealing with that timber knowing or believing it to be stolen property during the same period in pursuance of the conspiracy. But if the charge is for habitually receiving stolen timber outside the said conspiracy, the trial will be bad and must be set aside as void : 25 Mad. 61 (P.C.), Dist.

(b) Criminal P. C., S. 342—Object of examination of accused is to enable him to explain anything appearing in evidence against him—In complicated case general questions asking him what he has to say in explanation of evidence against him is insufficient.

The object of the examination of the accused is to enable him to explain anything appearing in evidence against him. It is impossible to lay down any hard and fast rule as to what question should be put in any particular case. The failure to put certain vital questions will not vitiate a trial if the accused is in no sense prejudiced by that failure. But in a complicated case it would be an entirely insufficient compliance with the provisions of the section to put a general question asking the accused what he has to say in explanation of the evidence against him. Thus where the prosecution is mainly based on the contents of the documents which are obscure and capable of more explanations than one it is of special importance that the accused should be asked specifically as to what his explanation of the doubtful passages is: *A. Where the licensee cuts down trees in the Government forest which are not covered by his license and where the person authorized to give consent to remove them out of the possession of Government gives it by issuing removal pass and the bill of title to timber on the understanding that timber to be removed was timber covered by the license and thus the consent is given under a misconception of fact there is no such consent as is meant by S. 378 and in such circumstances offence of theft of timber is committed : 1 Bom. 610, Dist.

(d) Criminal Trial—No specific instance of theft or receipt of stolen property proved—Court asked to infer from several obscure documents in possession of accused that there was conspiracy to commit theft—Accused not questioned about documents—Inference cannot be drawn—Criminal P. C., S. 342.

Where no specific instance of theft or of receipt of stolen property is proved and the Court is asked as a result of several obscure documents found in possession of accused to infer that there has been conspiracy to commit theft, it is a dangerous thing to draw such an inference as to any such conspiracy among the accused without questioning them about the documents : 37 Cal. 467, Rel. on.

De Glanville Grant and Darwood—for Appellants.

Gaunt—for the Crown.

Judgment.—The two petitioners, Ba Chit and Maing Naw, were sent up by the police before the First Additional Special Power Magistrate, Moulmein, together with nine others, on various charges. After taking enough prosecution evidence to satisfy him that prima facie case had been made out, the Magistrate discharged four of the accused and framed charges against the other seven under S. 120-B, read with S. 379, and S. 413, I. P. C. The Magistrate found all the persons who were charged guilty. They all appealed to the Sessions Judge. The Sessions Judge set aside the convictions as regards five of the appellants but upheld the convictions and sentences in the case of the two petitioners. The two petitioners have both been found guilty under S. 120-B, and Ba Chit has also been found guilty under S. 413 and Maung Naw under S. 413 read with S. 109. They have each been sentenced by the Sessions Judge on the second charge only to two years' rigorous imprisonment. Both Ba Chit and Maung Naw have now come to this Court in revision against the orders of the Sessions Judge.

It generally happens that cases in which charges of conspiracy are brought are complicated cases. The present case is not exception to that rule. A large number of witnesses were examined at enormous length and the case took about nine months to try before the Magistrate, and, although the record of the oral evidence is so bulky, the convictions have been based mainly on certain documents which were found in the possession mostly of the two petitioners. Ba Chit was a timber trader in Moulmein, dealing in timber on a large scale. He had various licences and permits for the extraction of timber from the forests. He himself never went to the forests at all, the timber being extracted on his behalf by agents or contractors. Maung Naw was a servant of Ba Chit who used to visit the forests from time to time. The exact scope of his duties there, is disputed, but he had generally to look after the interests of Ba Chit.

A few months before the institution of this case, the Divisional Forest Officer as a result of personal inspection, found a large number of stumps of green Pyinkado, trees in an area where permits had been given only for the extraction of aule-natthat timber, that is to say, dead or fallen trees. Stated in broad terms, the prosecution is that for the last two years there has been a widespread conspiracy in which the petitioners took part to obtain timber by illicit means. That conspiracy involved several subordinate officials who were bribed from time to time by Ba Chit. At the time that the charges were framed against the seven accused, it appears that, though there was evidence to show that the four accused, who were not charged, had been conspiring separately to steal timber, the view of the Magistrate was that they were not parties to the same conspiracy as the petitioners.

Charges were framed against the petitioners under the provisions of S. 120-B and S. 413, I. P. C. The charge against Ba Chit under S. 120-B reads as follows:

"That you during the two years prior to 15th August 1928 (the date on which this case was reported), were a party to a criminal conspiracy to steal timber in the Ataran Forest Division with headquarters at Moulmein, and in agreement with the accused, Maung Naw, Maung Po Thein, Maung Tun Byu, Maung So Min, Maung Ye Gyan and Maung Khin in consequence whereof Government timber was stolen from Winyaw and Natchaung Ranges in the said Forest Division and thereby committed an offence punishable under S. 120-B read with S. 379, I. P. C."

The second charge against him was:

"That you during the two years prior to 15th August 1928 (the date on which this case was reported,) were a habitual receiver and dealer in Government timber which you know or had reason to believe to be stolen property and thereby committed an offence punishable under S. 413, I. P. C."

The charges against Maung Naw were couched in similar terms. Against the other accused charges of conspiracy only were framed. The first objection that has been raised on behalf of the petitioners in this case is that there has been a misjoinder of charges, and that, therefore, the whole trial is void. It is suggested that in any case the two charges against the same person could not be sustained; that a thief cannot also be a habitual receiver of stolen property; and that the receipt of stolen property in pursuance of a conspiracy of this nature cannot reasonably be called "habitual receiving" within the meaning of S. 413. The question whether the two charges can be sustained does not I think, properly arise in considering whether there has or has not been a misjoinder. It has been contended on behalf of the petitioners, and in my opinion the contention is perfectly correct, that in considering whether there has been a misjoinder of charges or not, we have to consider not what orders were passed by the Court, but what was the subject of the charge.

The point for consideration at present therefore, is whether a joinder of the charges, as framed, is or is not justified by the provisions of the Criminal Procedure Code. Under the provisions of S. 239, Criminal P. C., persons accused of different offences committed in the course of the same transaction may be charged and tried together. It has, of course, not been suggested that all the accused could not properly be tried together under the first charge, that of conspiracy, but it is urged that the joinder of this charge with the second charge under S. 413 is not justified, as the offences charged in the two charges are not offences committed in the course of the same transaction.

It appears that in the case, as originally presented before the Magistrate, it was suggested that Ba Chit received stolen property, not only in pursuance of the conspiracy charge in this case, but also from other traders who were not themselves parties to this particular conspiracy. In the words of the Government Advocate when addressing the Court before the framing of the charge:

"The wider conspiracy for which the other accused have been joined with the above in this case is a conspiracy to make use of Ba Chit as a habitual dealer in stolen property.—120-B, 413."

If the accused in the present case has been charged with being a habitual dealer in stolen property which came from these other accused, then it is no doubt that there has been a misjoinder. Can it, however, be said that this is the meaning of the charge? The other four accused, from whom, it was suggested, Ba Chit used to receive stolen timber, were not charged in this trial at all. The trial proceeded only against the persons alleged to have taken part in the special conspiracy charged.

It must be admitted that the second charge in this case is not happily worded, and it might be read to include a charge of receiving stolen timber outside this particular conspiracy. But I think that, if the wording of the charge be taken in conjunction with the circumstances under which it was framed and the whole conduct of the trial of the case, it is clear that it was never intended, and that it was never understood by any of the accused that it was intended that any habitual receiving should be considered except habitual receiving in the course of the present conspiracy.

The first charge sets forth that during the two years prior to 15th August 1928 the accused were parties to a criminal conspiracy to steal Government timber. The second charge sets forth that during the same two years the accused was a habitual receiver and dealer in Government timber, which he knew or believed to be stolen property. The charge should certainly have had added to it some such words as "in pursuance of the said conspiracy". But the wording of the two charges shows quite clearly that the periods covered by the two charges are the same, and at the time that the charges were framed the four other accused persons were struck off the list of accused in this case. This indicates very clearly that, although the charges were faultily framed, it was never the intention of the Magistrate in fact to consider timber received by the accused from these other four accused persons who were not subsequently charged; nor in the proceedings themselves have I been able to trace any sign of any attempt subsequent to the charge to prove such receipt, or anything to suggest that at any period after the charge the petitioners, or any of the other accused, really thought that this illegal receipt from persons not in the conspiracy was included in the charges. The position, therefore, seems to me to be this. The charges framed are unfortunately framed vaguely and read by themselves could undoubtedly be read to cover matters outside the transaction of conspiracy. But in actual fact they were never intended to cover such matters, and were never understood by any of the accused as covering such matters.

The question is whether in these circumstances there has been a misjoinder which vitiates the trial. The leading case on this point is the case of Subrahmaniam Ayyar v. Emperor (1). In that case an accused person had been tried in one trial charged with no less than forty-one acts extending over a period of two years. That was plainly in contravention of the S. 234, Criminal P. C., which provided that a person might only be tried for three offences of the same kind if committed within a period of twelve months. It was held that such a procedure was absolutely fatal to the validity of the trial and could not be cured by the provisions of S. 537, Criminal P. C. In the course of their judgment their Lordships of the Privy Council observed at p. 97 :

"Their Lordships are unable to regard the disobedience to an express provision as to a mode of trial as a mere irregularity. Such a phrase as irregularity is not appropriate to the illegality of trying an accused person for many different offences at the same time and those offences being spread over a longer period than by law could have been joined together in one indictment.

"The remedying of mere irregularities is familiar in most systems of jurisprudence but it would be an extraordinary extension of such a branch of administering the criminal law to say that when the Code positively enacts that such a trial as that which has taken place here shall not be permitted that this contravention of the Code comes within the description of error, omission, or irregularity."

It has been contended before me that on the face of this authority I am bound to hold that the trial in the present case is bad and that the defect cannot be cured irrespective of any question as to whether the accused have or have not been prejudiced. I have also been referred to various later rulings of the Indian High Courts in which this decision of the Privy Council has been followed. I do not think, however, that it is necessary to refer to any of these cases in detail, as none of them are really analogous to the present case. There can be no doubt whatever that had the accused in this case been in fact tried for habitually receiving stolen timber outside the conspiracy, I should have no option but to hold that the trial was bad and must be set aside as void. In such circumstances, in the words of their Lordships of the Privy Council, there is a positive enactment that such a trial should not be permitted. But in my view of the case, there was not in fact any such trial here. The charges were not drafted as carefully as they should have been, and, if read by themselves, might have been held to include charges that could not legally be joined with the conspiracy charge. But the error here was one of form and not of substance. The joint trial of the charges of receiving from outside sources and being a conspirator was not a reality. There was in fact no such joint charge, only the appearance of one, and the circumstances are entirely different from those dealt with in Subrahmania Ayyar's case (1). In that case there can be no question that there actually had been a trial together of 41 acts, only three of which could have been legally joined together. The misjoinder was quite clearly one of substance as well as of form.

In the present case the trial which has actually taken place is the trial under charges of conspiracy and of receiving stolen property in pursuance of that conspiracy. There has not in fact been any trial which the Code has positively forbidden. There has merely been an error in the wording of the charge, which has in fact affected nobody.

In my opinion the circumstances of this case are entirely different from the circumstances of Subrahmania Ayyar's case (1), and the case is one where the error can be cured by the provisions of S. 225, Criminal P. C. There was, in my opinion, no joint trial of two offences which could not be tried together. There was merely an error of the particulars required to be stated in the second charge—an error which can be cured by S. 225. I do not understand it to be seriously suggested that the petitioners have in fact been prejudiced by this error. My finding on this point, therefore, is that there has been no such misjoinder of charges as necessitates by itself the setting aside of the proceeding of the trial Court.

The next point which has been raised on behalf of the petitioners is, to my mind, one of greater difficulty. After the examination of some of the prosecution witnesses, but before the framing of the charges, the accused were examined generally on the case and they were further examined later after other prosecution witnesses had been examined. They were questioned as to the oral evidence against them. Their convictions, however, are based chiefly not on the oral but on the documentary evidence.

There are a very large number of documents which have been relied on by the prosecution. They consist in part of letters of the alleged conspirators and in part of entries in diaries of the accused. The Courts below have held chiefly from general deductions drawn from these documents that the petitioners were parties to the criminal conspiracy; but so far as these documents were concerned, the only questions put to Maung Ba Chit were as to the documents having been seized in his possession and as to certain documents being in his handwriting and in the handwriting of his wife. His attention in his examination was not drawn to the contents of any of the documents which were held to be incriminatory; nor was he asked for any explanation in any single case. The same remarks generally apply to Maung Naw.

Section 342, Criminal P.C., lays down that for the purpose of enabling the accused to explain any circumstances appearing in the evidence against him, the Court shall question him generally on the case after the witnesses for the prosecution have been examined and before he is called on for his defence. I held in the case of Nga Hla U v. Emperor (2), that a failure on the part of the Court further to examine an accused person after two of the prosecution witnesses had been recalled for further cross-examination, after the charge had been framed, did not necessarily vitiate the whole trial if the accused person was not in any way prejudiced thereby. I see no reason to change the view I took in that case, a view of which Carr, J., has expressed a general agreement in the case of K. M. Subbaya Naidu v. Emperor (3). But the question that arises in this case is a very different one, and the contention is that the petitioners have in fact been very seriously prejudiced by the failure on the part of the Magistrate.

Different views have been taken as to the exact meaning of this section. In the case of Emperor v. Alimuddin Naskar (4), it was held by Mukerji, J., that the section requires the Court to put to the accused the salient facts and circumstances of the case in a succinct form, and to ask him if he has any explanation thereof to offer. Newbould, J., took a different view. He held that a formal question in general terms, which gives the accused an opportunity of making a statement of his defence with his own lips is a sufficient compliance with the mandatory provisions of S. 342, Criminal P. C., since it enables the accused to explain any circumstances appearing in the evidence against him.

In the case of Maung Hman v. Emperor (5), May Oung, J., took substantially the same view as Mukerji, J. He remarked as follows:

"The object of the section is to enable the accused to explain each and every circumstance appearing in evidence against him. A Judge or Magistrate should note every point which he thinks he will have to put into the scale against the accused and then question him on each point. Otherwise it is impossible for the accused to know what is in the Court's mind. Several points may be made by the prosecution; some of these the Court considers good others are regarded as practically worthless. But the accused is not afforded any reasonable opportunity of clearing up the case by such a question as: 'What have you to say?' The specific point or points which weigh against him must be mentioned; for if this is not done, he cannot reasonably be expected to be able to explain it or them."

With these remarks I generally agree. The object of the examination of the accused is clearly to enable him to explain anything appearing in evidence against him. It is impossible to lay down any hard and fast rule as to what questions should be put in any particular case nor would the failure to put certain vital questions vitiate a trial if the accused were in no sense prejudiced by that failure. But in a complicated case like the present I think it would be an entirely insufficient compliance with the provisions of the section to put a general question asking the accused what he had to say in explanation of the evidence against him.

A very large number of the passages in the documents on which the prosecution relies are in themselves obscure and capable of more than one explanation; and, where the prosecution is mainly based on the contents of such documents then, it seems to me of special importance that the accused should be asked specifically as to what their explanation of the doubtful passages are. I do not suggest that they have to be questioned about every single one of the documents separately, or that no document could be used against them as to which a specific question had not been put. But in order to comply with the spirit of the provisions of this section, there should at least in my opinion have been some examination of the accused as to the contents of some of the more important documents.

The question for consideration, therefore, is whether the accused can be said to have been prejudiced by the failure to put these questions, and whether, in the absence of such questions, it is possible to uphold the convictions. I find it impossible to answer this question satisfactorily without considering in some detail the documents themselves and what they can be held to have proved. But before considering the contents of the documents, it seems to me necessary to have some clear idea of what the offences charged are and what it is necessary for the prosecution to prove to establish those charges.

The main charge against the petitioners is that they conspired together to commit theft of timber with a number of other persons. In the first place they are not charged with any isolated act of theft. They are charged with widespread conspiracy to commit theft extending over a period of two years ; and in the second place the conspiracy they are charged with is one of committing theft. A number of the documents produced on behalf of the prosecution indicate that the accused, Ba Chit, has been bribing various forest subordinates and clerks, some of whom were accused in the trial Court. But reprehensible though the wholesale bribery may be, bribery is not theft, and the evidence as to bribery is only relevant in this case so far as it supports other evidence to show the existence of the conspiracy to commit theft. The phrase "illicit felling" has been constantly used in connexion with this case. It is a somewhat unfortunate phrase to use in connexion with so artificial a charge as the charge of conspiracy to commit theft. •

As I understand the prosecution case it mainly is that Ba Chit, through his agents, has during the last two years been deliberately cutting down green Pyinkado trees, which were not covered by the terms of the licences and permits held by him. The licences and permits he holds are of three kinds—namely, (i) Legwinthit, or permission to fell timber on revenue paying land ; (ii) Gaikthit, or permission to fell any standing Pyinkado within seventy-five feet of a kyaung ; and (iii) Aule-natthat or a license to cut in Government Forests what are known as "Aule-natthat" trees. There is no official definition of the word Aule-nat that, but it has been held to mean standing trees which have died and trees which have fallen naturally.

The suggestion for the prosecution is that under cover of this Aule-natthat licence, Ba Chit, through his agents, has in fact been cutting down growing Pyinkado trees on a large scale. There are various other Forest offences and fraudulent practices which Ba Chit is alleged to have committed or it is alleged the documents indicate, have been committed on his behalf and with his connivance. The lower Courts have held that the cutting of green Pyinkado trees not covered by a licence is necessarily theft. I agree that if the cutting on a large scale has been proved, then most of the necessary ingredients of theft are clearly present. There has been an intention to take property dishonestly out of the possession of Government and there has been a movement in order to such taking. The only point which raises difficulty in this respect is whether it can be held that the dishonest intention was to take the property without the consent of the person in possession. It would appear that if a green Pyinkado has been cut in most cases it has not been taken down the Moulmein before the licensee has paid the revenue due to Government thereon.

The procedure to be followed before timber extracted by private persons can be at the disposal of the person extracting it is described by Mr. Ricketts the Divisional Forest Officer. The trees when felled are dragged to a place previously agreed upon and fixed by the Forest Department Officers for measurement. The property hammer mark must be affixed to the stumps and the logs by the permit-holder or his agent within 24 hours of the felling. The Forest Department measures the timber either at the stump or at the place fixed that is the bank of the nearest floating stream. The logs are then measured by the revenue marker who is either the Range Officer or some one specially deputed by the Divisional Forest Officer. The marker then records the measurement in the regulation book giving the serial number of the logs measured. A copy of the measurement is then sent to the head office at Moulmein. There it is checked and if royalty has not been prepaid a chalan is prepared and sent to the licensee. If the royalty has been prepaid the total amount is then entered in the register and debited against the permits. On the chalan royalty is paid in Moulmein and debited in the register likewise. After that a pass order is issued from the head office to the revenue marker and a copy of the pass order is supplied to the licensee. The revenue marker is instructed by the pass order to put the akauk or revenue paid mark on the timber and to issue bills and removal passes. The bill issued is on a printed form on which the revenue marker enters details of the logs under measurement and also the impression of his akauk. This bill is given to the representative of the owner in the forest and is apparently in the nature of a title deed to the timber. At the same time a removal pass is issued. Except on such a pass no timber can be removed. The result of all this procedure is that to all intents and purposes the timber remains in the possession of Government until the bill and the removal pass are issued. Pyinkado is then made up into rafts and floated downstream. Before reaching Moulmain it has to pass and be checked at the revenue station at either Ngante or Htake.

It has been urged on behalf of the petitioners that even though timber were originally cut and removed with a dishonest intention it remains in the possession of Government until the extractor obtains the removal pass and the bill connected with it, and that it cannot, therefore, be said to have been removed out of the possession of Government without Government's consent. I think it must be conceded that in such circumstances the consent of Government or its representative, has been obtained to the removal of the timber.

In the case of Reg v. Hanmanta (6), the accused had cut down wood which had been removed to a Government Depot. It was subsequently taken away by the accused from the Government Depot with the consent of a Forest Inspector but without paying any Government dues. The Timber was held to have been in the possession of this Inspector on account of the Government. But it was held that the timber was not removed with the consent of Government as the Inspector was not authorized to give consent and that was clearly known to the accused person.

The circumstances of this case are very different. Here the consent was given by the person clearly authorized to give it after the payment of the full duty. I think, however, that presuming that there was a deliberate intention from the very first to obtain timber which the accused knew he had no right whatsoever to fell the offence would be theft on the ground that the consent given to the removal by Government was a consent based on a misconception of fact.

Section 90, I. P. C. lays down :

"A consent is not such a consent as is intended by any section of this Code, if the consent is given by a person . . . under a misconception of fact and if the person doing the act knows, or has reason to believe, that the consent was given in consequence of such . . . misconception."

To what extent this section applies to the provisions of S. 378, I. P. C., I find it very difficult to decide. If it means that any misrepresentation of fact inducing a consent would result in that consent not being a consent within the meaning of S. 378, then it is difficult to see what distinction can be drawn between the offence of theft and claiming property dishonestly by means of cheating.

I have been unable to find any authority on this point. It seems to me, however, that in the circumstances just described it must be held that the consent has been given under a misconception of fact. Had the responsible officer who agreed to accept the revenue and to the issue of the removal pass and the bill of title been aware that the timber in question was timber which the licensee had no right whatsoever to fell, there can be no doubt that the consent to the removal would never have been given. Consent was given on the understanding that the timber to be removed was timber covered by a license. If in fact it was timber not covered by a license at all there was a misconception as to the property for which consent was given. I think, therefore, that in such a case it must be held that there was no such consent as is meant by S. 378, I. P. C., and that in such circumstances the offence of theft was completed.

There are other respects in which some of the documents suggest that offences may have been committed. According to Mr. Ricketts one way in which Government might be defrauded would be by passing down timber on which the akauk mark had never been placed and on which revenue had never been paid, and escaping the attention of the revenue depot at Ngante either by concealing the timber or by bribing those in charge of the revenue stations. I think it is clear that timber taken in this way would be obtained by theft. It is quite clear that the person who took the timber out must have known that any forest subordinate who gave a consent thereto had no authority to give such consent.

Another method in which it has been suggested that Government may be defrauded is by influencing the officer deputed to measure the log and having short measurement returns sent to headquarters, the result being a defrauding of Government revenue. I do not think this method of fraud necessarily involves theft. If the timber was timber covered by the licenses it cannot be held that there was any dishonest intention when the timber was cut and moved to the river bank. After that, the timber remained in the possession of Government until it was handed over to the licensee or his agent with the bill of title. Possession was then made over to the licensee or his agent and it was after possession and title had been made over to him that any moving which could be called dishonest took place. The offence probably amounted to an offence of cheating, but that is not the offence the accused are charged with conspiring to commit nor is property obtained by means of cheating stolen property within the meaning of S. 413.

Various other offences punishable under the Forest Act such as the failure to put a property mark on the stump after felling a tree clearly would not amount to theft. The two petitioner may have conspired together and with others to bribe forest officers and to defraud Government in various ways but their convictions in this case cannot be upheld unless it has been shown that they entered into a general conspiracy to commit theft and were habitual receivers of stolen property, or abetted the habitual receiving of stolen property. And in reading the documents we have to consider to what extent they implicate the accused in these particular offences. The Magistrate at p. 12 and the following pages of his judgment has detailed in chronological order what he considers the principal documents for the prosecution case. The first ten extracts dealt with by him it is not necessary here to discuss. They merely indicate that bribes were being paid on a large scale to dishonest clerks and subordinates, but do not indicate for what purpose they were being paid. We have then Ba Chit's diary (Ex. 3-B) of date 7th February 1927. This diary contains the entry :

"What arrangement has been made to give tips to the rangers at Chaung Nakwa to tell them not to have any fear if the logs are under size."

This entry does suggest collaboration with the rangers, but its exact meaning is obscure. It is possibly a suggestion that under-measurement should be shown. If so, according to the view I have taken it would not involve theft. Before using an obscure reference of this sort, it is clear that Ba Chit's explanation should have been obtained.

The next document is a letter (Ex. R.) dated 3rd March 1927. This is a letter from Si Khaing to Ba Chit and appears to suggest that the rangers are being persuaded to under-measure timber. On 8th of April, Maung Naw wrote to Ba Chit Ex. 2. (v) This refers to the cutting down of Kyungut of teak poles and suggests that Ba Chit should use his influence with Ye Gyan. The prosecution do not allege that they have proved theft with regard to Kyungut or teak poles and this document does seem to me to be of much value.

In the diary of Maung Naw on 15th April (Ex. 5 F) there is a joking reference to the cutting of 300 standing green teak trees. The next day Maung Naw wrote the letter (Ex. 3 B) to Ba Chit, in which he said that Maung Kin had taxed him with getting his workmen to fell 300 Kyunguts and had jokingly said that he would prosecute. The allusion is too obscure for any satisfactory deduction to be made from it, especially when Maung Naw has not been asked to explain it.

On 27th April there is an entry in Maung Naw's pocket diary (Ex. 5 F C). In that Maung Naw says that he was accused by Tun Byu of cutting green teak trees. He denied it, but when they accompanied the forester to inspect the stumps, he found the information was not without foundation, and had to persuade the forester to overlook the matter. I do not think it is a fair reading of this entry that Maung Naw had been privy to the felling of the green teak trees. All that it suggests is that that he did his best afterwards to hush the matter up and save Ba Chit's property mark.

Two days later, on 29th April, Maung Naw wrote to Ba Chit the letter (Ex. 3 A). The prosecution has placed special reliance upon the letter. In this letter, Maung Naw states

"U Si Khaing has in his possession over 400 aule natthat standing trees or logs. They are not genuine aule natthat but converted ones."

He then goes on to state that Tun Byu had made an inspection of stumps accompanied by Maung Naw and Si Khaing. Maung Naw suggests that Ba Chit shall call Tun Byu and give him about 100. He adds that U Si Khaing said that he might be responsible for the money given to Tun Byu and that Sit Khaing intended to work the said timber during the rains. This certainly suggests that Maung Naw and Ba Chit are attempting to save Si Khaing from the consequences of his felling Pyinkadoes outside the terms and limits of the licenses and permits. The last part of the extract however might suggest that Sit Khaing himself is shouldering the responsibility and undertaking to work the timber. It does not seem to me necessarily by itself to show that Ba Chit and Maung Naw were taking over the timber themselves and the Court certainly would not be justified in giving it that interpretation without first hearing what Maung Naw or Ba Chit had to say in explanation. (His Lordship then referred to other letters dated 1st of May, 9th May, 17th June, 6th, 13th, 20th and 30th of September, 3rd and 15th of the November and proceeded.) On 28th April Maung Naw wrote a letter (Ex. C) to U Ba Chit and some strens has been laid on this letter. He speaks about the inspection by the Divisional Forest Officer. He says that the Divisional Forest Officers has not yet discovered a single log of theirs as they have cut them down elsewhere. He says that he has suspended dragging of logs. The letter does suggest a guilty conscience, but Maung Naw should certainly have been asked to explain it before any inference could be drawn against him. Prior to this, on 18th March Po Thein had written a letter (Ex N) to Ba Chit. In it he says that his duty is to use his brain to get timber in addition to that extracted under the permit. It is of course possible to obtain timber other than that covered by Ba Chit's permit in other ways than by theft.

On 28th April Maung Naw wrote Ex. B to Ba Chit. In this letter he says that they have cut their rafts down to cause the raft to sink in the middle of the Chaung apparently because they can get no one to prepare the rafts. He also says that he has sunk 40 logs of Po Thein, and nearly 100 of his own. The next letter written by Maung Naw to Ba Chit is dated 12th May (Ex 3). He talks of Sit Khaing's difficulties, but does not say anything very specially relevant to this case. The next letter (Ex. F) dated 13th May is more important. Maung Naw refers to the Divisional Forest Officer's inspection and to the Divisional Forest Officer's diving for logs. He says that witnesses have been arranged to make Sit Khaing responsible for the logs discovered. He also refers to villagers being bribed, apparently not to help the Divisional Forest Officer. This seems to be a letter which Maung Naw should have been asked to explain. It may suggest a guilty conscience and it may suggest the adoption of various dishonest means, but it does not necessarily suggest theft.

I have referred I think now to most of the documents on which the prosecution principally rely as proving the conspiracy to commit theft. There is oral evidence as well and my attention has been specially drawn to some of it by the learned Government Advocate. Mr. Rickett's evidence shows that green Pyinkado was cut down on a large scale, but admittedly there were a large number of different traders working in the forests concerned and this by itself does not prove anything against Maung Naw or Ba Chit. As regards Ba Chit, Mr. Rickett gives no definite evidence. In fact he says as far as the payment of royalty demanded is concerned, there had been no default and Ba Chit has a clean sheet. Sit Khaing says definitely that he was encouraged to cut green Pyinkado by Ba Chit. On his own showing, Sit Khaing is an accomplice and he is an accomplice giving evidence without having been made an approver and therefore liable to prosecution at any time. His evidence has rightly been accepted with caution by the lower Courts and his statement that he was encouraged to cut green Pyinkado by Ba Chit is obviously by itself of little value. On this point he has no corroboration on whatsoever. Ba Chit's son Tun Sein and his coolies Maung Pein and Po Chein say that Maung Naw pointed out what trees were to be felled. This evidence would be of value against Maung Naw if it could be believed, but in fact all these witnesses would seem to be more or less accomplices and the lower Courts have not relied on their evidence. Sein Ban speaks of forming rafts in which out of 1,100 logs some 600 were green and says Maung Naw was present. But under his Gaikthit and Legwinthit permits, Ba Chit was entitled to extract green timber. Pan U says that he felled green timber under Sit Khaing's orders, but does not implicate Ba Chit or Maung Naw. The Sessions Judge has treated, and in my opinion rightly treated, the evidence of Sit Khaing, Tun Sein, Maung Pein and Po Chein as untrustworthy. The oral evidence by itself obviously is of little value for the purpose of establishing the guilt of the accused. That being so, it seems to me to be of the highest importance that before using the documents against the two petitioners in the way they have been used, some explanation should have been obtained from them as to their contents. On this point of the failure to examine the accused about the document, the learned Sessions Judge has remarked:

"It is contended that there ought to have been a distinct and separate question in respect of each document, some what in the following form."

You see the Ex. 10Z. According to this, Maung Naw says that he sent you 130 stolen logs. Is there anything that you wish to explain in connexion with this? If it was only in connexion with such documents that there had been failure to put questions, there would be a great deal to be said for the view that the failure to put such questions was not of much importance. But none of the important documents in this case contained any definite statement that stolen logs had been sent. The allusions in the letters are nothing like so definite as this. They are most of them obscurely worded and can only be interpreted as referring to stolen timber if read with other evidence in the case. I have specially indicated some of the documents in which I think questions ought to have been put. It is quite true that the numerous entries about payments of illegal gratification do suggest that bribery has been going on on a very large scale and there are indications that as a result of this bribery Ba Chit has had considerable influence with forest subordinates. There are, however, an enormous number of ways in which such influence could be used without any question of theft being involved. Admittedly it has not been proved that any particular timber has been taken by Ba Chit without payment of revenue and it is clear that the prosecution are not able to prove any specific instance of theft or of receipt of stolen property. Had they been able to do so there would certainly have been a charge of that particular offence. The Courts have been asked as a result chiefly of a mass of documentary evidence to infer that there has been a conspiracy between Ba Chit and others to commit theft. The evidence is in fact largely circumstantial and depends on the meaning of certain documents. The case seems to me to be one in which the remarks of Jenkins, C. J., in the case of Barindra Kumar Ghose v. Emperor (7) are particularly apposite. At p. 508 the learned Chief Justice remarks:

"There is always the danger in a case like the present that conjecture or suspicion may take the place of legal proof, and, therefore it is right to recall the warning addressed by Mr. Baron Alderson to the jury in Reg v. Hoyle (8)."

Where he said:

"The mind was apt to take pleasure in adapting circumstances to one another, and even in straining them a little, if need be to force them to form parts of one connected whole, and the more ingenious the mind of the individual, the more likely was it considering such matters, to overreach and mislead itself, to supply some little link that is wanting, to take for granted some fact consistent with its previous theories and necessary to render them complete."

I think it can be said that not one of the documents relied on by the prosecution in itself clearly convicts either Maung Naw or Ba Chit of an intention of committing theft. The contention would be that the accumulated effect of all these documents read together leads to a fair presumption that they had entered into a definite conspiracy for this purpose. Before reaching such a conclusion, it seems to me specially necessary to bear in mind Mr. Baron Alderson's observations and that it would be an exceedingly dangerous thing to draw an inference as to any such conspiracy without having asked either of the two petitioners to explain the contents of any single one of the documents that have been used. In an ordinary case dependent chiefly on oral evidence, an accused person would from the very nature of things have a very clear idea of what evidence was likely to be considered of importance against him by the Court. In such a case a failure to examine him properly might not be of very great importance. In a case such as the present, it seems to me impossible for the accused to know by the light of nature exactly what particular passages from the mass of documents produced are considered by the prosecution or by the Court as requiring an explanation.

It was, therefore, of far more importance that they should have been asked what their explanation of the documents was than in any ordinary case where the evidence was mainly oral. Without their having been so questioned, I find it impossible to hold that they have had a really fair trial or that a finding can justly be come to that they were guilty of a conspiracy to commit theft or of habitually receiving stolen property. It might be possible to send the case back to the trial Court for the two petitioners to be examined further now, but that course would obviously be unsatisfactory. An examination now would be a poor substitute for an examination which should have taken place nine or ten months ago and would involve in all probability the taking of a large amount of fresh evidence. The proceedings are already sufficiently complicated and if made more so would become well nigh unintelligible. It is possible also to order a new trial, but that to my mind is in the circumstances unjustified. I have indicated that I am not at present satisfied as to the exact meaning of the principal document relied on by the prosecution. The petitioners have already undergone a trial of enormous length and have served a term of over two and a half months' imprisonment. The case is by no means such a clear one that it can besaid with any confidence that a conviction after a new trial on the charges framed would be likely. I am of opinion that the interests of justice would not be served by the ordering of a new trial. I set aside the convictions of the two petitioners, and direct that they be acquitted and released so far as this case is concerned.

MYA BU AND BROWN, JJ.

Government Advocate of Burma—Applicant.

v.

Saya Sein—Respondent.

Criminal Misc. Appln. No. 54 of 1929,
Decided on 25th October 1929.

(a) Contempt—Article in newspaper commenting on pending proceedings is contempt—But such contempt to be punishable must interfere with due administration of justice.

It is contempt to publish an article in a newspaper commenting on the proceedings of a pending criminal prosecution or civil action. But the summary jurisdiction possessed by a High Court to punish for contempt ought only to be exercised when it is probable that the publication will substantially interfere with the due administration of justice: 41 Cal. 173; McLeod v. St. Aubyn, (1899) A. C. 549; Plating Co. v. Farquharson, (1881) 17 Ch. D. 49, Rel. on. [P 414 C 1]

(b) Contempt—Article in newspaper suggesting that on account of youth of Judge he is unlikely to differ from decision of lower Court — It is attack on his competency as Judge and amounts to contempt.

Any act done or writing published calculated to bring a Court or a Judge of the Court into contempt or to lower his authority is a contempt of Court. But if reasonable argument or expostulation is offered against any judicial act as contrary to law or the public good, that cannot be regarded as contempt.

Where an article does not confine itself to the justice of the decision but also suggests that the Judge on account of his youth is unlikely to differ from the decision of a lower Court, it is an attack on the competency of the Judge and amounts to contempt: In the matter of a Special Reference from the Bahama Islands, (1893) A. C. 138, Dist. [P 415 C 1]

Government Advocate—for Applicant.

Ba Han—for Respondent.

Judgment.—On the motion of the Government Advocate, the respondent Saya Sein, has been called on to show cause why he should not be punished for contempt of Court. The respondent is the printer and publisher of a paper known as "The Kesara" newspaper at Moulmein. A case had been tried in the Court of the Special Power Magistrate, Moulmein, against one U Ba Chit and a number of others. In the trial Court all the accused who had been charged were convicted. They all appealed to the Sessions Court and that Court whilst setting aside the convictions of the other appellants, confirmed the convictions of Ba Chit and Maung Naw.* The complaint is with reference to an article published in "the kesara" newspaper on 6th August 1929, after the Sessions Judge had passed orders. At the time of the writing of the article, an application in revision had been filed in this Court and the hearing of that application was then pending. It is claimed that the respondent is guilty of contempt for two reasons: firstly that in the article in question he had commented on a matter which was sub-judice and secondly that the article in itself was one that was likely to bring the Judge and the Court into contempt.

The article sets forth briefly the orders passed by the Sessions Judge and then goes on to say:

*[This matter came up before the High Court and appears on p. 402 of this issue—Ed.]

"In view of the fact that the said case implicated a big timber merchant of the non-Burmese community, it has not only exercised the public mind much and aroused special interest and discussion but the Court room was also crowded by spectators, who came to watch the proceedings during the hearing of the case, both before the lower Court and the Sessions Court. However an appeal having been preferred in the Sessions Court, directly the lower Court had passed its judgment and sentence, we had thought that justice would prevail and have waited quietly without writing anything regarding the lower Court's judgment. Now upon a consideration of the Sessions Judge's judgment as we do not feel that justice has been done, we shall, in duty bound have to write and express our comment and criticism."

The article then proceeds to comment on the case. It suggests that if the facts are proved the conviction should have been under the Forest Act and not under the Indian Penal Code. It then goes on to say:

"Here in U Ba Chit's case he has been convicted not under the Forest Act which is applicable but under S. 413, I. P. C., and awarded a sentence of imprisonment for the very first offence and therefore we are very sorry. Pondering over this state of affairs, in the light of the saying of the ancients (lit), "living not for life's sake but for honour" every thoughtful person will be able to gauge the extent of grief and shame to which U Ba Chit a respectable resident who has won the trust and confidence of the people and who has acted as one of their Municipal Commissioners, Pagoda trustees, and executive members of the local religious and social associations has been subjected. Mr. Wright, the Sessions Judge who heard U Ba Chit's appeal is yet a youth of little experience, and it must be said that his decision is not different from that of the lower Court in the same way as the water of a well so to speak is not different from that of a pond. In connexion with youthful Sessions Judges, Williams, J., of the Calcutta High Court has recently made a definite statement in his judgment in a case heard by him thus:—"Owing to the practice peculiarly in vogue throughout India of investing young judges of little legal experience in the Districts with full powers to pass sentences of death a great responsibility had devolved upon the High Court." In accordance with the dictum thus expressed as on account of the decision of a youthful Sessions Judge, U Ba Chit has been subjected to a great shame as much as to feel like almost dying of it, and as such he deserves a very great sympathy and so we have to write this by way of explanation."

The respondent does not deny publication of this article. He expresses his willingness to tender an apology if we should think that the article did amount to contempt. But it is contended that, in fact there has been no contempt of Court which would justify this Court in taking action. In Halsbury's Laws of England Vol. 7, para. 614, it is laid down that it is contempt to publish an article in a newspaper commenting on the proceedings of a pending criminal prosecution or civil action.

When the comments were published in the present case, there were proceedings pending in this Court. We understand the respondent to claim that he was unaware of that fact when he wrote the article. But he must have known that in such cases revision proceedings were bound to follow and we do not consider that on this ground alone he can be held not to have been guilty of contempt. But it has been constantly laid down that the summary jurisdiction possessed by a High Court to punish for contempt on the ground that an article was published during the pendency of criminal proceedings ought only to be exercised when it is probable that the publication will substantially interfere with the due administration of justice.

In the case of the Legal Remembrancer v. Motilal Ghose (1), the learned Sir Lawrence Jenkins, C. J., observes at p. 221 :

"It is not enough that there should be a technical contempt of Court; it must be shown that it was probable that the publication would subsequently interfere with the due administration of justice Thus we find Lord Morris in delivering the judgment of the Privy Council in McLeod v. St Aubyn (2) describing committal for contempt of Court as a weapon to be used sparingly and always with reference to the interests of the administration of justice. This is an authority that must command our respect. But it does not stand alone. In Plating Co. v. Farquharson (3) Jessel M. R. after saying that the practice of making their motions against innocent people ought to be discouraged as far as possible, added, 'they lead to a great waste of time and to considerable amount of costs, and unless the Court is satisfied that the publication is a contempt which interferes with the course of justice, of course, the Court ought not to interfere. while James, L. J. said of the motion made against the proprietors of the newspaper who inserted an advertisement in the ordinary course of business and that it seemed to him to be idle and extravagant and a thing to be strongly discouraged and later he says "I think these motions are contempt of Court in themselves, because they tend to waste the public time."

We do not think it necessary to labour this point as we do not understand the correctness of the principle to be contested. Can it then reasonably be said that the publication of the present article was at all likely to interfere with the due administration of justice because it was published during the pendency of the revision proceedings in this Court? We cannot see how it is possible to hold that there was any such probability. We do not think it would be contended that this Court is likely to be influenced by a suggestion that because a certain act may amount to an offence under the Forest Act, therefore it should not also be punished under the Indian Penal Code. There is no question of any witnesses, jurors or assessors being influenced. Revisional matters are dealt with by a Judge alone, and for the most part are concerned with questions of law.

The article does not in itself suggest that the writer had any thought of proceedings that must follow in revision. He definitely states that he reserved his comment until the trial in the Sessions Court was over, and we see no reason to suppose that he published the article with any idea that anything he said would be likely to have any effect on the revisional proceedings. That of course would not save him, if, in fact, the article was likely to have such an effect. But in our opinion, there is no probability whatsoever that the publication would substantially interfere with the due consideration of the case in revision before this Court. We do not wish to be understood as approving of the making of comments on pending judicial proceedings, such comments are clearly always severally to be depreciated. But even if the comments in this case amounted to a technical contempt on the ground that they were made whilst the case was sub judice, we think that the authorities are clear that the case is not one in which on this ground the Court would be justified in exercising its summary powers.

There remains, however, for consideration the other point which has been raised. It is contended that the attack in the report made on the Judge itself amounts to contempt of Court. It has been laid down that any act done or writing published which is calculated to bring a Court or a Judge into contempt, or, to lower his authority, or to interfere with the due course of justice, or the lawful process of the Court is a contempt of Court. This principle was definitely enunciated in the case of The Queen v. Gray (4). At p. 40 of the report Lord Russell, C. J., states :

"Any act done or writing published calculated to bring a Court or Judge of the Court into contempt or to lower his authority is a contempt of Court. That description of that class of contempt is to be taken subject to one and an important qualification. Judges and Courts are alike open to criticism and if reasonable argument or expostulation is offered against any judicial act as contrary to law or the public good, no Court could or would treat that as contempt of Court. The law ought not to be astute in such cases to construe adversely what under such circumstances and with such an object is published ; but it is to be remembered that in this matter the liability of the press is no greater and no less than the liability of every subject of the queen."

If the article complained of had confined itself to fair criticism of the justice of the decision of the Sessions Court, then no question of contempt on this ground would arise. But the article goes farther than this. It does not confine itself to the justice of the decision, but definitely attacks also the competency of the Judge who tried the case. It suggests that the Judge on account of his youth, was unlikely to differ from the decision of the lower Court and finally states:

"On account of the decision of a youthful Sessions Judge U Ba Chit has been subjected to a great shame as much as to feel like almost dying of it, and as such he deserves a very great sympathy."

There is, it is true no suggestion whatsoever against the honesty or character of the Judge. But it seems to us inevitable that the publication of such remarks in a public newspaper must tend to bring the Court and the Judge who heard the appeal into contempt.

We have been referred on behalf of the respondent to the case of In the matter of a Special Reference from the Bahama Islands (5). In that case the Chief Justice of the Bahama Islands was attacked in a letter published in a newspaper. It was held that the letter in question though it might have been made the subject of proceedings for libel, was not in the circumstances calculated to obstruct or interfere with the course of justice or the due admininistration of the law. and, therefore, did not constitute a contempt of Court. It seems to us, however, that that case can be clearly distinguished from the present case. There was in that case no criticism of the Judge's action in the trial of any case. It was rather a personal attack on the Chief Justice than a direct attack on his administration of justice. In the present case there is quite clearly an attack on the Judge not in his personal and private capacity but in his capacity as a Judge in the conduct of a particular case. The comments are to the effect that there has been a failure of justice owing to the incompetence of the Court, and we cannot but look upon such comments as being likely to bring the Court into contempt, and if unchecked, ultimately to interfere with the course of justice or the due administration of the law. We are, therefore, of opinion that the publication of the article in question did amount to a contempt of Court, and we are bound to protect Subordinate Courts from such attacks.

The respondent did not at once, when called upon to show cause, tender an unconditional apology, but in the complaint as filed before us, what was chiefly insisted on was that the publication of the article amounted to a contempt, because it took place during the pendency of the revision proceedings in this Court. On this ground we have held that no case has been made out for us to take action, and we must, therefore, hold that on the main ground taken in the application the respondent was justified in raising the objection he did.

We understand that he is ready now to tender an apology to the Court. Bearing in mind the fact that there is no suggestion made against the integrity or personal character of the Judge in the article complained of, and that cases of this kind are fortunately rare in this province, we allow the respondent an opportunity of tendering an apology before passing sentence upon him.

On the judgment having been read over the respondent states that he regrets that the remarks appearing in the article complained of were derogatory and in contempt of the Court of Sessions and the Judge of that Court, and that he tenders an unconditional apology, and he undertakes to be careful not to offend in a similar manner again. In all the circumstances of the case, we consider that the apology may properly be accepted. We accept the apology and discharge the respondent. Considering that the main ground on which the petition was made has failed, we make no order for costs of this application. Dr. Ba Han for the respondent, undertakes that the fact of an unqualified apology having been made will be published in the respondent's newspaper.

Judgment.—In this case one Hesa Ismail filed a complaint charging one Ayakaranam with an offence under S. 206, I. P. C. and the petitioners with an offence under S. 207. It was alleged that the first named had made and the petitioners had accepted a fraudulent transfer of the goods of the first named in order to prevent their seizure under a decree which was likely to be passed in a civil suit in favour of the petitioner. No civil suit had in fact been filed, and it appears that none has been filed even yet. Indeed on the day before he filed the complaint the complainant had filed an application for the adjudication of Ayakaranam as insolvent. It has been urged that in view of this last fact the prosecution could not be launched by virtue of S. 195, Criminal P. C. I am inclined to think that this is correct, but will not go further into the point, because the Magistrate held that the pendency of a civil suit was a condition precedent to the commission of the offence alleged to have been committed. On that ground he discharged the petitioners and their co-accused.

On an application in revision the District Magistrate took a different view and ordered a further inquiry into the case. This is an application for revision of the District Magistrate's order. Neither Magistrate has given any authority for the view taken by him; no authority on either side has been cited before me, and I have not been able to find any similar reported case. The sections provide for the punishment of fraudulent transferors and transferees who have made or accepted the transfer :

"intending thereby to prevent that property from being taken into execution of a decree or order which has been made, or which he knows to be likely to be made, by a Court of justice in a civil suit."

In my opinion those words refer to a civil suit which is actually pending before a Court. It is, of course, possible to argue that if the complainant had a good actionable claim against the transferor and had threatened to file a suit, the transferor must have known that if the complainant did file a suit he would be likely to obtain a decree, and that the wording of the section is wide enough to cover this. But reading the section as a whole I think that this is too wide a meaning to attribute to its words and that they can be held to refer only to a suit actually in existence. I therefore set aside the order of the District Magistrate directing a further inquiry and restore the order of the Second Additional Magistrate of Myingyan discharging the accused in his Criminal Regular Trial No. 35 of 1929. This order applies to the accused Ayakaranam as well as to the petitioners.

Criminal Revn. No. 21 of 1929, Decided on 2nd August 1929, from order of Sess. Judge, Cuttack, D/- 4th June 1929.

(a) Criminal P. C., S. 439 — Revision — Finding of facts can be interfered within revision if not based on positive evidence but on inferences.

Although a finding of fact is not usually interfered with in revision, where the finding is not based on any positive evidence but upon inferences drawn from certain circumstances arising from evidence and all materials on which the finding is based are set forth in the judgments of the Courts below, it is open to the accused to ask the High Court to consider whether the conclusions arrived at by the Courts below are warranted by those materials.

[P 419 C 2]

(b) Penal Code, S. 406—Evidence of dishonest intention — When and how much necessary — Principle enunciated.

It is neither necessary nor possible in every case of criminal breach of trust to prove in what precise manner the money was spent or appropriated by the accused, since by law even temporary retention provided it is dishonest is an offence. But where there is no direct evidence of misappropriation and one is left to surmise as to what use was made by the accused of money, one ought to require clearer evidence of dishonest intention than in a case where there is direct evidence to prove that the money was appropriated by the accused for a particular use which is inconsistent with his position as a trustee of the money.

(c) Penal Code, S. 406 — Failure to give account or giving false account is strong but not conclusive circumstance against accused.

In cases of criminal breach of trust failure to account for the money proved to have been received by the accused or giving a false account as to its use is generally considered to be a strong circumstance against the accused. But accused must not be convicted on it alone. It is only an indication or piece of evidence pointing to dishonest intention and must be considered along with other facts of the case; *A. I. C. M. Acharya—for the Crown.

Fazl Ali, J.—This is an application on behalf of one Harakrishna Mahatab, who has been convicted under S. 406, I. P. C. and sentenced to three months' rigorous imprisonment and to a fine of Rs. 200.

The facts of this case have been set out in great detail in the judgments of the Courts below and I shall only briefly refer to them. In the year 1927 when the petitioner was the Chairman of the District Board of Balasore a resolution was passed on 23rd March 1927, by the Education Sub-Committee of the District Board that the unspent balance of the previous year should be spent in sanctioning building grants to a number of Middle English Schools in the District including the Middle English School at Agarpura provided that certain conditions were accepted by the Managing Committees of those schools. The Sub-Committee proposed to allot a sum of Rs. 2,000 to Agarpura while sums allotted to other Middle English Schools were in some cases less, in some cases more and in several cases the same as that allotted to Agarpura. On 27th March 1927 the Managing Committee of the Agarpura School passed a resolution to the effect that the proposed grant be accepted by the school and an agreement be entered into on the lines suggested by the District Board. It may be mentioned here that sometime before the date the Agarpura School Committee had applied for a building grant to the District Board and estimated cost of the building to be about Rs. 7,500. The School Committee, therefore, while accepting the grant also resolved that they should arrange to contribute the balance of the estimated amount to the general school fund and that the grant made by the District Board be withdrawn before the 31st March which was the end of the financial year. On 28th March 1927 the committee executed an agreement in favour of the Chairman of the District Board, one of the clauses in which runs as follows;

"That we will contribute the balance of the estimated amount to the general school fund and the whole money will be deposited into Postal Saving Bank and the building will be done by the contractor appointed by the Board and paid from the fund according to the District Board Engineering Department rules and the site and the plan of the school will have to be approved by the District Board authorities and the District Inspector of Schools, Balasore."

I may mention here that the petitioner was at the time this arrangement was executed not only the Chairman of the District Board but he was also the President of the Committee of the Agarpura Middle English School and he was one of the signatories to this agreement in this latter capacity along with the Secretary of the committee and the Headmaster of the school. On 29th March 1927, the petitioner as the Chairman of the District Board issued a cheque in favour of the Agarpara Middle English School and on the same day the cheque was cashed and money was made over to the petitioner as the President of the School Committee. On 30th April 1927 the Education Sub-Committee's resolution of 23rd March 1927, was confirmed by the District Board. Sometime in May 1927, there was fresh election of members for the District Board and in October 1927, Babu Gopal Prasad Das who is the present Chairman of the District Board was elected Chairman in place of the petitioner. The new Chairman belonged to a totally different school of thought and was by no means friendly with the petitioner and soon after he came into power it was decided by the District Board to ask for a refund of the amounts of money that had been granted to the various M. E. Schools including Agarpara when the petitioner was the Chairman. So on 29th December 1929, a letter was issued by the new Chairman to the Secretary of Agarpara M. E. School asking him to refund the amount of Rs. 2,000 to the District Board and pointing out that the grant had not been made according to the rules laid down in the Education Code. On 9th January 1928 the Headmaster of the Agarpara M. E. School sent a reply in which he said that the grant could not be refunded as a portion of it had already been spent in purchasing materials for the school building and the remainder had been advanced for the manufacture of bricks and purchase of other materials. The District Board asked again for a refund of the money on 31st January 1928, and, in February 1928, the School Committee recorded the following resolution in the minute book.

"In view of the fact that Chairman, District Board, Balasore, has asked the Secretary to refund the building grant of Rs. 2,000, and that the amount has already been spent in purchasing some materials and in giving advances for the purchase of some materials the committee regret that the amount of Rs. 2,000 cannot be refunded."

It appears that no further notice was taken by the District Board of this matter until 18th September 1928 when another letter was addressed to the Secretary asking him to send the pass book kept by the school. On 19th September 1928, the Headmaster replied that the Secretary and the President being away the letter could not be complied with. On 26th September 1928, the District Board repeated its demand for the pass book and threatened "steps" against the Secretary. On 28th September 1928, the Headmaster wrote again saying that the Secretary and the President were still away. Meanwhile the matter seems to have been communicated to Mr. Beal, the then Magistrate who wrote a letter to the Superintendent of Police on 29th September 1928, asking him to institute a case under S. 406, I. P. C., against the petitioner. The letter was treated as "the first information" and a case under S. 406 was started against the petitioner.

In the course of the police investigation the petitioner informed the police that the money in question had been advanced to one Krishna Chandra Das and one Apariti Sahu for the purpose of collecting materials for the building and for the manufacture of bricks. These men supported the version of the petitioner, and the materials which were said to have been collected as well as the bricks said to have been manufactured were shown to the investigating officer. The District Engineer was also deputed to verify the information, and it has been conceded both by the Sub-Inspector and the District Engineer in evidence that the materials shown to them might very well be worth Rs. 2,000. It appears that the investigating officer was at first not inclined to send a charge sheet but submitted a report on 7th November 1928, in which having detailed the facts of the case, he expressed the opinion that it was doubtful if the case against the accused would stand in Court. Meanwhile Mr. Beal had left the station and a charge sheet was ultimately submitted by the police on 18th January 1929, there being nothing definite on the record as to what order was passed and by whom on the report of 7th November 1928. It may be mentioned here that the entire sum of

Rs. 2,000 had in the meantime been refunded by the Secretary, Agarpura School, and this was done sometime between 29th September 1928, when the first information was lodged and 1st October 1928, when the Secretary sent a letter to the District Board with a chalan showing the refund and explaining delay as being due to the fact that money was being raised by local subscriptions.

Now the receipt of the money not being denied by the petitioner, the vital question to be determined in the case was whether this was a case of anything more than a mere civil liability, or in other words, whether the prosecution had established the dishonest intention of the accused beyond reasonable doubt. The lower appellate Court as well as the trial Court have drawn strong inferences against the petitioner on two main grounds. It is pointed out in the first place that the terms of agreement of 28th March 1927, where entirely ignored by the petitioner, and it has also been held that the story put forward by the petitioner as to the manner and circumstances under which the money was advanced to Krishna Chandra Das and Apariti Sahu is wholly false. As to the former ground the learned Sessions Judge has himself conceded that if the materials for the building were really purchased as alleged by the defence, however irregular the action of the appellant might be and however contrary it might be to the agreement entered into with the District Board, there would be no offence under S. 406, I. P. C. In fact the prosecution evidence itself discloses that several other schools also have not acted in strict accordance with similar agreements executed by them. It is admitted that in several cases the money was not deposited in the Co-operative Bank. It is also admitted that in many cases the type plan provided by the District Board was entirely ignored, and the District Engineer frankly concedes that the rule about constructing buildings according to the District Board type plan is honoured more in breach than in observances. Besides, it is to be remembered that the District Board had made a grant of only of Rs. 2,000 to the school and the balance of the amount required for the building was to be supplied by the School Committee. In these circumstances it is by no means improbable that the members of the School Committee with the petitioner at its head, would try to arrange to have the building constructed as economically as possible even though it may technically involve the breach of the agreement entered into with the District Board. It should also not be overlooked that the petitioner being the Chairman of the District Board and being in that capacity the person in whose favour the agreement had been entered into, may have quite honestly felt that the rules might very well be relaxed by the District Board in favour of the Agarpura M. E. School and that the School Committee need not for the time being at any rate stick to the letter of the agreement. The terms of the agreement also do not suggest that any infringement of the conditions laid down there would involve criminal liability. About the only question which has to be seriously considered is whether the defence put forward in this case that certain advance had been made to Krishna Chandra Das and Apariti Sahu for the purchase of materials as well as for the manufacture of bricks, can be definitely held to be false on the materials before the Court. Now it is true that the Courts below have come to a finding that the defence story is entirely false, and a finding of fact is not usually interfered with in revision; but as in this case the finding is not based on any positive evidence, but upon inference drawn from certain circumstances arising from the evidence, and all the materials on which the finding is based are set forth in the judgments of the Courts below, it is open to the accused to ask us to consider if the conclusions arrived at by the Courts below are warranted by these materials.

Before considering, however, the reasons given by the Courts below for rejecting the defence version, I wish to point out that there is a small gap in the prosecution evidence which does not seem to have been noticed by either of the two Courts in their judgments. I find from the judgment of the learned Sessions Judge that the entire correspondence about the refund of money was addressed by the district Board to the Secretary of Agarpara School and almost all the letters that were received in reply were written by the Headmaster or by the Secretary. Thus there is no evidence to show that at any time before the institution of the criminal case any demand for the money was made directly from the accused, and whatever the actual facts or the probabilities may be, there is no evidence even to show how far the accused was aware of this correspondence before the first information report was drawn up. In fact the last two letters of the Headmaster definitely refer to the fact that both the Secretary and the accused were away for the time being and, therefore, the demand made by the District Board could not be complied with. Assuming then that the accused had actually set up a false defence in the case, it is to be considered whether that would in the circumstances of the case necessarily lead to an inference of dishonesty.

It must be remembered that nowhere in the whole correspondence which passed before the institution of the criminal case was there any suggestion that the petitioner was individually liable for the money, and once the School Committee had committed themselves to the statement that the money demanded by the District Board had been spent, as is evident from the letter of the Headmaster dated 9th January 1928, and the resolution of the School Committee dated 24th February 1928, there is nothing to be surprised at, if the accused prepared to adhere to that story, even though he found that he alone was being proceeded against. Remembering, then, that the accused may well have been somewhat handicapped by the previous statement made on behalf of the committee to which on the actual evidence, he may or may not have been a party, and remembering also that what the prosecution has to prove is the state of the mind of the accused at the point of time when the alleged offence is said to have been committed and after the case against him had been started it is a question requiring some consideration whether the mere setting up of a false defence in this case would necessarily raise an inference as to the dishonest intention of the accused at the critical point of time referred to above.

Passing on to the merits of the defence version, it appears to me on an examination of the materials found in the judgments of the Courts below that although there are certain suspicious features in the evidence put forward on behalf of the defence yet it does not seem easy to say definitely that the story of the accused that certain advances had been made to court-witnesses 1 and 2 has been conclusively proved by the prosecution to be false. Both these persons are members of the School Committee and are interested in the school. It is admitted that bricks can be manufactured more cheaply at Mahantipara than at Agarpara. The mere facts that the court-witness 1 is an old person and is a Vaisnab and has devoted himself to a temple do not seem to me quite sufficient to warrant the inference that he was incapable of assisting the school in procuring or supplying the building materials. The Courts below appear to have been greatly influenced by the fact that the building materials shown to the investigating officer were found at some distance from the present site of the school. It is, however, to be remembered that it is nobody's case that the new building was to be constructed on the present site. On the other hand there is evidence that another site has been proposed for the building and one of the points raised by the prosecution itself is that even that site has not yet been definitely approved by the District Board. It has also been argued by the prosecution that a portion of the temple of which Court-witness 1 was in charge was built some years ago and that the materials found near about the temple were meant for the use of the temple. It may be that the theory evolved by the prosecution is correct, but after all the suggestion is based entirely on speculation and there is no reason entirely to exclude the supposition that the materials found near the temple might have been left after the temple had been built and the court-witness 1 might have been willing to make them over to the school at a cheaper rate than at which they would be available in the market so the money was advanced to him. Apart from these speculations, however, the facts which in my opinion cannot be ignored are that the defence of the accused is supported by the sworn testimony of these two Court-witnesses and a large quantity of building materials was shown to the police as well as to the District Engineer in the course of the police investigation, the finding of the trial Court being that these officers had been duped in believing that the materials were for the construction of the school building. As against this there is no direct evidence to negative the case of the accused, and whatever inference have been drawn by the Courts below are based more or less upon certain surmises which are described as probabilities. These surmises may possibly be good surmises but when we have to adjudge the guilt of the accused and the adjudging of the guilt depends upon the rejecting of the direct evidence in favour of the accused merely on the strength of a few surmises, all that can be safely said is that the version of the accused may in certain respects be open to suspicion, but it cannot be definitely held to be false.

On the other hand, the version that the amount advanced by the District Board had been spent in purchasing the materials is not a belated story but was given out by the Secretary of the School as soon as the committee was asked to refund the money. The School Committee consists of a number of members and nothing has been shown as to why all those persons should collude with the petitioner in the misappropriation of the money. The Headmaster of the M. E. School according to prosecution evidence, is an honest and respectable person, and it was he who was for some time in correspondence with the District Board. The correspondence which passed between the School Committee and the District Board before the grant was made is enough to show that the School Committee was keen about a new building and had offered to contribute the bulk of the amount which the building was estimated to cost. It is thus a question to be considered whether all the members of the School Committee would suddenly become indifferent and disloyal to the interests of the school as to allow the petitioner to misappropriate the amount granted by the District Board. The learned Sessions Judge says at one place that the School Committee was not aware of the money having been received until it was called upon to refund the money, but there is nothing in the record to warrant this inference. It is also a circumstance to be taken into consideration that not one member of the School Committee or any other person of the locality is charging the petitioner with dishonesty. The petitioner, it is conceded, is considered to be a "big man" in the locality and is a zamindar paying Government revenue of about Rs. 10,000. He was formerly a member of the Legislative Council and it has been admitted in evidence that he has provided a site for the local dispensary free of cost. It also appears from the judgment of the trial Magistrate that the accused provided a site for the new school building at Agarpara. This will be clear from the following passage in the judgment of the trial Magistrate:

"It cannot be said by any stretch of reasoning that the approval of the site by the accused even if it be taken to be in his capacity as Chairman of the Board which certainly was not as he himself offered the site was sufficient observance of the terms of the agreement as laid down towards the concluding portion of para. 1."

Now it cannot of course be said that merely because the accused is a man of substance or because he is shown to have acted in a public spirited manner in some instances, he is incapable of committing criminal misappropriation, but I certainly require the prosecution evidence to be more clear and conclusive than it is in this case before I hold, that the accused has actually misappropriated the money criminally or that he intended to convert the money to his own use dishonestly. To hold this would be to hold what is neither definitely suggested nor proved that the accused intended to rob the M. E. School at Agarpara of the amount which through his own efforts had been secured for that institution. It is to be remembered that the new school was to be built within the zamindari of the petitioner and it is highly improbable that the petitioner would risk his reputation in his own village by misappropriating the money which was intended for the school. Again the prosecution has not given any direct evidence to prove that the money had been actually misappropropriated by the petitioner or converted to his own use. The theory of the Magistrate was that the money had not been spent at all and was all along with the accused. The learned Sessions Judge, however, finds fault with this view of the Magistrate in the following passages:

“I do not think, however, that learned Magistrate is right in his finding that the money was lying intact with the appellant all the time between the receipt of it from the District Board and its refund into treasury. No man in his sense is likely to keep such a large sum of money belonging to public institution in his house unnecessarily for such a long time. The failure of the appellant to refund the money at once in spite of the two demands for refund conveyed by the District Board proves conclusively that the money cannot then have been lying intact in the hands of the appellant.”

Now I do not mean to suggest that it is either necessary or possible in every case of criminal breach of trust to prove in what precise manner the money was spent or appropriated by the accused: because under the law, even temporary retention is an offence, provided that it is dishonest, but all that I wish to emphasize is that where there is no direct evidence of misappropriation and one is left to surmise as to what use was made by the accused of the money, one ought to require clearer evidence of dishonest intention than in a case where there is direct evidence to prove that the money was appropriated by the accused for a particular use which is inconsistent with his position as a trustee of the money. In fact there is more than one view which is possible on the evidence before us. There is the somewhat extreme view taken by the Court below that the version of the accused as to his having spent the money in purchasing the materials from court-witnesses 1 and 2 is wholly false. There is also another view—a view which is not entirely excluded by the circumstances of the case—that although the accused has made his case worse by a number of lies and by producing one or two suspicious documents, yet there may be residuum of truth in the defence story and that the bulk of money at least may have been actually spent or advanced for the purchase of the materials. There is also another theory possible, namely, that the accused, or the accused and the other members of the committee did not like to refund the money to the District Board, especially as the demand for the refund proceeded from the new Chairman who was by no means friend of the accused and that the accused and other members of the committee may have actually shared the belief that the District Board having once parted with the money in favour of the school was not justified in demanding it back and that the demand was being made out of spite against the accused who had been instrumental in securing the grant. It is true that this position was not clearly taken up in the correspondence between the School Committee and the District Board, but this may be due to the fact that the welfare of the school depended largely upon the aid which it received from the District Board and the School Committee, therefore, merely tried to put off the District Board rather than Court an open rupture. It may be mentioned that the other schools also did not readily accede to the demand of the District Board for a refund of the building grants it had made as will appear from the following statement of P. W. 1.

“Before September 1928, none of the schools refunded the money advanced to them as grant. Most of the schools alleged their inability to refund the grant.”

I may say here that it is not my concern to decide whether the School Committee would or would not be legally justified in treating the money as their own money and whether strictly speaking the property in the money would be with the school or with the District Board after the grant had been made. But if once it is conceded that it was possible for the School Committee to take that view, it would be a consideration which cannot be lost sight of in deciding whether the accused was impelled by any dishonest motive or not; even assuming that the money was not spent by him in the way alleged but still was in his possession. It is to be remembered that although temporary retention of money may in certain cases be sufficient to constitute an offence; yet in a criminal case it is incumbent on the prosecution to prove that the retention was a dishonest one.

Now reading the judgments of the Courts below, I find that they have been largely influenced by the fact that the accused has given a false account of the use of the money. The learned Sessions Judge has also referred to the case of Harendra Kumar Ghosh v. Emperor (1), where a Division Bench of Calcutta High Court, dealing with the special facts of that case, made the following observations :

"The Courts below have found that certain sums of money came into the hands of the petitioner and that he has failed to account for them, in other words he has failed to prove how that money was legitimately used. The burden was initially placed on the prosecution and when the prosecution succeeded in proving the receipt by the petitioner of the several amounts; it was for the petitioner to show that he had not converted them to his own uses. In the circumstances we do not think that the burden was wrongly placed upon the petitioner."

The learned Judge deduces from this the following legal proposition :

"I think that when the prosecution has succeeded in proving that the money which had been paid for a particular purpose has not been used for that purpose, the onus of proving that the money has been used or that use of the money was not dishonest is upon the accused since this is a matter within his special knowledge."

With all respect I must point out that the essential thing to be proved in case of criminal breach of trust is whether the accused was actuated by dishonest intention or not. As the question of intention is not a matter of direct proof, the Courts have from time to time laid down certain broad tests which would generally afford useful guidance in deciding whether in a particular case the accused had or had not mens rea for the crime. So in cases of criminal breach of trust the failure to account for the money proved to have been received by the accused or giving a false account as to its use is generally considered to be a strong circumstance against the accused. We should, however, not lose sight of the principle and make a universal formula of what is after all only an indication of or a piece of evidence pointing to dishonest intention. The failure to account may in some cases be due to among other things, mere stupidity, bad legal advice, a disinclination to retract a foolish lie once told or even a perverse attitude taken by the accused that he is not liable to account, while there may be other evidence in the case pointing to the accused having acted quite honestly. In such a case the accused cannot be convicted even though he may have failed or omitted to account for the money received by him. As Mayne has pointed out in discussing the offence of breach of trust (Edn. 4, p. 661.)

"The mere failure to render accounts is not itself a criminal breach of trust, unless it appears on the whole facts that the money is dishonestly withheld or has been dishonestly converted to the prisoner's use."

And again at p. 659 :

"The usual evidence of breach of trust in regard to money received for the purpose of payment over is either non-payment or non-accounting or false accounting."

• The last passage is rather important because, Mayne rightly points out, non-accounting or false accounting is after all a mere piece of evidence to prove breach of trust. It is also to be noticed that the learned author has taken care in the above passage to refer to those cases only when money is received for the purpose of payment over. Now, the case of Harendra Kumar Ghose v. Emperor (1) to which I have referred is a case directly in point. There the accused was a tax daroga and cashier of Maymansingh municipality. It was obviously his duty to pay the money realized as tax to the municipality and not keep it himself. If, therefore, the accused in that case kept the money with himself and failed to account for it, the Courts were obviously justified in drawing an inference against him. I do not mean to suggest that if it is found in the present case that the accused has given a false account as to the use of money, that would not raise an inference or possibly even a strong inference against the accused. But I do not think that the present case is easily distinguishable from the case of the tax daroga, because in the present case the accused being the head of the institution in whose favour the grant has been made was the proper person to receive the money and may have also quite honestly felt that he had some discretion to decide as to what would be the proper and most economical way of applying the money for the school building, especially when the bulk of amount required for the new building was going to be supplied by the School Committee. It is further to be observed that the condition that the money granted by the District Board was to be kept in the Post Office Savings Bank did not involve any restriction on the depositor's power of withdrawal and applied as much to the money advanced by the District Board as to the money to be raised by the School Committee, and this being so, it cannot be seriously contended that this condition was meant as a precaution against misappropriation.

The conclusion which I have arrived at may be summed up as follows :

There is no doubt that the terms of the agreement entered into between the School Committee and the District Board were completely ignored by the former and it is also not easy to accept the version of the accused in all its fullness, yet in my opinion it has not been proved beyond reasonable doubt that the accused had either dishonestly misappropriated or even dishonestly retained the money which he admittedly received from the District Board. In order to debit the accused with a dishonest intention in this case it should have been shown clearly among other things that the accused did not intend to apply the money granted by the District Board to the Agarpura School either then or later on. On this point, however, there is neither any definite suggestion by the prosecution necessarily pointing to this conclusion. The Courts below have taken the view that the accused has given a false account as to how the money was used and this is sufficient to prove his dishonest intention. As I, however, have pointed out, one may not be prepared to go so far as the Courts below, but even assuming that the accused has given a false account as to the use of the money that may be a strong circumstance against the accused, but it is by no means conclusive in this case, because it has to be weighed along with other circumstances which are in favour of the accused and which have not been fully appreciated by the Courts below. Unfortunately also the trial Court did not, while examining the accused under S. 342, specifically draw his attention to the circumstances that weighed with the Court and which in the opinion of the trial Court were unfavourable to the accused. The Courts below have also drawn conclusions against court-witnesses 1 and 2 in certain matters without their having been specifically questioned about these matters. To give one instance only the figure "7" in one of the vouchers having been found to be in a different ink the trial Court drew certain inferences against the defence, although it was conceded before us at the time of argument that the attestation of the Court witnesses or the accused was not drawn to the alleged interpolation and no attempt was made to get an explanation from them about it. In my opinion the evidence adduced in the case does not conclusively establish the dishonest intention of the accused or a case of criminal liability and the accused is entitled to the benefit of doubt.

I would, therefore, allow this application, set aside the conviction and sentence of the accused and set him at liberty. The bail bond executed by the accused will be cancelled, the fine if paid will be refunded.

I would like to add that Mr. Acharya, who appeared on behalf of the Crown argued the case with great earnestness and ability and there was hardly anything which could be said on behalf of the prosecution that was left unsaid by him in the course of his long elaborate argument.

Surendra Chandra Das—Accused.

Criminal Ref. No. 77 of 1929, Decided on 12th November 1929, made by Deputy Commr., Singhbhum, D/- 29th August 1929.

Criminal P. C., S. 562—Mere fact of accused's coming of respectable family is no justification for imposing lighter sentence.

The mere fact that the accused comes of a respectable family cannot be a justification for imposing a lighter sentence for the more respectable and better educated a man is the less temptation there should be to commit offences. [P 425 C 2]

B. N. Mitter and G. N. Mukerji — for Complainant.

A. C. Roy—²for Accused.

Adami, J.—This is a reference by the Deputy Commissioner of Singhbhum regarding the sentence passed upon the accused Surendra Chandra Das, who was convicted by the Deputy Magistrate under S. 108, I. P. C. in respect of the embezzlement of Rs. 2,400 and was released by the Deputy Magistrate by an order under S. 562, Criminal P. C. directing him to enter into a bond of Rs. 2,500 with two sureties to appear and receive sentence when called upon during the period of two years, and in the meantime to be of good behaviour.

The accused was the Jamshedpur Agent of Messrs. Brooke Bond and Co., and was entrusted with the duty of selling their tea in that locality. It appears that on hearing from the Calcutta Manager of the firm that he intended to visit Jamshedpur to inspect the accounts, the accused went to Calcutta and informed the Manager that he was short of cash and stock to the extent of Rs. 2,400. Action was then taken by Messrs. Brooke Bond and Co. with the result that the accused was put upon his trial and convicted as I have stated above.

The learned Deputy Commissioner in referring the case to this Court recommends that the order passed on conviction of the accused was altogether inadequate. He recommends that the sentence be altered to one of rigorous imprisonment for six months with a fine of Rs. 1,000 or in default a further term of six months' rigorous imprisonment.

The accused was called upon to show cause why sentence should not be passed upon him as recommended. The points put forward on his behalf are that he is a young man of respectable family and that he had far too much work. The accused's story, however, was that on two occasions his pocket had been picked and thus he lost most of the sum with the embezzlement of which he is charged and that he contributed Rs. 300 towards the Strikers' Union on various occasions. He admits that his cash and stock were short to the extent charged.

The learned Deputy Magistrate in passing his order states that the accused is a young man of respectable family; that he was alone and was doing work which four clerks formerly used to do and for that reason he says:

"He must therefore be a busy man and so his story that he had a sunstroke and that he was once pickpocketed cannot therefore be said to be false."

It is quite obvious to any intelligent man that the story of two successive occasions on which his pockets were picked cannot be believed: nor does it follow that because the accused is respectable and was doing the work of four persons, his story about his pockets being picked should be believed.

In our opinion the order of the Deputy Magistrate was not justified. Were the order to stand, it is clear that there would be an inducement to agents of the company and of other companies to commit malpractices since they would have the knowledge that they could commit the offence with impunity. The mere fact that the accused comes of a respectable family cannot be a justification for imposing a lighter sentence, for the more respectable and better educated a man is, the less temptation there should be to commit offences.

The order passed under S. 562, Criminal P. C. must be set aside. The sentence recommended by the learned Deputy Commissioner is not a very heavy one, and we will adopt the recommendation and sentence the accused to six months, rigorous imprisonment and a fine of Rs. 1,000 or in default a further term of six months' rigorous imprisonment. The accused will now surrender to undergo the sentence.

(Baraik) Narendra Nath Singh—Opposite Party.

Criminal Ref. No. 91 of 1929, Decided on 13th January 1930, made by J. C., Chota Nagpur, on 18th November 1929.

Criminal P. C., S. 123 (2)—Sessions Court has no power to test sureties.

A Sessions Court before which proceedings are laid under S. 123 (2) has neither any duty cast upon it nor any power to test sureties offered by the person bound down. It is for the Magistrate to deal with the sureties under S. 122: 5 S. L. R. 87, not. foll. [P 427 C 2]

Assistant Govt. Advocate—for Referee.

Ali Imam and I. B. Saran—for Opposite Party.

Adami, J.—This is a reference under S. 438, Criminal P. C., made by the Judicial Commissioner of Chota Nagpur recommending that an order passed by the Assistant Sessions Judge with regard to the testing and acceptance of certain sureties offered in pursuance of an order passed under S. 123 (3), Criminal P. C., should be set aside.

On 25th August 1928, Bhondu Singh, as a result of proceedings taken against him under S. 110, was ordered to execute a bond of Rs. 2,500, with four sureties of the like amount each, to be of good behaviour for a period of three years. The security not having been furnished, the Magistrate referred his order to the Judicial Commissioner as required by S. 123 (2). The Judicial Commissioner transferred the matter to the Assistant Sessions Judge under S. 123 (3-B) for disposal, who confirmed the order made by the Magistrate, but instead of requiring Bhondu Singh to execute a bond to be of good behaviour, directed that he should execute a bond to keep the peace. It is quite evident that this was a mere oversight on the part of the learned Assistant Sessions Judge, since a bond to keep the peace cannot be required in proceedings under S. 110. However, that is not the point in this reference.

After the order was passed by the Assistant Sessions Judge he proceeded to call on Bhondu Singh to provide sureties before him and directed that the sureties would be tested in his Court in the presence of the Public Prosecutor. On the date fixed Bhondu Singh offered his father, Sidhnath Singh, and three others as sureties. The Public Prosecutor put forward objections to the persons offered on the ground that Sidhnath Singh had a previous conviction, that one of the other three persons had encumbrances on his property, and that another was heavily involved in debt. The Assistant Sessions Judge overruled the objections as to Sidhnath and the person who had encumbered property, but allowed the objection as to the other. When a substitute for the latter was offered the Public Prosecutor argued that the testing of sureties was the duty of the Magistrate and that the Assistant Sessions Judge had no jurisdiction in this matter. The Assistant Sessions Judge overruled the objection, relying on a passage in Sir J. Woodroff's "Criminal Procedure Code," 1920 and a ruling of the Judicial Commissioners in Sind reported in Impera- tor v. Allahdin (1) as also on the wording of S. 123 (4).

The point referred to this Court for decision is whether the Sessions Court before which proceedings are laid under S. 123 (2) has the duty or power to test sureties offered by the person who is bound down.

Sir Ali Imam who appears to oppose the reference relies mainly on the decision of the Judicial Commissioners of Sind referred to above and on S. 123 (3), which runs:

"(3) Such Court after examining such proceedings and requiring from the Magistrate any further information or evidence which it thinks necessary, may pass such order on the case as it thinks fit."

and on sub-S. (4) of the section which is to the effect that;

"(4) If the security is tendered to the officer in charge of the jail, he shall forthwith refer the matter to the Court or Magistrate who made the order, and shall await the orders of such Court or Magistrate."

He argues that, as stated in the above cited decision, the Magistrate has no power to require by his order security for a period exceeding one year, and therefore he can have no power to test sureties when the order is for security for a period of three years. It is not exact to say that the Magistrate has no such power to pass an order; he has full power to make the order, but if security is to be given for a period exceeding one year, the proceedings must be laid before the Sessions Judge for confirmation or such orders as may seem fit to the Judge. It is not clear that the orders referred to in sub-S. (3) include the testing of sureties, such testing being a separate proceeding which follows after an order has been passed requiring a bond to be executed and sureties to be furnished, and there is only one section in the Code prescribing the manner in which sureties are to be tested, namely, S. 122, and that refers to the Magistrate only as the testing authority. There is no provision in the Code referring to or regulating the testing of sureties by a Sessions Judge, unless it can be said that sub-S. (4), S. 123 contemplates such a proceeding, as argued by learned counsel and as was found by the Judicial Commissioners in Sind. That subsection certainly shows that when the Sessions

(1) [1910] 5 S. L. R. 87=11 I. C. 594=12 Cr. L. J. 410.

Court has passed an order under S. 123 (3) and a warrant* from the Court has reached the officer in charge of the jail, that officer, if a person comes to him and offers himself as surety, must refer the matter to the Sessions Court, but the subsection does not state that the Court must thereupon test the surety, the Court can, and as far as I know, always does, refer the duty of testing the surety to the Magistrate for whose procedure in the matter there is special provision in S. 122. If the warrant comes from the Court, the Court is naturally the only authority to whom the officer in charge of the jail can make a reference, and that seems to be the reason why S. 123 (4) is so worded.

That it was not intended by the legislature that the testing of sureties should be done by the Sessions Court is, I think, shown by the new S. 406-A, which was inserted in the Code of 1923, giving a right of appeal against an order under S. 122 refusing to accept or rejecting a surety. While orders made by a Presidency Magistrate, District Magistrate or other Magistrates are made appealable, there is no mention of any such order made by a Sessions Court. It seems that such an order by a Sessions Court was not contemplated. It can hardly be imagined that it is intended that a Sessions Judge should be altogether untrammelled in the procedure he follows in testing a surety, there being no provision similar to S. 122 to regulate his procedure, and that there should be no right of appeal against an order passed under such circumstances.

Section 122 requires a Magistrate in his order to specify the number, character and class of sureties that are to be given; the Sessions Judge passing an order under S. 123 (2) will not go beyond this. His Chief object when the case is laid before him under S. 123 will be to determine whether the security should be given for good behaviour for so long a period as three years.

Clearly the Magistrate will have better opportunities of satisfying himself as to the sufficiency of a surety offered than will the Sessions Judge, and so far as my experience goes the Sessions Judge has always left the matter of testing sureties to the Magistrate. If the Magistrate rejects any of the sureties offered there is a right of appeal given by S. 406-A. That section was not enacted at the time when the Judicial Commissioners in Sind gave their decision, nor was S. 122.

I find that the Assistant Sessions Judge had not jurisdiction to test the sureties and therefore would set aside the orders passed by him and direct that the matter of accepting or rejecting the sureties offered in this case be dealt with by the Magistrate under S. 122. The necessary correction will be made in the order of the Assistant Sessions Judge, substituting the words "to be of good behaviour" for the words "to keep the peace."

ROSS AND SCROOPE, JJ.

Sham Sunder Prusti—Accused—Petitioner.

v.

Emperor—Opposite Party.

Criminal Revn. No. 37 of 1929, Decided on 3rd December 1929, from order of Sess. Judge, Cuttack, D:- 11th August 1929.

Penal Code (as amended by Act 18 of 1924), S. 373—"Possession" need not be obtained from third person.

It is not requisite for the purpose of S. 373 that the possession of the minor should be obtained from a third person. It is enough if it is established that the accused in fact obtained possession of the minor with intent that the minor shall be used for purpose of prostitution: 5 M. H. C. R. 473; 35 M. L. J. 157; 21 Cal. 97 and 11 C. P. L. R. 6, Dist.; A.I.R. 1921 Bom. 323, Foll. [P 428 C 2]

M. S. Das and A. S. Khan—for Petitioner.

Government Pleader—for the Crown.

Scroope, J.—The petitioner has been convicted under S. 373, I. P. C., by Mr. Ahad, Cl. 1, Deputy Magistrate of Cuttack, and sentenced to one year's rigorous imprisonment and a fine of Rs. 50 and his appeal has been dismissed by the Sessions Judge of Cuttack. The finding of the Courts below is that the petitioner Shamsunder brought a girl Khalia Dei to the house in which he was living with his mistress and another woman under promise of getting her married and there employed her as a prostitute. These findings are not disputed now, but it is urged by the learned advocate for the defence that they are not sufficient to constitute the offence contemplated by S. 373, I. P. C., and he relies as was done in the lower Court, on the judgment of Holloway, J. in Dowlath Bee v. Shaik Ali (1). He also cites other cases, notably the ruling of the Madras High Court in Emperor v. Maddila Mutayalu (2), Queen Empress v. Saker Raur (3) and a case in Empress v. Mt. Ganga (4).

Now a case is only authority for what it decides, and the judgment of Scotland, C. J. which deals with the judgment of Holloway relates to a case of a single instance of sexual intercourse, not as here, to a case of a minor being employed as a prostitute. On the strength of this judgment the learned advocate argues that it is essential for an offence under S. 373, I. P. C., that the obtaining of possession of the minor should be from a third person; but I entirely fail to see why one should read into the section a gratuitous limitation of this kind. And as a matter of fact this view of the law was expressly negatived by Scotland, C. J. in his judgment though he held, however, that to bring a case within this section:

"it is essential to show that possession of the minor has been obtained under a distinct arrangement come to between the parties that the minor's person should be for some time, completely in the keeping and under the control and direction of the party having the possession."

Now this judgment dealt, as I say, with a case of a single act of illicit intercourse and undoubtedly as the section stood before its recent amendment by Act 18 of 1924 it could hardly cover such a case. The section since its amendment runs as follows:

"With intent that such person shall at any age be employed or used for the purposes of prostitution or illicit intercourse with any person or for any unlawful or immoral purpose or knowing it to be likely that such person etc."

Before the amendment the section ran thus:

"With intent that such minor shall be employed or used for the purposes of prostitution or for any unlawful or immoral purpose or knowing it to be likely that such minor will be."

It is noticeable that the words "or illicit intercourse" are new and would in my opinion, cover the act of the accused in the case in question which was decided in 1870, that is to say, before the amendment. It is obvious that what impressed the learned Judges there was the fact that the prisoner was being tried for a single instance of sexual intercourse with a minor girl on an isolated occasion. Here it has been found that the girl was in the keeping and under the control and direction of the petitioner and was visited by different men for immoral purposes. Obviously the facts come within the mischief of the section and I disagree therefore with the learned advocate for the petitioner that it was necessary for the prosecution to prove that the petitioner had secured possession of the girl through the intervention of some third party. There is no special virtue from the accused's point of view in the words "to obtain possession" that will justify supplying the words "from a third party." A man obviously can "obtain possession" of a thing without such intervention.

The other rulings cited by the learned advocate follow the judgment in Emperor v. Dowlath Bee (1), with the exception of Emperor v. Maddila Mutayalu (2). That was an entirely different kind of case. There the alleged sexual intercourse was in connexion with the nuptials of a minor girl. The girl continued to live with her parents and never passed into the possession of the accused. The learned Sessions Judge rightly relied on Emperor v. Shamsunder Bai (5) as containing the view of the law which is applicable to the facts of the present case. That case is on all fours with the present and Sh. J.'s view of the law is as follows:

"I am of opinion that it is not requisite for the purpose of S. 373, I. P. C., that the possession of the minor should be obtained from a third person. It is enough if it is established that the accused in fact obtained possession of the minor with intent that the minor shall be used for the purpose of prostitution."

To hold otherwise would be equivalent to saying that if a minor girl of her own accord resorts to a brothel and is employed as a prostitute by the owner knowing that she is a minor it will be no offence. Obviously this will defeat the whole purpose of the section which is to prevent the prostitution of minor girls.

I think therefore that the view of the law taken by both the Courts below is quite correct and I decline to interfere.

ADAMI AND FAZL ALI, JJ.

Kapildeo Narain—Appellant.

v.

Emperor—Opposite Party.

Criminal Appeal No. 130 of 1929, Decided on 18th December 1929, from decision of Sess. Judge, Muzaffarpur, D/- 22nd July 1929.

Penal Code, S. 409—Absence of intention to misappropriate money belonging to principal—Agent cannot be prosecuted for criminal breach of trust—Proper remedy lies in civil suit for accounts.

Where an agent produces his lists of accounts and admits the withdrawal of money, if he be recalcitrant, even if there is good ground for suspicion that he was not altogether honest, yet so long as there is no intention to misappropriate money belonging to his principal, the agent's prosecution under S. 409 for criminal breach of trust is not the proper remedy; the proper remedy lies in a suit for accounts in a civil Court. [P 432 C 1]

M. Yunus, S. P. Varma and Bhagwan Prasad—for Appellants.

G. P. Cammaled—for the Crown.

Adami, J.—The appellant Kapildeo Narain has been sentenced to four year's rigorous imprisonment and a fine of Rs. 3,000 under S. 409, I. P. C., on a charge of having, as law agent for the Madhuban Chautarwa concern, committed criminal breach of trust in respect of Rs. 7,476-2-11. He was also found guilty under S. 477-A, I. P. C., but no separate sentence was passed under that section.

Mr. W. W. Broucke, the proprietor of the factory, which is managed by his son Mr. J. W. Broucke, appointed the appellant as law agent for the factory in respect of the conduct of certificate cases filed in the Court of the Certificate Officer, Motihari. He executed a general power-of-attorney in favour of the appellant on 15th January 1927. Under that power the appellant was authorized to file petitions necessary in the conduct of certificate cases, to withdraw or deposit moneys in the Court necessary for the conduct of cases, and also to withdraw all moneys deposited by the certificate debtors to the credit of the proprietor of the Madhuban Chautarwa concern "in accordance with written instructions from me on giving accounts." There were no written instructions given, but, according to the prosecution evidence, it was the rule that with respect to all charges in connexion with the conduct of the cases, the appellant was to frame an estimate and take advances from the factory. He was not to meet these charges from the moneys withdrawn from the treasury, but when the money collected from the certificate debtors had been deposited in the treasury, he was to withdraw the amounts and pay them direct to the factory. During a part of the year 1928, Mr. J. W. Broucke was away and Mr. Arman was in charge as Manager. During that year the appellant drew up lists of cases in which the judgment-debt had been deposited in the treasury and withdrawn by him, and paid in money to the Madhuban concern. He also drew up estimates of charges and got advances from the concern. The Ex. 1-B to 1-F show that the factory received from him from March 1928 to 27th January 1929, five sums namely, Rs. 184-4-0, Rs. 815, Rs. 1,900, Rs. 1,000 and Rs. 290. The Ex. 6 series show also that the appellant filed lists of cases in which he had withdrawn money from the treasury while the Ex. 8 series show that from March to August 1928, the sum of Rs. 3,143 was advanced on various dates to the appellant for the purpose of conducting the cases. In January 1929, a new form of submitting lists of withdrawals was instituted. This list was in the form of a counterfoil book. On the right-hand half of the page Kapildeo wrote in his own hand a list giving the case number, the tenant's name, the village, the principal sum, interest, costs and total amount withdrawn from the treasury: on the left-hand half of the page there were identical entries but at the heading of the page was:

"Received—being the decretal amount from Babu Kapildeo Narain of the following cases detailed below."

It was also written up by Kapildeo and dated. This counterfoil book was to be brought to the factory with the money collected and when that money was found to be right, and right-hand portion was signed as a receipt by the Manager and the counterfoil book would then be returned to the appellant to
